The Commissioners in their First Report² say: "Having maturely considered the matter, we come to the same conclusion with the authors of the Code, that if death is certainly caused by words deliberately used by a person with the intention of causing that result, or with the knowledge that in the condition of the party to whom the words are spoken it is likely that they will make such an impression upon him as to cause his death, and without any such excuse as is admissible under any of the provisions in the chapter of General Exceptions, there is no sufficient reason why that person should be excepted from the penalty of culpable homicide, any more than one who has caused death by the infliction of a bodily injury which he knew to be likely to cause death. Here is the wilful doing of that which is known to be likely to produce evil, manifesting the mens rea essential to criminal responsibility; the evil produced is death; the efficient cause, the words spoken. It is scarcely agreeable to reason, that having traced the effect to its cause, the law should refuse to acknowledge it as an effective cause; or that the Judge should be obliged to say, it is true the effect was produced by the operation of words, but words in law are not an act, therefore the speaker is not criminally responsible."

English law.—The English law takes no cognizance of homicide unless death results from bodily injury, caused by some act or omission, as distinguished from death occasioned by an influence on the mind, or by any disorder or disease arising from such influence.

"If a man either by working upon the fancy of another, or possibly by harsh or unkind usage puts another into such passion of grief or fear, that the party

¹ Note M, pp. 142, 143.

² Section 249.

The authors of the Code observe: "We long considered whether it would be advisable to except from this definition any description of acts or illegal omissions, on the ground that such acts or illegal omissions do not ordinarily cause death, or that they cause death very remotely. . .

"There is undoubtedly a great difference between acts which cause death immediately, and acts which cause death remotely; between acts which are almost certain to cause death, and acts which cause death only under very extraordinary circumstances. But that difference, we conceive, is a matter to be considered by the tribunals when estimating the effect of the evidence in a particular case, not by the legislature in framing the general law. It will require strong evidence to prove that an act of a kind which very seldom causes death, or an act which has caused death very remotely, has actually caused death in a particular case. It will require still stronger evidence to prove that such an act was contemplated by the person who did it as likely to cause death; but if it be proved by satisfactory evidence that death has been so caused, and has been caused voluntarily, we see no reason for exempting the person who caused it from the punishment of voluntary culpable homicide."¹

"To justify a conviction of culpable homicide of any sort against an offender who has committed an intentional act causing bodily injury to another and which act was intended for some particular individual, there must at least be a finding that the offender intended by his act to cause bodily injury likely to cause death."²

'Intention of causing death' and 'intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.'—The difference between these two is a difference of degrees in criminality. The latter is a degree lower in the scale of criminality than the former. But as, in both cases, the object is the same, the law does not make any distinction in punishment.³

Cases.—Where the accused stuffed a cloth into the deceased's mouth in order to silence him, not with any idea of killing him, it could only be presumed that the accused knew they were likely in so doing to cause his death, and so were guilty of offences under ss. 304 and 305 and not under ss. 302 and 306.⁴ Where the accused caused the death of a man by an unmerciful beating mostly on the legs and arms but no bones were broken and not a single one of the injuries individually amounted to more than simple hurt, it was held that he was guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁵

5. 'With the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death.'—Knowledge is a strong word and imports a certainty and not merely a probability.

If a man intentionally commits an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result. If such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed, still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts, probably or possibly, involving danger to others, but which in themselves are not offences, may be offences under ss. 336, 337, 338, or 304-A, if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the offender and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character.⁶

In judging of knowledge had by the accused, we must consider the circumstances; the blow that to one person, or under ordinary circumstances, may not,

¹ Note M, pp. 141, 142.

² See Shree Bawa, (1900) 3 L.B.R.

U. B. R.
247; Nga

Shree Bawa, (1900) 7 Burma L. R. 250.

⁴ Sengoda Goundan, [1915] M. W. N. 621.

⁵ Jaggu, (1925) 2 L. C. 112.

⁶ Ketabdi Mundul, (1879) 4 Cal. 764.

in the ordinary course of nature, be likely to cause death, may yet be imminently dangerous to another, or under special circumstances. Where the accused kicked his wife, eight or nine years of age, on the back with his bare foot, from which kick she fell down and died immediately, it was held that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Court said: "To kick a girl of tender age with such force as to produce rupture of the abdomen in a healthy subject, appears to us to be an act of such a character that no reasonable man could be ignorant of the likelihood of its causing death."¹ Where three persons attacked a fourth with lathis, the blows being directed at the head of that fourth, it was held that they must be fixed with the knowledge that they were likely to cause death.²

Cross negligence may amount to knowledge.—If a person without exercising due care and caution does any act under a sudden impulse he will be presumed to have knowledge of the consequences arising from his act. Where the accused struck at with a club and killed a man, being at the time under the bona fide belief that the object at which he struck was not a human being but something supernatural, but, through terror, having taken no steps to satisfy himself that it was not a human being, he was held to have committed the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.³

'Intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death' 'Knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death.'—The practical difference between these two phrases is expressed in the punishment provided in s. 304. But the phrase 'with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death' includes all cases of rash acts by which death is caused, for rashness imports a knowledge of the likely result of an act which the actor does in spite of the risk.

If a man causes death by doing an act merely with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death, the act comes within this section, and not within s. 300.⁴

Cases.—Knowledge of probable consequence of act—Beating.—Where the prisoner assaulted a thief so severely that one hundred and forty-one marks of separate blows were found on his body and several of his ribs were broken and he died⁵ where the husband and the father of a woman, who had been enticed away, lay in wait for the offender and beat him with sticks on the back and chest and he died from the effect of the blows⁶, and where a man killed his wife by a single blow⁷, or a single forcible kick on her side⁸, it was held that they had committed culpable homicide and that their offence fell under the latter part of s. 304.

to cause the death of such person.⁹ R struck G three blows with a lathi (stick). One blow fractured the bones of the left forearm, another fractured a bone in the right hand, and a third injury was guilty causing grievous hurt.¹⁰ Where the accused inflicted four wounds none of which was on vital parts of the body, and the deceased died owing to septic poisoning in respect of two of them, two and a half months after the occurrence, and was

In the case of the

It was held that R

der under s. 304 or

¹ Karam Singh, (1892) P. R. No. 5 of 1893.

² Gujjar, (1911) P. R. No. 12 of 1911.

³ Rama Singh, (1920) 42 All. 302. See Ram Asre, (1922) 26 O. C. 18, which dissents from this case. It holds that the words in s. 299 "or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death" must be interpreted in the light of s. 300 and similarly are inapplicable to a case where specific bodily injury is intentionally caused to a particular person.

⁷ Karm, (1892) P. R. No. 5 of 1893.

⁸ Marimu, (1923) 18 L. W. 188.

sentenced to death under s. 302, it was held that the accused's intent was not to inflict bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, but to cause bodily injury which was likely to cause death, the degree of probability as to death ensuing not being so high as to justify a finding of murder, and the conviction was altered to one under the first part of s. 304 and the sentence reduced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.¹

Exorcising evil spirit.—Where the accused, in exorcising the spirit of a girl, whom they believed to be possessed, subjected her to a beating which resulted in her death, they were held guilty of culpable homicide.² Although the intention of the persons who inflict beating in such circumstances is not to cause death but to exorcise the spirit they must be taken to have known that they are likely to cause death.³ But where the injuries caused under like circumstances were not severe, the accused was acquitted.⁴ Where a man deliberately murdered his wife under the belief that she was haunted by evil spirits and that if he killed her the evil spirits would leave her, he was held guilty of murder.⁵ Where the accused murdered the deceased knowing full well the nature of his act, but under the belief that by so doing he was helping in the recovery of his wife and children, whose illness he attributed to the deceased, whom he believed to be a witch, it was held that the accused was guilty of murder.⁶ Where the accused possessed by a superstitious belief made an offering of his child to a crocodile in a certain tank, with a pure heart, believing that though the crocodile would doubtless take the child away, but would return the child unharmed and the child would thereafter lead a charmed life and attain to a good old age death to the child, he

s. 304, as what he did, he did with knowledge that his act would result in the death of the child.⁷

Unskilful medical treatment.—Where a man of full age submitted himself to emasculation, performed neither by a skilful hand nor in the least dangerous way, and died the act were held guilty of culpable

Any one who deals with the life or health of another person is bound to use competent skill and sufficient attention; if the patient dies for want of either, the person is guilty of manslaughter.⁸

Causing a person to be bitten by a snake.—A snake-charmer exhibited in public a venomous snake, whose fangs he knew had not been extracted, and to show his own skill and dexterity, but without any intention to cause harm to anyone, placed the snake on the head of one of the spectators. The spectator in trying to push off the snake was bitten, and died in consequence. It was held that the snake-charmer was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁹ The accused, who professed by tattooing to render persons immune from the effect of snake bite, caused a poisonous snake to bite the deceased whom he had tattooed but who died. It was held that the burden of proving that the accused was justified in believing and did believe that he could give immunity lay on the accused and that as he failed to discharge the burden, he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.¹⁰

Squeezing testicles.—Where a woman, by gripping and squeezing the testicles of her husband, reduced them to a pulpy condition, thereby causing an injury

¹ Nga Po Chet, (1923) 2 B. L. J., 239.

² Jamaludin, (1892) Unrep. Cr. C. 603.

In a similar case the accused were held guilty of an offence under s. 304-A, because the girl had consented to the beating: Nga Po Kyaw, (1902) 1 U. B. R. (P. C.) 1.

³ Nga Po Tha, (1917) 3 U. B. R. 64.

⁴ Dhondi, (1893) Unrep. Cr. C. 785.

⁵ Seot Ali, (1917) 3 P. L. W. 356.

⁶ Mata Ho, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 282.

⁷ Dharat Bipari, (1920) 33 C. L. J. 179, 25 C. W. N. 676.

⁸ Baboolun Hijrah, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

⁹ Burdee, (1916) 25 Cox 598.

¹⁰ Goneah Dooley, (1879) 5 Cal. 331. See Poonai Fattemah, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

¹¹ Nga Ba Tu, (1921) 11 L. B. R. 26.

which resulted in death due to the shock so inflicted on the nervous system, it was held that she was guilty of culpable homicide.¹ Here the violence of the attack on the husband's delicate parts was sufficient to justify an inference that the wife had knowledge of the likely effect of her attack. But where death was caused not by the squeezing of the testicles but owing to the unsound bodily condition of the deceased and the medical evidence showed that the injury inflicted upon the deceased would not in normal conditions have endangered his life, it was held that the accused was guilty of hurt only.²

English cases.—Where a person in loco parentis inflicted corporal punishment on a child, and compelled it to work for an unreasonable number of hours, and beyond its strength, and the child died, the death being from consumption, he was held guilty of manslaughter.³ A schoolmaster, on the second day after a boy's return to school, wrote to the parent saying the boy was extremely obstinate, and ought to be severely and frequently beaten. The father replied, "I do not wish to interfere with your plan." Accordingly the schoolmaster beat the boy for two hours and a half secretly in the night with a thick stick until he died. It was held that, such punishment being excessive and unreasonable, the schoolmaster was guilty of manslaughter.⁴ Where a father who, for some childish fault, gave an infant of two years and a half about a dozen strokes with a strap an inch wide and eighteen inches long, from the effects of which the child died, it was held that he was guilty of manslaughter.⁵

Death caused without intention or 'knowledge' is not culpable homicide.—The offence of culpable homicide supposes an intention, or knowledge of likelihood, of causing death. The intention must be directed either deliberately to putting an end to human life or to some act which to the knowledge of the accused is likely to eventuate in the putting an end to human life. The knowledge must have reference to the particular circumstances in which the accused is placed and the intention demanded by the section must stand in some relation to a person who either is alive or who is believed by the accused to be alive.⁶ In the absence of such intention or knowledge, the offence committed may be the offence of causing grievous hurt,⁷ or simple hurt.⁸

As noticed before, even in the case of gross negligence a man is liable for the natural consequence of his act. But where death results not as a direct consequence of the act of the accused but from some other cause of which he was unaware then the accused cannot be charged with culpable homicide. Where death is caused owing to the rupture of a diseased spleen and not violence, it is on this principle that the accused is convicted of hurt or grievous hurt.

Cases.—Where the accused by a single blow with a deadly weapon killed another who was entering at dead of night into a dark room, where the accused and his wife were, it was held that the death was caused by the blow, and not by the darkness of the room, and his wife was not a party to the offence. Where the accused caused the death of a person by a single blow with a deadly weapon, and it was held that the death was caused by the blow, and not by the darkness of the room, and his wife was not a party to the offence. Where the accused caused the death of a person by a single blow with a deadly weapon, and it was held that the death was caused by the blow, and not by the darkness of the room, and his wife was not a party to the offence.

¹ Kaliyani, (1806) 10 Mad. 356.

² Bai Jiba, (1917) 10 Bom. L. R. 823, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 144.

³ Cheeseman, (1836) 7 C. & P. 455.

⁴ Hopley, (1860) 2 F. & F. 202.

⁵ Giffin, (1869) 11 Cox 402.

⁶ Palani Goundan, (1910) 42 Mad. 547, r. n.; Naja, (1919) 1 L. L. J. 217.

⁷ Megha Meeah, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 39;

Chullundee Poramanick, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.)

55; Bhadoo Poramanick, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.)

23; Sheikh Solim, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 41;

Madur Jolaha, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 28;

O'Brien, (1880) 2 All. 766; Idu Beg, (1881) 3

All. 776. See, for further cases, Comment on

s. 321.

⁸ Punchanun Tantee, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

97; Bysagoo Noshyo, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 29;

Safatulla, (1879) 4 Cal. 815; Foz, (1879) 2

All. 522; Randhir Singh, (1881) 3 All. 597;

(1881) 1 Weir 268.

⁹ Chullundee Poramanick, sup.

criminal force.¹ According to the English law this would have been treated as manslaughter. The accused, while engaged in a verbal wrangle with his wife, struck her a blow on the left side with great force, the result of which was that she vomitted and bled from the nose, and within little more than an hour died. The death was caused by the rupture of the spleen. It was held that he was guilty of grievous hurt only.² Where three persons attacked a fourth with clubs, and one of the assailants struck a blow which fractured the skull of the person attacked and caused his death, but the evidence left it in doubt as to which of the three assailants struck that blow, it was held that the offence of which the three assailants were guilty was grievous hurt rather than culpable homicide not amounting to murder.³ Where two persons on receiving provocation delivered an unpremeditated attack on the deceased and one blow only was given which caused his death, but it was not shown who struck the fatal blow, it was held that both were guilty of grievous hurt but not of culpable homicide.⁴

Where a man struck another on the head with a stick, and believing him to be dead set fire to the hut with a view to remove all evidence of the crime and it was found that the blow only stunned the deceased and the death was really caused by the injuries from the burning when the accused set fire to the hut, it was held that the offence committed was that of attempt to murder.⁵ The accused assaulted his wife and gave her kicks, blows and slaps. The kicks were given below the naval. The woman fell down and became unconscious. In order to create an appearance that the woman had committed suicide, the accused took up the unconscious body of his wife, thinking it to be a dead body and hung it by a rope. The post mortem examination showed that death was due to hanging. It was held that the accused could not have intended to kill his wife, if he thought that she was already dead, and he could not be convicted of murder; and that the offence committed was one under s. 325 for having given her kicks, blows and slaps before she fell down.⁶ Where the accused struck his wife a blow on her head with a plough-share which, though not shown to be a blow likely to cause death, did in fact render her unconscious and, believing her to be dead, in order to lay the foundation of a false defence of suicide by hanging, the accused hanged her on a beam by a rope and thereby caused her death by strangulation, it was held that the accused was not guilty of either murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder but was guilty of grievous hurt.⁷

L, who had a stick in his hand, attacked B who had none. Learning that G was coming to help B, L entered his house whence he fetched a chopper and renewed his attack on B inflicting more than one injury. L allowed himself to be disarmed by G who got some slight injuries in the scuffle that ensued. B was sent to the hospital where he died of septic pneumonia. It was held that there being no intention to cause death L could only be convicted of having caused grievous hurt.⁸

A youth of about eighteen had, without any ancillary violence, sexual intercourse with a well-developed girl probably under twelve years of age; the girl did not consent; her vagina was ruptured and, as a result, she died of shock. It was held that, as death was not the natural consequence to be expected from a simple sexual offence, the accused was not guilty of culpable homicide.⁹

D, who had a stick in his hand, attacked B who had none. Learning that G was coming to help B, L entered his house whence he fetched a chopper and renewed his attack on B inflicting more than one injury. L allowed himself to be disarmed by G who got some slight injuries in the scuffle that ensued. B was sent to the hospital where he died of septic pneumonia. It was held that there being no intention to cause death L could only be convicted of having caused grievous hurt.⁸

¹ Acharjya (1877) 1 Mad. 224.

² Idu Beg, (1881) 3 All. 778.

³ Bhola Singh, (1907) 29 All. 282. See Culab, (1918) 40 All. 686, overruling Chandan (1917) 40 All. 102.

⁴ Indu Kana Patwat, (1917) 40 All. 102. Cr. C. 187.

⁵ Idu, (1917) 40 All. 102. Cr. C. 187.

⁶ Khandu valad Bhavani, (1890) 15 Bom. 194.

⁷ Dalu Sardar, (1914) 18 C. W. N. 1279.

⁸ Palani Goundan, (1919) 42 Mad. 517, 722.

⁹ Lak Singh, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 66; 1 U. P. L. R. 42. See Musammal Siryan, (1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 48 of 1915.

¹⁰ Shambhu Khatri, (1924) 3 Pat. 410.

who was suffering from a diseased spleen in the region of that organ, he was held went to a place where a cart was man who was sleeping on a cot close the cart. The man explained that the cart did not belong to him and remarked at the same time that he was ill.
The accused, thereupon, got irritated and pulled the cot about, causing the man to fall out of it, kicked him and struck him on the side or on the ribs with a stick.
Owing to the injuries he had received, the man died very soon after. It was held that as the deceased was suffering from a diseased spleen the accused was guilty of causing grievous hurt.²

(2) Hurt.—Where the prisoner, having received great provocation from his wife, pushed her with both arms so as to throw her with violence to the ground, and after she was down slapped her with his open hand, and the woman died on account of rupture of her spleen which was diseased, it was held that the prisoner was guilty of causing hurt.³ Similarly, where a wife died from a chance kick in the spleen inflicted by her husband on provocation given by her, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, he was held guilty of causing hurt.⁴ The prisoner, dissatisfied and irritated by the lazy and inefficient manner in which a punkha cooly was managing a punkha, went up to him and struck him one or more blows. The cooly was suffering from a diseased spleen and died from the injuries he had received. It was held that the prisoner was guilty of causing hurt.⁵
Where the accused threw a piece of a brick at the deceased which struck him in the region of the spleen and ruptured it, the spleen being diseased, it was held that the offence committed was that of causing hurt.⁶ The accused was charged with having caused the death of one N by kicking him over the regions of the spleen, being enraged at the latter having allowed his goats to stray into his field. The medical evidence showed that the spleen of the deceased was enormously large, and slight injuries over the region of the spleen would be sufficient to cause its rupture which generally ends fatally. It was held that in the absence of satisfactory evidence to prove knowledge of the state of health of the deceased on the part of the accused, the conviction should be for hurt only.⁷

6. Explanation 1.—A person causing bodily injury to another who is labouring under a disorder, disease, or bodily infirmity, and thereby accelerating the death of that other, is deemed to have 'caused his death.' But one of the elements of the offence of culpable homicide must be present.⁸

"An offence affecting the life of a person who must soon die either from a mortal disease or in course of nature from old age and decay, is not a less offence than one which affects the life of a person in strong health. The offender causes death in the one case by accelerating that event by a few months, or days, or hours; in the other case, possibly, he hastens the event by many years. The real difference between the two cases is not in point of law, but in respect of the degree of proof, requisite to show the cause of death. For where the death of a person who receives some bodily injury while labouring under a disease is the subject of enquiry, the Court in estimating the evidence must consider whether it is sufficiently proved which of the two causes, the disease or the bodily injury to the deceased person, is the cause of his dying on the day when his death occurs. It is not necessary (if it were possible) that the evidence should enable the Court to apportion the two causes and the degree in which each of them contributes to the result. But the Court must be satisfied (1) that the death at the time when it occurs is not caused solely by the disease; and (2) that it is caused by the bodily injury to this extent,

¹ Megha Meekah, (1863) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 39.

² O'Brien, (1880) 2 All. 766.

³ Punchannun Tante, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

97.

⁴ Dysargo Noshyo, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 23.

⁵ Fox, (1870) 2 All. 522.

⁶ Randhir Singh, (1881) 3 All. 597; (1881)

⁷ Weir 288.

⁸ Aiman, (1904) 1 A. L. J. R. (Notes) 162

⁹ Fox, sup

criminal force.¹ According to the English law this would have been treated as manslaughter. The accused, while engaged in a verbal wrangle with his wife, struck her a blow on the left side with great force, the result of which was that she vomitted and bled from the nose, and within little more than an hour died. The death was caused by the rupture of the spleen. It was held that he was guilty of grievous hurt only.² Where three persons attacked a fourth with clubs, and one of the assailants struck a blow which fractured the skull of the person attacked and caused his death, but the evidence left it in doubt as to which of the three assailants struck that blow, it was held that the offence of which the three assailants were guilty was grievous hurt rather than culpable homicide not amounting to murder.³ Where two persons on receiving provocation delivered an unpremeditated attack on the deceased and one blow only was given which caused his death, but it was not shown who struck the fatal blow, it was held that both were guilty of grievous hurt but not of culpable homicide.⁴

Where a man struck another on the head with a stick, and believing him to be dead set fire to the hut with a view to remove all evidence of the crime and it was found that the blow only stunned the deceased and the death was really caused by the injuries from the burning when the accused set fire to the hut, it was held that the offence committed was that of attempt to murder.⁵ The accused assaulted his wife and gave her kicks, blows and slaps. The kicks were given below the naval. The woman fell down and became unconscious. In order to create an appearance that the woman had committed suicide, the accused took up the unconscious body of his wife, thinking it to be a dead body and hung it by a rope. The post mortem examination showed that death was due to hanging. It was held that he thought that she was dead and that the offence committed was grievous hurt. The accused gave her blows and slaps before she fell down and then he hung her head with a ploughshare which, though not shown to be a blow likely to cause death, did in fact render her unconscious and, believing her to be dead, in order to lay the foundation of a false defence of suicide by hanging, the accused hanged her on a beam by a rope and thereby caused her death by strangulation, it was held that the accused was not guilty of either murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder but was guilty of grievous hurt.⁷

L, who had a stick in his hand, attacked B who had none. Learning that G was coming to help B, L entered his house whence he fetched a chopper and renewed his attack on B inflicting more than one injury. L allowed himself to be disarmed by G who got some slight injuries in the scuffle that ensued. B was sent to the hospital where he died of septic pneumonia. It was held that there being no intention to cause death L could only be convicted of having caused grievous hurt.⁸

A youth of about eighteen had, without any ancillary violence, sexual intercourse with a well-developed girl probably under twelve years of age; the girl did not consent; her vagina was ruptured and, as a result, she died of shock. It was held that, as death was not the natural consequence to be expected from a simple sexual offence, the accused was not guilty of culpable homicide.⁹

I gave a blow ceased,

¹ Acharjys (1877) 1 Mad. 224.

² Jdu Leg. (1881) 3 All. 776.

³ Bhola Singh, (1907) 29 All. 282. See Gulab, (1918) 40 All. 686, overruling Chandan Singh, (1917) 40 All. 103; Dattu Nana Pawar, (1917) 19 Bom. L. R. 902, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 137.

⁴ Ramzan, (1919) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 2 of 1920, 21 P. L. R. 8.

⁵ Khandu volad Bhavani, (1880) 15 Bom. 194.

⁶ Dadu Sardar, (1914) 18 C. W. N. 1279.

⁷ Palani Goundan, (1910) 42 Mad. 547, F.R.

⁸ Lail Singh, (1918) 17 A. L. J. F. 26; 1

U. P. L. R. 42. See Musammal Sirjan,

(1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 49 of 1915.

⁹ Shamlu Khatni, (1924) 3 Pat. 410.

who was suffering from a diseased spleen, on the region of that organ, he was held guilty of causing grievous hurt.¹ The accused went to a place where a cart was standing, and presuming that it belonged to a man who was sleeping on a cot close by, roused him and told him to let him have the cart. The man explained that the cart did not belong to him and remarked at the same time that he was ill. The accused, thereupon, got irritated and pulled the cot about, causing the man to fall out of it, kicked him and struck him on the side or on the ribs with a stick. Owing to the injuries he had received, the man died very soon after. It was held that as the deceased was suffering from a diseased spleen the accused was guilty of causing grievous hurt.²

(2) Hurt.—Where the prisoner, having received great provocation from his wife, pushed her with both arms so as to throw her with violence to the ground, and after she was down slapped her with his open hand, and the woman died on account of rupture of her spleen which was diseased, it was held that the prisoner was guilty of causing hurt.³ Similarly, where a wife died from a chance kick in the spleen inflicted by her husband on provocation given by her, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, he was held guilty of causing hurt.⁴ The prisoner, dissatisfied and irritated by the lazy and inefficient manner in which a punkha cooly was managing a punkha, went up to him and struck him one or more blows. The cooly was suffering from a diseased spleen and died from the injuries he had received. It was held that the prisoner was guilty of causing hurt.⁵ Where the accused threw a piece of a brick at the deceased which struck him in the region of the spleen and ruptured it, the spleen being diseased, it was held that the offence committed was that of causing hurt.⁶ The accused was charged with having caused the death of one N by kicking him over the regions of the spleen, being enraged at the latter having allowed his goats to stray into his field. The medical evidence showed that the spleen of the deceased was enormously large, and slight injuries over the region of the spleen would be sufficient to cause its rupture which generally ends fatally. It was held that in the absence of satisfactory evidence to prove knowledge of the state of health of the deceased on the part of the accused, the conviction should be for hurt only.⁷

6. Explanation 1.—A person causing bodily injury to another who is labouring under a disorder, disease, or bodily infirmity, and thereby accelerating the death of that other, is deemed to have 'caused his death.' But one of the elements of the offence of culpable homicide must be present.⁸

"An offence affecting the life of a person who must soon die either from a mortal disease or in course of nature from old age and decay, is not a less offence than one which affects the life of a person in strong health. The offender causes death in the one case by accelerating that event by a few months, or days, or hours; in the other case, possibly, he hastens the event by many years. The real difference between the two cases is not in point of law, but in respect of the degree of proof, requisite to show the cause of death. For where the death of a person who

it were possible) that the evidence should enable the Court to apportion the two causes and the degree in which each of them contributes to the result. But the Court must be satisfied (1) that the death at the time when it occurs is not caused solely by the disease; and (2) that it is caused by the bodily injury to this extent,

¹ Megha Meeah, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 39.

² O'Brien, (1880) 2 All. 766.

³ Punchanun Tantee, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

97. ⁴ Bysagoo Noshyo, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 29.

⁵ Fox, (1870) 2 All. 522.

⁶ Randhir Singh, (1881) 3 All. 597; (1881)

1 Weir 288.

⁷ Aiman, (1904) 1 A. L. J. R. (Notes) 162

⁸ Fox, sup

that it is accelerated by such injury. Suppose A is ill of small-pox, and Z gives him pills in such doses that the disease is aggravated and death is accelerated; Z has caused death, notwithstanding that it may be proved that A must have eventually died of the small-pox."¹

The English law is to the same effect.² The accused one night came home before his wife, and he was in a condition of violent excitement, and was overheard to express a determination of "giving his wife something" when she came in. When the woman did come home there were at once sounds of an altercation, and shortly afterwards the woman was seen by several witnesses to rush from the house into the road closely pursued by the accused, who was at the same time using violent threats towards her. She was then seen to fall into the roadway, and lying there she was kicked on the left forearm by the accused. When picked up she was found to be dead. The post-mortem examination showed that the deceased was suffering from a persistent thymus gland, and the medical evidence was to the effect that any combination of physical exertion and fright or strong emotion might occasion the death of the person having such gland.³ It was held that the evidence that the death of the deceased was due to a combination of physical exertion and fright, or strong emotion caused by an illegal act of the accused, was sufficient to support a conviction for manslaughter without proof of actual violence on his part occasioning the death.⁴

The Calcutta High Court has held that if a person was suffering from an injury which would render injuries (which would not have a fatal effect to one ordinary man) fatal to that person, it does not necessarily follow, as it would in the case of a healthy man, that the person inflicting those injuries knew it to be likely that death would be caused thereby.⁴

7. Explanation 2.—'By resorting to proper remedies death might have been prevented.'—The explanation reproduces the English law. The authors of the Code say: "We see no reason for excepting such cases [the cases of persons who die of a slight wound, which, from neglect or from the application of improper remedies, has proved mortal] from the simple general rule which we propose. It will, indeed, be in general more difficult to prove that death has been caused by a scratch than by a stab which has reached the heart; and it will, in a still greater degree, be more difficult to prove that a scratch was intended to cause death than that a stab was intended to cause death; yet both these points might be fully established. Suppose such a case as the following:—It is proved that A inflicted a slight wound on Z, a child who stood between him and a large property, it is proved that the ignorant and superstitious servants about Z applied the most absurd remedies to the wound; it is proved that under their treatment the wound mortified, and the child died. Letters from A to a confidant are produced; in those letters, A congratulates himself on his skill, remarks that he could not have inflicted a more severe wound without exposing himself to be punished as a murderer, relates with exultation the mode of treatment followed by the people who have charge of Z, and boasts that he always foresaw that they would turn the slightest incision into a mortal wound. It appears to us, that if such evidence were produced, A ought to be punished as a murderer."

"Again, suppose that A makes a deliberate attempt to commit assassination; in the presence of numbers he aims a knife at the heart of Z, but the knife glances aside, and inflicts only a slight wound. . . In such cases there is no doubt whatever as to the intention. Suppose that the person who received the wound is under the necessity of exposing himself to a moist atmosphere immediately afterwards, and that, in consequence, he is attacked with tetanus and dies. Here, again,

¹ M. & M. 257.

² Murton, (1862) 3 F. & F. 492, Martin, (1832) 5 C. & P. 128

³ Hayward, (1908) 21 Cox 892.

⁴ Ainuddi Chowkidar, (1921) 34 C. L. J. 515.

however slight the wound may have been, we are unable to perceive any good reason for not punishing A as a murderer."¹

"Although proof be given that the wound or other bodily injury if skilfully treated might not have resulted in death, yet if in fact death is the result, the wound 'causes' death. And it does not avail the offender to prove that the first might have been removed or rendered inoperative by the application of proper remedies and that death might thus have been prevented. 'Proper remedies and skilful treatment' may not be within the reach of the wounded man; or, if they are at hand, he may be unable or unwilling to resort to them. But this is immaterial so far as relates to the due interpretation of the words 'cause of death.' The primary cause which sets in motion some other cause,—as the severe wound which induces gangrene or fever,—and the ultimate effect, death, are sufficiently connected as cause and effect, notwithstanding that the supervening sickness or disease might have been cured by medical skill. All that it is essential to establish is, that the death has been caused by the bodily injury, and, if there be any intervening cause, that it is connected with a sufficient degree of probability with the primary one.

"Cases not reached by either of the above explanations may occur, in which there will be some perplexity in determining the cause of death. Suppose a person who has received a wound, and who has received skilful treatment, and in the subsequent sequence, the and death ensues—or suppose he drinks spirit immoderately in a hot climate or suppose he is carried to a hospital where erysipelas happens at the time to be prevalent, and catches the disorder and dies of it—or again suppose the bodily injury renders the amputation of a limb necessary, and that the patient is soon afterwards attacked by some complaint innocuous to a person in sound health, but which proves fatal to him in his weakly condition. In all these cases, if no bodily injury had been received, the man would not have died; and it may therefore be said that the injury is in some sense the cause of death. But it seems indispensable that the death should be connected with the act of violence or other primary cause not merely by a chain of causes and effects, but by such direct influence as is calculated to produce the effect without the intervention of any considerable change of circumstances.

"In each of the instances we have last supposed, the bodily injury caused death under extraordinary circumstances. Its direct influence in producing that result was small, and the intervening circumstances which more immediately caused death could scarcely have been foreseen. Nevertheless the use of the words 'to cause death' without qualification or exception, brings such cases within this term of the definition of the offence of culpable homicide. The difference between these cases and others of less complexity is a matter to be considered by the Court in estimating the effect of the evidence. But it is difficult to conceive any evidence sufficient to establish an intention to cause death on the part of a person who inflicts a bodily injury which ends so unexpectedly in death."²

Cases.—Where a wound is inflicted under circumstances that immediate death would make the person inflicting it guilty of murder, he will be liable for murder even if the death ensues from an operation thought necessary and performed by competent medical advisers, who considered that the wound was dangerous³;

¹ Note M, p. 143.

² M. & M. 228.

³ Edward Lawes Pym, (1846) 1 Cox 339.

⁴ Joseph Holland, (1841) 2 Mood. & R. 351.

*Explanation.*⁹—Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder is a question of fact.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, under the influence of passion excited by a provocation given by Z, intentionally kills Y, Z's child. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was not given by the child, and the death of the child was not caused by accident or misfortune in doing an act caused by the provocation.

(b) Y gives grave and sudden provocation to A. A, on this provocation, fires a pistol at Y, neither intending nor knowing himself to be likely to kill Z, who is near him, but out of sight. A kills Z. Here A has not committed murder, but merely culpable homicide.

(c) A is lawfully arrested by Z, a bailiff. A is excited to sudden and violent passion by the arrest, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done by a public servant in the exercise of his powers.

(d) A appears as a witness before Z, a Magistrate. Z says that he does not believe a word of A's deposition, and that A has perjured himself. A is moved to sudden passion by these words, and kills Z. This is murder.

(e) A attempts to pull Z's nose. Z, in the exercise of the right of private defence, lays hold of A to prevent him from doing so. A is moved to sudden and violent passion in consequence, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done in the exercise of the right of private defence.

(f) Z strikes B. B is by this provocation excited to violent rage. A, a bystander, intending to take advantage of B's rage, and to cause him to kill Z, puts a knife into B's hand for that purpose. B kills Z with the knife. Here B may have committed only culpable homicide, but A is guilty of murder.

*Exception 2.*¹⁰—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, in the exercise in good faith of the right of private defence of person or property, exceeds the power given to him by law and causes the death of the person against whom he is exercising such right of defence without premeditation, and without any intention of doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of such defence.

ILLUSTRATION.

Z attempts to horsewhip A not in such a manner as to cause grievous hurt to A. A draws out a pistol. Z persists in the assault. A, believing in good faith that he can by no other means prevent himself from being horsewhipped, shoots Z dead. A has not committed murder, but only culpable homicide.

*Exception 3.*¹¹—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, being a public servant or aiding a public servant acting for the advancement of public justice, exceeds the powers given to him by law, and causes death by doing an act which he, in good faith, believes to be lawful and necessary for the due discharge of his duty as such public servant and without ill-will towards the person whose death is caused.

*Exception 4.*¹²—Culpable homicide is not murder if it is committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and without the offender's having taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner.

Explanation.—It is immaterial in such cases which party offers the provocation or commits the first assault.

*Exception 5.*¹⁵—Culpable homicide is not murder when the person whose death is caused, being above the age of eighteen years, suffers death or takes the risk of death with his own consent.

ILLUSTRATION.

A, by instigation, voluntarily causes Z, a person under eighteen years of age, to commit suicide. Here, on account of Z's youth, he was incapable of giving consent to his own death ; A has therefore abetted murder.

COMMENT.

In this section the definition of culpable homicide appears in an expanded form. In the Penal Code 'culpable homicide' is used as a generic term, and is exhaustively sub-divided into two species, namely, culpable homicide amounting to murder (s. 300, cls. 1, 2, 3, 4) and culpable homicide not amounting to murder (s. 299 and exceptions to s. 300). According to Sir Fitz-James Stephen the definitions of 'culpable homicide' and 'murder' are the weakest part of the Code as they are defined in terms closely resembling each other.

The Code nowhere makes premeditation a necessary concomitant to murder. Whatever the motive may be, or whether or not any motive whatsoever be discoverable, the sole point for enquiry is, whether the person inflicting the injury did so with the intention or knowledge as specified above.¹

Scope—An offence cannot amount to murder, unless it falls within the definition of culpable homicide; for this section merely points out the cases in which culpable homicide amounts to murder. But an offence may amount to culpable homicide and yet may not amount to murder.

In deciding the question whether culpable homicide amounts to murder, it will be erroneous to convict the prisoner of murder simply because the law is to bring an accused person under any charge of murder, and it is not to amount to murder, and it is the place, whether the element or elements which constitute the offence of murder, as defined in this section, exist.² In the Full Bench case of Sheikh Bazu,³ Peacock, C. J., observed: "It does not follow that a case of culpable homicide is murder, because it does not fall within any of the exceptions in s. 300. To render culpable homicide murder, the case must come within the provisions of clauses 1, 2, 3 or 4 of s. 300."

English law.—Murder is unlawfully causing the death of another with malice aforethought, express or implied. Malice aforethought, in murder, practically means—

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---------------|
| (1) | ho is killed. |
| (2) | |
| (3) | ause death or |
| grievous bodily harm to some one. | |

(4) An intent to oppose by force any officer of justice who is lawfully arresting or keeping in custody some one whom he is entitled to arrest or keep in custody, provided the prisoner knows that he is such officer of justice.

The law of British India, differing from the law of England, does not regard every case of homicide as prima facie murder: it throws on the prosecution the burden of proving a certain intent or knowledge.¹ The English law looks to the act and throws on the accused the burden of proving that the act, from the circumstances of the case, does not amount to murder.² The knowledge of the accused and not to the effect caused by the act.

¹ Mahomed Elun Abdool Kurreem, (1865) 1891; Sheikh Pyao, (1883) P. R. No. 27 of 3 W. R. (Cr.) 40. 1883.

3 W. R. N. 545; Attra, (1891) P.-R. No. 9 of 1891.

Culpable homicide and murder distinguished.—The distinction between these two offences is very ably set forth by Melvill, J., in R. v. Govinda,³ in which case the prisoner knocked his wife down, put one knee on her chest, and struck her two or three violent blows on the face with the closed fist, producing extravasation of blood on the brain and she died in consequence. The Court held that there being no intention to cause death, and the bodily injury not being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence committed was not murder but culpable homicide. The learned Judge said :

"For convenience of comparison, the provisions of ss. 299 and 300... may be stated thus :—

SECTION 299.

SECTION 300.

A person commits culpable homicide, if the act by which the death is caused is done.

Subject to certain exceptions, culpable homicide is murder, if the act by which the death is caused is done.

(a) With the intention of causing death ;

(1) With the intention of causing death ;

(b) With the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death ;

(2) With the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused ;
(3) With the intention of causing bodily injury to any person, and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death ;

(c) With the knowledge that...the act is likely to cause death.

(4) With the knowledge that the act is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

"I have underlined the words which appear to me to mark the differences between the two offences.

"(a) and (1) show that where there is an intention to kill, the offence is always murder.

"(b) and (3) appear to me intended to apply (I do not say that they are) to cases of this description. Whether the offence is culpable homicide or murder depends upon the degree of risk to human life. If death is a likely result, it is culpable homicide ; if it is the most probable result, it is murder.

"The essence of (2) appears to me to be found in the words which I have underlined. The offence is murder, if the offender knows that the particular person injured is likely, either from peculiarity of constitution, or immature age, or other special circumstance, to be killed by an injury which would not ordinarily cause death.

"A blow is likely to cause him bodily injury. Z dies of the blow. A is guilty of murder, although the blow might not in the ordinary course of nature to cause the death of a person.

¹ (1891) 1 Weir 788.

² Greenacre, (1837) 6 C. & P. 35

³ (1876) 1 Bom. 312, 344-46.

"T . . . these two clai The offence likely to cause death ; it is murder, if such injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The distinction is fine, but appreciable. It is much the same distinction as that between (c) and (4), already noticed. It is a question of degree of probability. Practically, I think it will generally resolve itself into a consideration of the nature of the weapon used. A blow from a fist or a stick on a vital part may be likely to cause death ; a wound from a sword in a vital part is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death."

As regards (c) Peacock, C. J., observes in *Gora Chand Gopee's case*¹ : " There are many cases falling within the words of s. 299 ' or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death ' that do not fall within the 2nd, 3rd, or 4th clauses of s. 300, such for instance as the offences described in ss. 279, 280, 281, 282, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288 and 289, if the offender knows that his act or illegal omission is likely to cause death, and if in fact it does cause death. But, although he may know that the act or illegal omission is so dangerous that it is likely to cause death, it is not murder, even if death is caused thereby, unless the offender knows that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or unless he intends thereby to cause death or such bodily injury as is described in clause 2 or 3 of s. 300.

" As an illustration, suppose a gentleman should drive a buggy in a rash and negligent manner, or furiously along a narrow crowded street. He might know that he was likely to kill some person, but he might not intend to kill anyone.

cause death or such bodily injury, etc., as to bring the case within the 4th clause of s. 300. In an ordinary case of furious driving, the facts would scarcely warrant such a finding. If a man should drive a buggy furiously, not merely along a crowded street, but intentionally into the midst of a crowd of persons, it would probably be found as a fact that he knew that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury, etc., as in clause 4, s. 300.

" From the fact of a man's doing an act with the knowledge that he is likely to cause death, it may be presumed that he did it with the intention of causing death, if all the circumstances of the case justify such a presumption ; but I should never presume an intention to cause death merely from the fact of furious driving in a crowded street in which the driver might know that his act would be likely to cause death. Presumption of intention must depend upon the facts of each particular case.

" § . . .
way St: of the
particu
ness by any other train ; that at the time of the furious driving it wanted only two minutes to the time of the train's starting, that the road was so crowded that he must have known that he was likely to run over some one, and to cause death, would anyone under the circumstances presume that his intention was to cause death ? Would it not be more reasonable to presume that his intention was to save the train ? If the Judge or jury should find that his intention was to save the train, but that he must have known that he was likely to cause death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless they should also find that the risk of causing of death was such that he must have known, and did know, that his act must in all probability cause death, etc., within the meaning of clause 4, s. 300.

¹ (1856) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 45, 46, & 2.

"If they should go further, and infer from the knowledge that he was likely to cause death, that he intended to cause death, he would be guilty of murder, and liable to capital punishment."

"It may be useful here to point out that the Indian Penal Code contemplates that when an act is culpable homicide, whether amounting to murder, or not amounting to murder, by reason of the act being done with the knowledge described in clause (3) of s. 299 (or with the knowledge described in clause 4 of s. 300, which knowledge satisfies the definition in clause 3 of s. 299), an intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death must be absent. When intention of either kind co-exists with the knowledge described, the knowledge merges in the intention, and a higher degree of guilt is imputable. That the degree of guilt is higher when a murderous intention exists (which intention seems to be deemed to import the specified knowledge), and is lower when the knowledge is unaccompanied by such intention, seems a necessary inference from the language of s. 304 as to punishment."¹

"Putting it shortly, all acts of killing done with the intention to kill, or to inflict bodily injury likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that death must be the most probable result, are prima facie murder, while those committed with the knowledge that death will be a likely result are culpable homicide not amounting to murder."²

Where, therefore, the act of the accused does not fall within the first clause of s. 300, that is, where the act was done not with the intention of causing death, the difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. It is culpable homicide where death must have been known to be a probable result. It is murder, where it must have been known to be the most probable result.

Culpable homicide may, therefore, be not murder (1) where notwithstanding the mental state is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions to s. 300 applies, or (2) where the mental state, though within the description of s. 299, is not of the special degree of criminality required by s. 300.

In cases where it is difficult to determine whether the offence committed by the accused is culpable homicide or culpable homicide amounting to murder, the accused should be convicted of the lesser offence.³

1. Clause 1.—Act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death.—The word 'act' includes omissions as well (s. 33). See C as if his child with and the child

'Death' means the death of a human being (s. 46). It will be murder whether death

in a either directly from the wound or in consequence of the wound creating conditions, which give occasion to the appearance of a fatal disease, the person inflicting the wound is guilty of murder.⁶ Absence of premeditation will not reduce the crime of murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁷ But where there is

¹ Per Plowdon, J. in Barkatulla, (1887) P. R. No. 32 of 1887, p. 65. See also the judgment of the same learned Judge in Sheikha Pyao, (1883) P. R. No. 27 of 1883.
² Per Straight, J., in Ida Beg, (1881) 3 All. 776, 778; Girdharree Singh, (1873) 6 N. W. P. 26.

³ Nga Po Aung, (1890) S. J. L. B. 439
F

C. 401.
171.
(1886)

3 W. R. (Cr.) 40.

know, that his act must in all probability cause death, etc., within the meaning of clause 4, s. 300.

"If they should go further, and infer from the knowledge that he was likely to cause death, that he intended to cause death, he would be guilty of murder, and liable to capital punishment."

"It may be useful here to point out that the Indian Penal Code contemplates that when an act is culpable homicide, whether amounting to murder, or not amounting to murder, by reason of the act being done with the knowledge described in clause (3) of s. 299 (or with the knowledge described in clause 4 of s. 300, which knowledge satisfies the definition in clause 3 of s. 299), an intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death must be absent. When intention of either kind co-exists with the knowledge described, the knowledge merges in the intention, and a higher degree of guilt is imputable. That the degree of guilt is higher when a murderous intention exists (which intention seems to be deemed to import the specified knowledge), and is lower when the knowledge is unaccompanied by such intention, seems a necessary inference from the language of s. 304 as to punishment."¹

"Putting it shortly, all acts of killing done with the intention to kill, or to inflict bodily injury likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that death must be the most probable result, are prima facie murder, while those committed with the knowledge that death will be a likely result are culpable homicide not amounting to murder."²

Where, therefore, the act of the accused does not fall within the first clause of s. 300, that is, where the act was done not with the intention of causing death, the difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. It is culpable homicide where death must have been known to be a probable result. It is murder, where it must have been known to be the most probable result.

Culpable homicide may, therefore, be not murder (1) where notwithstanding the mental state is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions to s. 300 applies, or (2) where the mental state, though within the description of s. 299, is not of the special degree of criminality required by s. 300.

In cases where it is difficult to determine whether the offence committed by the accused is culpable homicide or culpable homicide amounting to murder, the accused should be convicted of the lesser offence.³

"1. Clause 1.—Act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death"—The word 'act' includes omissions.⁴ See Comment on s. 299. Any omission by which as if the death is caused directly by an act. his child with proper sustenance, although re, and the child dies, it will be murder.⁵

'Death' means the death of a human being. (s. 40). It will be murder whether death is caused of a grown-up person or a newly-born child.⁶

As to 'intention,' see Comment on s. 299, supra. Where a man stabs another in a vital part he must be held to have intended to cause death, and if death ensues either directly from the wound or in consequence of the wound creating conditions, which give occasion to the appearance of a fatal disease, the person inflicting the wound is guilty of murder.⁷ Absence of premeditation will not reduce the crime of murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁸ But where there is ¹ Per Fowden, J., in Barkatulla, (1887) P. R. No. 32 of 1887, p. 65. See also the judgment of the same learned Judge in Shrikh Pyao, (1883) P. R. No. 27 of 1883.

² Per Straught, J., in Idu Beg, (1891) 3 All. 776, 778. Gurdare Singh, (1873) 6 N. W. P. 26.

³ Nga Po Aung, (1880) S. J. L. B. 459.

⁴ Gunga Singh, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 44; Ram Prasad, (1883) 3 A. W. N. 231.

⁵ Irnea; Bampa, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 401.

⁶ Nga Doo, (1904) 10 Burma L. R. 171.

⁷ Mahomed Elim Abdul Karreem, (1863) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 40.

nothing more than a fatal result to indicate an intention to cause death, and no weapon is used, it is unsafe to convict of murder.¹

Cases.—Neglect to provide medical aid or food.—Infant.—Where A was convicted of the manslaughter of his son of tender years, who died of confluent small-pox, and A, though able to do so, did not, owing to certain religious views he held, employ any medical practitioner, nor afford to the child any medical aid and attendance, and it was proved that proper medical aid and attendance might have saved or prolonged the child's life, it was held that the conviction could not be sustained. It is not enough to show neglect of reasonable means for preserving or prolonging the child's life; but to convict of manslaughter it must be shown that the neglect had the effect of shortening life. In order to sustain the conviction affirmative proof is required.² In an earlier case it was distinctly shown, and found by the jury, that the child's death was caused by the neglect to provide medical aid, and the conviction was upheld.³ Where the death of a child proper nourishment, it was said that wicked negligence.⁴ These cases are decided under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, which is in force in England. To warrant the conviction of a woman for manslaughter of her new-born child, whose death is caused by want of proper care at birth, it is not enough to show that such woman was guilty of criminal negligence by purposely arranging to be unattended at her confinement. She must also be proved to have been further guilty of negligence towards the child after it was completely born.⁵

Neglect to provide medical aid or food.—Adults.—A girl of eighteen was taken in labour in the house of her step-father. The mother did not procure the aid of a midwife, in consequence of which the daughter died. The evidence did not show that she had means to pay the midwife. It was held that she was not legally bound to procure the aid of a midwife and that she could not be convicted of manslaughter.⁶ Where a mistress omitted to supply her servant with proper food and lodging and so caused her death, it was remarked. "The law clearly is that, if a person has the custody and charge of another and neglects to supply proper food and lodging, such person is responsible, if from such neglect death results to the person in custody; but it is also equally clear that, when a person, having the free control of her actions and able to take care of herself, remains in a service where she is starved and badly lodged, the mistress is not criminally responsible for any consequences that may ensue."⁷ The accused, a woman of full age and without any means of her own, lived with, and was maintained by, the deceased, her old aunt. No one lived with them. For the last ten days of her life the deceased suffered from a disease which prevented her from moving or doing anything to procure assistance; during this time the accused lived in the house and took in the food supplied by the tradesman, but, apparently gave none of it to the deceased, nor did she procure for her any medical or nursing attendance or inform anyone of the condition of the deceased. The death of the deceased was substantially accelerated by want of food, nursing, and medical attendance. It was held that a duty was imposed upon the accused under the circumstances to supply the deceased with sufficient food to maintain life, and that the death of the deceased having been accelerated by the neglect of such duty, the accused was guilty of manslaughter.⁸

Mere presence not sufficient for conviction of murder: common intention is necessary.—Mere presence as a member of a gang which has committed murder is insufficient to support a conviction for murder. It must be shown that murder was the common object of the gang and that the accused did some act in furtherance

¹ Daude Gangadu, (1881) 1 Weir 299

² Per Coleridge, C. J., in Morby, (1881) 8

Q B. D. 571, 574.

³ Donnes, (1875) 1 Q. B. D. 25

⁴ Nicholls, (1874) 13 Cox 75.

⁵ Izod, (1904) 20 Cox 690.

⁶ Shepherd, (1862) 31 L. J. (M. C.) 102.

⁷ Per Erle, C. J., in Smith, (1865) L. & C. 607, 624.

⁸ Instan, [1893] 1 Q. B. 450.

of the common object.¹ Where the accused are present at the time of a murder and thereby give moral support to it, they are as much guilty of murder as the murderer himself.² Where the accused, a menial servant, accompanied his master with the intention of rendering such assistance as might be required when the latter had announced his intention of committing murder, it was held that the accused was guilty of murder.³ Where a blow was struck by A in the presence of, and by the order of, B, both were held to be principals in the transaction; and where two persons joined in beating a man, and he died, it was held not necessary to ascertain exactly what the effect of each blow was.⁴ Where three prisoners assaulted the deceased, and gave him a beating, in the course of which one of the prisoners struck the deceased a blow on the head, which resulted in death, it was held that, in the absence of proof that the prisoners had the common intention to inflict injury likely to cause death, they could not be convicted of murder.⁵ But if two or more persons combine in injuring another in such a manner that each person engaged in causing the injury must know that the result of such injury may be the death of the injured person, it is no answer on the part of any one of them to allege that his individual act did not cause death, and that by his individual act he cannot be held to have intended death.⁶

2. Clause 2.—‘With the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death.’—See Comment on s. 299. If a man strikes another on the head with a stick when he is asleep, and fractures his skull, knowledge of likelihood of causing death must be presumed; and the offence committed is murder.⁷

This clause also applies in special cases where the person injured is in such a condition that he is likely to be caused by an injury to his sound health, and where the person inflicting the injury knows that owing to such condition or state of health it is likely to cause the death of the person injured.⁸

Cases.—Where A several times kicked B, who, after having been severely beaten, fell down senseless, it was held that A was guilty of murder as he must have known that such kicks were likely to cause death in B's state at that time.⁹ Where four men beat another so severely that death ensued from the injuries received, it was held that they must be presumed to have known that by such acts they were likely to cause death, and that the offence of murder was not reduced to culpable homicide not amounting to murder by the absence of intention to cause death.¹⁰ Where a man struck another on the head with a stick when he was asleep, and fractured his skull, it was held that knowledge of likelihood of causing death must be presumed, and that he was guilty of murder.¹¹ A cut Z on the head, with a razor, slicing off a bit of the frontal bone and cutting the brain. Z died, and as the natural consequence of an act of the kind in question would be death, A must be presumed to have intended to cause death.¹² A attacked his mother-in-law, Y, a woman of fifty-five, with an edged instrument but by mistake cut another woman, Z, on the arm. Z, who was sixty-one years of age, died from the effects of

¹ Wanbarapu Baladu, (1881) 1 Weir 296;
Kammari Kannappa, (1881) 1 Weir 297.

² Tull, (1924) 22 A. L. J. R. 1075.

³ Golla Sanyasi, (1881) 1 Weir 296.

⁴ Mohamed Ager, (1874) 23 W. R. (Cr.)
11; Gour Chunder Das, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

⁵ Duma Baidya, (1896) 19 Mad. 483.

⁷ Sheikh Choollye, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 35.

⁸ See Nga Maung, (1907) 4 L. B. R. 132;
Ram Asre (1922) 26 O. C. 18.

⁹ Nilmadhub Sircar, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.)

12.

¹⁰ Pooskoo, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 33; Garib,
(1910) 17 A. L. J. R. 935.

¹¹ Sheikh Choollye, s p

¹² Po Tu, (1903) 4 L. B. R. 308.

the wound, although the Civil Surgeon considered that the injury was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death to a woman of her age. The Sessions Judge considered that this clause was applicable on account of Y's age. It was held that this clause was not applicable because (1) as the injury was actually caused to Z, although intended for Y, Y's age did not affect the question at all, and (2) in view of the medical evidence and of the fact that the injury was not on a vital part of the body, A could not be held to have intended such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause the death of either Y or Z, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death.¹ Where a person struck the deceased with a highly lethal weapon with the knowledge that the act was such as was likely to cause death, he was held guilty of murder.² It was held likewise where a blow was given with a bottle full of liquid.³ A body of six persons attacked another with cattle goads in a violent and determined manner, inflicting sixteen wounds on his body and causing several and severe ruptures of his spleen, and so caused his death. The person attacked was a strongly built man of thirty-five years of age, and his spleen was in a healthy state. It was held that such acts, committed by several persons on one, in such a manner, apparently regardless of the consequences, and with such results, warranted the inference that the acts were done by those persons with the intention either of causing the death of the person attacked or such injuries as the offenders knew to be likely to cause his death; and that the offence amounted to murder.⁴

In the course of a murderous attack on his wife by the accused, the former ran to the deceased woman for protection and clasped her arms round her waist. The accused thereupon gave a fatal stab to the deceased with the sole object of making her let go his wife, so that he might wreak his vengeance on her. The accused had no quarrel with the deceased and had no intention of killing her. It was held that the accused was only guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as he did not intend to inflict such injury on the deceased as was likely to cause her death or was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause her death.⁵

The two accused, brothers, between whom and the deceased and his son was bad feeling, came upon the deceased in the fields and setting upon him, beat him with sticks so severely that he died within a few minutes, no less than fourteen ribs being fractured resulting in the rupture of both lungs and of the spleen. It was held that the crime fell under the first or second clause of s. 300 as the intention was clear whether to kill or to cause a dangerous injury and thus the case was taken out of the purview of clause 4 which applied to cases in which there was no wish to kill or to hurt.⁶

Dhatara poisoning—Where a woman of twenty years of age was found to have administered dhatara (a poisonous herb) to three members of her family, who ultimately recovered, it was held that she was guilty of attempt to commit murder as she must be presumed to have known that the administration of dhatara

the persons to whom she administered the dhatara in order that she might run away with her lover. The same High Court in a subsequent case said: "Dhatara is not exactly a deadly poison, and may often be given for the purpose of merely

¹ Bin U, (1908) 4 L. B. R. 367.

² Sobeel Mahee, (1806) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 32.

³ Shree Hla U, (1903) 2 L. B. R. 125, 10 Burma L. R. 29.

⁴ Elem Molla, (1907) 37 Cal. 315. See Naba, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 12 of 1911, to the same effect.

⁵ Perumal Nair, [1912] M. W. N. 193, per Abdur Rahim and Sundara Aiyar, JJ. (Spencer, J., dissenting).

⁶ Nawab, (1914) P. R. No. 31 of 1914.

⁷ Tulsha, (1897) 20 All. 143.

stupefying a victim." On this ground it held, where, for the purpose of facilitating robbery, dhatura was administered by two persons to certain travellers, in consequence of which one of the travellers died and others were made seriously ill, that, in respect of the traveller who died, the offence committed was that of grievous hurt (s. 325), and, in respect of the travellers who did not die, the offence committed was that under s. 328.¹ This case is of doubtful authority. The same Court has now laid down that a person who recklessly administers dhatura to another is guilty, if death ensue, of the offence of murder, and not merely of culpable homicide not amounting to murder or of grievous hurt.² Where dhatura was administered with the object of facilitating robbery but in such quantity that the person to whom it was given died in the course of a few hours, it was held that the person so administering dhatura was guilty of murder.³ The former Chief Court of the Punjab followed this case where the accused administered dhatura to A and B, both of whom died from the effects thereof and on the following date he administered the same poison to C and D, the former got ill and recovered but the latter died. It held that the accused was guilty of the offence of murder, for, when he administered dhatura poison he committed an act which, even if not committed with the intention of causing death or causing bodily injury likely, to the knowledge of the offender, or in the ordinary course of nature sufficient, to cause death, was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death; and that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 307 as regards the poison administered to C.⁴ The Court observed: "It would be putting a premium on murder to hold that the giving of dhatura in this reckless fashion is comparatively a minor offence. We cannot agree with the dicta in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in the case of *Emperor v. Bhagwan Din*⁵ and we prefer, in the interests of public safety, to follow the ruling of the same High Court in the case of Emperor v. Gudah.⁶ As remarked by the learned judges in the latter case, 'Although death does not always follow from dhatura poisoning, yet it does follow in a considerable proportion of cases.' " In this case it was found by the Court that the accused was an expert in dhatura poisoning and knew well that the poison worked in a most effective and dangerous manner upon his victims. But where the accused caused the death of two persons by administering to them dhatura in order to facilitate the commission of robbery, the same Court, in another case, held that they were guilty of an offence under s. 326 and not under s. 302. It said that "no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the section of the Indian Penal Code applicable, and that the circumstances of the particular case must be taken into consideration." It further observed that it had not been shown that the accused administered dhatura with such intention or knowledge as would make them guilty of murder.⁷ In case of murder by dhatura poisoning it is to be determined with what object it is administered. Its use may be merely in order to facilitate the commission of robbery and it does not per se and necessarily import contemplation of the victim's death as means towards or as incidental to the main end of that offence. The point is to be decided with regard to the circumstances of each case and the best indication of the intention of the offender can be gathered from the amount of dhatura which he administers. Where a large quantity of dhatura is administered the offender shall be presumed to intend to cause the death of the victim for the successful termination of his crime.⁸

Arsenic.—A person who administers a well-known poison like arsenic to another must be taken to know that his act is so imminently dangerous that it must in all

¹ Elakpura Din, (1908) 50 AIL 563.

² Naldu, (1923) 45 AIL 557.

³ Gudali, (1908) 31 AIL 148.

⁴ Lola, (1910) P. L. R. No. 22 of 1911,

P. 171.

⁵ (1908) 30 AIL 563, 571.

⁶ (1905) 31 AIL 118.

⁷ Sadhu, (1914) P. L. R. No. 19 of 1919.

⁸ Kearu Din, (1910) 21 P. L. R. 6.

probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and, if death ensues, he is guilty of murder, notwithstanding that his intention may have been to cause death. Where the accused administered arsenic to a boy nine years of age with the object of preventing the father of the boy from appearing as a witness against himself in a criminal case, but in such quantity that the boy died in the course of three days, it was held that he was guilty of murder, though his intention might not have been to cause death.¹ The accused sent sweetmeats poisoned with arsenic to A, with the intention of causing her death and that A, as well as D and C to whom she gave a part of the sweetmeat, all became seriously ill as a consequence of partaking of it but they all recovered from the effect of the poison. It was held that the accused was guilty of attempting to murder B and C as well.²

3. Clause 3.—With the intention of causing bodily injury to any person ...sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.—The distinction between this clause and clause 2 depends upon the degree of probability of death from the act committed. If from the intentional act of injury committed the probability of death resulting is high, the finding should be that the accused intended to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; if there was probability in a less degree of death ensuing from the act committed, the finding should be that the accused intended to cause injury likely to cause death.³

In the case of some classes of injuries, it is easy to say what was intended; for instance, in a wound with a knife in the abdomen. A man who inflicts such a wound intends to inflict a wound which we must know will be dangerous to life. But in the case of wounds with blunt instruments, the intention is not so clear. The effect of a severe blow upon one man will be very different from what it will hood of death is so great that the bodily injury intended to be inflicted must be held to be an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death so as to bring the case within the third clause of s. 300. Where the likelihood is not sufficiently high, the offence is that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁵

It cannot always be assumed that, when a man strikes a blow on the head, he intends to cause death or injury sufficient to cause death or even injury likely to cause death.⁶ Owing to a quarrel which the deceased had with the accused, the latter armed himself with an iron-shod stick and struck one blow with it on the head of the deceased which caused his death. He was convicted of murder. It was held that, inasmuch as it was possible that the blow struck by the accused exceeded in violence the injury he had in view at the moment of striking it, the conviction should be altered from murder to culpable homicide.⁷ Where a person who struck a blow on the head of another with such violence as to cut through the skull, it was held that the intention of causing death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and was guilty of murder.⁸

Cases.—Stabbing in a vital part.—The accused stabbed the deceased with a dagger in the back. The wound, though not severe, was in such a part of the body

¹ Gauri Shankar, (1918) 40 All. 36.

² Ladha Singh, (1920) 3 L. L. J. 191.

³ Po Sin alias Po Sin Gyn, (1909) 5 L. B. R.

⁴ Apala, (1923) 1 Rang. 285

⁵ Murala Kondaya, (1882) 1 Weir 300.

⁶ Apala, sup.

⁷ Nga Tun Bar, (1907) 14 Burma L. R.

264, Ramza, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 533.

⁸ Sardarkhan Jaridkhan, (1916) 18 Bom.

L. R. 793, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 211, 41 Bom. 27, followed in Gulam Jilani, (1925) 26 P. L. R.

430, 2 L. C. 37.

⁹ Tek Singh, (1925) 7 L. L. J. 175, 26

P. L. R. 221.

that it was considered dangerous ; but the dagger did not penetrate to any great length. The wound healed in about seven days, at the end of which time symptoms indicative of tetanus were observed and the deceased died from that cause on the following day. According to the medical evidence in the case, tetanus was caused by a bacillus, which entered the body through the breach of surface, caused by a wound. It was held that there was no reasonable doubt that tetanus, which was the cause of the death of the deceased, was due to the wound inflicted by the accused ; that when there was a natural explanation of the appearance of tetanus, it was unreasonable to conjecture that tetanus might have resulted independently of the normal cause, and had been the effect of some rare and unexplained conditions.¹ The accused inflicted a stab with a sharp-pointed weapon which entered the upper part of the deceased's stomach, causing rupture of it and of the peritoneum, it was held that his act came within this clause.²

Assaulting—A man who has either hacked a fellow-creature about in a most merciless fashion or has practically pounded him to death, cannot escape conviction of murder merely by urging that he was careful to avoid injuring a vital part.³ Where the accused caused the death of another person by giving him an unmerciful thrashing with sticks, smashing both bones of each forearm, the right elbow and right knee cap, and the occipital area on the right temporal area of the skull, it was held that he was guilty of murder.⁴ The accused killed a person by striking him one blow on the head with a long and heavy bamboo. The nature of the injury indicated that very great force was used. It was held that although the weapon used was not one that would of necessity cause fatal injury, the force used was so great as to show that the accused intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and that he was guilty of murder.⁵ There can be no doubt that a person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a dang (club) on a vulnerable part of the body such as the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the person to whom the injury was caused.⁶ In the course of a riot the accused attacked and killed a man with dangerous weapons. It was held that the acts of the accused having caused the death of the man, and there being nothing to suggest that they were not sufficient to cause death as their ordinary and natural result, in the absence of proof of circumstances sufficient to give the accused the benefit of any of the exceptions, they must be taken to have intended to kill the man.⁷ If a person stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal walls, and the internal viscera, he must undoubtedly be held, whatever his station in life, to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary grave and sudden.¹ Where death was caused by an act done while in a state of intoxication, voluntarily induced, and the accused was convicted of causing grievous hurt, it was held that the accused should have been charged with culpable homicide not amounting to murder.²

4. Clause 4.—‘Person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death... without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death.’—‘To cause death merely by doing an act with the knowledge that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, does not constitute murder as defined in cl. 4 of s. 300, but is mere culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In order that an act done with such knowledge should constitute murder, it is also necessary that it should be committed ‘without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such bodily injury.’ An act done with such knowledge alone is not prima facie an act of murder, subject to proof that there is some excuse. It becomes an act of murder only if it can be positively affirmed that there was no excuse. The requirements of this clause are not satisfied by the act of homicide being an act of extreme recklessness: it must be a wholly inexcusable act of extreme recklessness. It follows that when in view of all the circumstances found to exist in a particular case, it cannot be affirmed of under s. 299, cl. (3). It is culpable homicide because the act causing death is done with the knowledge that the actor is thereby likely to cause death; it is not murder because it does not satisfy both parts of the definition of murder in cl. 4 of s. 300. Being culpable homicide and not being murder, the act is necessarily culpable at class of cases where ‘many persons in jeopardy’ without being aimed at any one in particular, and are perpetrated with a full consciousness of the probable consequence. As, for example, where death is caused by firing a loaded gun into a crowd (vide ill. (d)), by poisoning a well from which people are accustomed to draw water, by opening the draw of a bridge just as a railway passenger train is about to pass over it. In such and the like cases, the imminently dangerous act, the extreme depravity of mind and the regardlessness of human life, properly place the crime upon the same level as the taking of life by deliberate intention.⁴

Scope.—This clause cannot be applied until it is clear that clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the section each and all of them fail to suit the circumstances.⁵ It does not apply to a case in which death has been caused by an act done with the intention of causing bodily injury to a particular person. In such a case the question whether the offence is murder or not must be decided by reference to the first three clauses of the section and the exceptions.⁶ The cases in which this clause has any application are extremely rare, and though it is not easy to attempt to define with any strictness the kind of cases in which that clause comes in, there is one broad distinction between it and the first three clauses—in the first three clauses the important thing is an intention to kill or to hurt, while the fourth clause says nothing about intention.⁷

¹ V. v. S. (1901) 3 B. & D. 200.

² Shree Eia, (1905) 3 L. B. R. 122, 12 Burma L. R. 171, followed in Nga Nu Ban, (1906) 13 Burma L. R. 199.

³ Abdul Karim, (1914) P. R. No. 32 of 1914.

⁴ Ghufar, (1887) P. R. No. 62 of 1887.

Provocation caused by words or gestures.—According to English law mere words, or gestures, not accompanied by a blow will not, in point of law, ¹ reduce a homicide to manslaughter. This, however, is a general rule of law, and under special circumstances there may be such a provocation of words as will have the effect of reducing the crime to manslaughter; for instance, if a husband suddenly hearing from his wife that she had committed adultery, and he having had no idea of such a thing before, were thereupon to kill his wife, it might be manslaughter.² The reason for this exception is that a sudden confession is treated as equivalent to discovery of the act itself.³ Mere suspicion of a wife's adultery is not sufficient to reduce a husband's homicide of the suspected person to manslaughter.⁴ A statement by the wife that she was going to live with another man, or was about to commit adultery, does not amount to provocation so as to reduce the crime of killing from murder to manslaughter.⁵ But the law as to provocation sufficient to reduce homicide to manslaughter is not the same in the case of unmarried as of married persons. "It is a grave offence against the husband for the wife to commit adultery, but there is no such offence when a man is living with another woman. He has no right to object to her going to a house of ill-fame; the case is entirely different."⁶

The authors of the Code remark: "We greatly doubt whether any good reason can be assigned for this distinction. It is an indisputable fact, that gross insults by word or gesture have as great a tendency to move many persons to violent passion as dangerous or painful bodily injuries; nor does it appear to us that passion excited by insult is entitled to less indulgence than passion excited by pain. On the contrary, the circumstance that a man resents an insult more than a wound is any thing but a proof that he is a man of a peculiarly bad heart. It would be a fortunate thing for mankind if every person felt an outrage which left a stain upon his honour more acutely than an outrage which had fractured one of his limbs. If so, why should we treat an offence produced by the blameable excess of a feeling which all wise legislators desire to encourage, more severely than we treat the blameable excess of feelings certainly not more respectable?..."

"A person who should offer a gross insult to the Mahomedan religion in the presence of a zealous professor of that religion, who should deprive some high-born descendant of his caste, or who should suddenly thrust his hand into the covered nainnaun reasonable man of his self-control, not whether it was sufficient to deprive the particular person charged with murder (e.g., a person afflicted with defective control and want of mental balance) of his self-control.¹ The provocation must be such as will upset, not merely a hasty and hot-tempered person, but one of ordinary sense and calmness.² The act must be done whilst the person doing it is deprived of self-control by grave and sudden provocation. That is, it must be done under the immediate impulse of provocation.³ The deprivation of the power of self-control must continue in order to benefit a man who kills another under circumstances of grave provocation.⁴ The fatal blow should be clearly traced to the passion arising from that provocation. Therefore, if, from the circumstances, it appear that the party, before any provocation given, intended to use a deadly weapon towards anyone who might assault him, this would show that a fatal blow given afterwards was not to be attributed to the provocation, and the crime would therefore be murder.⁵ Again, if the act was done after the first excitement had passed away, and there was time to cool, it is murder.⁶

As to the question how long the law will allow for the blood continuing heated under the circumstances, and what shall be considered as evidence of its having cooled, it is laid down in East,⁷ that in every case of homicide, how great soever the provocation may have been, if there be sufficient time for the passion to subside and for reason to interpose, such homicide will be murder. With respect to what interval of time shall be allowed for passion to subside the immediate object of enquiry should be whether the suspension of reason arising from sudden passion continued from the time of the provocation received to the very instant of the mortal stroke given: for if from any circumstances whatever it appear that the party reflected, deliberated, or cooled, any time before the fatal stroke given: or if in legal presumption there . . . will amount to murder; as be . . . to human frailty. Such malice will be presumed, even though the act be perpetrated recently after the provocation received, if the instrument or manner of retaliation be greatly inadequate to the offence given, and cruel and dangerous in its nature. The killing will amount to murder if between the provocation received and the stroke given, the party giving the stroke fall into other discourse, or diversions, and continue so engaged, during a reasonable time for cooling; or if he take up and pursue any other business or design, not connected with the immediate object of his passion, or subservient thereto, so that it may reasonably be supposed that his intention was one called off from the subject of his provocation; or if it appear that he meditated upon his revenge, or used any trick or circumvention to effect it, which shows a deliberation inconsistent with the excuse of sudden passion. It may be further observed, in respect to time, that in proportion to the lapse of time between the provocation and the stroke, less allowance ought to be made for any excess of retaliation, either in the instrument, or the manner of it. The mere length of time intervening between the injury and the retaliation is evidence in itself of deliberation.

The question to be determined in every case will be: "Was there time for the blood to cool and for reason to resume its seat"?⁸ If there was, the offence will be murder; if there was not, the offence will be culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

'Grave and sudden provocation.'—The provocation must be grave and sudden and of such a nature as to deprive the accused of the power of self-control. In determining whether the provocation was so, it is admissible to take into account

¹ Leabins, [1914] 3 K. B. 1116.

² Sokrah, (1924) 5 Lah. 67.

³ Nokul Nushyo, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 27;

Ghausar Singh, (1884) P. R. No. 33 of 1884.

⁴ Bechoo Saout, (1873) 19 W. R. (Cr.) 35.

⁵ John Thomas, (1837) 7 C. & P. 817.

⁶ Yasin Sheil, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 68,*

⁷ Bong. L. R. 6; Lochan, (1886) 8 All. 635.

⁸ Plea of the Crown, Vol. I, p. 252.

⁹ Dhira, (1877) Unrep. Cr. C. 122, the condition of the mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation.¹ But it is not a necessary consequence of anger, or other emotion, that the power of self-control should be lost.² It must be shown distinctly not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his actions, but that that feeling had an adequate cause.³ It has, therefore, been held in a series of cases that the commission of adultery by a wife within the sight of her husband is a sufficient grave provocation to bring the husband within this exception if he kills her. In such cases very mild punishment is usually inflicted.

"It must not, however, be understood that any trivial provocation, which in point of law amounts to an assault, or even a blow, will of course reduce the crime of the party killing to manslaughter... For, where the punishment for a slight transgression of any sort is outrageous in its nature, either in the manner or the continuance of it, and beyond all proportion to the offence, it is rather to be considered as the effect of a brutal and diabolical malignity than of human frailty, it is one of the true symptoms of what the law denominates malice, and therefore the crime will amount to murder notwithstanding such provocation."⁴

When the derangement of the mind reaches that degree that the judgment and reason ceases to hold dominion over it—their authority being suspended and yie... the man who was before a rat... becomes incapable of... It is to such a state of mind that the law in judging of acts tions. And no mental perturbation leaves way to reason and the power of self-control, can reduce a murder to an offence within the range of this mitigating exception.⁵

The provocation must be such as will upset not merely a hasty and hot-tempered person, but one of ordinary sense and calmness.

'Sudden.'—Grave provocation, arising from injuries extending over a long series of years, has been held to be insufficient, in the absence of evidence of recent and sudden provocation to reduce the off to murder. The accused killed the deceased the deceased had seduced his cousin, had cut down trees, had persuaded the woman, whose land he cultivated to turn him away, had usurped his share in the village, and had struck him and constantly behaved towards him in an insolent manner, it was held that there was nothing in the circumstances mentioned by him which could be taken as provocation so grave and sudden as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁶ Where the accused's concubine refused to abandon another with the woman and leaving her, stated he had purchased with the the provocation may have been reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁷ The refusal of a wife to have connection with her husband is held not to constitute a grave and sudden provocation.⁸

¹ Khogayi, (1870) 2 Mad 122; A. W., (1900) 1 D. B. R. (1897-1901) 291.

² Deraj Goveindji, (1895) 20 Bom. 215; Deraj Goveindji, (1895) 14 Bom. 581;

⁴ 1 East P. C. 234.

⁵ M. & M. 242.

⁶ Muni Prodhano, (1882) 1 Weir 306.

⁷ Ghanappa, (1882) 1 Weir 306.

⁸ V. S. S. S., (1882) 1 Weir 308; R. Cr.) nce sent

'Causes the death of the person who gave the provocation'.—The first exception only applies when the death of the person giving provocation has been caused. Cases like those which are not unfrequent of a person under excitement running amock and killing all whom he meets; are not mitigated by this exception.

'Mistake'.—See s. 76, supra. This exception treats the case of a person killed by mistake or accident as culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

'Accident'.—See ills. (a) and (b) and s. 80, supra.

6. Proviso 1.—'Provocation is not sought or voluntarily provoked'.—Where the provocation is sought by the prisoner, it cannot furnish any defence against the charge of murder. A and B were at some difference. A bade B take a pin out of the sleeve of A, intending thereby to take an occasion to strike or wound B, and B did so accordingly, and then A struck B whereof he died. This was held to be murder because there was no provocation, since the act was done with the cons to ki
be ir

B a
that A had committed murder as the provocation given was courted by him.³

As to the definition of the word 'voluntarily,' see s. 39, supra.

7. Proviso 2.—The wording of this provision does not limit its provisions to public servants only, but includes all persons acting according to the commands of law.⁴ The Law Commissioners in their First Report⁵ say: "We apprehend that grave provocation given by anything done under cover of obedience to the law, or under cover of its authority, or by a public servant, or in defence, in excess of what is strictly warranted by the law, in point of violence, or as regards the means used, or the manner of using them, and the like, would be admissible in extenuation of homicide under this clause." As to 'public servant,' see s. 21, supra.

8. Proviso 3.—A person lawfully exercising the right of private defence may give provocation to the aggressor, but the aggressor is thereby not entitled to take shelter under the first exception. "For example, take the case of Wat Tyler. He was a public officer, a tax gatherer, who came to 'exercise his lawful powers' in that capacity, but doing so in a manner unwarranted and highly offensive, Tyler was excited to 'violent passion', and in his rage killed him on the spot. The Commissioners upon this say, 'so far, indeed, should we be from ranking a man who acted like Tyler with murderers, that we conceive that a Judge would exercise a sound discretion in sentencing such a man to the lowest punishment fixed by the law for manslaughter.'"⁶ See ill. (c) to Exception 1. As to the right of private defence, see ss. 96-106, supra.

9. Explanation.—The Calcutta High Court has laid down that provocation is a question of fact, and where the Judge and assessors have found on the evidence that the accused is not guilty of murder, the High Court cannot interfere, as no question of law is involved.⁷ But in a similar case the Allahabad High Court has treated this question as one of law.⁸ The Allahabad view is not in accordance with the present state of law in England and is contrary to the principle of this explanation.

¹ 1 Hale 457, 1 East P. C. 239

⁴ Section 277

² Mohan, (1886) 5 All. 622, Lockan, (1886)

⁵ Ibid.

8 All. 635

³ 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31, s. 24

⁶ Hari Gopal (1884) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 29, 1 B. 22 L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 11.

⁷ Ibid. s. 79, supra.

⁸ Lockan, supra.

raised against the accused, he turned and shot dead one of his pursuers. The accused was held to have committed culpable homicide and not murder.¹

11. Exception 3.—Public servant or person aiding him exceeding the powers given by law.—This exception protects a public servant, or a person aiding a public servant acting for the advancement of public justice, if either of them exceed the powers given to them by law and cause death. It gives protection so long as the public servant acts in good faith; but if his act is illegal and unauthorized by law, or if he glaringly exceed the powers given to him by law, the exception will not protect him.

As to 'good faith,' see s. 52, supra; and as to 'public servant,' see s. 21, supra.

Cases.—Public servant exceeding the power given by law.—Where the prisoners, fearful of being punished if they allowed an outlaw to escape, and thinking that they were acting lawfully, in 1841, shot and killed a Police Constable, and the lumberer who was assisting him, for whose arrest a reward had been offered. The prisoners were held to be guilty of murder while he was endeavouring to escape. The exception did not apply, and he came under this exception and amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.²

Public servant doing an unlawful Act.—Where death was caused by a constable under the orders of a superior officer, it being found that neither he nor his superior officer believed that it was necessary for the public security to disperse certain reapers by firing on them, it was held that he was guilty of murder, since he was "not protected in that he obeyed the orders of his superior officer."³

12. Exception 4.—Death caused without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion without taking undue advantage or acting in a cruel manner.—The exception directs the attention to the distinction between the present and some of the preceding exceptions. In many cases of mutual contest, homicide caused by the person who received the first blow or the provocation, would, under those exceptions, have been murder. But if that person's death had been caused in a sudden fight, in the heat of passion, and not have been within the reach of any of the preceding exceptions, the exception is meant to apply to cases in which the person who has been struck or some provocation given to him has been provoked in any way the quarrel may have originated. The parties puts them, in respect of guilt, upon an equal footing. For, there is a mutual combat, and blows on each side. And however slight the first blow, or provocation, every fresh blow becomes a fresh provocation. The blood already heated warms at every subsequent stroke, and the voice of reason is heard on neither side in the heat of passion. Under such circumstances there cannot be much room for discriminating between the respective degrees of blame with reference to the state of things at the commencement of the fray.⁴

This exception requires three things:

- (1) Sudden fight;
- (2) absence of premeditation; and
- (3) no undue advantage.

It matters not what the cause of the quarrel is, whether real or imaginary, or who draws or strikes first; provided the occasion be sudden, and not urged as a cloak for pre-existing malice.⁵

To bring a case within this exception all the facts mentioned in it must be found.⁶ If two men are fighting and one of them is unarmed while the other uses a deadly weapon, the one who uses such weapon must be held to have taken an gadu, (1882) Weir (3rd Edn.) 180.

¹ Sher Bat, (1879) F. R. No. 1 of 1880.

² Amann, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 120; Futini.

³ Subba Naik, (1898) 21 Mad. 249.

⁴ M. A. M. 261.

⁵ 1 East P. C. 241.

⁶ Ali Mahomed, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 18.

undue advantage and is not entitled to the benefit of this exception.¹ This exception applies to cases in which there is no wish to kill or to hurt.²

'Sudden.'—This word implies that the fight should not have been pre-arranged. A fight is not per se a palliating circumstance, only an unpremeditated fight is such.³ If, on any sudden quarrel, blows pass without any intention to kill or injure another materially, and, in the course of the scuffle, after the parties are heated by the contest, one kills the other with a deadly weapon, it is culpable homicide and not murder.⁴ The lapse of time between the quarrel and the fight is therefore a very important consideration. If there intervenes a sufficient time for passion to subside and for reason to interpose, the killing will be murder.⁵ The occasion must not only be sudden, but the party assaulted must be on an equal footing in point of defence, at least at the onset. This is peculiarly requisite where the attack is made with deadly or dangerous weapons.⁶ If A has formed a deliberate design to kill B, and, after this, they meet and have a quarrel, and many blows pass, and A kills B, this will be murder, if the jury are of opinion that the death was in consequence of previous malice, and not of the sudden provocation.⁷

"If a person receives a blow, and immediately avenges it with any instrument that he may happen to have in his hand, then the offence will be only manslaughter, provided the blow is to be attributed to the passion of anger arising from that previous provocation, for anger is a passion to which good and bad men are both subject. But the law requires two things, first, that there should be that provocation, and, secondly, that the fatal blow should be clearly traced to the influence of passion arising from that provocation... If you see that a person denotes, by the manner in which he avenges a previous blow, that he is not excited by a sudden transport of passion, but under the influence of that wicked disposition, that bad spirit, which the law terms the 'malice,' in the definition of wilful murder, then the offence would not be manslaughter. Suppose, for instance, a blow were given, and the party struck beat the other's head to pieces by continued, cruel, and repeated blows, then you could not attribute that act to the passion of anger, and the offence would be murder. And so if you find that, before the stroke is given there is a determination to punish any man who gives a blow, with such an instrument as the one which the prisoner used (viz., a sword stick), because, if you are satisfied that before the blow was given the prisoner meant to give a wound with such an instrument, it is impossible to attribute the giving such a wound to the passion of anger excited by that blow, for no man who was under proper feelings,—none but a bad man of a wicked and cruel disposition, would really determine beforehand to resent a blow with such an instrument."⁸ "It is not every slight provocation, even by a blow, which will, when the party receiving it strikes with a deadly weapon, reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter: but it depends upon the time elapsing between the blow and the injury; and also, whether the injury was inflicted with an instrument at the moment in the possession of the party, or whether he went to fetch it from another place... If you think that there was not time and interval sufficient for the passion of a man proved to be of no very strong intellect to cool, and for reason to regain her dominion over his mind, then you will say that the prisoner is guilty only of manslaughter. But if you think that the act was the act of a wicked, malicious and diabolical mind... then you will find him guilty of murder."⁹

Duelling does not come within this exception. It is not protected at all. For it is never without premeditation. Where two persons deliberately agree

¹ Per Rex, (1904) 2 L. R. R. 320.

² Nash, (1914) P. R. No. 31 of 1914.

³ Kokumuddin, (1879) 5 Cal. 31.

⁴ William Snow, (1776) 1 Leach 151.

⁵ Foster, 296.

⁶ 1 East P. C. 242.

⁷ William Kirkham, (1837) 6 C. & P. 115.

⁸ Per Park, B., in John Thomas, (1837) 7 C.

& P. 617, 619.

⁹ Per Lord Tenterden in Lynch, (1832) 6

C. & P. 324.

to fight, and meet for that purpose, and one is killed; the other cannot help himself by alleging that he was first struck by the deceased, or that he had often declined to meet him and was urged by importunity, or that he meant not to kill, but only to disarm his adversary; for since he deliberately engaged in an act highly culpable in defiance of the laws, he must at his peril abide the consequence.¹ All persons who are present, encouraging and promoting a duel that results in death, will be guilty of murder.²

Without the offender's having taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner.—Even if the fight is unpremeditated and sudden, yet if the instrument or manner of retaliation be greatly inappropriate, the act is murder, and dangerous in its nature, the accused cannot be excused.³

When persons fight on fair terms, and the blows passing between them are not likely to cause death, if death ensues—it is manslaughter; and if persons meet originally on fair terms, and, after an interval, blows having been given, a party draws in the heat of blood a deadly instrument, and inflicts a deadly injury, it is manslaughter only. But if a party enters a contest, dangerously armed, and fights under an unfair advantage, though mutual blows pass, it is not manslaughter, but murder.⁴

Cases.—Sudden fight.—An unpremeditated assault (ending in an affray in which death is caused) committed in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel (it being immaterial which party offers the provocation, or commits the first assault) comes within this exception.⁵ Where the accused while smarting from a severe blow from a stick in the midst of a sudden fight and possibly apprehensive of further violence, finding a knife at hand, took it up, and in the melee inflicted the wound which caused the death of the deceased, it was held that the case fell within this exception.⁶

A conviction for murder was held to be wrong in a case where the accused taking advantage of an incident which occurred in what till then had been a fair fight, struck his opponent, and knocked him over.⁷ Where a person, under heat of passion, on a sudden quarrel, snatched up a log of a heavy wood and struck another with it on a vital part, with such force and vindictiveness as to cause death, it was held that the offence committed was murder.⁸ A dispute having suddenly arisen between two men, one of them drew a sword and cut the other on the head, and the other, in cutting the crop and beat the first on the head with a stick, and the second was wounded in three places. It did not appear whether any injuries had been caused by which of the assailants who were acting in concert. It was held that the accused were guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder inasmuch as the matter was sudden and the injuries had been inflicted in the heat of passion.⁹

Undue advantage.—Where a person, during the course of a sudden fight, without premeditation and probably in the heat of passion, took undue advantage and acted in a cruel manner in using a knife or a dagger, it was held that there was no ground for holding that his act did not amount to murder.¹⁰ If two men are fighting and one of them is unarmed while the other uses a deadly weapon,

¹ 1 East P. C. 242.
² Cuddy, (1843) 1 C. & K. 210; Murphy, (1833) 6 C. & P. 103; Rice, (1803) 3 East 581.

³ Per Bayley, J., in Whitely, (1820) 1 Lewin 173, 175.

⁴ Zalim Rai, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 33; Ameera, (1886) P. R. No. 12 of 1886.

⁵ Somiruddin, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.) 48; Feroz, (1924) 28 P. L. R. 620.

⁶ Kearal Dosad, (1864) W. R. (Gap No.) Cr. 36.

⁷ Rajoo Ghose, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 78 [106].
(In the original Edition of the Weekly Reporter there is a misprint in numbering the case.)

the one who uses such a weapon must be held to take an undue advantage and not entitled to the benefit of this exception.¹ Fighting under an advantage is always murder.² The two accused, brothers, between whom and the deceased and his son was bad feeling, came upon the deceased in the fields and setting upon him, beat him with sticks so severely that he died within a few minutes, no less than fourteen ribs being fractured resulting in the rupture of both the lungs and of the spleen. It was held that they were guilty of murder as the intention was clear whether to kill or to cause dangerous injury.³

Where the accused's party pursued the complainants in three boats for a long distance and then when they had them in their power landed and attacked them with spears and killed three of them, it was held that their action did not come within this exception.⁴

13. Exception 5.—Death caused by consent of persons above the age of eighteen years.—The authors of the Code give the following reasons for not punishing homicide by consent so severely as murder: "In the first place, the motives which prompt men to the commission of this offence are generally far more respectable than those which prompt men to the commission of murder. Sometimes it is the effect of a strong sense of religious duty, sometimes of a strong sense of honour, not unfrequently of humanity. The soldier who, at the entreaty of a wounded comrade, puts that comrade out of pain, the friend who supplies laudanum to a person suffering the torment of a lingering disease, the freed man who in ancient times held out the sword that his master might fall on it, the high-born native of India who stabs the females of his family at their own entreaty in order to save them from the licentiousness of a band of marauders, would, except in Christian societies, scarcely be thought culpable, and even in Christian societies would not be regarded by the public, and ought not to be treated by the law as assassins.

"Again, this crime is by no means productive of so much evil to the community as murder. One evil ingredient of the utmost importance is altogether wanting to the offence of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. It does not produce general insecurity. It does not produce terror through society. When we punish murder with such signal severity, we have two ends in view; one end is, that people may not be murdered, another end is, that people may not live in constant dread of being murdered. The second end is perhaps the more important of the two. For if assassination were left unpunished, the number of persons assassinated would probably bear a very small proportion to the whole population; but the life of every human being would be passed in constant anxiety and alarm. This property of the offence of murder is not found in the offence of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. Every man who has not given his consent to be put to death is perfectly certain that this latter offence cannot at present be committed on him, and that it never will be committed unless he shall first be convinced that it is his interest to consent to it. We know that two or three midnight assassinations are sufficient to keep a city of a million of inhabitants in a state of consternation during several weeks, and to cause every private family to lay in arms and watchmen's rattles. No number of suicides, or of homicides committed with the unextorted consent of the person killed, could possibly produce such alarm among the survivors."⁵

Duelling will not be protected under this exception, for in a duel the object of each party is to kill his assailant.

This exception refers to cases where a man consents to submit to the doing of some particular act, either knowing that it will certainly cause death, or that death will be the likely result; but it does not refer to the running of a risk of death

¹ Po Kin, (1904) 2 L. B. R. 320.

² Whiteley, (1829) 1 Lewin 173.

³ Nawab, (1914) P. R. No. 31 of 1914.

⁴ Adul Mohamed, (1908) 8 C. L. J. 561.

⁵ Note M, pp. 145, 146.

from something which a man intends to avert if he possibly can do so, even by causing the death of the person from whom the danger is to be anticipated.¹ It should receive a strict and not a liberal construction, and in applying the exception it should be considered with reference to the act consented to or authorized, and next with reference to the person or persons authorized, and as to each of these some degree of particularity at least should appear upon the facts proved before the exception can be said to apply. It must be found that the person killed, with a full knowledge of the facts, determined to suffer death, or take the risk of death; and that this determination continued up to, and existed at, the moment of his death.²

* Consent.—It must be such as has been defined in s. 90, supra.

* Illustration.—The case supposed in the illustration to this exception is one of the offences expressly made punishable by s. 305.

English law.—Homicide is neither justified nor extenuated by reason of any consent given by the party killed. Exception 5, therefore, is a departure from the English law.

Cases.—Death caused by consent.—Where the accused caused a pile to be lighted, and persuaded a suttee to reascend it, after she had once left it, and she was burnt³; where the accused acting upon the express desire of an adult emasculated him, and death ensued owing to the rough manner of the operation⁴; where the accused was repeatedly requested by his wife, who was over-whelmed with grief at the death of her child, to kill her, did kill her one night while she was asleep⁵; where certain snake-charmers, by professing themselves able to cure snake bites, induced several persons to let themselves be bitten by a poisonous snake, and from the effect of the bite three of such persons died⁶; and where the accused finding that his life had become unbearable owing to domestic troubles, decided to take his own life and began to load a gun for the purpose, but this having come to the knowledge of his wife, she pressed him hard to kill her first, and in consequence of what she said and the taunts then given to him by his parents, he took her life by firing a shot at her⁷; it was held in all those cases that the accused came under this exception, because in all of them the element of consent had entered in a greater or less degree. The accused killed his step-father, who was an infirm old man and an invalid, with the latter's consent, in order to get three innocent men, his own enemies, hanged. It was held that his act fell within this exception and he was punishable under s. 301.⁸

Premeditated fight.—This exception was held not to apply to a case where two bodies of men, for the most part armed with deadly weapons, deliberately entered into an unlawful fight, each being prepared to cause the death of the other, and aware that his own might follow, but determined to do his best in self-defence, and in the course of the struggle death ensued.⁹ In a case in which it was found that all the accused were armed with deadly weapons and were guilty of rioting, that the fight was premeditated and pre-arranged, a regular pitched battle or trial of strength between the two parties concerned in the riot, and that one of the accused in the course of the riot, and in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, killed or attempted to kill a man under such circumstances that his act amounted to an attempt to murder, the question arose whether that act could

¹ Rohimuddin, (1879) 5 Cal. 31. See Po Sel, (1910) 5 L. J. R. 160.

² Nayamuddin, (1891) 18 Cal. 484, r. n., overruling Samshere Khan, (1880) 6 Cal. 154, in which it was said that this exception protected duelling.

³ Sahelbali Beelbali, (1863) 1 R. J. P. J. 174.

⁴ Baboolun Hyrah, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

⁵ Anunto Rurngat, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 57.

⁶ Poonai Fattamah, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 7, 3 Beng. L. R. 23.

⁷ Per Aston and Heaton, JJ., in Purushottam Nilkant Kasbekar, Criminal Confirmation Case No. 9 of 1906, decided on the 2nd August 1906.

⁸ Ujagar Singh, (1917) P. R. No. 45 of 1917.

⁹ Rohimuddin, sup.

be said to bear a less grave character by reason of this exception. It was held that upon such finding the case did not fall within the exception.¹

Death caused by the voluntary act of the deceased resulting from fear of violence.—If a man creates in another man's mind an immediate sense of danger which causes such person to try to escape, and in so doing he injures himself, the person who creates such a state of mind is responsible for the injuries which result.² "If, for instance, four or five persons were to stand round a man, and so threaten him and frighten him as to make him believe that his life was in danger, and he were to back away from them and tumble over a precipice to avoid them, then murder would have been committed."³ "A man may throw himself into a river under such circumstances as render it not a voluntary act; by reason of force, applied either to the body or the mind. It then becomes the guilty act of him who compelled the deceased to take the step. But the apprehension must be of immediate violence, and well grounded, from the circumstances by which the deceased was surrounded; not that you must be satisfied that there was no other way of escape, but that it was such a step as a reasonable man might take."⁴ The act of the person attacking will, in such a case, amount to murder. Where the deceased was on horse-back, and the accused struck him with a stick, and the deceased, from a well grounded apprehension of a further attack, which would have endangered his life, spurred his horse, which became frightened, and threw him, giving him a mortal fracture, it was held that the accused was guilty of murder.⁵ Similarly, where the accused in unlawfully assaulting a girl, who at that time had in her arms an infant, so frightened the infant that it had convulsions, although previously healthy, and from the effects of which it eventually died in about six weeks, it was held that the accused was guilty of manslaughter.⁶

It is, however, submitted that the wording of this section and s. 307 does not seem to cover such acts.

301. If a person by doing anything which he intends or knows to be likely to cause death, commits culpable homicide by causing the death of any person, whose death he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause, the culpable homicide committed by the offender is of the description of which it would have been if he had caused the death of the person whose death he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause.

COMMENT.

The doctrine inculcated in this section is called, by Hale and Forster, a transfer of malice. Others describe it as a transmigration of motive. Coke calls it coupling the event with the intention and the end with the cause. If the killing take place in the course of doing an act which a person intends or knows to be likely to cause death, it ought to be treated as if the real intention of the killer had been actually carried out.

"It is common knowledge that a man who has an unlawful and malicious intent against another, and, in attempting to carry it out, injures a third person, is guilty of what the law deems malice against the person injured, because the

¹ Nayamuddin, (1891) 18 Cal. 484, F.B., overruling Samshere Khan, (1880) 6 Cal. 154.

² Per Coleridge, C. J., in Halliday, (1899) 61 L. T. 701, 702; Martin, (1881) 8 Q. B. D. 54.

³ Per Denman, J., in Towers, (1874) 12

Cox 530, 533.

⁴ Per Erskine, J., in Pitts, (1842) Car. & M. 234, 285.

⁵ Hickman, (1831) 5 C. & P. 161.

⁶ Towers, sup

from the illustration to the section; and the rule then goes on to state that the quality of the homicide, that is, whether it amounts to murder or not, will depend on the intention or knowledge which the offender had in regard to the person intended or known to be likely to be killed or injured, and not with reference to his intention or knowledge with reference to the person actually killed, a rule deducible from the language of the ss. 299 and 300 though not, perhaps, lying on their very surface." Sundara Aiyar, J., said:—"That section apparently intended or known occur but the

It evidently
does not apply where the death both of the person whose death was in contemplation and of another person or persons, has occurred. Can it be said that, in such a case, the doer of the act is guilty of homicide with reference to those whose death was not intended by him and could not have been foreseen by him as likely to occur? Are we to hold that a man who knows that his act is likely to cause the death of one person is guilty of the death of all the others who happen to die, but whose death was far beyond his imagination? Such a proposition it is impossible to maintain in criminal law. Section 301... has reference to a case where a person intending to cause the death of A, say by striking or shooting him, kills B because B is in the place where he imagined A to be, or B rushes in to save A and receives the injury intended for A. The reason for not exculpating the wrong-doer in such cases is that he must take the risk of some other person being in the place where he expected to find A, or, of some one else intervening between him and A. The section is a qualification of the rule laid down in s. 299 and is evidently confined to cases where the death of the person intended or known to be likely to be killed does not result. If a person is intended by s. 299 to be held to be guilty for deaths which are not known to be likely to occur, then that section might itself have been worded differently so as to show that the particular death caused need not have been intended or foreseen and, what is more important, s. 301... would not be limited to cases where the death of the particular individual intended or foreseen does not occur. The general theory of the criminal law is that the doer of an act is responsible only for the consequences intended or known to be likely to ensue; for otherwise he could not be said to have caused the effect 'voluntarily,' and a person is not responsible for the involuntary effects of his acts. Illustrations A and B in my opinion support this view. Sections 323 and 324 show that a person is responsible in the case of hurt or grievous hurt only for what he causes voluntarily; and s. 321 shows that hurt to the particular person in question must have been intended or foreseen. In the eye of the law, no doubt, a man will be taken to have foreseen what an ordinary individual ought to foresee, and it will not be open to him, to plead that he himself was so foolish as, in fact, not to foresee the consequence of his act. A person might in some cases be responsible for effects of which his act is not the proximate cause where the effect is likely to arise in the ordinary course of events to result from the act. This rule will certainly hold good where a person's act set in motion only physical causes which lead to the effects actually occurring; when the effect is not due merely to physical causes set in operation by an act, but other persons' wills intervening are equally necessary causes with the act itself to bring about the effect.

to be the cause of a consequence which would not result without the intervention of another human agency." Abdur Rahim, J., observed:—"Obviously it is not possible to lay down any general test as to what should be regarded in criminal law as the responsible cause of a certain result when that result as it often happens is due to a series of causes. We have to consider in each case the relative value and efficiency of the different causes in producing the effect and then to say whether responsibility should be assigned to a particular act or not as the proximate and efficient cause. But it may be observed that it cannot be a sufficient criterion in this connection whether the effect could have been produced in the case in question without a particular cause, for it is involved in the very idea of a cause that the result could not have been produced without it. Nor would it be correct to lay down generally that the intervention of the act of a voluntary agent must necessarily absolve the person between whose act and the result it intervenes. For instance, if A mixes poison in the food of B with the intention of killing B and B eats the food and is killed thereby, A would be guilty of murder even though the eating of the poisoned food which was the voluntary act of B intervened between the act of A and B's death. So here the throwing aside of the sweetmeat by Appala Narasimhulu and the picking and the eating of it by Rajalakshmi cannot absolve the accused from responsibility for his act. No doubt the intervening acts or events may sometimes be such as to deprive the earlier act of the character of an efficient cause."

The Allahabad High Court has approved of the view of the majority of the learned Judges in the Madras case. A woman was carrying on an intrigue with a man who gave her some poison to administer to her husband. She prepared sweetmeats mixed with the poison which was eaten by one M who died as the result thereof. The husband and three others also partook of the sweetmeats and suffered considerably but did not die. She, however, intended to kill her husband and not M. It was held that she was guilty of murder.¹

CASES.

Where the accused intending to kill the husband of a woman, with whom he was carrying on an adulterous intrigue, waylaid him in the dusk, but by mistake killed a third party who came along the road²; where the accused intending to kill B, killed A by a blow with a highly lethal weapon whom he had no intention of killing, but the effect of the blow was that of murder.

302. Whoever commits murder shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Where the legislature recognizes two sorts of punishment it implicitly recognizes the existence of degrees in crimes technically the same. These degrees are to be determined by the circumstances of the case, and among them, and perhaps the most important of them, are the state of mind of the offender and the degree of moral obliquity displayed by the act. There is an undoubted connection, though one not easily formulated, between the ethical quality of a crime and its proper punishment.

"Although the law has provided an alternative punishment, either is not to be passed indifferently at the discretion of a Judge; but...where the accused has been found guilty of deliberate murder, he must pass sentence of death, and...the minor sentence should only be awarded when there is some extenuating circumstance, some excuse which, though the law does not regard it as sufficient

¹ Jeoli, (1916) 39 All. 161.

² Government v. Govinda Ballajee, (1823) 1 M. Dig. N. S. 123.

³ Phononee Alum, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr. 78).
⁴ (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr. L.) 2.

to reduce the killing to the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, still is ground for looking leniently on the act."¹

According to the Bombay High Court the sentence consequent upon a conviction for murder must be death. If there exist any grounds for mercy, that circumstance will have to be considered by the Crown or its executive minister, and all that a Court of Justice can do is to submit a recommendation after passing the sentence of law.² The Calcutta High Court, however, is of opinion that attention should be paid to the age of the accused. Where, therefore, a girl of sixteen was charged with deliberately killing her husband by administering arsenic she was transported for life in consideration of her age.³ The sentence of death is not passed if there are some extenuating circumstances. Where the accused murdered his wife under an unfounded suspicion as to her chastity, the sentence was reduced to transportation.⁴ When convicting of murder the only discretion which the law allows to the Court is to determine which of the two punishments prescribed should be awarded, regard being had to the circumstances of the particular case.⁵ The fact that the accused had the capital sentences suspended over their heads for nearly six months is a matter for the consideration of the High Court. The sentence of death which might have been rightly passed by the Sessions Judge in the first instance ought not to be confirmed unless he thinks that such sentence should be carried out at the time final orders are passed.⁶

In Burma, where knives are freely used on the lightest occasion, it is unsafe to lay down as a general rule that mere absence of premeditation or deliberate intent to kill is a good ground for abstaining from passing a capital sentence in a case where a knife is used. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life in cases of murder the Judge should find that there are really extenuating circumstances, not merely an absence of aggravating circumstances. The extreme sentence is the normal sentence, the mitigated sentence is the exception. It is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death but whether there are reasons for abstaining from doing so.⁷ It is not necessary to pass sentences of death on all the persons taking part in an ordinary murder as distinguished from murder in dacoity. A death sentence should be reserved for the principal offenders.⁸ In a Burma case the following are stated as some of the reasons which appear to be sufficient for not passing a capital sentence upon a conviction under s. 302:—

- (1) The offender being under eighteen years of age.
- (2) There having been no intention to commit murder, the offence falling under the fourth clause of s. 300, Indian Penal Code.
- (3) The murder, though intentional, having been committed without premeditation, and in the heat of passion, without special brutality.
- (4) The murder having been committed upon grave provocation, the provocation not being both grave and sudden so as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.
- (5) Reasonable doubt as to the sanity of the offender at the time of committing murder, actual insanity not being proved.
- (6) Where murder has been committed by more than one person, and it appears that the offender acted under the instigation of another.

¹ Per Wilkinson, J., in Kamal, (1873) P. R. No. 13 of 1873.

² Abdurrahman Said, (1896) Unrep. Cr. C. 852.

³ Jasha Beua, (1907) 11 C. W. N. 904.

⁴ Dina Bandhu Moitra, (1903) 8 C. W. N. 218.

⁵ Dewan Singh, (1893) 22 Cal. 805.

⁶ Autor Singh, (1913) 17 C. W. N. 1213.

⁷ Nga Tha Sin, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 216;

Nga Shwe Gon, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 123.

See also Shwe Cho, (1905) 3 L. B. R. 111.

⁸ Ma Shabi, (1899) P. J. L. B. 564.

with deliberation. The extreme penalty of the law should be reserved for cases of deliberate murder, for cases where murder is committed to facilitate the commission of some other offence or to avoid arrest for an offence and for other heinous cases of murder."¹ In passing sentence on a youth the general principle to be observed is that ordinarily youth is in itself an extenuating circumstance. This circumstance must be taken into consideration by the Court in exercising the discretion vested by this section.²

Murders among Jats are actually committed from motives of pride to avenge what appear to be comparatively harmless insults.³

Punishment where doubt exists.—L, C, K and D conspired to kill S. In pursuance of such conspiracy, L first, and then C, struck S on the head with a club, and S fell to the ground. While S was lying on the ground, K and D struck him on the head with their club; it was held that, inasmuch as K and D did not commence the attack on S, and it was doubtful whether S was not dead when they struck him, transportation for life was an adequate punishment for their offence.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the death of a human being has actually taken place.

That a murder has been committed by some one, is essentially necessary to be proved.

(2) That such death has been caused by, or in consequence of, the act of the accused.

Where there is no evidence to prove that the accused had anything to do with the death of the deceased, no conviction could stand.⁵

(3) That such act was done with the intention of causing death;⁶ or that it was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as (a) the accused knew to be likely to cause death; or (b) was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or that the accused caused death by doing an act known to him to be so imminently likely to cause (a) death, or (b) such bodily injury as would have caused having no excuse for incurring

The mere fact that the course of nature, does not cause such bodily injury.⁷ There the death was done with the intention of causing death. A finding of injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A finding of inflicting an injury that was merely likely to cause death would not of necessity amount to murder.⁸ The intention or knowledge with which the act which caused death was committed is not constructive or a presumption of law, but a matter of fact to be judged of in each case, and proof of collateral facts to explain the motives and designs of the accused is admissible.⁹

Proof of motive or previous ill-will is not necessary to sustain a conviction for murder in a case where a person is coolly and barbarously put to death.¹⁰ Where the fact of murder has been clearly established, it is by no means incumbent on the prosecution to show what particular motive actuated the criminal's mind

¹ Per Hosking, J. C., in Maung U, (1894) P. J. L. B. 112, 114. See to the same effect Mangrey, O. S. C. 210.

² Chit Tha, (1918) 9 L. B. R. 165; Nga Pyan, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 359, dissenting from.

³ Pohla, (1925) 7 L. L. J. 442.

⁴ Chattar Singh, (1878) 2 All. 33.

⁵ Rajans Kanto Koer, (1903) 8 C. W. N.

22.

⁶ Ananda Bhanu, (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 985.

⁷ Ila Tun, (1898) P. J. L. B. 452.

⁸ Apala, (1923) 1 Rang. 285.

⁹ See Ill. (a) to s. 6, Ills. (b) and (c) to s. 7, Ill. (a) to s. 8, and Ill. (a) to s. 14 of the Indian Evidence Act.

¹⁰ Jaichund Mundle, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 60.

and induced him to commit the particular crime.¹ Where, however, the prosecution puts forward a substantive case as to the motive for the crime, the evidence regarding the motive has got to be considered in order to judge of the probabilities. Failure to prove motive, however, cannot outweigh the positive evidence as to the crime.²

In cases in which death ensues from violence used, and there is no evidence of intention other than what is to be inferred from the accused's act, it is necessary to consider whether the accused must have known, when committing the act, that—

(a) it might possibly, but was unlikely to, cause death, or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death;

(b) it was likely to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death;

(c) it probably would cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

If the act falls within the first category, it would not amount to more than hurt or grievous hurt; if under the second category, it would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder; if under the third category, it would amount to murder.³

Onus.—The prosecution must prove the circumstances which ordinarily constitute the offence of murder; and the accused, the circumstances, if any, of exceptions which take the case out of that category.⁴ If a man takes away the life of another, the onus is on him to show circumstances which justify his doing so.⁵

A trustworthy dying declaration corroborated by surrounding circumstances is sufficient to support a conviction for murder.⁶

The accused on his trial is merely on the defensive and owes no duty to any one but himself. He cannot be convicted because he has not tried to explain to the Court how a death has occurred or by whose means.⁷ Where a Sessions Judge in a trial on a charge of gun-shot murder against N found that N and another person L were seen immediately after the report of the gun at the scene of occurrence each with a gun in his hand, but he did not find which of them fired the fatal shot, his only finding being that either N or L fired the shot that killed the deceased, and there was no finding in the judgment that N and L had a common intention and acted in concert and that the gun was fired in furtherance of their common intention, it was held that the legal inference from those findings must be that neither N or L was guilty of the offence of murder.⁸

In a case of murder it is unsafe to rely upon the evidence of witnesses who have resiled from their previous statements. Where the evidence given at the trial did not implicate the accused but the earlier statements recorded under ss. 288 and 164, Criminal Procedure Code, tended to implicate him and the motive alleged was not proved, it was held that the conviction for murder could not be sustained.⁹

Circumstantial evidence.—A conviction on circumstantial evidence cannot be unless and until all the inferences to be drawn from the whole history of the case point so strongly to the commission of the crime by the accused that the defence theory appears on the face of it impossible or highly improbable. The

¹ Lakshman Narayan Criminal Appeal No. 256 of 1912, decided on 22nd July, 1912, by Chandavarkar and Batchelor, JJ.; Mohana, (1924) 7 L. L. J. 59.

² Nishi Kanta Banikya, (1924) 41 C. L. J. 35.

³ Shwe Hla U, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 29; Nya Nu Ban, (1906) 13 Burma L. R. 199.

⁴ Sheikh Choollye, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 35; Asiruddin Ahmed, (1904) 8 C. W. N. 714.

⁵ Asiruddin Ahmed, sup; Jhakri Chamar, (1912) 16 C. L. J. 440.

⁶ Karim Khan, (1908) P. W. R. No. 4 of 1909.

⁷ Jethmal Narayan, (1894) Unrep. Cr. C. 686.

⁸ Nisaran Chandra Roy, (1907) 11 C.W.N. 1085.

⁹ Ayyamperumal Pillai, [1925] M. W. N. 319.

charge of murder, like any other charge of an offence, can be established by inferences, but when there is extremely little in the way of direct evidence it is due to the accused that there should be no exaggeration of minor incidents in the case and that each inference against him should be verified with scrupulous accuracy.¹ In a case of murder by opium poisoning the prosecution evidence that the accused put some sugar into the vessel in which milk was given to the deceased and stirred the milk with his finger after putting the sugar into it and the deceased died a few hours afterwards, was held to be not sufficient for convicting the accused particularly when the motive for murder was not strong and the habit of eating opium was common among the class of people to which the deceased belonged.² If it is proved that a person was found soon after the murder of another person, in possession of property which was on the person of the latter when last seen alive, an inference might be drawn in some circumstances that he obtained possession of the property by the murder of the deceased; but it is essential to justify the inference that there is satisfactory proof that the property was in fact in the possession of the deceased when last seen alive.³ Where the wife of the accused met her death by an unnatural cause, for instance, breaking of her several ribs, the husband was held to be not guilty of murdering her simply on suppositions, as there was nothing very strong connecting him with causing her death intentionally. The mere fact of his trying, with the help of others, to burn the body secretly or taking it in a bundle instead of, as usual, on a bed or litter though suspicious was considered by the Court to be not sufficient evidence of his guilt. An effort to dispose of the body of a dead person in an unusual way is sometimes due to fright of a weak-minded person which can be based on several grounds. But no person can be convicted of an offence on pure circumstantial evidence so long as it is compatible with his innocence.⁴ A conviction of murder cannot be sustained where the only circumstantial evidence against the accused was that the deceased was seized by the accused and the husband of the deceased in the road, placed on a camel, carried towards a canal in which her body was afterwards found completely dismembered, specially when the evidence of identification of the body is unsatisfactory and there is no direct evidence connecting the accused with the commission of the crime.⁵

Confession.—If A and B are jointly tried for the murder of C, a confession of A is admissible against B.⁶ If A is accused of killing C, any statement made by C before his death as to the cause of it is receivable in evidence.⁷

Discovery of the body of the person murdered not absolutely necessary.—Lord Hale has laid down: "I would never convict any person of murder or manslaughter, unless the fact were proved to be done, or, at least, the body found dead."⁸ This is a rule of caution and not of law. If the circumstantial evidence is very strong a conviction could be made.⁹

The term corpus delicti is an invention of the jurists of the middle ages, and was used by them to denote the whole of the facts which constituted the crime of killing when the body of the killed had been found. A mixture of German and Roman views led to the proposition (which has found its way into English penal law) that the proof of the aggregate of facts constituting the offence failed when the body was not found. The expression was then extended to other offences, and was used to denote that the qualities necessary to bring a fact within the opera-

¹ Bhagwan Kaur, (1911) P. W. R. No. 16 of 1911; Ahmed, (1912) P. W. R. No. 23 of 1913. See Raghunandan, Koeri (1920) 1 P. L. T. 684; Majhi, (1924) 7 L. L. J. 43.

² Kala Singh, (1911) P. W. R. No. 25 of 1911, P. L. R. No. 241 of 1911.

³ Movila Kurmiah, [1913] M. W. N. 145; Chiarreddi Munayya, [1911] 2 M. W. N. 478, 21 M. L. J. 1071.

⁴ Lachhman Singh, (1910) P. W. R. No. 11 of 1911.

⁵ Chukar Singh, (1914) P. L. R. No. 221 of 1914.

⁶ Ill. (a) to s. 30, Indian Evidence Act.

⁷ Ill. (a) to s. 32, ibid.

⁸ 1 Hale P. C. 290.

⁹ Hindmarsh, (1792) 2 Leach 569; Cheverton, (1862) 2 F. & F. 833.

tion of a rule of criminal law had been shown to attach to that fact. The jurists of the middle ages, however, never conceived the dead body in murder, or the object stolen in theft, to be that 'corpus.' The expression itself has many vices, but in the sense in which its authors used it is at least intelligible.¹

The mere fact that the body of the murdered person has not been found is not a ground for refusing to convict the accused person of murder. To recognize any such condition precedent, as being absolutely necessary to conviction in all cases, would be to afford complete immunity and certain escape to those murderers who are cunning or clever enough to make away with, or destroy the bodies of, their victims. Such a principle, once admitted, would, in some instances, render the administration of justice impossible.² But when the body of the person said to have been murdered is not forthcoming, the strongest possible evidence as to the fact of the murder should be insisted on before an accused is convicted.³ Where the circumstances are such as to make it morally certain that a crime has been committed, the inference that it was so committed is as safe as any other such inference.⁴ But a judge exercises a proper discretion in not passing a sentence of death in a case in which the dead body has not been found.⁵

If the accused confess in the most circumstantial manner to having committed a murder, the finding of the body is not absolutely essential to a conviction.⁶ The Bombay High Court in a case held the accused guilty of attempt to murder where the body was not found but the accused had admitted that he had thrown a girl of less than two years of age into a canal, where the water was deep, and swollen by the monsoon.⁷ Before a conviction of murder can be obtained, the Court must be satisfied that the person alleged to have been murdered is actually dead. A man was brutally beaten with lathis into unconsciousness by the accused who, subsequently, dragged him along the ground up to a certain river, leaving traces of blood both on the fields and on the railway line. The man had never been seen since. It was held that the conclusion that he was dead could not be arrived at though it was exceedingly unlikely that he was alive. In the circumstances the accused were not convicted of murder under s. 302 but of an attempt to murder under this section.⁸

In a charge of child murder, the only evidence was the confession of the accused, and no dead body of the child was found. The jury acquitted the accused of murder, and found her guilty of concealment of birth. It was held that there was no sufficient evidence of a separate existence of the child to convict of murder, but sufficient to convict for concealment of birth, although no dead body had been found.⁹

Bombay Circular.—Police officer conducting the inquiry is a necessary witness.—In murder cases the constable or other person, who takes the corpse to the medical officer for post-mortem examination, should always be sent to the Sessions Court as a witness.¹⁰ In all important criminal cases, and especially in cases of murder and dacoity, it is desirable that the Police Officer by whom the investigation was conducted should be in readiness to be examined, if necessary, as a witness in regard to the circumstances of the investigation. The Police Officer should bring with him his diary of the case and also the memorandum of the statements of the witnesses taken down by him under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.¹¹

¹ 7 M. H. C. App. 10.

² Per Straight, J., in Bhagirath, (1880) 3 ALL 383; Rogi, (1881) 1 A. W. N. 112; Sedhu, (1882) 2 A. W. N. 160; Poorusoolah Sikhdar, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 14.

³ Adu Shildar, (1885) 11 Cal. 635.

⁴ Mehr Khan, (1886) P. R. No. 6 of 1886.

See also Biru, (1890) P. R. No. 15 of 1890.

⁵ Budduruddeen, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 20.

⁶ Petta Gazi, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 19.

⁷ Kashna, (1894) Cr. R. No. 7 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 687.

⁸ Bandhu, (1924) 22 A. L. J. R. 340.

⁹ Maud Kersey, (1908) 21 Cox 690.

¹⁰ B. H. C. Cr. C., Ch. V, s. 78, p. 53.

¹¹ Ibid, s. 81, p. 54.

When death or grievous hurt has been caused by a blow from a stick or other weapon, the weight and dimensions of the weapon should be stated in the Sessions Court proceedings, with such particularity as may enable the High Court (which has no opportunity of seeing it) to form an opinion as to the character of the weapon and the intention with which it was probably used.¹

The Punjab Rule.—In all cases of homicide, where the body is found, the identity of the body with the person said to be deceased must be fully established before the Magistrates trying or inquiring into the case.

In such cases, where there has been a post-mortem examination, evidence must be recorded by the Magistrate to prove the custody of the body of the deceased after death, and its delivery for the purpose of post-mortem examination to the Medical Officer.²

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by the Court of Session.

Where culpable homicide has been committed, prima facie, the principal issue is : whether the culpable homicide does or does not amount to murder. In all ordinary cases, the issue ought to be tried, and ought not to be prejudged by any authority less than the authority of a Court of Session.³

If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why a sentence of death was not passed.⁴

If the case falls under one of the exceptions to s. 300 and the Judge convicts the accused on the charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, he should record under which of the exceptions the case falls.⁵

In cases where it is difficult to determine whether the offence committed by the accused is culpable homicide or culpable homicide amounting to murder the accused should be convicted of the lesser offence.⁶

Direction as to commitment.—Calcutta Circular.—In cases where death appears to have resulted from injuries voluntarily inflicted by the party accused, Magistrates ought to be very careful not to take it upon themselves to absolve the accused from the graver charge and convict him of hurt or grievous hurt only, unless they are quite clear that there is no sufficient evidence to warrant a commitment to the Sessions for murder, or culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁷

Chemico-legal and post-mortem examinations.—See Chapter X of the Madras High Court Rules of Criminal Practice; the Punjab Rules; s. 105 of the Oudh Criminal Digest; and s. 218 of the Upper Burma persa Manual.

Poisoning.—Judges who try cases of murder by poisoning should invariably put beyond the possibility of doubt the identification of every single thing that is suspected to contain any poison. The evidence should be complete as to the history of such articles and it should be shown that they were kept in proper custody throughout if they are to be relied on as supporting a conviction, and there should be no possibility of any question being raised as to the identity of any such article.⁸

Pleader for defence.—See Bombay High Court Criminal Circular Orders, s. 71, as regards the orders issued for the appointment of pleaders for the defence in murder cases.⁹

Plea of guilty.—Murder, and unless it is explained as accepted. The nature of the directed by s. 300, the

¹ See B. H. C. Cr. C.,
² P. C. C. R. & O., Vol.

P. 100.

³ Subbappa Channappa

L. R. 303, 2 Cr. C.

P. W. R., 911.

⁴ Cr. Cod

Misner, (1866) 1 Agg. 3.
Aung, (1889) L. B. 459.
& R. O. c. L. s. 45.
o Weir 157.
ana, (L. R. 640.
de r, (1899)

offence should be properly explained to the accused.¹ In capital cases where there is any doubt as to whether an accused person fully understands the meaning and effect of a plea of guilty it is advisable for the Court to take evidence and not to convict solely on the plea of the accused.² It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence will be a sentence of death.³ Before such a plea can be accepted the record should clearly shew that the person who is charged understands and admits such facts as would bring his offence within the definition of murder.⁴

If the accused in answer to a charge of murder states that he committed the offence but alleges provocation, such a statement does not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge. He must be put on his trial in order to ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder.⁵

Charge to the jury in case of provocation.—In charging the jury on the point of provocation in a case of culpable homicide a judge should tell the jury that, to bring the case within the exception, the prisoner must have been deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, that there ought to have been sufficient cause for such loss of self-control, and that the provocation was not voluntarily provoked by the prisoner as an excuse for doing harm.⁶

It is the duty of the judge to explain the distinctions between murder and culpable homicide, and the jury as judges of facts have to decide the issue about sufficient provocation.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the——day of——, at——, did commit murder by intentionally (or knowingly) causing the death of (specify the name of the deceased), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

The intent or knowledge necessary to constitute murder should be set out in the charge.⁸ The charge should follow the language of s. 300.⁹

Punishment.—“The extreme sentence is the normal sentence; the mitigated sentence is the exception. It is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death, but whether there are reasons for abstaining from doing so.”¹⁰ If the presiding Judge does not pass the sentence of death, he is bound to record the reasons why death sentence was not passed, that is to say, he must find that there are really extenuating circumstances and by the High Court before the sentence is confirmed. Where a sentence for transportation for life has been passed, there are manifest objections to enhancing it even when a sentence of death ought to have been passed. There is no such objection to commuting a sentence of death to one of transportation for life, and such commutation should not be considered as any reflection on the way in which the Sessions Judge has exercised the discretion given him by law.¹¹ If the

¹ Aiyaru, (1885) 9 Mad. 61.

² Pratt, (1900) 10 All. 110.

240,
R. 3

⁴ Nga Han, (1919) 3 U. B. R. 137.

⁵ Sakharam Ramji, (1890) 14 Bom. 564;

Netai Luskur, (1885) 11 Cal. 410.

⁶ Gunesh Luskur, (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr.) 72.

⁷ Dadubhai, (1895) Unrep. Cr. C. 766, Cr. R. No. 30 of 1895.

⁸ Per Hosking, J. C., in Nga Nge, (1897) P. J. L. B. 328.

⁹ Pratt, (1900) 10 All. 110.

¹⁰ Pratt, (1900) 10 All. 110.

¹¹ Pratt, (1900) 10 All. 110.

¹² Pratt, (1900) 10 All. 110.

Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty of murder and the circumstances require the imposition of the death penalty, the fact that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence is not a reason for passing the lesser sentence allowed by law.¹ In passing sentence on an accused person convicted of the offence of murder, regard should be had to the circumstances of the case. Where the accused is convicted of murder only by reason of his case coming under cl. 4 of s. 300, a sentence of death is uncalled for.²

The mere absence of premeditation may or may not form in every case of murder a sufficient ground for imposing the lesser penalty.³

An accused person is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt in the matter of sentence as in the matter of conviction.⁴

Where the provocation caused to the accused is very grave though not sudden the Court is justified in not inflicting sentence of death and recommending the case to the Government for reduction in sentence.⁵

Although s. 86 attributes to a drunken man the knowledge of a sober man when judging of his action, it does not give him the same intention, and, therefore, drunkenness or a state of intoxication affords a sufficient excuse for not exacting the extreme penalty of the law.⁶

Youth alone in every case is not such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty.⁷

A person did not inflict any injury on the deceased and it appeared that he was acting under the influence of his brother when he accompanied the latter to the place where the offence was committed. It was held that under these circumstances the extreme penalty of law should not be exacted in his case.⁸

The usual practice in the Punjab is to avoid the imposition of fines where death sentences have been given.⁹

Where the facts proved established that the accused was not actuated by any 'base motive', but he committed the offence of murder in the honest, though unfounded, belief that by so doing he was saving the life of, and alleviating the sufferings of, others, the sentence of transportation, instead of a death sentence, was held to be the proper sentence.¹⁰

As to the punishment in the Frontier districts, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation,¹¹ and as to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act.¹²

Sex of the accused.—The sex of the offender ought not to be taken into account in passing sentence unless there are extenuating circumstances. Women who commit murder are treated differently from men, and more leniently than men. This is due to traditional customs and antecedents of women who commit this class of offence. It is justified that the sentence of death is by no means a harsh sentence to pass on such women. Cases of this kind stand upon a footing different from the cases where women are led into killing their children to cover their own shame because of the cruelty of social customs and laws which their society enforces, with relentless rigour. Where, therefore, a barren woman killed another's child to get children, the Court passed a sentence of death.¹³ The Court sometimes takes into consideration the age of the ¹ Public Prosecutor v. Paramandi, (1921) 44 Mad 413.

² Nga Po Aung, (1889) S. J. L. B. 459.
³ Bhyri Rayappa, (1920) 13 L. W. 612; Pirithi, (1924) 6 L. J. 323.

⁴ Ma Shwe Yi, (1923) 1 Rang. 751.
⁵ Goshain, (1920) 18 A. L. J. R. 851, 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 281.

⁶ Pal Singh, (1917) P. W. R. No. 35 of 1917.

⁷ Nga Ba Thin, (1922) 1 B. L. J. 70;
Kachria, (1921) 18 N. L. R. 101.

⁸ Gulab, (1925) 2 L. C. 14, 7 L. L. J. 479.

⁹ Chuha, (1913) P. R. No. 18 of 1913.

¹⁰ Mato Ho, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 282.

¹¹ Reg. III of 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

¹² Act XIII of 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

¹³ Chandavarkar. J., in Umi Kom, (1921) 1 Rang. 101.

accused when passing sentence. Where a young girl of fifteen years killed her step-son because her husband was ill-treating her, the Court sentenced her to transportation for life.¹

Punishment for murder by life convict.

303. Whoever, being under sentence of transportation for life,¹ commits murder, shall be punished with death.

COMMENT.

This section makes capital sentence compulsory in the case of a convict who commits murder while undergoing a sentence of transportation. Thus, where a person under sentence of transportation for life on a conviction for murder is found guilty of murder on a subsequent and different charge, the only sentence that can be passed on him according to this section is that of death.²

1. 'Being under sentence of transportation for life.'—These words indicate that the sentence of transportation must have been passed on the accused. It is immaterial whether he was already transported or not.

304. Whoever commits culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death ; or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both, if the act is done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

COMMENT.

This section "creates no offence, but provides the punishment for culpable homicide not amounting to murder."

Cases in which the crime is murder, where there is knowledge that the act will cause death or bodily injury likely to cause death.

accused falls within either of the clauses 1, 2 and 3 of s. 300 but is covered by any of the five exceptions, it will be punishable under the first part. If the act comes under cl. 4 of s. 300 but is covered by any of the exceptions it will be punishable under the second part.⁴

Where the finding of the Sessions Judge was that "the accused must have known that he was likely to cause death" and the conviction was under s. 302 for an offence falling under s. 300 (4), it was held that, on the Court's finding, the accused was guilty of an offence under the second part of this section, and not under s. 302.⁵

¹ Daulan, (1924) 26 P. L. R. 550.

² Doorjodhun Shamonto, (1873) 19 W. R. (Cr.) 45.

³ Per Straight, J., in Idu Beg, (1881) 3

AIL 776, 778; Attra, (1891) P. R. No 9 of 1891; Masti, (1910) P. L. R. No 87 of 1911.

⁴ Barkatulla, (1887) P. R. No. 32 of 1887.

⁵ Nga Po Saw, (1923) 2 B. L. J. 99.

As to whipping in Upper Burma for this offence, see the Burma Laws Act, s. 4 (b) and Sch. II.

See the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901² as to enquiry by a council of elders in a Punjab Frontier District. See also the Frontier Crimes Regulation,³ and the Criminal Tribes Act.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the death of the person in question.

(2) That such death was caused by the act of the accused.

(3) That the accused intended by such act to cause death ; or

That he intended by such act to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death ; or that he knew that such act of his would be likely to cause death.

"The most important consideration upon a trial for this offence is the intention or knowledge with which the act which caused death, was done. The intention to cause death or the knowledge that death will probably be caused, is essential and is that to which the law principally looks. And it is of the utmost importance that those who may be entrusted with judicial powers should clearly understand that no conviction ought to take place, unless such intention or knowledge can from the evidence be concluded to have really existed.

"The existence of a particular evil motive such as hatred, avarice, jealousy, etc., is not necessary. It is no part of the definition of culpable homicide that the act which causes death should be a malicious act. Malice is not made a necessary ingredient. Whatever may be the motive which incites the action, and whether or not any motive whatsoever be discoverable, the question for investigation is this :—Did the accused person intend to cause death, or a bodily injury likely to end in death ; or did he know that it was a probable result of his act ? If such was his purpose and design, or such his knowledge,—and none of the General Exceptions of this Code are applicable,—the act is an offence within this definition, although there is no apparent motive for it. If this intention or knowledge is clearly shewn, it is needless to enquire into the motives. It must not, however, be forgotten that under certain circumstances the existence of a motive may become an important element in a chain of presumptive evidence, as tending to shew the intention of the accused person.

"It may be asked how can the existence of the requisite intention or knowledge be proved, seeing that these are internal and invisible acts of the mind ? They can be ascertained only from external and visible acts. Observation and experience enables us to judge of the connection between men's conduct and their intentions. We know that a sane man does not usually commit certain acts heedlessly or unintentionally—and generally we have no difficulty in inferring from his conduct what was his real intention upon any given occasion."⁵

Where a man receives only one blow on the head and dies, and there is no evidence to show which of the two persons attacking him gave that blow, neither of the two will be convicted under this section but both of them can be convicted of an offence under s. 325.⁶

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Calcutta Circular.—(a) Sessions Judges, in all cases in which they may convict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall invariably mention in their

¹ Act XIII of 1898.

² Reg. III of 1901, s. 12.

³ Ibid. s. 6.

⁴ Act II of 1897, s. 6.

⁵ M. & M. 230, 231.

⁶ Agra, (1914) P.R. No. 37 of 1914, P.W.R. (Cr.) No. 69 of 1914; P. L. R. No. 219 of 1915; Jhanda, (1924) 6 L. L. J. 268; Datta Ram, (1924) 6 L. L. J. 317; Dalip Singh, (1924) 7 L. L. J. 44.

remarks on the trial, the circumstances under which the culpable homicide was held not to amount to "murder."

(b) Sessions Judges shall invariably record their opinion whether the act by which death was caused was done with the intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. And, in cases tried by a jury, they should be careful to obtain a specific verdict on these points.¹

Patna Circular.—(a) Sessions Judges, in all cases in which they may convict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall invariably mention in their remarks on the trial, the circumstances under which the culpable homicide was held not to amount to "murder."

(b) Sessions Judges shall invariably record their opinion whether the act by which the death was caused was done with the intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death.

And, in case tried by jury, they should be careful to obtain a specific verdict on these points.²

The Central Provinces Circular.—In view of the distinctive penal provisions contained in s. 304 of the Penal Code, Sessions Judges and Magistrates specially empowered will, in all cases in which they may convict the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, invariably record their opinion whether the act by which the death was caused was done with the intention of causing death or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death; or with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death.³

Venue.—See ills (a) and (d) to s. 179, Criminal Procedure Code

Committal.—Where death has resulted from a violent attack, the Magistrate must commit the accused to the Court of Session on a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.⁴

Charge to the jury.—In his charge to the jury, the Judge should draw a distinction between the two classes of culpable homicide mentioned in this section, and direct them to find specially under which, if either, the prisoner is guilty.⁵ Where the Judge omitted to require the jury to do this, the High Court held that the conviction was for the lighter description of the offence.⁶ In a trial on a capital charge the jury should be directed in the event of finding that the accused culpably caused the injuries which resulted in death to find with what intention he did so. If they find that his intention was to cause only such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, they should find the accused guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The general rule is that the jury should find the accused guilty of the offence charged, unless the evidence shows that he was not guilty of it.

accused.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder, causing the death of—, and thereby committed

¹ C. H. C. R., Vol. I, c. I., s., 74, p. 28.

² Pat. H. Cr. C. para. 42 (a), (b), pp. 18, 19

³ C. P. Cr. C. No. 1, p. I.

⁴ Gopinath Shaha, (1877) 1 C. L. R. 141; (1881) 1 Weir 288.

⁵ Kalichurn Dass, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 17,

6 Beng. L. R. App. 86; Ladlya, (1890) Cr. R. No. 62 of 1890, Unrep. Cr. C. 530; Posha Hari, (1895) Cr. R. No. 4 of 1895, Unrep. Cr. C. 735.

⁶ Ameer Khan, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 35.

⁷ Kya Nyun, (1913) 8 L. R. R. 125.

an offence punishable under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.¹

Punishment where death is caused from provocation.—The Bombay High Court has observed that no higher provocation can be given than that of finding a man's wife in actual intercourse with a paramour, and death caused under such circumstances must be visited with a very light sentence. It, therefore, passed a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment where death was the result of provocation of this sort.² Similarly, the former Chief Court of the Punjab sentenced the accused to one year's imprisonment where he caught the deceased in the act of adultery with his married sister and struck him one blow on the head with a stick which killed him by fracturing his skull.³

The Penal Code of some countries provides specially for the reduction or even the entire remission of punishment for the slaying of an adulterer taken in the act. The Indian Penal Code, like that of most other countries, makes adultery punishable as a crime. However the matter may be regarded from a moral point of view, the law forbids the husband to take vengeance with his own hands, and, if he chooses to avenge his injury himself, he does so at his peril. At the same time the amount of punishment to be imposed is discretionary, so that while it is made sufficiently severe to deter the injured husband from resort to excess in violence, it may not be made so severe as to encourage adulterers with the hope of immunity from immediate chastisement.⁴

Where the accused was found to have murdered his wife under a mistaken impression that she was unchaste, the High Court set aside the punishment of death passed upon him and sentenced him to transportation for life.⁵ Where there was a violent altercation between a husband and wife and the husband threw a stone which killed the wife, the Court altered the sentence of death to one of transportation for life.⁶

Punishment where right of defence exceeded.—Where, in an affray respecting land, one party were the aggressors, and the other side (had the affair not ended fatally) would have been in the legal exercise of the right of defence of property and would have been entitled to the benefit of s. 104, it was held that one year's rigorous imprisonment was sufficient.⁷

304-A. Whoever causes the death of any person by doing any rash or negligent act¹ not amounting to culpable homicide² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Causing death
by negligence. II

COMMENT.

This section deals with homicide by negligence.

Object.—The Code as it originally stood contained no adequate provision for the punishment of what English law called manslaughter by negligence. In the draft Code there was a section which punished this offence, but by some accident it had been omitted from the Code when it was passed into law. The present section inserted by Act XXVII of 1870, s. 12, supplied the omission.

¹ Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. V, 28 (6).

² Asha Gopal, (1897) Unrep. Cr. C. 932, Cr. R. No. 42 of 1897.

³ Fazal Dad, (1904) P. R. No. 4 of 1904.

⁴ Nga Lun Mya, (1894) 1 U. B. R. (1892-1896) 213.

⁵ Dina Bandhu Moitra, (1903) 8 C. W. N. 218.

⁶ Sowcaroo, (1866) P. R. No. 105 of 1866.

⁷ Shunker Singh, (1884) 1 Weir 34; Fuzza Meekah, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 89.

Scope.—The provisions of this section seem to apply to cases where there is no intention to cause death.¹ I

This section does not apply to the commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result. If such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts, probably or possibly, involving danger to others, but which in themselves are not offences, may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338 or 304-A, if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be indeed, with regard to the knowledge

this section has no application.³

This section does not apply to cases where the death has arisen, not from the negligent or rash mode of doing the act, but from some result supervening upon the act which could not have been anticipated.⁴

1. 'Rash or negligent act.'—A rash act is primarily an overhasty act, and is thus opposed to a deliberate act, but it also includes an act which, though it may be said to be deliberate, is yet done without due deliberation and caution.⁵

Negligence is the breach of a duty caused by omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do.⁶

"Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so, and that it may cause injury, but without intention to cause that reasonable and proper care to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted."⁷

"Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they will not, and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. The imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness (luraria). Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him, and that, if he had, he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection. It is manifest that personal injury, consciously and intentionally

¹ Sukaroo Kobraj, (1887) 14 Cal. 566, 569; Nashir, (1912) P. L. R. No. 259 of 1913

² Kelabdu Mundul, (1879) 4 Cal. 764, 766; Pika Brera, (1912) 39 Cal. 835; Hasan, (1900) 2 Bom. L. R. 613; Jellingappa Shirappa, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 857, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 183; O'Brien, (1880) 2 All. 766; Randair Singh, (1881) 3 All. 597; Idu Beg, (1881) 3 All. 776; Saifulla, (1882) P. R. No. 15 of 1882.

³ Damodaran, (1858) 12 Mad. 59; Mehr Ilahi, (1911) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 26 of 1911.

⁴ Heera Soetta, (1901) 3 Bom. L. R. 394.

⁵ Nga Myat Thin, (1898) P. J. L., B. 426.

⁶ Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., (1856) 11 Ex. 781, 784.

⁷ Per Straught, J., in Idu Beg, sup. pp. 779, 780; Smith, (1925) 30 C. W. N. 66.

producers of death. To say that because, in the opinion of the operator, the sufferer could have borne a little more without death following, the act amounts merely to rashness because he has carried the experiment too far, results from an obvious and dangerous misconception... It is clear, however, that if the words, 'not amounting to culpable homicide,' are a part of the definition, the offence defined by this section consists of the rash or negligent act not falling under that category, as much as of its fulfilling the positive requirement of being the cause of death.¹

"Manslaughter by negligence occurs when a person is doing anything dangerous in itself, or has charge of anything dangerous in itself, and conducts himself in regard to it in such a careless manner that the jury feel that he is guilty of culpable negligence, and ought to be punished. Suppose a man performed a surgical operation, whether from losing his head, or from not having done, in such a case there would be the kind of forgetfulness which is common to everybody, or as there was slight want of skill, any injury which resulted might furnish a ground for claiming civil damages, but it would be wrong to proceed against a man criminally in respect of such injury. But if a surgeon was engaged in attending a woman during her confinement, and went to the engagement neglected his duty, and the woman's life be culpable negligence of a grave kind, surgeon, but it is given to everyone to keep sober when such a duty has to be performed."²

To render a person liable for neglect of duty there must be such a degree of culpability as to amount to gross negligence on his part. It is not every little trip or mistake that will make him so liable.³ The distinction between the negligence which is sufficient ground for a civil action and the higher degree which is necessary in criminal proceedings is sharply insisted on in several cases.⁴

Death must be caused from rash or negligent act.—"Death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused and that act must have been the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. It must have been the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non."⁵ Where a person using a road was accidentally killed in consequence of it being out of repair through neglect of trustees, appointed for the purpose of repairing the roads, to contract for repairing it, it was held that they were not chargeable with manslaughter.⁶ If the driver of a carriage be racing with another carriage, and from being unable to pull up his horses in time the first-mentioned carriage is upset, and a person thrown off it and killed, this is manslaughter in the driver of that carriage.⁷

"able homicide."—Section 304-A is directed at 299 and 300, and obviously contemplates those who enter. For the rash or negligent act which is declared to be a crime is one 'not amounting to culpable homicide,' and it must therefore be taken that intentionally or knowingly inflicted violence, directly and wilfully caused, is excluded. Section 304-A does not say every unjustifiable or inexcusable act be punishable under the provisions of limits itself to those rash or negligent culpable homicide of either descriptive

¹ Nidamarti Nagabhushanam, (1872) 7 M. H. C. 119, 120.

² Per Stephen, J., in Doherty, (1887) 16 Cox 306, 309.

³ Finney, (1874) 12 Cox 625.

⁴ Noakes, (1868) 4 F. & F. 920.

⁵ Per Jenkins, C. J., in Omlar Rampratap, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 679, 682; Ledger, (1862) 2 F. & F. 857.

⁶ Thomas Pocock, (1851) 5 Cox 172.

⁷ Richard Timmins, (1836) 7 C. & P. 499

this kind would come within the category of manslaughter, but the authors of our Penal Code appear to have thought it more convenient to give them a separate status in a section to themselves, with a narrower range of punishment proportioned to their culpability. It appears to me impossible to hold that cases of direct violence, wilfully inflicted, can be regarded as either rash or negligent acts. There may be in the act an absence of intention to kill, to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or of knowledge that death will be the most probable result, or even of intention to cause grievous hurt, or of knowledge that grievous hurt is likely to be caused. But the inference seems irresistible that hurt at the very least must be presumed to have been intended, or to have been known to be likely to be caused. If such intention or knowledge is present, it is a misapplication of terms to say that the act itself, which is the real test of the criminality, amounts to no more than rashness or negligence.¹ The accused, while engaged in a verbal wrangle with his wife, struck her a blow on the left side with great force, the result of which was that she vomited and bled from the nose, and within little more than an hour died. Upon the post-mortem examination it was found that her "spleen was badly ruptured, almost torn across, and the death was caused by its rupture." There were no signs of disease of the spleen, though it was a little enlarged. The Sessions Judge convicted him under this section, but the High Court altered the conviction to one under s. 325 on the ground that the blow was wilfully and consciously given to the deceased by the accused and the consequences that resulted from it could not change a wilful and conscious act into a rash or negligent one and it was found that the accused neither intended to kill nor to cause bodily injury likely to cause death and that he had not the knowledge that death would be the probable result.²

Death caused by persons practising surgery or medicine.—Where a person practising medicine or surgery, whether licensed or unlicensed, is guilty of gross negligence, or criminal inattention, in the course of his employment, and in consequence of such negligence or inattention death ensues, it is manslaughter, but if there is no gross negligence it is not.³

Where a person acting as a medical man, whether licensed or unlicensed, administers to a patient a poisonous medicine without any intent of doing any bodily harm but with an intent to prevent or cure a disease and it kills the patient, he is guilty of an offence under this section.⁴

Contributory negligence.—The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to criminal liability where the death of a person is caused partly by the negligence of the accused and partly by his own negligence.

If the accused is charged with contributing to the death of the deceased by his negligence, it matters not whether he was deaf, or drunk, or negligent, or in part contributed to his own death.⁵

CASES.

Rash or negligent act.—Where a railway official, after being instructed to move some trucks down an incline uncoupled and singly, disobeyed the instruction and lost control over them, and a cooly in trying to stop the trucks fell under the wheels and was killed⁶; where an engine-driver failed to sound his whistle

¹ Per Straight, J., in Idu Beg, (1881) 3 All. 776, 778, 779.

² Ibid.

³ Long, (1831) 4 C. & P. 383, 423; Joseph Senior, (1832) 1 Mood. Cr. C. 346; Simpson, (1829) 1 Lewin 172; Spiller, (1832) 5 C. & P. 222.

⁴ DeSouza, (1920) 42 All. 272; Mahla, (1924) 1 L. C. 393.

⁵ Per Pollock, C. B., in Swindall, (1846) 2 C. & K. 230, 232, referred to in (1871) 6 M. H. C. App. 31; Dant, (1865) 10 Cox 102; Hutchinson, (1881) 6 Cox 555; Jones, (1900)

before starting the engine, and the engine having been put in motion caused a boy, who was painting a wagon on the line, injury, which resulted in this death ¹; where the accused while out shooting with the deceased in a jungle separate from him, seeing something move in the jungle but without waiting to see what it was, fired and shot the deceased ²; where the accused cut out the piles of a person with an ordinary knife and, from the profuse bleeding, the person died ³; where the prisoner struck at a man carrying a child and the blow fell on the 'child' and killed it ⁴; where the prisoner received poison from her paramour to administer it to her husband as a charm and administered it with the result that death ensued, but she did not know that the substance given to her was noxious until she had seen its effects ⁵; where the accused administered to her husband a deadly poison (arsenious oxide) believing it to be a love potion in order to stimulate his affection for her, and the husband died from the effects of the poison ⁶; where the accused received a powder from an enemy of her relative, took no precaution to ascertain whether it was noxious, and mixed it with food believing that by doing so she would become rich, but four of the persons who ate the food died ⁷; where the lessee of a ferry allowed an unsound boat to be used, and in consequence of its unsoundness, the boat sank while crossing the river and some of the persons in it were drowned ⁸; where the accused being absorbed in an attempt to witness the preparations for a festival drove his cart on one side of the road regardless of the persons standing on that part of the road, and in so doing drove over and killed a child ⁹; where the accused and the deceased were standing on the parapet of a deep well, and an altercation having arisen between them, the accused struck the deceased on the head with a club and the deceased lost his balance, fell into the well, and was drowned ¹⁰; where the accused sent two boxes containing fireworks to a railway company falsely declaring them to contain iron locks, with the result that in loading one of the boxes exploded killing one cooly, injuring another, and damaging the railway wagon in which it was being placed ¹¹; it was held in all those cases that the acts of the accused were either rash or negligent. The accused had been in charge of a police-station, the vicinity of which had been much troubled by thieves. On one occasion a thief had fired at the accused. It having been reported to the accused that three thieves were prowling about, he, with two other men, went out to patrol. They saw a man crouching under a tree, and thinking he must be a thief, the accused fired at him, and killed him. The man proved to be a cooly. It was held that the accused was guilty of a most rash act. ¹²

Where, by the bullet fired by the one or the other of two accused persons who were practising at target shooting at a place near which was a public road which the accused would have noticed if they had used the least circumspection, a man

¹ Francis R. Thompson, (1894) Cr. R. No. 47 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 721.

² Nga Pon Gyi, (1885) S. J. L. C. 308.

³ Sukaroo Kobiraj, (1887) 14 Cal. 566; but see Baroolun Hijrah, (1896) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 7 and Gonesh Dooley, (1879) 5 Cal. 351.

⁴ Budhya, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 398; Jama, (1888) P. R. No. 28 of 1888; Kalu, (1920) 4 L. L. J. 487. (Sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment held to be sufficient because the stick thrown at a woman which killed the child was a light one). But in Sahae Rae, (1878) 3 Cal. 623, such an act was held to be grievous hurt.

⁵ Mussammat Baihan, (1887) P. R. No. 60 of 1887; Khema, (1869) P. R. No. 8 of 1869; Musst. Sultan, (1884) P. R. No. 35 of 1884. Under similar circumstances the Bombay High Court acquitted the accused of the offence of murder: Nagawa Bhimappa, (1902) 4 Bom.

L. R. 425; but in this case the question whether the act of the accused did not come under s. 304-A was not considered.

⁶ Ramaya Channappa, (1915) 17 Bom. L. R. 217, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 38. See Emp. v. Chanchal, Crim. Appeal No. 249 of 1916, decided on 10th August 1916, in which a woman who administered to her husband dhatura as a love philtre which made him ill was acquitted of a charge under s. 328 as it was not administered with a malicious desire of injuring her husband.

⁷ Jamna, (1909) 31 All. 290.

⁸ Bhutan, (1891) 16 All. 472.

⁹ Intru Souza, (1886) 1 W. R. 327.

¹⁰ Chhhuai Lal, (1889) P. R. No. 33 of 1889.

¹¹ Kamr-ud-din, (1905) P. R. No. 22 of 1905.

¹² P. L. R. No. 24 of 1905.

¹³ Waziruzama Khan, (1881) 1 A. W. N. 166.

was wounded resulting in his death, it was held that both the accused were guilty of an offence under this section, and that in such a case the one whose bullet struck the deceased and caused death could not be held to be the only principal offender under it, and the other whose shot did not strike the deceased, his abettor under s. 114.¹ This case follows an English case the facts of which are similar. A, B and C went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses, taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, for the purpose of practising firing with it. B placed a board, which was handed to him by A, in the presence of C, in a tree in the field as a target. All three fired shots directed at the board so placed, from a distance of about 100 yards. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots thus fired by one, though it was not proved by which one of them, killed a boy on a tree in a garden near the field, at a spot 393 yards distant from the firing point. A, B and C were all found guilty by the jury of manslaughter. It was held by the Court that A, B and C had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others, and were rightly convicted of manslaughter.² Where an Assistant Station Master on duty at a station gave the "line clear" on his own responsibility on a foggy night knowing that another train was standing at a particular point and the train which was allowed to pass came into collision with the standing train, it was held that the granting of "line clear," under the circumstances was in itself a rash and negligent act which rendered him amenable to punishment.³ An unqualified person who was in charge of a dispensary had to make up a quantity of quinine mixture for cases of fever. He went to a cupboard where non-poisonous medicines were supposed to be kept and took therefrom a bottle with an outside wrapper marked 'poison.' This wrapper he tore off and threw away. The bottle itself was labelled 'strychnine hydrochloride', but, without regarding this, and apparently because there was a resemblance between this bottle and another in which quinine hydrochloride was kept, he made up the entire contents of the bottle as if it had been quinine. The result was that seven patients died. It was held that he was guilty under this section.⁴ The accused, a girl of seventeen who happened to be carrying her infant daughter tied on her back, having been exasperated at an altercation which she had with her husband, attempted to commit suicide by jumping into a well. She was found alive in the well next day but her child was drowned. The trial Judge convicted her of an attempt to commit suicide and also of the murder of her infant child, under ss. 309 and 302. It was held that the offence which she had committed was not murder, but causing death by negligent omission, i.e., omission to put the child down before jumping into the well.⁵

Acts not rash or negligent, but done intentionally or designedly.—Where the accused gave the deceased a push which caused him to fall, and in such fall he broke his toe, and on the fifth day died of tetanus, this section was held not to apply. The High Court remarked that it was simply a case of using criminal force.⁶ Where the accused threw his stick at the deceased with such force that it hit the deceased on the head with the point, and made a punctured wound which caused the death of the deceased, it was held that he had not committed an offence under this section, because the injury was intentionally caused to the deceased. He was, therefore, held guilty of causing hurt.⁷ Where there was medical evidence to show that milk had been administered to a child in such quantities as to kill it, but there was no evidence to show that the milk was administered by the orders of the mother, or that she knew the quantity that was

¹ Morgan, (1909) 13 C. W. N. 362, 9 C. L. J. 204.

² Supad Lukadu, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 604.

³ Salmon, (1880) 6 Q. B. D. 70.

⁴ Tapli Prasad, (1917) 15 A. L. J. R. 590.

⁵ Acharyya, (1877) 1 Mad. 224.

⁶ DeSouza, (1920) 42 All. 272; Mahla, (1924) 1 L. C. 383.

⁷ William Keegan, (1833) Cr. R. No. 38, of 1893, Unrep. Cr. C. 673.

before starting the engine, and the engine having been put in motion caused a boy, who was painting a wagon on the line, injury, which resulted in this death¹; where the accused while out shooting with the deceased in a jungle separate from him, seeing something move in the jungle but without waiting to see what it was, fired and shot the deceased²; where the accused cut out the piles of a person with an ordinary knife and, from the profuse bleeding, the person died³; where the prisoner struck at a man carrying a child and the blow fell on the 'child' and killed it⁴; where the prisoner received poison from her paramour to administer it to her husband as a charm and administered it with the result that death ensued, but she did not know that the substance given to her was noxious until she had seen its effects⁵; where the accused administered to her husband a deadly poison (arsenious oxide) believing it to be a love potion in order to stimulate his affection for her, and the husband died from the effects of the poison⁶; where the accused received a powder from an enemy of her relative, took no precaution to ascertain whether it was noxious, and mixed it with food believing that by doing so she would become rich, but four of the persons who ate the food died⁷; where the lessee of a ferry allowed an unsound boat to be used, and in consequence of its unsoundness, the boat sank while crossing the river and some of the persons in it were drowned⁸; where the accused being absorbed in an attempt to witness the preparations for a festival drove his cart on one side of the road regardless of the persons standing on that part of the road, and in so doing drove over and killed a child⁹; where the accused and the deceased were standing on the parapet of a deep well, and an altercation having arisen between them, the accused struck the deceased on the head with a club and the deceased lost his balance, fell into the well, and was drowned¹⁰; where the accused sent two boxes containing fireworks to a railway company falsely declaring them to contain iron locks, with the result that in loading one of the boxes exploded killing one cooly, injuring another, and damaging the railway wagon in which it was being placed¹¹; it was held in all those cases that the acts of the accused were either rash or negligent. The accused had been in charge of a police-station, the vicinity of which had been much troubled by thieves. On one occasion a thief had fired at the accused. It having been reported to the accused that three thieves were prowling about, he, with two other men, went out to patrol. They saw a man crouching under a tree, and thinking he must be a thief, the accused fired at him, and killed him. The man proved to be a cooly. It was held that the accused was guilty of a most rash act.¹²

Where, by the bullet fired by the one or the other of two accused persons who were practising at target shooting at a place near which was a public road which the accused would have noticed if they had used the least circumspection, a man

¹ Francis R. Thompson, (1894) Cr. R. No. 47 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 721.

² Nga Pon Gyi, (1885) S. J. L. B. 308.

³ Sukaroo Kobiraj, (1887) 14 Cal. 566; but see Baboolun Hijrah, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 7 and Gonesh Dooley, (1879) 5 Cal. 351.

⁴ Budhya, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 398; Jama, (1888) P. R. No. 28 of 1888; Kalu, (1920) 4 L. J. 487. (Sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment held to be sufficient because the stick thrown at a woman which killed the child was a light one). But in Sahae Rao, (1878) 3 Cal. 623, such an act was held to be grievous hurt.

⁵ Mussammat Balhan, (1887) P. R. No. 69 of 1887; Khema, (1869) P. R. No. 6 of 1869; Must. Sultan, (1884) P. R. No. 35 of 1884. Under similar circumstances the Bombay High Court acquitted the accused of the offence of murder: Nagawa Bhimappa, (1902) 4 Bom.

L. R. 425; but in this case the question whether the act of the accused did not come under s. 304-A was not considered.

⁶ Ramaya Channappa, (1915) 17 Bom. L. R. 217, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 38. See Emp. v. Chanchal, Crim. Appeal No. 249 of 1916, decided on 10th August 1916, in which a woman who administered to her husband dhatura as a love philtre which made him ill was acquitted of a charge under s. 328 as it was not administered with a malicious desire of injuring her husband.

⁷ Jamna, (1909) 31 All. 290.

⁸ Bhutan, (1894) 16 All. 472.

⁹ Inru Souza, (1886) 1 Weir 327.

¹⁰ Chikku Lal, (1889) P. R. No. 33 of 1889.

¹¹ Kamr-ud-din, (1905) P. R. No. 22 of 1905.

¹² Fazirulzama Khan, (1881) 1 A. W. N.

156.

was wounded resulting in his death, it was held that both the accused were guilty of an offence under this section, and that in such a case the one whose bullet struck the deceased and caused death could not be held to be the only principal offender under it, and the other whose shot did not strike the deceased, his abettor under s. 114.¹ This case follows an English case the facts of which are similar. A, B and C went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses, taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, for the purpose of practising firing with it. B placed a board, which was handed to him by A, in the presence of C, in a tree in the field as a target. All three fired shots directed at the board so placed, from a distance of about 100 yards. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots thus fired by one, though it was not proved by which one of them, killed a boy on a tree in a garden near the field, at a spot 323 yards distant from the firing point. A, B and C were all found guilty by the jury of manslaughter. It was held by the Court that A, B and C had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others, and were rightly convicted of manslaughter.² Where an Assistant Station Master on duty at a station gave the "line clear" on his own responsibility on a foggy night knowing that another train was standing at a particular point and the train which was allowed to pass came into collision with the standing train, it was held that the granting of "line clear" under the circumstances was in itself a rash and negligent act which rendered him amenable to punishment.³ An unqualified person who was in charge of a dispensary had to make up a quantity of quinine mixture for cases of fever. He went to a cupboard where non-poisonous medicines were supposed to be kept and took therefrom a bottle with an outside wrapper marked 'poison.' This wrapper he tore off and threw away. The bottle itself was labelled 'strychnine hydrochloride'; but, without regarding this, and apparently because there was a resemblance between this bottle and another in which quinine hydrochloride was kept, he made up the entire contents of the bottle as if it had been quinine. The result was that seven patients died. It was held that he was guilty under this section.⁴ The accused, a girl of seventeen who happened to be carrying her infant daughter tied on her back, having been exasperated at an altercation which she had with her husband, attempted to commit suicide by jumping into a well. She was found alive in the well next day but her child was drowned. The trial Judge convicted her of an attempt to commit suicide and also of the murder of her infant child, under ss. 309 and 302. It was held that the offence which she had committed was not murder, but causing death by negligent omission, i.e., omission to put the child down before jumping into the well.⁵

Acts not rash or negligent, but done intentionally or designedly.—Where the accused gave the deceased a push which caused him to fall, and in such fall he broke his toe, and on the fifth day died of tetanus, this section was held not to apply. The High Court remarked that it was simply a case of using criminal force.⁶ Where the accused threw his stick at the deceased with such force that it hit the deceased on the head with the point, and made a punctured wound which caused the death of the deceased, it was held that he had not committed an offence under this section, because the injury was intentionally caused to the deceased. He was, therefore, held guilty of causing hurt.⁷ Where there was medical evidence to show that milk had been administered to a child in such quantities as to kill it, but there was no evidence to show that the milk was administered by the orders of the mother, or that she knew the quantity that was

¹ Morgan, (1909) 13 C. W. N. 362, 9 C. L. J.

² Salmon, (1880) 6 Q. B. D. 79.

³ Tapi Prasad, (1917) 15 A. L. J. R. 590.

⁴ DeSouza, (1920) 42 All. 272; Mahla, (1924) 1 L. C. 397.

⁵ Supadi Lukadu, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 604.

⁶ Acharjys, (1877) 1 Mad. 224.

⁷ William Keegan, (1893) Cr. R. No. 38, of 1893, Unrep. Cr. C. 673.

being administered, it was held that there was no evidence for a conviction under this section.¹ The accused was watching his field one dark night. Hearing a noise in the field he shouted, whereupon a thief ran out of it whom he followed and struck with a stick. The thief fell down, and the accused caught him and took him to the Zemindar's house. The thief became insensible there, and subsequently died from the effects of the blows which the accused had given him. It was held that he could not be convicted of an offence under this section.²

The accused's wife, eight or nine years of age, was brought by her father to his house for the purpose of being left there. At night the accused and his wife went inside the house; the fathers of both remaining outside in the verandah. After midnight the girl left the house with the intention of going home to her father's house, got into a canoe, which sank, and left her in the water, from which she was rescued by the accused's father, and brought back to the house by the accused. The accused, having pulled her into the house, kicked her on the back with his bare foot, from which kick the girl fell down and died almost immediately. On the medical evidence it appeared that she was quite healthy, and that she had died from rupture of the anterior coat of her stomach caused by external violence. The Sessions Court convicted the accused under this section. But the High Court set aside the conviction and convicted him of culpable homicide, observing: "To kick a girl of tender age with such force as to produce rupture of the abdomen in a healthy subject, appears to us to be an act of such a character that no reasonable man could be ignorant of the likelihood of its causing death."³

Where the accused administered a love potion or drug which was found to be aconite, to her husband, mother-in-law and brother-in-law, thinking that it was some charm to procure their love as they were mal-treating her because she was carrying on an intrigue with another neighbour, and her husband and mother-in-law died, though the brother-in-law ultimately recovered, it was held that she was guilty of the offence under this section as she administered the drug without due care and caution or any inquiry as to what it really was.⁴ Where the accused kicked a person on his stomach and struck him with a piece of stone on his head and back and that person died ten days after receiving the injuries, it was held that the section was not applicable to a case where injuries were inflicted neither rashly nor negligently but intentionally and designedly.⁵

Too remote consequences.—B, an Assistant Station Master at a station G, had, in anticipation of receiving a line clear and caution message, and against rules written out in the prescribed form book a conditional message to the effect that on the arrival at G of a down train then due from a station S, the line would be clear for a certain up train at G to start for S. The guard of the latter train thereafter, without the knowledge of B and also against rules, entered the Station Master's room in his absence, tore this imperfect certificate from out of the book and without reading it, as he ought to have done, signed and passed it on to the driver, and gave the signal for the train to start, but without taking the permission of the Station Master as the rules required. The driver also, without examining the certificate, started the train and a collision took place in which several persons including the driver were killed. B and the guard were both convicted under this section. It was held that B was not liable; the consequences were too remote to have been caused by B's writing out the certificate in disobedience of the rule.⁶

English cases.—Gross negligence.—Where the defendant came to town in a chaise, and before he got out of it, he fired his pistols, which by accident killed

¹ Musummat Pemtoor, (1873) 5 N. W. P.

² Jalligapa Shirupa, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 887, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 183.

³ Bhikham, (1891) 1 A. W. N. 103.

⁴ Shanier Balkrishna, (1904) 32 Cal. 73.

⁵ Kelabdi Mundal, (1879) 4 Cal. 764, 767.

⁶ S. C. W. N. 615.

⁷ Pika Bero, (1912) 39 Cal. 855.

a woman¹; where a workman threw down a piece of timber crying aloud 'stand clear' and was heard by all labourers but one on whom it fell and killed him²; where a man turned out a horse known to be vicious on a common across which were public footpaths and he kicked a child who died³; where the accused being employed to drive a cart sat in the inside instead of attending at the horse's head and that cart went over a child who was gathering up flowers on the road⁴; where where a lad, as a frolic, took the trap-stick out of the front part of a cart, in consequence of which it was upset, and the cartman was killed⁵, it was held that the accused were guilty of gross negligence

No gross negligence.—The accused was an attendant at a lunatic asylum. Being in charge of a lunatic, who was bathing, he turned on hot water through mistake into the bath, and thereby scalded him to death. It was found that the lunatic was a man capable of getting out by himself and of understanding what was said to him and that he was told to get out. It was held that he was not guilty of gross negligence.⁶ The negligent act which causes death should be that of the party charged. Where it was the duty of the accused to attend a steam-engine but he had stopped it and gone away, and, during his absence, a person came to the spot, and put it again, and a person was that the death was not the negligence of the accused, however gross, will not render him responsible for a death which his diligence would not have averted.¹⁰ The prisoner was indicted for the manslaughter of a passenger in a train of which he was in charge as guard. The prisoner had directed the train to be separated on an incline, whereby a portion of the train ran backwards and collided with another train, causing the death of many of the passengers. It was held that in order to convict the prisoner he must be found guilty 'of gross negligence' or 'reckless negligent conduct' and that mere intellectual defect or mistake of judgment, without wilful disobedience, as to a traffic regulation, would not create criminal liability.¹¹

On an indictment for the murder of an aged and infirm woman, by confining her against her will, and not providing her with meat, drink, clothing, firing, medicines, and other necessities, and not allowing her the enjoyment of open air, in breach of an alleged duty, Patterson, J. in his charge to the jury, said: "If the prisoner was guilty of wilful neglect, so gross and wilful that you are satisfied he must have contemplated the death of Mrs. Warner, then he will be guilty of murder. If, however, you think only that he was so careless, that her death was occasioned by his negligence, though he did not contemplate it, he will be guilty of manslaughter."¹²

Where it was the duty of the accused to put up where necessary, and by reason of this by an explosion of fire damp, it was held that the accused was guilty of manslaughter by negligence.¹³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the death of the person in question.

(2) That the accused caused such death.

¹ Burton, (1721) 1 Str. 481; Hardie, 10 Rennels, 647.

² Hull, (1664) Kelyng 40.

³ David Dant, (1865) L. & C. 567.

⁴ Knight, (1828) 1 Lewin 168.

⁵ Markuss, (1864) 4 F. & F. 356.

⁶ John Jones, (1874) 12 Cox 628.

⁷ James Sullivan, (1836) 7 C. & P. 641.

⁸ Finney, (1874) 12 Cox 625.

⁹ Hilton, (1838) 2 Lewin 214.

¹⁰ Dalloway, (1847) 2 Cox 273.

¹¹ Ellis, (1889) 16 Cox 710.

¹² Simon Marriott, (1835) 8 C. & P. 425, 433.

¹³ Haines, (1847) 2 C. & K. 368.

being administered, it was held that there was no evidence for a conviction under this section.¹ The accused was watching his field one dark night. Hearing a noise in the field he shouted, whereupon a thief ran out of it whom he followed and struck with a stick. The thief fell down, and the accused caught him and took him to the Zemindar's house. The thief became insensible there, and subsequently died from the effects of the blows which the accused had given him. It was held that he could not be convicted of an offence under this section.²

The accused's wife, eight or nine years of age, was brought by her father to his house for the purpose of being left there. At night the accused and his wife went inside the house; the fathers of both remaining outside in the verandah. After midnight the girl left the house with the intention of going home to her father's house, got into a canoe, which sank, and left her in the water, from which she was rescued by the accused's father, and brought back to the house by the accused. The accused, having pulled her into the house, kicked her on the back with his bare foot, from which kick the girl fell down and died almost immediately. On the medical evidence it appeared that she was quite healthy, and that she had died from rupture of the anterior coat of her stomach caused by external violence. The Sessions Court convicted the accused under this section. But the High Court set aside the conviction and convicted him of culpable homicide, observing: "To kick a girl of tender age with such force as to produce rupture of the abdomen in a healthy subject, appears to us to be an act of such a character that no reasonable man could be ignorant of the likelihood of its causing death."³

Where the accused administered a love potion or drug which was found to be aconite, to her husband, mother-in-law and brother-in-law, thinking that it was some charm to procure their love as they were mal-treating her because she was carrying on an intrigue with another neighbour, and her husband and mother-in-law died, though the brother-in-law ultimately recovered, it was held that she was guilty of the offence under this section as she administered the drug without due care and caution or any inquiry as to what it really was.⁴ Where the accused kicked a person on his stomach and struck him with a piece of stone on his head and back and that person died ten days after receiving the injuries, it was held that the section was not applicable to a case where injuries were inflicted neither rashly nor negligently but intentionally and designedly.⁵

Too remote consequences.—B, an Assistant Station Master at a station G, had, in anticipation of receiving a line clear and caution message, and against rules written out in the prescribed form book a conditional message to the effect that on the arrival at G of a down train then due from a station S, the line would be clear for a certain up train at G to start for S. The guard of the latter train thereafter, without the knowledge of B and also against rules, entered the Station Master's room in his absence, tore this imperfect certificate from out of the book and without reading it, as he ought to have done, signed and passed it on to the driver, and gave the signal for the train to start, but without taking the permission of the Station Master as the rules required. The driver also, without examining the certificate, started the train and a collision took place in which several persons including the driver were killed. B and the guard were both convicted under this section. It was held that B was not liable; the consequences were too remote to have been caused by B's writing out the certificate in disobedience of the rule.⁶

English cases.—Gross negligence.—Where the defendant came to town in a chaise, and before he got out of it, he fired his pistols, which by accident killed

¹ Mussumat Pemkoer, (1873) 5 N. W. P.

38.

² Bhilaan, (1881) 1 A. W. N. 103.

³ Ketabdi Mundul, (1879) 4 Cal. 764, 767.

⁴ Pika Beta, (1912) 39 Cal. 855.

⁵ Islingappa Shirupa, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R.

887, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 183.

⁶ Shanlar Balkrishna, (1904) 32 Cal. 73.

8 C. W. N. 616.

a woman¹; where a workman threw down a piece of timber crying aloud 'stand clear' and was heard by all labourers but one on whom it fell and killed him²; where a man turned out a horse known to be vicious on a common across which were public footpaths and he kicked a child who died³; where the accused being employed to drive a cart sat in the inside instead of attending at the horse's head and that cart went over a child who was gathering up flowers on the road⁴; where where a lad, as a frolic, took the trap-stick out of the front part of a cart, in consequence of which it was upset, and the cartman was killed⁵, it was held that the accused were guilty of gross negligence.

No gross negligence.—The accused was an attendant at a lunatic asylum. Being in charge of a lunatic, who was bathing, he turned on hot water through mistake into the bath, and thereby scalded him to death. It was found that the lunatic was a man capable of getting out by himself and of understanding what was said to him and that he was told to get out. It was held that he was not guilty of gross negligence.⁶ The negligent act which causes death should be that of the party charged. Where it was the duty of the accused to attend a steam-engine but he had stopped it and gone away, and, during his absence, a person came to the spot, and put it in motion and, being unskilled, was not able to stop it again, and a person was killed in consequence of its being in motion, it was held that the death was not the consequence of the prisoner's act.⁷ The negligence of the accused, however gross, will not render him responsible for a death which his diligence would not have averted.¹⁰ The prisoner was indicted for the manslaughter of a passenger in a train of which he was in charge as guard. The prisoner had directed the train to be separated on an incline, whereby a portion of the train ran backwards and collided with another train, causing the death of many of the passengers. It was held that in order to convict the prisoner he must be found guilty 'of gross negligence' or 'reckless negligent conduct' and that mere intellectual defect or mistake of judgment without wilful disobedience, as to a traffic regulation, would not create criminal liability.¹¹

On an indictment for the murder of an aged and infirm woman, by confining her against her will, and not providing her with meat, drink, clothing, firing, medicines, and other necessaries, and not allowing her the enjoyment of open air, in breach of an alleged duty, Patterson, J., in his charge to the jury, said: "If the prisoner was guilty of wilful neglect, so gross and wilful that you are satisfied he must have contemplated the death of Mrs. Warner, then he will be guilty of murder. If, however, you think only that he was so careless, that her death was occasioned by his negligence, though he did not contemplate it, he will be guilty of manslaughter."¹²

Where it was the duty of the accused as ground bailiff of a mine to cause the mine to be properly ventilated by causing air headings to be put up where necessary, and by reason of this omission another person was killed by an explosion of fire damp, it was held that the accused was guilty of manslaughter by negligence.¹³

PRACTICE.

Evidence—Prove (1) the death of the person in question.

(2) That the accused caused such death.

¹ Burton, (1721) 1 Str. 481, Hardie, 10 Rennels, 647.

² Hull, (1664) Kelyng 40.

³ David Dant, (1865) L. & C. 567.

⁴ Knight, (1828) 1 Lewin 168.

⁵ Markus, (1864) 4 F. & P. 356.

⁶ John Jones, (1874) 12 Cox 628.

⁷ James Sullivan, (1836) 7 C. & P. 641.

⁸ Finney, (1874) 12 Cox 625.

⁹ Hilton, (1838) 2 Lewin 214.

¹⁰ Dalkway, (1847) 2 Cox 273.

¹¹ Ellis, (1889) 16 Cox 710.

¹² Simon Morrott, (1838) 8 C. & P. 423, 433.

¹³ Haines, (1847) 2 C. & K. 364.

(3) That such act of the accused was rash or negligent, although it did not amount to culpable homicide.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

The Central Provinces Circular.—Section 304-A of the Penal Code is not to be applied to cases in which there is voluntary commission of an offence against the person. The Courts should be guided by the following explanation taken from the judgment of the Madras High Court in the case of Nidamarti Nagabhusanam, 7 Madras High Court Reports 119, of the terms 'rashness' and 'negligence' as used in that section:—* * * *

It may be added that in cases in which there has been an intention to cause bodily injury, and the offence does not amount to culpable homicide the person by whom death has been caused should be punished for causing either hurt or grievous hurt, according as his intention and the nature of the injuries inflicted bring the case within the definition of one or the other offence.¹

Direction to jury.—Where an accused was charged with culpable homicide and the evidence showed that the deceased had an enlarged spleen, and that his death was caused by rupture of the spleen occasioned by blows inflicted by the accused on the body of the deceased, it was held that it was not sufficient, in order to find the accused guilty of a rash act under s. 304-A, that the jury should be satisfied only of the prevalence of the disease of enlargement of the spleen in the district, and infer therefrom criminal rashness in beating the deceased; but that they should also be satisfied that the accused was aware of the prevalence of such disease in the district. . . . and in striking a person afflicted with that disease.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

about the — day of —, at —, caused the death of — —, amounting to homicide, to wit —, and there— of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be — aid charge.

305. If any person under eighteen years of age, any insane person, any delirious person, any idiot, or any person in a state of intoxication commits suicide, whoever abets the commission of such suicide shall be punished with death or transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Abetment of suicide of child or insane person.

COMMENT.

Object.—This and the following provisions have been inserted because the ordinary law of abetment is inapplicable. They apply when suicide is in fact committed.

'Suicide' is the self-destruction by a person.

The Commissioners observe: "It seems to us that the rule would fail to be applied under these clauses chiefly in such a case as this, where a person legally bound to take care of the person of another has by an illegal omission of his duty intentionally given him the opportunity, or permitted him to obtain the means of killing himself. It would apply also, we conceive, in the case of a person seeing another preparing to destroy himself, say by hanging, and allowing him to accomplish his purpose without any attempt to prevent him if as, may be excepted, the law of procedure makes it a common duty incumbent upon all men to assist in preventing offences about to be committed in their presence. The intention here would be inferable from the circumstances. In the former case collateral proof of the intention would be requisite. But we apprehend that it is active aid which is principally intended in these clauses, and to which the higher penalties are meant to be applied."¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the commission of suicide by a person

(2) That the person who committed suicide was under eighteen years of age or was insane, or delirious, or an idiot, or intoxicated

(3) That the accused abetted the commission of such suicide.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by the Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the——day of——, abetted the commission of suicide by AB, a person in a state of intoxication, (specify the state) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 305 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

306. If any person commits suicide, whoever abets¹ the commission of such suicide, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Abetment of suicide.

COMMENT.

Abetment of suicide is punishable under this section and attempt to suicide under s. 309.

Abetment of suicide is confined to the case of persons who aid and abet the commission of suicide by the hand of the person himself who commits the suicide. When another person, at the request of, or with the consent of, the suicider, has killed that person, he is guilty of homicide by consent, which is one of the forms of culpable homicide.²

1. 'Abets.'—See s. 108, supra.

CASES.

Suttee.—Three accused persons instigated a boy to light the pile of a suttee while another induced the woman to return to the pile after she had once retired from it, and she was immolated. The three persons were convicted of abetting culpable homicide, and the boy and other person of abetting suicide.³ Where, in the presence of the accused, a woman prepared to commit suicide, and they followed her to the pyre, and stood by her, her step-sons crying "Ram Ram," and one of the accused admitted that he told the woman to say "Ram Ram," and she would become suttee, it was held that those facts were sufficient to prove the active connivance of the accused, and to justify the inference that they had engaged with her in a conspiracy for the commission of the suttee.⁴

One R having died, his widow declared her intention to be a suttee. The accused sent word to the police, but before their arrival they took the body to the

¹ First Report, ss. 322, 323.

² Sakelbaji Reddell, (1863) 1 R. J. P. J. 174.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Mohit Pandey, (1871) 3 N. W. P. 316.

cremating place. The evidence was that the deceased having shown certain miracles they were overawed by her threats to curse them and did what she ordered them to do. They prepared the funeral pyre, placed her husband's body over it, but did not use any force to prevent her from sitting on the pyre and supplied her with ghce which she poured over the pyre and herself. It was held that the accused were guilty of abetment of suicide.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the commission of suicide by a person.

(2) That the accused abetted the commission thereof (vide s. 107).

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That on or about the—day of—, at—, one AB committed suicide, and that you abetted its commission by—(specify the act), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 306 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

307. Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge¹ and under such circumstances,² that if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, the offender shall be liable either to transportation for life, or to such punishment as is hereinbefore mentioned.

When any person offending under this section is under sentence of transportation for life, he may, if hurt³ is caused, be punished with death.

Attempts by life-convicts.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A shoots at Z with intention to kill him, under such circumstances that, if death ensued, A would be guilty of murder. A is liable to punishment under this section.

(b) A with the intention of causing the death of a child of tender years exposes it in a desert place. A has committed the offence defined by this section, though the death of the child does not ensue.

(c) A, intending to murder Z, buys a gun and loads it. A has not yet committed the offence. A fires the gun at Z. He has committed the offence defined in this section, and, if by such firing he wounds Z, he is liable to the punishment provided by the latter part of the first paragraph of this section.

(d) A, intending to murder Z by poison, purchases poison and mixes the same with food which remains in A's keeping; A has not yet committed the offence in this section. A places the food on Z's table or delivers it to Z's servants to place it on Z's table. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

An attempt to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted.²

¹ Ram Dial, (1913) 36 All. 20.

² Stephen's Digest of Crim. Law, Art. 49.

The authors of the Code say :—" These clauses appear to us absolutely necessary to the completeness of the Code. We have provided, under the head of bodily hurt, for cases in which hurt is inflicted in an attempt to murder ; under the head of assault, for assaults committed in attempting to murder ; under the head of criminal trespass, for some criminal trespass committed in order to murder. But there will still remain many atrocious and deliberate attempts to murder which are not trespasses, which are not assaults and which cause no hurt. A, for example, digs a pit in his garden, and conceals the mouth of it, intending that Z may fall in and perish there. Here A has committed no trespass, for the ground is his own, and no assault, for he has applied no force to Z. He may not have caused bodily hurt, for Z may have received a timely caution, or may not have gone near the pit ; but A's crime is evidently one which ought to be punished as severely as if he had laid hands on Z with the intention of cutting his throat.

" Again, A sets poisoned food before Z. Here A may have committed no trespass, for the food may be his own ; and if so, he violates no right of property by mixing arsenic with it. He commits no assault, for he means the taking of the food to be Z's voluntary act. If Z does not swallow enough of the poisoned food to disorder him, A causes no bodily hurt ; yet it is plain that A has been guilty of a crime of a most atrocious description.

" Similar attempts may be made to commit voluntary culpable homicide in any of the three mitigated forms. A, for example, is excited to violent passion by Z, and fires a pistol intending to kill Z. If the shot proves fatal, A will be guilty of manslaughter ; and he surely ought not to be exempted from all punishment if the ball only grazes the intended victim.

" It is to meet cases of this description that clauses 308 and 309 [these sections] are intended."¹

Scope.—The intention or knowledge which is necessary to (constitute murder may exist, combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission) of that offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail or be intercepted or prevented from consummating the crime. This and the following section seem to apply to attempts to murder, in which there has been not merely a commencement of an execution of the purpose, but something little short of a complete execution, the consummation being hindered by circumstances independent of the will of the author. The act or omission, if carry-circumstances, and may even, in some cases, be ascertained without any reference at all to actual wounds.²

If a person who has an evil intent does an act which is the last possible act that he could do towards the accomplishment of a particular crime that he has in his mind, he is not entitled to pray in his aid an obstacle intervening not known to himself. If he did all that he could do, and completed the only remaining proximate act in his power, he cannot escape criminal responsibility because the consequences which he expected to ensue were prevented from ensuing.⁴

See notes on s. 511, infra, where there is a full discussion as to what constitutes an attempt.

¹ Note M, pp. 150, 151.

² M. & M. 274 ; Rawal Arab, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 964 ; Mangaralli Ranganayakamma, (1889) 1 Weir 328.

³ Kyau We, (1908) 4 L. B. R. 311, F. B., overruling Nga Shide Nye, (1869) S. J. L. B. 466.

⁴ Niddha, (1891) 14 AIL 38 ; Abdul Rahaman, (1908) 9 C. L. J. 432.

cremating place. The evidence was that the deceased having shown certain miracles they were overawed by her threats to curse them and did what she ordered them to do. They prepared the funeral pyre, placed her husband's body over it, but did not use any force to prevent her from sitting on the pyre and supplied her with ghee which she poured over the pyre and herself. It was held that the accused were guilty of abetment of suicide.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the commission of suicide by a person.

(2) That the accused abetted the commission thereof (vide s. 107).

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That on or about the—day of—, at—, one AB committed suicide, and that you abetted its commission by—(specify the act), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 306 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

307. Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge¹ and under such circumstances,² that if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine: and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, the offender shall be liable either to transportation for life, or to such punishment as is hereinbefore mentioned.

When any person offending under this section is under sentence of transportation for life, he may, if hurt³ is caused, be punished with death.

Attempts by life-convicts.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A shoots at Z with intention to kill him, under such circumstances that, if death ensued, A would be guilty of murder. A is liable to punishment under this section.

(b) A with the intention of causing the death of a child of tender years exposes it in a desert place. A has committed the offence defined by this section, though the death of the child does not ensue.

(c) A, intending to murder Z, buys a gun and loads it. A has not yet committed the offence. A fires the gun at Z. He has committed the offence defined in this section, and, if by such firing he wounds Z, he is liable to the punishment provided by the latter part of the first paragraph of this section.

(d) A, intending to murder Z by poison, purchases poison and mixes the same with food which remains in A's keeping; A has not yet committed the offence in this section. A places the food on Z's table or delivers it to Z's servants to place it on Z's table. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

An attempt to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted.²

¹ Ram Das, (1913) 36 All. 20.

² Stephen's Digest of Crim. Law, Art. 43.

The authors of the Code say :—" These clauses appear to us absolutely necessary to the completeness of the Code. We have provided, under the head of bodily hurt, for cases in which hurt is inflicted in an attempt to murder ; under the head of assault, for assaults committed in attempting to murder ; under the head of criminal trespass, for some criminal trespass committed in order to murder. But there will still remain many atrocious and deliberate attempts to murder which are not trespasses, which are not assaults, and which cause no hurt. A, for example, digs a pit in his garden, and conceals the mouth of it, intending that Z may fall in and perish there. Here A has committed no trespass, for the ground is his own, and no assault, for he has applied no force to Z. He may not have caused bodily hurt, for Z may have received a timely caution, or may not have gone near the pit ; but A's crime is evidently one which ought to be punished as severely as if he had laid hands on Z with the intention of cutting his throat.

" Again, A sets poisoned food before Z. Here A may have committed no trespass, for the food may be his own ; and if so, he violates no right of property by mixing arsenic with it. He commits no assault, for he means the taking of the food to be Z's voluntary act. If Z does not swallow enough of the poisoned food to disorder him, A causes no bodily hurt ; yet it is plain that A has been guilty of a crime of a most atrocious description.

" Similar attempts may be made to commit voluntary culpable homicide in any of the three mitigated forms. A, for example, is excited to violent passion by Z, and fires a pistol intending to kill Z. If the shot proves fatal, A will be guilty of manslaughter ; and he surely ought not to be exempted from all punishment if the ball only grazes the intended victim.

" It is to meet cases of this description that clauses 308 and 309 [these sections] are intended."¹

Scope.—The intention or knowledge which is necessary to (constitute murder may exist, combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission) of that offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail or be intercepted or prevented from consummating the crime. This and the following section seem to apply to attempts to murder, in which there has been not merely a commencement of an execution of the purpose, but something little short of a complete execution, the consummation being hindered by circumstances independent of the will of the author. The act or omission, although it does not cause death, is carried to such a length as, at the time of carrying it to that length, the offender considers sufficient to cause death.²

To justify a conviction under this section it is not essential that bodily injury capable of causing death should have been inflicted. Although the nature of the injury actually caused may often give considerable assistance in coming to a finding as to the intention of the accused, such intention may also be deduced from other circumstances, and may even, in some cases, be ascertained without any reference at all to actual wounds.³

If a person who has an evil intent does an act which is the last possible act that he could do towards the accomplishment of a particular crime that he has in his mind, he is not entitled to pray in his aid an obstacle intervening not known to himself. If he did all that he could do, and completed the only remaining proximate act in his power, he cannot escape criminal responsibility because the consequences which he expected to ensue were prevented from ensuing.⁴

See notes on s. 511, infra, where there is a full discussion as to what constitutes an attempt.

¹ Note M, pp. 150, 151

² M. & M. 274 ; Rawal Arab, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 964 ; Mangaroli Ranganayakarma, (1889) 1 Weir 328.

³ Kyau Hw., (1908) 4 L. R. R. 311, r. n.

overruling Ngo Shwe Nwe, (1869) 8, J. L. R. 466.

⁴ Noddka, (1891) 14 All. 38 ; Abdul Rahman, (1904) 9 C. L. J. 432.

1. 'With such intention or knowledge.'—The intention or knowledge must be such as is necessary to constitute murder. Without this there can be no attempt to murder.

2. 'Under such circumstances.'—"It is necessary... that there must be an act done under such circumstances that death might be caused if the act took effect. The act must be capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of things; and if the act complained of is not of that description, a prisoner cannot be convicted of an attempt to murder under this section." The illustrations given bear out this view.¹ The only act which can fall within its purview is an act which by itself must be ordinarily capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. Where a person struck his wife on her neck with an axe causing an incised wound, it was held that he was guilty of causing hurt by a dangerous weapon (s. 321) and not of attempt to murder. The Court observed: "Although a hatchet is a dangerous weapon, a blow with it is not, in our opinion, an act ordinarily capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. On the contrary, we should say that whether a blow with a hatchet is or is not capable of causing such a result must depend upon the particular nature of the blow inflicted. It seems to us, therefore, that this is a case where the accused's criminal liability must be limited to the act which he in fact did, and cannot be extended so as to embrace the consequences of another act which he might have done but did not do."² Where the acts committed by the accused consisted only in running after the complainant with an axe in his hand and raising it to the shoulder when about four steps from the complainant, but before there was time to do anything further in pursuance of his purpose, the axe was snatched out of the accused's hand; it was held that the accused was not guilty of an attempt to commit murder as neither of his acts could per se have caused death, but that he was guilty of an attempt to cause grievous hurt.³

The Allahabad High Court has held that the words 'under such circumstances' indicate that the act must be done in such a way and with such ingredients that, if succeeded, and death was caused by it, the legal result would be murder according to ss. 299 and 300.⁴

Where the accused pointed an uncapped gun at his superior officer (believing the gun to be capped) with the intention of murdering him, but his rifle was pushed up, and he was prevented from the pulling the trigger, it was held that he was guilty not under this section but under s. 511.⁵ In this case Westropp, J., said: "That may be an attempt under s. 511 which does not come within s. 307;" and "s. 307 was not intended to exhaust all attempts to commit murder which should be punishable under the Code." But the Allahabad High Court has laid down that s. 511 does not apply to attempts to commit murder which are fully and exclusively provided for by s. 307.⁶ In this case the accused pointed a loaded pistol at a person to shoot him and pulled the trigger. The cap exploded but the charge did not go off. He was convicted under this section. It was held that a person was criminally responsible for an attempt to commit murder when, with the intention or knowledge requisite to its commission, he had done the last proximate act necessary to constitute the completed offence, and when the completion of the offence was only prevented by some cause independent of his volition. Straight, J., observed: "Now it appears to me that the attempts which are limited by s. 511 are attempts to commit offences, which by the Code itself are punishable either with 'transportation or imprisonment.' It cannot properly be said that the offence of murder is punishable with either of those things. In my opinion, if murder, as

¹ Per Couch, C. J., in Francis Cassidy, (1867) 4 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 17, 21; Jivan Das, (1904) P. R. No. 30 of 1904.

² Martu Vithoba Prabhu, (1913) 15 Bom L. R. 991, 993, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 159.

³ Jivan Das, sup.

⁴ Per Straight, J., in Niddha, (1901) 14 All. 38.

⁵ Francis Cassidy, sup., pp. 24, 25.

⁶ Niddha, sup.

mentioned in ss. 299 and 300, was intended to be included, the Legislature would before the word transportation have inserted the word 'death.' But, again, the section goes on and says that, certain things being done, the person who does those acts shall, 'where no express provision is made for the punishment of such attempt,' be punished in a particular way. As I have pointed out, by s. 307, . . . there is express provision made in the Code itself for the punishment of an attempt to murder. It seems therefore to me that when the framers of s. 511 drew it up in the terms that they have drawn it up, they especially meant to exclude those attempts to commit offences which in the various preceding sections of the Code were specifically and deliberately provided for with punishments enacted in the sections themselves. I have therefore for these reasons come to the conclusion that s. 307 is exhaustive and that no Court has any right to resort to the provisions of ss. 299 and 300 read with section 511 for the purpose of convicting a person of the offence of attempted murder, which, according to the view of the Court, does not come within the provision of s. 307." Mayne, (4th Edn., p. 532) in his Criminal Law, thus criticises these remarks: "Upon this part of the judgment it may be remarked, as to the first reason, that murder is punishable with transportation as well as death. This is the case as regards every offence punishable with death, except in the single instance of murder by a person under transportation for life, which under s. 303 is only punishable, and in fact can only be punished, with death. Cases of murder therefore do come within the letter of s. 511. It seems obvious too that those words in s. 511 are not intended to exclude the very few cases where the penalty of death is added to that of transportation, but to exclude the numerous cases which are only punishable with fine. Further, that part of the learned judge's reasoning would not apply to s. 308, which is in pari materia with s. 307, and worded in the same way, and can hardly admit of different treatment. As to the second reason, it is of course clear that any attempt, coming under s. 511, which is specifically provided for elsewhere, must be dealt with under the express provision. For instance, an attempt to wage war against the King must be dealt with under s. 121. It is also quite clear that any attempt to commit culpable homicide which falls under s. 307 or 308, must be dealt with under them and not under s. 511. What the Bombay case decided was, that an act done towards the commission of an attempt to murder, which was not an act by which murder could be effected, came under s. 511 because it did not come within s. 307. That being so, it fell within the wording of s. 511, as being a case 'where no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such attempt.' According to Mr. Justice Straight, such a case would go wholly unpunished.

"The same judgment appears to express doubt as to the propriety of the Bombay ruling that the act done in that case, viz, trying to discharge an uncapped rifle, supposed to be capped, did not come within s. 307. 'If he did all that he could do, and completed the only remaining proximate act in his power, I do not think he can escape criminal responsibility, and this because his own act, volition, and purpose having been given effect to in their full effect, a fact unknown to him, and at variance with his own belief, intervened to prevent the consequence of that act, which he expected to ensue, ensuing.' This is well illustrated by Ananda Bhau.¹ There the accused intending to kill his victim gave large doses of opium in milk but unknown to him, the intended victim was a confirmed opium-eater and thus he escaped serious harm. But it may be submitted that the question is, not whether the accused would escape criminal responsibility—it was decided that he was liable under s. 511,—but whether he would be criminally responsible under the very special words of s. 307. If that section only applies where the prisoner has done an act, which if carried to its utmost possible limits, without any interference from without, could cause death, and if his act could not have caused death, then his belief that it could have caused death is outside the question. Suppose, for instance, that Cassidy had put his rifle all ready loaded and capped for the purpose of committing the murder, and that in the excitement of the moment he had snatched up a comrade's rifle, which was unloaded, and the lock of which had been taken to pieces for repairs; that he had levelled it at his officer and pulled the trigger; it is plain that he had intended to do an act with such an intention that if by that act he had caused death he would have been guilty of murder; but that is not enough. The section requires that he should have done the act. He intended to discharge his own loaded rifle. He presented and tried to discharge a weapon which was as harmless as a broomstick."

¹ (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 935.

The Rangoon High Court has held in a case in which the accused presented a gun at the complainant and pulled the trigger, no report or discharge resulting, that, in the absence of evidence to show that the gun was loaded, the accused's act amounted to no more than presenting an unloaded gun at the complainant and pulling the trigger and that he was guilty under s. 352 and not this section.¹

The Court of Criminal Appeal in England has laid down that the completion or attempted completion of one of a series of acts intended by a man to result in killing is an attempt to murder even although this completed act would not, unless followed by the other acts, result in killing. It might be the beginning of the attempt, but would none the less be an attempt. In this case the accused was proved to have bought cyanide of potassium on 22nd December 1909. On 9th January, his mother was found dead in a sitting posture on a sofa in her house. There was a round table standing 2 ft. from the sofa, on the further side of which was a wine-glass three-parts filled with a liquid made up of a drink called nectar, which was afterwards shown to contain two grains of cyanide of potassium. There were also on the table a nectar bottle, two lumps of sugar, and a spoon. There was no evidence to show that she had taken any of this liquid, and the result of the post-mortem and of the analysis of the contents of the wine-glass was to show she had not died from poisoning by cyanide of potassium, but that death was most probably caused by syncope or heart failure, due to fright or some external cause, and, further, that the quantity of cyanide of potassium in the wine-glass was, even if she had taken the whole, insufficient to cause her death. The accused did not live in the house, but he said he had purchased the poison for case-hardening a chisel and had placed it in a cupboard in the room where the mother was found dead, and that he thought it possible she might have taken it from there. No traces of the poison, however, were found after her death either in the cupboard or in the house. There was a good deal of evidence showing that the accused had a motive for killing his mother, viz., to obtain her money. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that the accused had put the cyanide of potassium in the wine-glass with intent to murder his mother. It was urged on behalf of the accused that the act of which the accused was guilty, viz., the putting the poison in the wine-glass, was a completed act and could not be and was not intended by the accused to have the effect of killing her at once. It could not kill unless it were followed by other acts which he might never have done. But the Court decided that the accused was guilty of attempt to murder.² Under illustration (d) to this section if a person places poisoned food on another's table intending to kill him he is guilty of attempting to murder. But looking to the wording of this section the poisoned food should have been capable of causing death if it is eaten. In White's case it was found that two grains of cyanide of potassium were insufficient to cause death. It seems, therefore, doubtful whether this section would apply in similar circumstances.

3. 'Hurt.'—See s. 319, infra.

Amendment.—Attempts by life convicts.—This clause was provided by s. 11 of Act XXVII of 1870, because a person attempting to murder might, if hurt was caused, be transported for life or imprisoned for ten years, but where the offender was already transported for life, the law, by a strange oversight, actually awarded no penalty.

¹ Nga Hail, (1923) 1 Rang 209.

² White, (1910) 22 Cox 325.

CASES.

Death resulting not from the act of the accused but through other causes.—Where a child wrapped in a quilt was abandoned in a thicket close to a house and footpath, and was found very shortly after its exposure, the child having died; not from exposure but from the ignorance of the person who found it and who gave it no food¹; and where a man struck another on the head with a stick, and believing him to be dead set fire to the hut with a view to remove all evidence of the crime, and the Civil Surgeon deposed that the blow only stunned the deceased, and the death was really caused by the injuries from the burning when the accused set fire to the hut,² it was held that the offence of attempt to murder was committed.

Mutual infliction of injury.—Two accused in the course of a fight inflicted on each other injuries so serious that their dying depositions had to be taken in both cases. There was no eye-witness to the occurrence; and the evidence in each trial consisted of that of the complainant, the corroborative evidence of the wounds on the complainant and the admission of the accused that he was himself wounded in the occurrence. In separate trials, each was convicted of an offence under this section. It was held that as either of the accused would be entitled, in the event of the other dying of the wounds, to the benefit of a reasonable doubt and to plead that the case came within exception 4 to s. 300, neither accused could be legally convicted under this section³.

Poison.—Where the accused intentionally put arsenic into her husband's food in order to kill him and the husband died sometime afterwards from inflammation of the brain, and there was no evidence that the poison was even a secondary cause of the deceased's death⁴, and where the accused asked a doctor to supply her with medicine for the purpose of poisoning her son-in-law⁵; it was held that an attempt to murder had not been committed. Where a woman administered dhatura to three members of her family, who did not die, it was held that an attempt to murder was committed as she must be presumed to have known that the administration of dhatura was likely to commit robbery, and one to another taken seriously ill, it was held that in respect of the former the offence committed was that of grievous hurt and in respect of the latter the offence fell under s. 328.⁷

Poison intended for one shared by others.—Where sweetmeat containing arsenic sent to A with the intention of causing her death were also shared by B and C, and none of them died, it was held that the accused was guilty of an attempt to murder not only A but also B and C.⁸

Attempt to cause death by suffocation.—The accused enticed into her house a boy aged nine years, used violence to him and removed several jewels from his person and, being unable to remove his anklets and ear-rings, tied his wrists and neck with a rope, put a cloth in his mouth, took him into a room and placed him sitting

¹ Khodabux Fakir, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 52. 187.

² Khandu kulal Bhatani, (1890) 15 Bom. 191.

³ Nga Po Thein and Nga Po E, (1924) 2 Rang. 558.

⁴ Venkatarami, (1882) Weir, 3rd Edn.,

⁵ Musst. Bahhtawar, (1882) P. R. No. 21 of 1882.

⁶ Tulsha, (1897) 20 All. 113.

⁷ Bhagwan Din, (1908) 28 A. W. N. 213

⁸ Ladha Singh, (1920) 3 U. P. L. R. (L.) 12.

to the omission of the accused to watch the jar and the room, got out in the morning and ran home. It was held that the accused was rightly convicted under this section.¹

Attempt to discharge a loaded fire-arm.—B drew a loaded pistol from his pocket for the purpose of murdering S, but before he had time to do anything further in pursuance of his purpose the pistol was snatched out of his hand and he was at once arrested. It was held that he had attempted to shoot.² On the trial of an indictment under 21 & 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 18, which enacts that whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, "by drawing a trigger or in any other manner," attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person with intent to do grievous bodily harm, shall be guilty of felony, it was proved that the prisoner drew from his pocket a loaded revolver and pointed it towards his mother. His wrists were seized by bystanders as he was raising the pistol, and after a struggle it was taken from him. During the struggle his finger and thumb were seen fumbling about the revolver, which cocked automatically when the trigger was pulled. It was held that there was evidence upon which the prisoner could properly be convicted of an attempt to discharge the revolver within the meaning of the statute.³ During an interview between the prisoner and the prosecutor, the prisoner drew a loaded revolver from his coat pocket. The prosecutor immediately seized the prisoner and prevented him from raising his arm; a struggle ensued, in the course of which the prisoner nearly succeeded in getting his arm free, but after a few minutes the prosecutor wrested the revolver from him and he was taken into custody. During the struggle the prisoner several times said to the prosecutor, "you've got to die." It was held that the prisoner had attempted to discharge the revolver.⁴

At a public meeting held in Calcutta a student pointed a five-chambered loaded revolver at Sir Andrew Fraser, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and pulled the trigger twice, but owing to the damaged condition of the percussion cap the revolver did not go off. He was prosecuted and convicted under this section.⁵ Where a young man of twenty-five and accustomed to shooting was found to have fired at a person at a distance only of some six paces, the cartridge containing shot of about No. 6 size, it was held that he must have known that his act was likely to cause death. If the person shot at had died, the accused would undoubtedly have been guilty of murder. The fact that the back of the chair on which the victim was seated intercepted a number of bullets and thus avoided a fatal result, was held not to reduce the offence from one under this section to one under s. 324.⁶

Where two persons fire at another and one only actually hits and kills him, the other is not guilty of murder under ss. 302 and 34, but of attempt to murder.⁷

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the death of a human being was attempted.

(2) That such death was attempted to be caused by, or in consequence of, the act of the accused.

(3) That such act was done with the intention of causing death; or

That it was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as (a) the accused knew to be likely to cause death; or (b) was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; or

That the accused attempted to cause such death by doing an act known to him to be so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause (a) death, or (b) such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, the accused having no excuse for incurring the risk of causing such death or injury.

¹ Mangavalli Ranganayakamma, (1839) 1 Weir 328.

² Brown, (1853) 10 Q. B. D. 351.

³ Duckworth, [1892] 2 Q. B. 53.

⁴ Linnaker, [1896] 2 K. B. 99.

⁵ J. Roy Chowdhury, Unreported case, 1908. Criminal Sessions, Calcutta, decided on the 9th November 1908.

⁶ Abdul Rahaman, (1903) 9 C. L. J. 432.

⁷ Nirmal Kanta Roy, (1914) 41 Cal. 1072.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

The Court can convict the accused persons of offences under this section read with s. 34 or 114, although they are charged only with offences under this section and ss. 148 and 149.¹

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, did an act, to wit—, with such intention (or knowledge), and under such circumstances, that if by that act you had caused the death of AB, you would have been guilty of murder [and that you caused hurt to the said AB by the said act] and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 307 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the—Punishment.—The Frontier Crimes Regulation, s. 12 (2); the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (ct, 1897, s. 6, apply to offences under this section.

Mental Incapacity.—In awarding punishment the fact that the accused had contracted the habit of taking morphia and was a very fickle-minded person was taken into consideration although there was no indication of a plainly marked mental aberration.²

308. Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge,

Attempt to commit culpable homicide.

and under such circumstances, that, if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both; and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

ILLUSTRATION.

A, on grave and sudden provocation, fires a pistol at Z, under such circumstances that if he thereby caused death he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

The wording of this section is the same as that of the preceding one except that it deals with an attempt to commit culpable homicide. The punishment provided is therefore not so severe.

An attempt to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted.³

PRACTICE.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ Ranchhod Surung, (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 954, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 197.

² 24 of 1912.

³ Alexander Ruffee, (1912) P. W. R. No

³ Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, Art. 50.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, did an act, to wit—, with such intention (or knowledge), and under such circumstances, that if by that act you had caused the death of AB, you would have been guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder [and that you caused hurt to the said AB by the said act] and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 308 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the scope of the provisions of s. 309 of the Indian Penal Code.

And I hereby direct :

Punishment.—The Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2), and the Criminal Tribes Act, 1897, s. 6, apply to offences under this section.

309. Whoever attempts to commit suicide¹ and does any attempt to commit act towards the commission of such offence,² shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT;

This is the only instance in which an attempt to commit an offence is punishable but actual commission cannot be punished.

1. 'Commit suicide.'—To 'commit suicide' is for a person voluntarily to do an act (or, as it is submitted, to refrain from taking bodily sustenance), for the purpose of destroying his own life, being conscious of that probable consequence, and having, at the time, 'sufficient mind to will the destruction of life.'¹

2. 'Any act towards the commission of such offence.'—Such act must be in the course of the attempt.

Where a woman with the intention of committing suicide by throwing herself in a well, actually ran towards it where she was seized by a person, it was held that she was not guilty of attempt to commit suicide, because she might have changed her mind, and she which might be regarded as the commencement of cleander roots with the intention to poison constitute this offence.³ In both these cases the acts amounted merely to preparation to commit suicide. The Court has always to consider when the preparation has ended and attempt commenced. A person who emasculated himself was held to have committed no offence under this section, the act not being ordinarily likely to cause death.⁴ Where the accused jumped into a well to avoid and escape from the police; and when rescued he came out of the well of his own accord, it was held that in the absence of evidence that he jumped into the well to commit suicide he could not be convicted of an offence under this section.⁵ Where a woman who was in advanced stage of pregnancy threw herself into a well being driven mad by pains of prolonged labour and in consequence of that the child was born dead, it was held that she could not be held guilty of attempting to voluntarily cause miscarriage but of attempting to commit suicide.⁶

Method of committing suicide.—In India, of the various methods of committing suicide, ... a England, ... and lastly drowning. In India, men resort to hanging and drowning as a means of self-destruction in about equal numbers, while six out of seven women who commit suicide prefer the water. In England, four times as many males as females destroy them-

¹ Chift v. Schwabe, (1846) 3 C. B. 437.

² Ramalka, (1884) 8 Mad. 5.

³ Tayee, (1883) Unrep. Cr. C. 188.

⁴ Madho Singh, (1876) F. R. No. 22 of 478.

⁵ Durarka Poonja, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 140, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 87.

⁶ Musammal Mulla, (1919) 17 A. L. J. R.

selves by hanging and the same proportion by cut throat, while the number of males and females who commit suicide by drowning and poison is about equal. The number of suicides by lethal weapons is exceedingly small compared with that which exists in England. The most common causes of suicide in India are jealousy, family discord, destitution and physical suffering. Jealousy, with all the bitter feelings it engenders, is the cause of a large number of female suicides.¹

Attempts to commit suicide are of three classes—

(1) Persons who are driven to attempt to commit suicide by real intense ... Every instance of this kind should be treated

... in a moment of passion, with little or no reflection, and no very definite motive, punishment, though not severe, should be inflicted.

(3) Where the suicide partakes of the nature of poison, severe punishment may be inflicted.

Amendment.—The words “or with fine, or with both” were substituted for the words, “and shall also be liable to fine” by Act VIII of 1882, s. 7.²

English law.—If two persons mutually agree to commit suicide together, and the means employed to produce death only take effect on one, the survivor will be guilty of the murder of the one who died.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the act of the accused amounted to an attempt.

(2) That the attempt was complete by doing an act towards the commission of suicide.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of, —at—, attempted to commit suicide and did an act, to wit—, towards the commission of it, and you thereby committed an offence under s. 309 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session, or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—This section requires the Court to pass a substantive sentence of imprisonment. A sentence of fine and of imprisonment in default of payment is an illegal sentence.⁴ But sentences should not be passed in cases of attempt to commit suicide, where the accused suffers from a bodily affection which is likely to cause him acute mental depression.⁵

310. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall have been habitually associated with any other or others for the purpose of committing robbery or child-stealing by means of or accompanied with murder, is a thug.

COMMENT.

This and the following section incorporate the provisions of the Thuggee Act, 1836.

¹ Chevers' Medical Jurisprudence, 658.

Dyson, (1823) R. & R. 523; Jessop, (1877)

² Chauriara Iow Shidram, (1863) 1 B. H.

16 Cox 204.

C. 4, is therefore overruled.

⁴ Weir, 3rd Edn., 192.

⁵ Benjamin Alison, (1838) 8 C. & P. 418;

⁵ Appulcumy, (1864) 2 L. R. R. 503.

311. Whoever is a thug shall be punished with transportation for life, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment.

COMMENT.

Gangs of persons habitually associated for the purpose of inveigling and murdering travellers or others in order to take their property, etc., are called thugs. Thugs are robbers and dacoits, but robbers and dacoits are not Thugs. Thugs committed robbery or dacoity or kidnapping always accompanied with murder. Killing of the victim was the essential thing. Thugs have practically disappeared from the land, but the harrowing tales of their doings are extremely shocking. No lighter punishment could have terrorised them.

Under s. 310 anyone who habitually associates with others for the purpose of committing robbery, etc., is a Thug. Actual commission of any act is not necessary.

The provisions of the Thuggee Act with a slight alteration are incorporated in s. 310 and this section.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was associated with other person or persons.

(2) That he was so associated after the passing of this Code.

(3) That such persons, including the accused, were associated for the purpose of committing robbery, or child-stealing, by means of, or accompanied with, murder.

(4) That such persons were habitually associated for that purpose.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, were a Thug, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 311 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—The Criminal Tribes Act, 1897, s. 6, applies to offences under this section.

Of the Causing of Miscarriage, of Injuries to unborn Children, of the Exposure of Infants, and of the Concealment of Births.

312. Whoever voluntarily causes a woman with child to miscarry¹ shall, if such miscarriage be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman,² be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both; and, if the woman be quick with child,³ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A woman who causes herself to miscarry, is within the meaning of this section.

¹ Fira, (1881) P. R. No. 28 of 1881.

COMMENT.

This section deals with the causing of miscarriage with the consent of the woman, while the next section deals with the causing of miscarriage without the consent.

The authors of the Code observe: "With respect to the law on the subject of abortion, we think it necessary to say only that we entertain strong apprehensions that this or any other law on that subject may, in this country, be abused to the vilest purposes. The charge of abortion is one which, even where it is not substantiated, often leaves a stain on the honour of families. The power of bringing a false accusation of . . . unprincipled men.

few convictions, but harvest of profit to the Code of procedure to lay down rules which may prevent such an abuse. Should we not be able to do so, we are inclined to think that it would be our duty to advise his Lordship in Council rather to suffer abortion, where the mother is a party to the offence, to remain wholly unpunished, than to repress it by provisions which would occasion more suffering to the innocent than to the guilty."¹ This offence is the good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman.

1. 'Whoever voluntarily causes a woman with child to miscarry.'—The offender may be the woman herself or any other person.

'Voluntarily.'—See s. 39, supra.

'With child' means pregnant, and it is not necessary to show that 'quickening,' that is, perception by the mother of the movements of the fœtus has taken place or that the embryo has assumed a fœtal form, the stage to which pregnancy has advanced and the form which the ovum or embryo may have assumed are immaterial. Where a woman was acquitted on a charge of causing herself to miscarry, on the ground that she had only been pregnant for one month and that there was nothing which could be called fœtus or child, it was held that the acquittal was bad in law.²

2. 'Such miscarriage be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman.'—Miscarriage is the premature expulsion of the child or fœtus from the mother's womb at any period of pregnancy before the term of gestation is completed. Where a child was full-grown a conviction under this section was set aside and one under s. 511 for attempt to bring about miscarriage was maintained.³ The offence defined in this section can only be committed when the woman is in fact pregnant.⁴ For although there may be a guilty intention and attempt to commit it on the person of a woman believed to be, but who really is, not pregnant, the offence, as here defined, seems to require that the woman should be with child. If it appear that the woman was not with child at all, the prisoner must be acquitted.⁵

'Good faith.'—See s. 2, supra.

3. 'Quick with child.'—Quickening is the name applied to peculiar sensations experienced by a woman about the fourth or fifth month of pregnancy. The symptoms are popularly ascribed to the first perception of the movements of the fœtus. But quickening is not a constant, uniform, and well-marked distinction

¹ Note M, p. 151.

² Ademma, (1886) 9 Mad. 369.

³ Arunja Beva, (1873) 19 W. R. (Cr.) 32.

⁴ Kabul Pattur, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 4.

⁵ James Scudder, (1828) 3 C. & P. 605.

of the pregnant state.¹ " 'Quick with child' is having conceived; 'with quick child' is when the child has quickened."²

It has been held under an English statute that the expression 'quick with child' means when the woman has felt the child move within her.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child: or (if under the second clause) that she was quick with child.

(2) That the accused did some act likely to cause a miscarriage.

(3) That he did so voluntarily.

(4) That such woman did miscarry in consequence.

(5) That such miscarriage was not caused in good faith in order to save the woman's life.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused (name of the woman) then being with child to miscarry, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 312 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—In awarding punishment where a woman has caused herself to miscarry, it should not be forgotten that "the high caste young widow, who, to hide her shame, should, at the risk of life, cause herself to miscarry does not, under the peculiar circumstances in which she is placed by the institutions of society, commit an offence in any respect of like criminality with the seducer of a young girl, or married woman, who to cover her crime should cause such woman to miscarry."⁴

313. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section without the consent¹ of the woman,

Causing miscarriage without woman's consent.

whether the woman is quick with child² or not, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

When the consent of the woman is not taken the offence comes under this section. When the consent is taken then s. 312 applies. Again, under this section the person procuring the abortion is alone punished: under s. 312 such person as well as the woman who causes herself to miscarry are both punished.

1. 'Consent.'—See s. 90, supra.

2. 'Quick with child.'—See s. 312, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as required in s. 312; and further it must be established that the woman did not consent to such abortion.

¹ M. & M. 278

² Per Gurney, J., in Anne Wycherley, (1828) 8 C. & P. 262, 264.

³ Anon., (1811) 3 Camp. 70. This case was decided under s. 1 of 43 Geo. III., c. 69, which is now repealed.

⁴ 1st Rep., s. 349.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, you voluntarily caused AB (the woman who miscarried) then being with child to miscarry without her consent, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 313 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

314. Whoever, with intent to cause the miscarriage of a woman which child,¹ does any act which causes the death of such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine;

Death caused by act done with intent to cause miscarriage.

and if the act is done without the consent² of the woman, shall be punished either with transportation for life,

If act done without woman's consent.

or with the punishment abovementioned.

Explanation.—It is not essential to this offence that the offender should know that the act is likely to cause death.

COMMENT

This section provides for the case where death has occurred in causing miscarriage. Under it it is immaterial whether the woman was pregnant or not and whether the act done was or was not intended or known to cause her death.

This species of homicide may be committed involuntarily, that is, in the language of the Code, by a person who does not intend to cause (or think it likely that he will cause) death by the act which he does. If A, intending only to cause miscarriage to Z, involuntarily does an act which causes her death, he is liable to punishment under this section. And he is thus liable whether he acts with caution in order to prevent risk to Z's life, or whether he acts rashly or negligently. Even if he takes such precautions that there is no reasonable probability that Z's death will be caused, and if the medicine is rendered deadly by some accident which no human sagacity could foresee or by some peculiarity in Z's constitution, such as there was no ground whatever to expect, A will be liable to punishment under this section for causing death by an act done with intent to cause miscarriage.³

1. 'Intent to cause miscarriage of a woman with child.'—Even though the woman is not pregnant, yet if the death is caused by administering a drug under the belief that she was so, the offence will probably come under this section. Where a husband procured sul-
it for the purpose of pr although in reality she was guilty of manslaughter.⁴

Where a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure miscarriage, and it was not proved that the accused knew that the drug was likely to cause death, it was held that they had committed an offence under this section.⁵ The prisoner, at the request of a pregnant woman, who wished to procure abortion,

¹ M. & M. 280.

See Whitehead, (1856) 24 Q. B. D. 420.

² William Gaylor, (1857) D. & B. 288.

³ Kelchard Gage, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 59.

of the pregnant state.¹ "'Quick with child' is having conceived; 'with quick child' is when the child has quickened."²

It has been held under an English statute that the expression 'quick with child' means when the woman has felt the child move within her.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child; or (if under the second clause) that she was quick with child.

(2) That the accused did some act likely to cause a miscarriage.

(3) That he did so voluntarily.

(4) That such woman did miscarry in consequence.

(5) That such miscarriage was not caused in good faith in order to save the woman's life.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) heroby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused (name of the accused) the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—In awarding punishment where a woman has caused herself to miscarry, it should not be forgotten that "the high caste young widow, who, to hide her shame, should, at the risk of life, cause herself to miscarry does not, under the peculiar circumstances in which she is placed by the institutions of a society, commit an offence in any respect of like criminality with the seducer of a young girl, or married woman, who to cover her crime should cause such woman to miscarry."⁴

313. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section without the consent¹ of the woman, whether the woman is quick with child² or not, shall be punished with imprisonment for life, or for a term which may extend to ten years, or fine.

COMMENT.

When the consent of the woman is not taken the offence comes under this section. Again, under this section well as the woman who causes herself to miscarry ... both punished.

1. 'Consent.'—See s. 90, supra.

2. 'Quick with child.'—See s. 312, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as required in s. 312; and further it must be established that the woman did not consent to such abortion.

¹ M. & M. 278.

² Per Gurnay, J., in Anne Wycherley, (1838) 8 C. & P. 262, 264.

³ Anon., (1811) 3 Camp. 76. This case was decided under s. 1 of 43 Geo. III., c. 58, which is now repealed.

⁴ 1st Rep., s. 349.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, you voluntarily caused AB (the woman who miscarried) then being with child to miscarry without her consent, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 313 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

314. Whoever, with intent to cause the miscarriage of a woman which child,¹ does any act which causes the death of such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine;

Death caused by act done with intent
to cause miscarriage.

and if the act is done without the consent² of the woman, shall be punished either with transportation for life,

If act done without woman's consent.

or with the punishment abovementioned.

Explanation.—It is not essential to this offence that the offender should know that the act is likely to cause death.

COMMENT.

This section provides for the case where death has occurred in causing miscarriage. Under it it is immaterial whether the woman was pregnant or not and whether the act done was or was not intended or known to cause her death.

This species of homicide may be committed involuntarily, that is, in the language of the Code, by a person who does not intend to cause (or think it likely that he will cause) death by the act which he does. If A, intending only to cause miscarriage to Z, involuntarily does an act which causes her death, he is liable to punishment under this section. And he is thus liable whether he acts with caution in order to prevent risk to Z's life, or whether he acts rashly or negligently. Even if he takes such precautions that there is no reasonable probability that Z's death will be caused, and if the medicine is rendered deadly by some accident which no human sagacity could foresee or by some peculiarity in Z's constitution, such as there was no ground whatever to expect, A will be liable to punishment under this section for causing death by an act done with intent to cause miscarriage.¹

1. 'Intent to cause miscarriage of a woman with child.'—Even though the woman is not pregnant, yet if the death is caused by administering a drug under the belief that she was so, the offence will probably come under this section. Where a husband procured it for the purpose although in reality was guilty of manslaughter.²

Where a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure miscarriage, and it was not proved that the accused knew that the drug was likely to cause death, it was held that they had committed an offence under this section.³ The prisoner, at the request of a pregnant woman, who wished to procure abortion,

¹ M. & M. 280.

² William Gaylor, (1857) D. & B. 282.

See Whitchurch, (1850) 24 Q. B. D. 420.

³ Kalackand Gope, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 59.

of the pregnant state.¹ " 'Quick with child' is having conceived; 'with quick child' is when the child has quickened."²

It has been held under an English statute that the expression 'quick with child' means when the woman has felt the child move within her.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child: or (if under the second clause) that she was quick with child.

(2) That the accused did some act likely to cause a miscarriage.

(3) That he did so voluntarily.

(4) That such woman did miscarry in consequence.

(5) That such miscarriage was not caused in good faith in order to save the woman's life.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused (name of the woman) then being with child to miscarry, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 312 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—In awarding punishment where a woman has caused herself to miscarry, it should not be forgotten that "the high caste young widow, who, to hide her shame, should, at the risk of life, cause herself to miscarry does not, under the peculiar circumstances in which she is placed by the institutions of society, commit an offence in any respect of like criminality with the seducer of a young girl, or married woman, who to cover her crime should cause such woman to miscarry."⁴

313. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section without the consent¹ of the woman, whether the woman is quick with child² or not, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Causing miscarriage without woman's consent.

COMMENT.

When the consent of the woman is not taken the offence comes under this section. When the consent is taken then s. 312 applies. Again, under this section the person procuring the abortion is alone punished: under s. 312 such person as well as the woman who causes herself to miscarry are both punished.

1. 'Consent.'—See s. 90, supra.

2. 'Quick with child.'—See s. 312, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as required in s. 312; and further it must be established that the woman did not consent to such abortion.

¹ M. & M. 278.

² Per Gurney, J., in Anne Wyckley, (1838) 8 C. & P. 262, 264.

³ Anon., (1811) 3 Camp. 76. This case was decided under s. 1 of 43 Geo. III., c. 68, which is now repealed.

⁴ 1st Rep., s. 319.

murder; and the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent the death will not render it the less a murder.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child.

(2) That the accused did an act, before the child was born, calculated to prevent the child from being born alive, or to cause it to die after its birth.

(3) That such act was done by the accused with that intention.

(4) That such act was done, not in good faith, for the purpose of saving the mother's life.

(5) That the child was born dead, or died after its birth.

(6) That such death was caused by the abovementioned act of the accused.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—The charge should describe the act by which the accused intended to prevent the child being born alive, and should also state that the act was not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the mother.¹

Form.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, did an act, to wit—, to XY before the birth of her child, with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive (or causing it to die after its birth), and by that act did prevent that child from being born alive (or caused it to die after its birth) and the said act was not done in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 315 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Causing death of quick unborn child by act amounting to culpable homicide.

316. Whoever does any act under such circumstances that if he thereby caused death he would be guilty of culpable homicide, and does by such act cause the death of a quick¹ unborn child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

ILLUSTRATION.

A, knowing that he is likely to cause the death of a pregnant woman, does an act which, if it caused the death of the woman, would amount to culpable homicide. The woman is injured but does not die; but the death of an unborn quick child with which she is pregnant is thereby caused. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

This section punishes offences against children in the womb.

Before the Act, if the sufferer were a living person, with, if done to a quick unborn child, whose death is caused by it, constitute the offence here punished. If a person strikes a pregnant woman and thereby causes the death of her quick unborn child, he will be guilty of the offences here defined, if the blow was intended by him to obtained for her a poisonous drug. He knew the purpose for which she wanted it, and though he gave it to her for that purpose, he was unwilling that she should use it, and he did not administer it to her, or cause her to take it. She, however, took it for the purpose assigned, and died in consequence. It was held that the prisoner was not liable to be convicted on an indictment charging him with the murder of the woman.¹

¹ (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr. L.) 5.

2. 'Consent.'—The consent of the woman freely and intelligently given is allowed to mitigate the offence. If A kills Z by administering abortives to her with the knowledge that those abortives are likely to cause her death, he is guilty of culpable homicide, which will be culpable homicide, by consent, if Z agreed to run the risk, and murder, if Z did not so agree.

As to the definition of 'consent' see s. 90, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child.

(2) That the accused did an act to cause miscarriage.

(3) That he did so with that intention.

(4) That such act caused the death of the woman.

(5) (If the case comes under the second clause) that such act was done by the accused without the consent of the woman.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, with intent to cause the miscarriage of (name of the woman) did a certain act, to wit—, which caused the death of the said—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 314 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

315. Whoever before the birth of any child does any act with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive or causing it to die after its birth, and does by such act prevent that child from being born alive, or causes it to die after its birth, shall, if such act be not caused in good faith¹ for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

The offence which this section punishes is the injury to the child's life.

Any act done with the intention here mentioned which results in the destruction of the child's life, whether before or after its birth, is made punishable.

1. 'Good faith.'—See s. 52, supra.

English law.—If a person intending to procure abortion does an act which causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time, that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies in consequence of its exposure to the external world; the person who by his misconduct so brings the child into the world, and puts it thereby in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder; and the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent the death will not render it the less a murder.

¹ Fredwell, (1862) 31 L. J. (M. C.) 143. See William Gaylor, (1857) D. & B. 229

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was with child.

(2) That the accused did an act, before the child was born, calculated to prevent the child from being born alive, or to cause it to die after its birth.

(3) That such act was done by the accused with that intention.

(4) That such act was done, not in good faith, for the purpose of saving the mother's life.

(5) That the child was born dead, or died after its birth.

(6) That such death was caused by the abovementioned act of the accused.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—The charge should describe the act by which the accused intended to prevent the child being born alive, and should also state that the act was not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the mother.¹

Form.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, did an act, to wit—, to XY before the birth of her child, with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive (or causing it to die after its birth), and by that act did prevent that child from being born alive (or caused it to die after its birth) and the said act was not done in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 315 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

316. Whoever does any act under such circumstances that if he thereby caused death he would be guilty of culpable homicide, and does by such act cause the death of a quick² unborn child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Causing death of quick unborn child by act amounting to culpable homicide.

ILLUSTRATION.

A, knowing that he is likely to cause the death of a pregnant woman, does an act which, if it caused the death of the woman, would amount to culpable homicide. The woman is injured but does not die; but the death of an unborn quick child with which she is pregnant is thereby caused. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

This section punishes offences against children in the womb where the pregnancy has advanced beyond the stage of quickening, and where the death is caused after the quickening and before the birth of the child. Any act or omission of such a nature and done under such circumstances as would constitute culpable homicide, if the sufferer were a living child, whose death is caused by it, constitute an offence under this section. If a blow strikes a pregnant woman and thereby causes the death of her quick unborn child, he will be guilty of the offences here defined, if the blow was intended by him to cause the woman's death or was one which he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause it.¹

1. 'Quick.'—See s. 312, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman was quick with child.

(2) That the accused did an act to cause the death of such child.

(3) That the circumstances under which such act was done, were such as to make the accused guilty of culpable homicide, if death had been caused. (See s. 300).

(4) That such act did cause the death of the quick unborn child.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, did an act, to wit—, under circumstances, to wit—, that if you thereby caused death, you will be guilty of culpable homicide, and did by such act cause the death of a quick unborn child of XY, and you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 315 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

317. Whoever, being the father or mother¹ of a child under Exposure and abandonment of child under twelve years, by parent or person having care of it.

the age of twelve years,² or having the care of such child, shall expose or leave such child in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning such child,³ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation⁴.—This section is not intended to prevent the trial of the offender for murder or culpable homicide, as the case may be, if the child die in consequence of the exposure.⁵

COMMENT.

Object.—This section is intended to prevent the abandonment or desertion by a parent of his or her children of tender years, in such a manner, that the children, not being able to take care of themselves, may run the risk of dying or being injured. It does not apply when children are left under the care of others.²

S. 317. where a child is exposed and no death supervenes; if, h. be under s. 304.³ The offence is complete per or risk of danger arises to the child's life.

Ingredients.—The section has three essentials—

1. The person coming within its purview must be father or mother or must have the care of the child.
2. Such child must be under the age of twelve years.
3. The child must have been exposed or left in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning it.

¹ M. & M. 282.

² Felani Hariani, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.)

³ Mussumat Khairi, (1872) P. R. No. 33 of 1872; Mussumat Bhuran, (1877) P. R.

No. 6 of 1878; Mussumat Bhagan, (1878)

P. R. No. 4 of 1879.

⁴ Banni, (1879) 2 All. 349.

1. 'Whoever being the father or mother . . . or having the care of such child.'—Both are equally bound by ties of duty, and this equally whether the child be born in wedlock or be illegitimate. An infant requiring nurture, or a child of tender years, will ordinarily be in the immediate charge of the mother, the father's duty being that of providing for both the mother and the offspring. The person who has the immediate care of the child is the person contemplated. A parent who is absent, but who has provided duly for the maintenance and protection of his child, would not be criminally answerable for its abandonment by the person in whose charge he had left it. The offence consists in the desertion of the child by a person who is bound by nature to support and protect it, or who has taken on himself that duty, whether by adopting the child, or by way of contract with the parent, or in some other way.¹ Any person receiving an infant from its mother on the understanding that the mother never desired or wished to have it back again, must be regarded as a person having the care of it. The mother of a newly born child, with a view to dispose of it, gave it to her sister who carried it by a train and left it in a compartment. The child was found wrapped up and a bottle of milk was left by its side. It was held that the mother was guilty under this section and s. 109, and her sister under this section only.²

2. 'Age of twelve years.'—Twelve years is fixed as the period under which a child cannot be abandoned.

3. 'Expose or leave such child in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning such child.'—The word 'expose' means to physically put outside, so that such putting outside involves some physical risk to the person put out. Having reference to a child, it would mean putting it somewhere where it could not receive the protection necessary for its tender age. as, for instance, putting it outside the house, whereby it would be exposed to the risk of climate, wild beasts, and the like. The exposure contemplated by the Code is one by which danger to life may immediately ensue.³ But the Madras High Court has held that it is not necessary that the exposure and abandonment must be under such circumstances as to endanger the life or the health of the child. The only intention required to complete the offence is an intention of wholly abandoning the child.⁴

'Leave.'—As this word comes in immediate juxtaposition with the word 'expose' the word 'leaving' means leaving in a sense ejusdem generis as the exposure, and indicates an offence only slightly distinguishable from exposing. It cannot mean leaving in the large sense of abandonment, but must be construed in strict connection with the word 'exposure.' The narrower construction of the words 'expose or leave' is much strengthened by the insertion of those striking words 'in any place.'⁵ "In order to make the 'leaving' of a child an offence under s. 317 . . . the child must be left without protection. I think this is clear in the first place because the word 'leave' being coupled in that section with the word 'expose,' must on the principle 'noscitur ex sociis' be considered as to some extent taking its colour from the word 'expose,' and must be construed as meaning leave under circumstances more or less resembling those of an exposure. I think this is clear further from the intention which is expressly required by the section to constitute the offence. There must be an intention wholly to abandon the child: now I think an intention wholly to abandon the child means something more than an intention to go away from it and never to return to it. The phrase 'to abandon a child' in its ordinary acceptance means something more than merely to go away from it. In fact it seems to me that here again the idea of leaving without protection comes in."⁶

¹ M. & M. 284.

² Cripps, (1916) 18 Bom. L. R. 934, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 217.

³ Murchia, (1896) 18 All. 364, 366.

⁴ Boya Sunkulamma, (1890) 1 Weir 331.

⁵ Murchia, sup.

⁶ Per Fitzpatrick, J., in Mussammat Bhuran, (1877) P. R. No. 5 of 1878.

'With the intention of wholly abandoning the child.'—The gist of the offence is the exposure or leaving with intention to wholly abandon, and the manner of exposing or leaving and the consequences likely to ensue are not essential ingredients, though they may be taken into consideration in passing the sentence.¹ The legislature looks to the intention of the accused rather than to the consequences of the act done. Where a woman abandoned her newly-born child by leaving it in a place which was quite close to a village and near a public road, and the child was soon discovered, it was held that she was guilty of this offence.² A woman, mother of an illegitimate child, six months old, left it in charge of a blind woman saying she would soon return. She went away to another village and did not return; and apparently she never intended to return. It was held that she could not be convicted under this section.³ The accused, a married woman, eloped leaving her child, one and a half months old, in the house of her husband. It was held that this was not a "leaving with the intention of wholly abandoning the child."⁴

A, the mother of a child five weeks old, and B put the child into a hamper, wrapped up in a shawl and packed with shavings and cotton wool, and A, with the connivance of B, took the hamper to a railway station, paid for its carriage, and told the clerk to send it to G. She said nothing as to the contents of the hamper, which was delivered to the father of the child at G. The child died three weeks afterwards from causes not attributable to the conduct of A and B. It was held that they were guilty of abandoning and exposing the child.⁵ A woman who was living apart from her husband, and who had the actual custody of the child, brought the child, and left it at the father's door, telling him she had done so. He knowingly allowed it to remain from about 7 P.M. till 1 A.M., when it was removed by a constable, the child being then cold and stiff. It was held that though the father had not had the actual custody and possession of the child, yet, as he was by law bound to provide for it, his allowing it to remain where he did was an abandonment and exposure of the child by him, whereby its life was endangered.⁶

4. Explanation.—The explanation indicates "with much clearness the scope and purview of the section and the nature of the evil against which it sought to provide. That explanation provides for the case of injuries actually ensuing that the guilty person shall be punished for the injury so inflicted according to the circumstances under which the injury is done, i.e., for murder or culpable homicide, as the case may be."⁷ Though the death of the child may not ensue the offence may amount to an attempt punishable under s. 307. See ill. (b) to that section.

5. 'If the child die in consequence of the exposure.'—This expression means 'dies from cold or other result of exposure.' Hence, where a new-born child was exposed, and it died after, but not, except remotely, on account of its exposure, the mother was acquitted of murder and convicted under this section.⁸ Where a woman deserted her illegitimate child of ten days old, but under circumstances in which it could and, as a matter of fact, did, obtain food, and the child died after four days from natural causes, it was held that the mother could not be convicted under this section.⁹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the child is under twelve years of age.

¹ Antakle, (1901) 24 Mad. 662; Muss. Nankee, (1866) P. R. No. 23 of 1866; Mussammat Ram Das, (1870) P. R. No. 18 of 1870; Mussammat Khairo, (1872) P. R. No. 33 of 1872; Mussammat Bhagan, (1878) P. R. No. 4 of 1879.

² Kundan, (1903) 23 A. W. N. 43

³ Mirchia, (1896) 18 All 361.

⁴ Mussammat Bhuran, (1877) P. R. No. 5 of 1878; Mussammat Bhagan, Sup.

⁵ Falkingham, (1878) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 222.

⁶ White, (1871) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 311.

⁷ Per Blair, J., in Mirchia, sup., p. 366.

⁸ Khodabux Fakcer, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.)

⁹ 52.

¹⁰ Jeoni, (1893) 13 A. W. N. 100.

(4) That he so exposed or left the child with the intention of wholly abandoning it.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Concealment of birth by secret disposal of dead body.

This section deals with the secret burial of a child. If it is a foetus only then ss. 312 and 511 of the Code will apply.

The facility with which the life of an infant at its birth is extinguished, and the temptation to take it away in cases of bastard children, justify such a provision.

Bentham says that this offence ought to be punished by branding it with disgrace. It is commonly the fear of shame which is its cause ; it needs a greater shame to repress it.

Id.

3. Intention to conceal the birth of such child by such secret burying or disposal.

1. 'Secret burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body of a child.'—This includes every possible mode of disposing of the body. It is sufficient if the body is temporarily concealed with the intention of removing it elsewhere when opportunity offered.¹

This section refers to the disposal of a dead body secretly and does not meet the case of a person depositing a child alive in any place which is punishable under the last section. There must be a secret disposition of the body and an offence under this section is not committed if the body is left in a public place.² Leaving the dead body of a child in two boxes, but not locked or fastened, one being placed inside the other in a bed room, but in such a position as to attract the attention of those who daily resorted to the room was held to be not a secret disposition of the body.³ It was held similarly where the dead body of a child was placed on a dung heap quite close to a public road.¹ But where a woman threw a child down a privy²; and where a woman placed a living child in a place of concealment, and on subsequently re-visiting that place found the child dead and left it there³ it was held that this offence was committed.

³ Jane George, (1868) 11 Cox. 41.

* Abbas Et, [1911] 2 M. W. N. 379.

It should be distinctly proved that the child was dead at the time of disposal. Where a woman, delivered of a child born alive, endeavoured to conceal the birth thereof, by depositing the child while alive in a corner of a field, leaving the infant to die from exposure, which it did, and the dead body was afterwards found in the corner, it was held that she could not be convicted of secretly "disposing of the dead body of a child."⁴

No endeavour to conceal the birth of a child.—Where a woman having been delivered of a dead child left it at the place of birth which was in the compound of her house and told no one about it, she was held to be not guilty of this offence.⁵ The accused, being pregnant with an illegitimate child, went to the village jungle for purposes of nature and there, in the presence of another woman, gave birth to a child which died immediately. The dead body was left on the spot where the birth took place and was there discovered two or three days afterwards. It was held that the mere leaving of the body where the birth took place did not constitute an offence under this section as it did not amount to a secret disposal.⁶

A woman was delivered of a child, whose dead body was found at her father's house in a bed among the feathers. There was no evidence to show who placed it there, but it being proved that the woman had sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement, and had prepared child's clothes, the Court directed an acquittal on a charge of endeavouring to conceal the birth.⁷

'Child.'—Under this section it is sufficient to show that a 'child' was born and that it was sufficiently developed to have lived if born alive.⁸

Concealment of the birth of a foetus four months old is no offence⁹; but if the foetus is six¹⁰ or seven¹¹ months old its concealment is an offence. "This offence cannot be committed unless the child had arrived at the stage of maturity at the time of birth, that it might have been a living child. It is not necessary that it should have been born alive, but it must have reached a period when, but for some accidental circumstances, such as disease on the part of itself or of its mother, it might have been born alive. There is no law which compels a woman to proclaim her own want of chastity, and if she had miscarried at a time when the foetus was but a few months old, and therefore could have had no chance of life, you could not convict her upon this charge. No specific limit can be assigned to the period when the chance of life begins, but it may, perhaps, be safely assumed that under seven months the great probability is that the child would not be born alive."¹² But in a later case it has been laid down that the word 'child' is not to be limited to a child likely to live or likely to die, but that as soon as the foetus had the outward appearance of a child it is sufficient. A foetus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child was, therefore, held to be 'a child.'¹³

2. 'Whether such child die before or after its birth.'—The offence under this section is in respect of concealment of birth by a secret disposal of the dead body of a child. It is, therefore, not material when such child died.

¹ Musammal Bakhucari, (1913) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 26 of 1913.

² Elizabeth Cornwell, (1817) R. & R. 336; Ann Coghend, (1815) 1 C. & K. 623.

³ Huykes, (1850) 4 Cox 447.

⁴ Jane May, (1867) 10 Cox 449.

⁵ Amma, (1862) Unrep. Cr. C. 697.

⁶ M. Saravathi, (1905) 1 N. L. R. 89; Mt. Piara, (1883) 5 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 29, where it was held to the contrary, disented from.

⁷ Sarah Hopley, (1830) 4 C. & P. 366.

⁸ Kadha Lom Bangu, (1899) 1 Bom. L. R. 165; M. Pyo Nyo, (1905) U. B. R. (P. C.) 27.

⁹ (1869) 4 M. H. C. App. 63.

¹⁰ Karsi, (1891) Cr. R. No. 57 of 1891. Unrep. Cr. C. 727; Hewitt, (1856) 1 F. & F. 1101.

¹¹ Suana, (1881) 1 Weir 331.

¹² Per Eble, J., in Berriman, (1851) 6 Cox 354; Mt. Bilate, (1887) 2 C. P. L. R. 183.

¹³ Colmer, (1891) 2 Cox 896.

3. 'Intentionally conceals, or endeavours to conceal, the birth.'—The offence becomes complete when the birth, i.e., the delivery of a child dead or living is concealed by any means.¹ The endeavour to conceal the birth of a child by a secret disposition of the body must be by putting it into some place where it is not likely to be found. Placing it in an open box in the prisoner's bed-room, and afterwards, on enquiry by the medical man, informing him that the child was in the box where it was found, was held to be not a secret disposition.² The evidence of a secret disposition consists in the situation in which the body is placed.³ If any concealment or disposition of the dead body of a child is made, it does not matter whether it be final or temporary.⁴ Where, therefore, a woman placed the dead body of a child between a bed and a mattress,⁵ or placed it upon her bed and covered it over with a petticoat,⁶ it was held that this offence was not committed. If the mother causes the body of her child to be secretly buried with a view to conceal the birth, the offence is complete even though she may have previously allowed the birth to be known to some other persons.⁷

Abetment.—Where the accused gave her new-born illegitimate dead child to a woman with instructions to dispose of it secretly, and the latter carried out the instructions by throwing it into a river, it was held that the accused was not guilty of the substantive offence under this section, though the facts more appropriately came under the definition of abetment.⁸

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the birth of the child.

(2) That the child died either before, during, or after, its birth.

(3) That the accused buried or otherwise disposed of the dead body.

The accused should have done some act of disposal of the body after the child was dead.⁹ The dead body must be found, and identified as that of the child of which she is alleged to have been delivered.¹⁰

(4) That such burial or disposal of the body was secretly done.

(5) That the accused thereby intentionally concealed, or endeavoured to conceal, the birth of such child.

Mere proof that a woman was delivered of a child and allowed two others to take away its body is insufficient to sustain an indictment against her for concealment of birth.¹¹

Pr. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. 106. 107. 108. 109. 110. 111. 112. 113. 114. 115. 116. 117. 118. 119. 120. 121. 122. 123. 124. 125. 126. 127. 128. 129. 130. 131. 132. 133. 134. 135. 136. 137. 138. 139. 140. 141. 142. 143. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829. 830. 831. 832. 833. 834. 835. 836. 837. 838. 839. 840. 841. 842. 843. 844. 845. 846. 847. 848. 849. 850. 851. 852. 853. 854. 855. 856. 857. 858. 859. 860. 861. 862. 863. 864. 865. 866. 867. 868. 869. 870. 871. 872. 873. 874. 875. 876. 877. 878. 879. 880. 881. 882. 883. 884. 885. 886. 887. 888. 889. 890. 891. 892. 893. 894. 895. 896. 897. 898. 899. 900. 901. 902. 903. 904. 905. 906. 907. 908. 909. 910. 911. 912. 913. 914. 915. 916. 917. 918. 919. 920. 921. 922. 923. 924. 925. 926. 927. 928. 929. 930. 931. 932. 933. 934. 935. 936. 937. 938. 939. 940. 941. 942. 943. 944. 945. 946. 947. 948. 949. 950. 951. 952. 953. 954. 955. 956. 957. 958. 959. 960. 961. 962. 963. 964. 965. 966. 967. 968. 969. 970. 971. 972. 973. 974. 975. 976. 977. 978. 979. 980. 981. 982. 983. 984. 985. 986. 987. 988. 989. 990. 991. 992. 993. 994. 995. 996. 997. 998. 999. 1000.

of th er but must be convicted under hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, by secretly burying (if any other mode adopted specify that) —

¹ Lalbu, (1898) Cr. R. No. 15 of 1898, Unrep. Cr. C. 961; M. Pyo Nyo, (1905) U.B.R. (P.C.) 27.
² Sleep, (1864) 9 Cox 559.
³ Elizabeth Brown, (1870) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 244.
⁴ Farnham, (1845) 1 Cox 349.
⁵ Sarah Goldthorpe, (1841) Car. & M. 335; 2 Moody 244; Jane Perry, (1855) 6 Cox 531.

⁶ Rosenberg, (1906) 70 J. P. 261.
⁷ Frances Douglas, (1836) 1 Moody Cr. C. 480.
⁸ Bay, (1895) Cr. R. No. 40 of 1895, Unrep. Cr. C. 775.
⁹ Harriett Turner, (1839) 8 C. & P. 755.
¹⁰ Mary Williams, (1871) 11 Cox 684.
¹¹ Emma Bate, (1871) 11 Cox 686.
¹² Subbalakshmi Ammal, (1900) 1 Weir 334.

section and s. 321.¹ Where the accused beat and kicked the deceased whereby the deceased's spleen, which was in a diseased condition, was ruptured and he died,² where the accused kicked a punkha-puller who had an enlarged spleen which was not known to the accused, and death ensued,³ where the accused caused the death of another person by throwing a piece of brick at him which struck him in the region of the spleen and ruptured it, the spleen being diseased,⁴ it was held that as the accused had not the intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the offence committed was that of voluntarily causing hurt.

Hair-pulling.—Pulling a woman by the hair is held to be this offence.⁵

320. The following kinds of hurt only are designated as Grievous hurt. "grievous":—

First.—Emasculation.¹

Secondly.—Permanent privation of the sight of either eye.

Thirdly.—Permanent privation of the hearing of either ear.

Fourthly.—Privation of any member or joint.

Fifthly.—Destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of any member or joint.

Sixthly.—Permanent disfiguration² of the head or face.

Seventhly.—Fracture or dislocation³ of a bone or tooth.

Eighthly.—Any hurt which endangers life⁴ or which causes the sufferer to be, during the space of twenty days, in severe bodily pain, or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits⁵.

COMMENT.

The authors of the Code observe: "We have found it very difficult to draw a line between those bodily hurts which are serious and those which are slight. To draw such a line with perfect accuracy is, indeed, absolutely impossible; but it is far better that such a line should be drawn, though rudely, than that offences some of which approach in enormity to murder, while others are little more than frolics which a good-natured man would hardly resent, should be classed together.

"We have, therefore, designated certain kinds of hurt as grievous. We have given this name to emasculation, etc., etc., to the fracture and to the dislocation of bones. Thus far we proceed on sure ground. But a more difficult task remains. Some hurts which are not, like those kinds of hurt which we have just mentioned, distinguished by a broad and obvious line from slight hurts, may nevertheless be most serious. A wound, for example, which neither emasculates the sufferer, nor blinds him, nor destroys his hearing, nor deprives him of a member or a joint, nor permanently deprives him of the use of a member or a joint, nor disfigures his countenance, nor breaks his bones, nor dislocates them, may yet cause intense pain, prolonged disease, lasting injury to the constitution. It is evidently desirable that the law should make a distinction between such a wound, and a scratch which is healed with a little sticking plaster. A beating, again, which does not maim the sufferer or break his bones, may be so cruel as to bring him to the point of death. Such a beating, it is clear, ought not to be

¹ Bysagoo Noshyo, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) of 1872.

² Punchanun Tantee, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

³ Phimmi Ramudu, (1881) Weir, 3rd

Edn., 162; Nga Kyan, (1893) 1 U. B. R.

(1892—1896), 217.

⁴ Bauraji, (1872) Unrep. Cr. C. 63, C. R.

⁵ Fox, (1879) 2 All. 522; Ramdayal, (1891)

5 C. P. L. R. 69.

⁶ Randhir Singh, (1881) 3 All. 597.

⁷ (1883) Weir, 3rd Edn., 190.

confounded with a bruise, which requires only to be bathed with vinegar, and of which the traces disappear in a day."¹

This section enumerates eight kinds of hurt as grievous. The term "maim" in the English criminal law will include 'hurt.'

To make out the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, there must be some specific hurt, voluntarily inflicted, and coming within some of the eight kinds enumerated in this section.²

1. 'Emasculation.'—The term 'emasculation' means the depriving of a person of masculine vigour, castration. Injury to the scrotum would render a man impotent. A person emasculating himself cannot be convicted under this section or under s. 309.³ A person causing grievous hurt upon his own self does not come within the purview of this section.

2. 'Disfigure.'—The word 'disfigure' in this section, means to do a man some external injury which detracts from his personal appearance, but does not weaken him as the cutting off of a man's nose or ears.⁴ Where a girl's cheeks were branded with a red-hot iron, which left scars of a permanent character, it was held that the disfigurement contemplated by this section was caused.⁵

3. 'Fracture or dislocation of a bone'—The fracture or dislocation of a bone is considered grievous because it causes great pain and suffering to the injured person. The bone fractured may be rejoined or the bone dislocated may be re-set, and this is immaterial so far as the offence is concerned.

Where the accused threw his wife from a window about six feet high, but the fall was broken by a weather board fixed just below it and resulted in the fracture of the knee pan and in several small wounds, it was held that the offence committed was grievous hurt.⁶ Where the result of a joint attack by several persons on one party was fracture of the arm of the party assaulted, the offence committed was held to be grievous hurt and not assault.⁷

4. 'Any hurt which endangers life'—These words cannot apply to cases in which life was not merely endangered but actually taken away.⁸

5. 'Causes the sufferer to be during the space of twenty days, in severe bodily pain, etc.'—The authors of the Code say: "After long consideration we have determined to give the name grievous bodily hurt to all hurt which causes the sufferer to be in pain, diseased or unable to pursue his ordinary avocations, during the space of twenty days. . . It appears to us that the length of time during which a sufferer is in pain, diseased or incapacitated from pursuing his ordinary avocations, though, a defective criterion of the severity of a hurt, is still the best criterion that has ever been devised. It is a criterion which may, we think, with propriety be employed not merely in cases where violence has been used, but in cases where hurt has been caused without any assault, as by the administration of drugs, the setting of traps, the digging of pit-falls, the placing of ropes across a road. . . In apportioning the punishment, we take into consideration both the extent of the hurt and the intention of the offender."⁹

The Commissioners observe: "We cannot but think that there is reason in the exceptions taken to estimating the severity of a hurt by the time during which the sufferer is unable to follow his ordinary pursuits, as a rule which will operate unequally. The man who lives by daily labour suffers far more by being kept from his work for twenty days, than he who has independent means, and whose ordinary pursuits may be intermitted for that time without causing him any material privation. Again an injury to the right hand may in the case of a clerk keep

¹ Note M, pp. 151, 152

² Budri Roy, (1875) 23 W. R. (Cr.) 65.

³ Madho Singh, (1878) P. R. No. 22 of 1878.

⁴ 1st Rep. s. 373.

⁵ Anta bin Dadoba, (1863) 1 B. H. C. 101.

⁶ Jiva, (1891) Unrep. Cr. C. 558.

⁷ Ramtahul Sing, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 12.

⁸ Marimuthu, [1923] M. W. N. 796, 18 L. W. 183.

⁹ Note M, pp. 152, 153.

him from his work for twenty days, which if it happened to the left hand would be of no consequence. An injury to the foot may prevent one man from following his business, in which walking is necessary, which if it happened to another man in a sedentary employment would not interrupt him at all. The proposed criterion is therefore unsatisfactory, but some criterion is necessary and it will be difficult to devise a better."¹ The mere fact that a man has been in hospital for twenty days is not sufficient, it must be proved that during that time he was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.² An injured man may be quite capable of following his ordinary pursuits long before twenty days are over, and yet for the sake of permanent recovery or greater ease or comfort be willing to remain as a convalescent in a hospital, especially if he is fed at the public expense.³ A disability for twenty days constitutes grievous hurt; if it continues for fifteen days, then the offence is hurt.⁴

Where a man was so much injured that he had to go to hospital, but left it perfectly cured on the twentieth day, it was held that that day would count as one of the twenty days during which he was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.⁵ Where the accused caused hurt to a woman, who remained in a hospital only for seventeen days, out of which she was in danger for three days, it was held that he had caused grievous hurt.⁶

Acts neither intended nor likely to cause death may amount to grievous hurt even though death is caused. —Where there is no intention to cause death or no knowledge that death is likely to be caused from the harm inflicted, and death is caused, the accused would be guilty of hurt or grievous hurt according to the seriousness of the injury, but not of culpable homicide. Where a man receives only one blow on the head and dies, and there is no evidence to show which of the two persons attacking him gave that blow, neither of the two can be convicted under s. 304 but both of them can be convicted of an offence under s. 325.⁷ Three men armed with sticks attacked an unarmed man and inflicted injuries which resulted shortly afterwards in his death. The accused intended to give a thrashing to the deceased but did not intend to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as they knew was likely to cause death, it was held that they were guilty of an offence under s. 326.⁸ The accused who was beaten by the deceased on the previous day came across the deceased by chance and gave him a blow on the back of the head with a hockey stick which he had in his hand at the time and ran away. The blow did not fell the deceased. It was held that the offence committed by the accused was grievous hurt because it would not be safe to hold that he intended to do more than cause grievous hurt.⁹

For further cases on the point see pp 690, 691.

Diseased spleen.—Where the accused pulling the deceased out of a cot, kicked him, and struck him on the side or on the ribs with a stick, whereby the deceased, whose spleen was diseased, died, it was held that he had committed the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.¹⁰

Blow aimed at one person falling upon another.—The accused struck a woman, carrying an infant in her arms, violently over her head and shoulders. One of the blows fell on the child's head, causing death. It was held that the

¹ First Rep., s. 374.

² Vasta Chela, (1894) 19 Bom. 247; Nga Ya Baw, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 221.

³ Vasta Chela, sup.

⁴ Bishnooram Surma, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 9.

⁵ Sheikh Bahadur, (1862) 2nd Mad. Sess.

⁶ Bansoo Rannah, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 29.

⁷ Agra, (1914) P. R. No. 37 of 1914; Jahana, (1916) P. L. R. No. 109 of 1918;

Dattu Nana Pawar, (1917) 19 Bom. J. R. 902.

⁸ 4 Bom. Cr. C. 157; Jhandu, (1924) 6 L. L. J. 268; Datta Ram, (1924) 1 L. C. 297, 6 L. L. J. 317; Dalip Singh, (1924) 7 L. L. J. 44.

⁹ Ramza, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 533.

¹⁰ Ohulam Jilani, (1925) 2 L. C. 37, 26

P. L. R. 430.

¹¹ O'Brien, (1810) 2 All. 760; Ida Beg, (1881) 3 All. 776; Mahabir, (1921) 19 A. L. J. R. 295.

accused committed hurt on the infant under circumstances of sufficient aggravation to bring the offence within the definition of grievous hurt.¹

In the course of an affray severe injuries were inflicted and suffered by both sides. 'On the side of the complainants there was a girl of tender years who was sitting very close to her father and she received a severe blow on the head which subsequently resulted in her death. It was held that the accused were guilty of causing grievous hurt.²

In the course of an altercation between the accused and the complainant on a dark night, the former aimed a blow with his stick at the head of the latter. To ward off the blow, the complainant's wife, who had a child on her arm, intervened. The blow missed its aim, but fell on the head of the child causing severe injuries, from the effects of which it died. The accused was convicted of causing grievous hurt. It was held that, inasmuch as the blow, if it had reached the complainant, would have caused simple hurt, the accused was guilty of simple hurt only.³

Death caused in the course of mutual stone-throwing is grievous hurt.—As the result of a longstanding enmity and after a fresh altercation, two parties encountered and hurled stones at each other. A member of one of the parties was struck by a stone of considerable weight and thrown with a good deal of violence, which ruptured his liver and immediately caused his death. As he fell down and lay on the ground, the accused, a man from the other party, caused a serious wound in his leg with a sword. It was held that the accused was not guilty of murder, as there could be no intention to kill, for the stone-throwing by his party was resorted to by way of defence to a similar act by the other party and inflicting grievous hurt⁴

Presence of a person properly armed along with the accused.—D was killed by one blow on his head with a sharp weapon. It was found that the accused B and M with others armed with gandas had invaded the compound where D was sleeping, that they immediately assaulted D and that M struck him in the head and killed him. The intention of the accused was to insult and disgrace one Musammatt K. M was held guilty under s. 302; but as both the accused had armed

321. Whoever does any act with intention of thereby causing hurt to any person, or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person, and does thereby cause hurt to any person, is said "voluntarily to cause hurt."

322. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt, if the hurt which he intends to cause or knows himself to be likely to cause is grievous hurt, and if the hurt which he causes is grievous hurt, is said "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt."

¹ Sakae Tac, (1878) 3 Cal. 623.

² Kurr, (1918) 16 A. L. J. R. 615.

³ Chatur Natta, (1919) 21 Bom. L. R. 1101, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 152.

⁴ Datta Nana Pudar, (1917) 19 Bom. L. R. 1002, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 157.

⁵ Eatol Singh, (1919) P. R. No. 24 of 1919.

Explanation.—A person is not said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt except when he both causes grievous hurt, and intends or knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. But he is said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt if, intending or knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt of one kind, he actually causes grievous hurt of another kind.

ILLUSTRATION.

A, intending or knowing himself to be likely permanently to disfigure Z's face, gives Z a blow which does not permanently disfigure Z's face, but which causes Z to suffer severe bodily pain for the space of twenty days. A has voluntarily caused grievous hurt.

COMMENT.

The Law Commissioners observe: The Judge "is not to trouble himself with seeking for direct proof of what the offender thought was likely to happen, but is to infer it from the nature of his act, taking him to have intended grievous hurt . . . to have contemplated grievous hurt as likely to occur, when he did . . . grievous hurt, and the more certainly . . . grievous enmity against the . . . hing more than simple hurt . . . hen although grievous hurt . . . to convict the offender of . . . may unexpectedly . . . simple hurt only . . . judging that grievous hurt . . . according to Clause 317 (this section) a person can . . . only when the result and the intention correspond, . . . suffice . . . was intended to cause grievous hurt, though . . . of a . . . instruction.

A Magistrate dealing with . . . must consider and decide not only whether grievous hurt . . . has been caused whether the accused intended or knew himself to be likely . . . cause grievous hurt. If he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause simple hurt only, he cannot be convicted under s. 325.²

323. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section

Punishment for voluntarily causing hurt.

324. voluntarily causes hurt,¹ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand ru with both.

MEN

This is a general s.
Sections 324, 327, 328, 329 aggravated circumstance—
when there are certain min

1. . . ntarily cause
complaina held that a laintant's d representa

e punis
l with , 336
tanc 321 the his t
as luntarily causing hurt.

nce done under certain vide nishment

g ion.
f Court came not ourt

¹ Fr.
² Np.

has dissented from this view and has laid down that criminal proceedings once legally instituted, whether upon a complaint or otherwise, do not terminate or abate merely by reason of the death of the complainant or the person injured. Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act has no application to a criminal prosecution and there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code in support of the proposition that the death of the person injured or of the complainant, of itself causes the proceedings to abate. It is a mistake to speak of an offence as a purely personal one.¹ The Madras and Allahabad High Courts have also held that a criminal prosecution does not abate by reason of the death of the person injured.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused by his act caused bodily pain, disease, or infirmity to the complainant.

(2) That he did such act intentionally or with a knowledge that it would cause the hurt, etc.

The intent to cause hurt may be presumed from the nature of the hurt caused and the circumstances under which it was caused.³

(3) That such hurt, etc., was caused without provocation.

Autofols acquit.—A person tried and acquitted on a charge of using criminal force under s. 352 (which includes the offence of battery) cannot be tried, in respect of the same criminal matter, on a charge of hurt.⁵

Private defence.—In cases of hurt, the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Summary trial.

A conviction under s. 160 on a prosecution initiated by the police would be no bar to a subsequent trial under this section on a complaint laid by the party injured.⁷

Committal.—Where death is caused, Magistrates should be careful not to take murder or culpable clear that there is

Punishment.—The act for which an accused person must be punished is the hurt which he intended to cause, or might be reasonably held likely to cause, by the act done, and not an unfortunate and entirely unforeseen result of that act.⁸ Where different persons are injured, grievous hurt being caused in one case and simple hurt in others, it is competent for the Court to impose separate and accumulative sentences.¹⁰

Direction to Magistrates.—The Punjab Rule.—It has come to notice that Magistrates are apt to confound ss. 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code, and to issue process and convict under the former section in cases in which the complaint

¹ Hazara Singh, (1920) 2 Lah. 27.

² Muhammad Ibrahim v. Shaik Darood, (1920) 44 Mad. 417; Musa, (1921) 22 A.L.J.R. 520.

³ Nga Ba Gyan, (1911) 1 U. B. R. 105.

⁴ Dani, (1920) 3 U. P. L. R. (L.) 11.

⁵ Kaplan v. G. M. Smith, (1871) 16 W. R.

(Cr.) 3.

⁶ Sohn, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 59.

⁷ Ram Sukh, (1924) 47 All. 284.

⁸ (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr. Cr.) 7.

⁹ Kelly, (1897) P. R. No. 11 of 1897.

¹⁰ Baleshar, (1915) 37 All. 628.

is laid under s. 323, and the evidence for the prosecution establishes the fact of violence having been actually used.¹

In some cases this is possibly done purposely, because charges under s. 352 are triable as summons cases, whereas a charge under s. 323 must be tried as a warrant case. The procedure in the former class of cases is, no doubt, easier to the Magistrate; but it is less favourable to the accused, for in warrant cases the Magistrate is bound to call upon the accused for his defence, unless he discharges him (see ss. 253 to 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure), while in a summons case the accused is primarily responsible for the production of his evidence on the day fixed for hearing (s. 214).

It is accordingly pointed out that s. 352 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to cases where the offender uses criminal force which actually causes hurt to the person against whom it is displayed, and that such cases fall under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, nt—, voluntarily caused hurt to AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

324. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 334,

Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means.

voluntarily¹ causes hurt by means of any instrument for shooting, stabbing or cutting, or any instrument, which, used as a weapon² of offence, is likely to cause death, or by means of fire or any heated substance, or by means of any poison³ or any corrosive substance,⁴ or by means of any explosive substance or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, to swallow, or to receive into the blood, or by means of any animal,⁵ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

Object.—The object of the section is to make simple hurt more grave and liable to a more severe punishment where it has the "differentia" of one of the modes of infliction described in the section.³

The authors of the Code say: "Bodily hurt may be inflicted by means the use of which generally indicates great malignity. A blow with the fist may cause as much pain, and produce as lasting injury, as laceration with a knife, or branding with a hot iron. But it will scarcely be disputed that, in the vast majority of cases, the offender who has used a knife or a hot iron for the purpose of wreaking his hatred is a far worse and more dangerous member of society than he who has only used his fist. It appears to us that many hurts which would not, according to our classification, be designated as grievous, ought yet, on account of the mode in which they are inflicted, to be punished more severely than many grievous hurts."⁴

1. 'Voluntarily.'—See s. 39, supra.

2. 'Weapon.'—It is not necessary that the manner of use of the weapon must be such as is likely to cause death. Such an element would compose a crime

¹ P. C. C. R. & O., Vol. II, No. 32, p. 201.

² Ibid., p. 202.

³ (1872) 7 M. H. C. App. 11.

⁴ Note 3I, pp. 153, 154.

of a wholly different character.¹ It is merely the nature of instrument that should be taken into consideration.² Where the accused fired a pistol into a group of persons among whom was A, without aiming at A or anyone in particular, but intending generally to do grievous bodily harm, and wounded A, it was held that he had committed this offence.³

3. 'Poison.'—Poison is that which when administered is injurious to health or life.⁴ If the thing administered is a recognized poison, the offence may be committed, though the quantity given is so small as to be incapable of doing harm.⁵ A person who administers that which is a poison is guilty, although by ignorance or mistake he happens to administer it in a form which renders it innocuous. Where, therefore, the accused, with intent to kill, administered to a child nine weeks old two poisonous berries but the child did not die because the poisonous property of berries resided in the kernel which was enclosed in a pod so hard that it could not be digested by a child of that age, it was held that he was guilty of the offence of administering poison with intent to kill.⁶ Under the Code this will amount to attempt to murder.

4. 'Corrosive substance.'—The term "corrosive substance" means any substance which irritates the system, e.g., sulphuric acid, corrosive sublimate, etc.

5. 'Animal.'—See s. 47, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused by his act bodily pain, disease, or infirmity to the complainant.

(2) That he did such act intentionally or with a knowledge that it would cause the hurt, etc.

(3) That it was unprovoked.

(4) That the accused caused it by means of an instrument for shooting, stabbing or cutting; or by an instrument, used as a weapon likely to cause death; or by means of fire, etc.; or by means of any poison, etc.; or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, etc., or by means of any animal.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which a prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Alternative charges.—Where the prisoners were charged under s. 148 of the Indian Penal Code of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and also under s. 324 of voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons, it was held that they should have been sentenced only under one or other of these sections, the charges being, properly speaking, only alternative charges.⁷

Punishment: Lower Burma Rule.—Deterrent sentences must be passed in cases in which hurt is caused by a knife or other deadly weapon.⁸

See the Frontier Crimes Regulation,⁹ ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2); and the Criminal Tribes Act¹⁰, s. 64.

¹ (1872) 7 M. H. C. App. 11.

² Nga Po Thit, (1899) 1 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 311.

³ Fretwell, (1864) 9 Cox 471.

⁴ Per Lord Coleridge, C. J., in Cramp, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 307, 309.

⁵ Per Field J. in ibid pp. 309, 310.

⁶

⁷

⁸

⁹ Reg. III of 1901.

¹⁰ Act II of 1897.

(4) That such grievous hurt was caused by means of an instrument for shooting, etc., or by means of any instrument which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death; or by means of fire, etc., or by means of any poison, etc., or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, etc., or by means of any animal.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge under ss. 326 and 149, but conviction under s. 326 alone.—A full bench of the Madras High Court has held, differing from the Calcutta High Court, that when a charge has been framed under ss. 326 and 149, a conviction under s. 326 is not necessarily bad. Whether the conviction is bad or not depends upon whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge.¹

Evidence of a medical man is necessary.—In all cases of voluntarily causing grievous hurt the evidence of the medical officer who examined and attended on the person to whom the hurt was caused should, if obtainable without unreasonable expense or delay, invariably be taken.²

Committal and punishment.—The accused was tried by a Presidency Magistrate on a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt by cutting off with a penknife the whole of the soft part of her nose and a portion of her upper lip, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The High Court, quashing the conviction and sentence, held that the offence of which the prisoner was convicted being one punishable with transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for ten years, the Magistrate ought to have committed the accused for trial to the High Court. The case was afterwards committed to the Court of Session and the accused was sentenced to eight years' rigorous imprisonment.³ The amount of punishment for cutting off a wife's nose for intriguing with another man depends on the time of the commission of the grievous hurt, whether at the instant, or long after the husband found himself dishonoured.⁴ See the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 1.

Lower Burma Rule.—The attention of Magistrates is called to the necessity of passing really deterrent sentences in cases in which hurt is caused by a knife or other deadly weapon. The use of knives on the slightest provocation, and often without any provocation at all, is far too frequent in this province. The most likely method of suppressing this dangerous practice is to make the punishment severe and certain. Many cases of this kind have come to the notice of the Judges in which inadequate sentences have been passed.⁵

Where an accused is sent up for trial under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, for causing grievous hurt with a deadly weapon, a reference should always be made to the District Magistrate, in order that he may, if he thinks fit, try the case in exercise of his special powers. Many cases of this kind are hardly distinguishable from attempts to murder, punishable under s. 307 of the Penal Code, and Magistrates, other than the District Magistrate, can rarely impose a sufficiently severe sentence in these cases.⁶

Charge.—See the remarks under the heading 'Charge' in s. 324, supra.

327. Whoever voluntarily¹ causes hurt for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer, or from any person interested in the sufferer,² any property or valuable security,³ or of constraining⁴ the sufferer or any person interested in such sufferer to do anything which is illegal⁵ or which may facilitate Voluntarily causing hurt to extort property, or to constrain to an illegal act.

¹ Theethumalai Goundar, (1924) 47 Mad.

² 746, F. R.

³ Nga Chet, (1884) S. J. L. B. 292.

⁴ Abdul Rahiman, (1891) 16 Bom. 580

⁵ Sulamat Hussain, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 17.

⁶ L. B. C. M., Vol. 1, s. 327, p. 89.

⁷ Ibid, s. 329, p. 89.

the commission of an offence,⁶ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

of extorting, or compelling, against the sufferer's consent, the delivery of property, notwithstanding that the offender may have a valid claim or title to such property.

1. 'Voluntarily.'—See s. 39, supra.

2. 'Person interested in the sufferer.'—Any tie of blood relationship, marriage service, or even friendship, seems sufficient. The Court must ascertain for what purpose the suffering was caused, whether it was directed wholly at the sufferer or at another through him.¹

3. 'Valuable security.'—See s. 30, supra.

4. 'Constraining.'—This word seems to have been inserted with a view to make this section applicable to all cases where, if 'extortion' could not be proved, a compelling or constraining against the sufferer's consent would equally be an offence.

5. 'Illegal.'—See s. 44, supra.

6. 'Offence.'—The word 'offence' here denotes a thing punishable under this Code or under any special or local law (s. 40).

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused hurt.²

(2) That the accused caused such hurt in order to extort from the sufferer, or person interested in him, some property or valuable security; or

That the accused caused such hurt in order to constrain the sufferer, or a person interested in him, to do something illegal, or to facilitate the commission of an offence.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session—Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused hurt to AB for the purpose of extorting from the said AB [or from a certain person interested in the said AB], to wit—, a certain property, to wit—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 327 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—See the Criminal Tribes Act (II of 1897), s. 6, and the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4.

328. Whoever administers to or causes to be taken by¹ any person² any poison or any stupefying, intoxicating or unwholesome drug, or other thing³ with intent to cause hurt to such person, or with intent to commit or to facilitate the commission of an offence⁴ or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Causing hurt by means of poison, etc., with intent to commit an offence.

¹ M. & M. 291.

² Ides s. 323, sup.

COMMENT.

This section is merely an extension of the provisions of s. 324. Under s. 324 actual causing of hurt is essential.

The offence under this section is complete even if no hurt is caused to the person to whom the poison or any other stupefying, intoxicating, or unwholesome drug is administered.

1. 'Administers to or causes to be taken by.'—The word 'administers' and the expression 'causes to be taken' are used to include every possible case of taking an unwholesome drug. Mere procuring or supplying a poisonous drug at the instigation of a person who wishes to take it does not amount to the offence of administering it.¹ At the same time to constitute administering, it is not necessary that the poison should be delivered by the hand of the party.² If a servant put poison into a coffee-pot which contains coffee, and, when her mistress comes down to breakfast, the servant tells the mistress that she has put the coffee-pot there for her breakfast, and the mistress drinks the poisoned coffee, this will amount to 'administering' poison.

Putting poison in a place where it is likely to be found and taken is an attempt to administer. Where the accused purchased some "salts of sorrel" and put it in the complainant's sugar basin, mixing it with sugar, and the complainant subsequently put some of the mixture into his tea, but on tasting it discovered that there was something wrong, and on investigation poison was discovered, it was held that this constituted an attempt to administer poison.³

One E being pregnant applied to the accused to get her something to procure miscarriage, and that the accused procured a drug and gave it to the deceased. The drug was taken by E but not in the presence of the accused, and it procured miscarriage. It was held that the accused was guilty of administering and causing to be taken certain poison with intent to procure miscarriage.⁴

Where a deleterious drug is administered, an offence is committed under this section although life is not endangered.⁵ Thus, where a man administered the juice of some leaves to some villagers by way of ordeal and some of them showed symptoms of poison⁶; and where the accused administered powder of dhatura to a woman and robbed her of her jewellery while she was senseless,⁷ this offence was held to have been committed. Where, for the purpose of facilitating robbery, dhatura was administered by two persons to certain travellers, in consequence of which one of the travellers died and others were made seriously ill, it was held that, in respect of the traveller who died, the offence committed was that punishable under s. 325, and, in respect of the travellers who did not die, the offence committed was that under this section.⁸ But in a subsequent case the same Court, where dhatura was administered with the object of facilitating robbery in such quantity that the person to whom it was given died in the course of a few hours, convicted the accused of murder under s. 302.⁹

As dhatura can both be and is in practice frequently used by robbers without fatal results, it is necessary to show against a person accused of a purpose to commit robbery with murder something more than that he proposed to administer, or did on a particular occasion administer, dhatura in order to effect his purpose of robbery: though it may not be absolutely necessary to show that on any occasion culpable homicide amounting to murder was in fact committed.¹⁰

¹ Francis Fretwell, (1862) L. & C. 161, 31 L. J. (M. C.) 145.

² Hannah Harley, (1830) 4 C. & P. 349.

³ Dale, (1852) 6 Cox 14.

⁴ Harriet Wilson, (1839) D. & B. 127; Mary Farrow, (1837) D. & B. 164.

⁵ Joggopal, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 4.

⁶ Dasi Pitchigadu, (1853) 1 Weir 335.

⁷ Nanjundappa Weir, 3rd Edn., 107.

⁸ Bhagwan Din, (1904) 20 All. 568.

⁹ Kutub, (1909) 31 All. 148.

¹⁰ Pira, (1881) P. R. No. 23 of 1881.

Where the accused administered a drug to a female to excite her sexual passion and desire, in order that he may have sexual connection with her, it was held that he had administered an unwholesome drug.¹

2. 'Any person.'—It is not necessary that the hurt should be caused to any particular person intended, or that the person injured or likely to be injured should have been previously known. Where the accused mixed milk bush juice in his toddy pots, knowing that if drunk by a person it would cause injury, with the intention of detecting an unknown thief who was always in the habit of stealing his toddy, and the toddy was drunk by some soldiers, who purchased it from an unknown vendor, it was held that he was guilty under this section.²

3. 'Or other thing.'—These words must be referred to the preceding words and be taken to mean "unwholesome or other thing" and not other thing simply.³

4. 'With intent to cause hurt... or to facilitate the commission of an offence.'—The word 'offence' here denotes a thing punishable under this Code or under any special or local law (s. 40). If the poison or unwholesome drug is administered not with the intention of causing hurt or to commit an offence, the accused cannot be convicted under this section. Accused, a boy of sixteen years of age, having to cause hurt to any person, but, as a result of the administration of the drug, the girl was thrown into a delirium for some time with the possible risk of falling into a coma. It was held that the offence did not fall within this section but the accused must be deemed to have had knowledge that the administering of the drug was likely to cause hurt within the meaning of s. 319.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the substance in question is a poison, or any stupefying, intoxicating, or unwholesome drug, etc.

(2) That the accused administered or caused the complainant to take such substance

(3) That he did as above with intent to cause hurt or knowing it to be likely that he would thereby cause hurt; or that the accused intended to commit or facilitate the commission of an offence.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Guilt rule.—Sessions Judges and Magistrates will, however, bear in mind that a sentence of transportation for life cannot be inflicted under s. 328, Indian Penal Code, even on a second or third conviction, because s. 75 does not apply to offences punishable under Chapter XVI, Indian Penal Code, in which s. 328 is placed. If, however, the offender not only causes, or attempts to cause, hurt by poisoning, in order to commit theft but afterwards commits theft on his victim, thus completing the offence of robbery, he may be dealt with under Chapter XVII, ss. 392 and 394; and in that case may be transported for life under ss. 322, 75, s. 394, or ss. 394, 75, Indian Penal Code, if he be convicted by the Court of Session, not by the Deputy Commissioner.⁵

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, administered to (or caused to be taken by) AB a certain poison (or a certain stupefying, intoxicating or

¹ Wallace, (1861) 31 L. J. (M. C.) 72, 9
Cox 70.

² Pharmaz Day, (1865) 5 R. H. C. (Cr. C.) 58

³ Jesse Glover, (1864) 1 W. P. (Cr.) 7

⁴ Anna Ery, (1923) 46 All. 77.

⁵ O. C. D., s. 64.

unwholesome drug), to wit—, with intent to cause, (or knowing it to be likely that you will thereby cause) hurt to the said AB (or with intent to commit or facilitate the commission of the offence of—upon the said AB), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 328 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge:

Punishment.—See the Criminal Tribes Act, 1897, s. 6; the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

329. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer or from any person interested in the sufferer, any property or valuable security, or of constraining the sufferer or any person interested in such sufferer to do anything that is illegal or which may facilitate the commission of an offence, shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT;

See Comment on s. 327, supra. This section is similar to that section, the only difference being that the hurt caused under it is grievous.

PRACTICE;

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused grievous hurt.¹

(2) That the accused caused such grievous hurt in order to extort from the sufferer, or a person interested in him, some property or valuable security; or

That the accused caused such grievous hurt in order to constrain the sufferer, or a person interested in him, to do something illegal, or to facilitate the commission of an offence.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not _ bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—The charge should be in the same form as that under s. 327, except that the expression 'grievous hurt' should be substituted for 'hurt.'

330. Whoever voluntarily¹ causes hurt, for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer² any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence³ or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining⁴ the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer to restore or cause the restoration of any property or valuable security⁵ or to satisfy any claim or demand,⁶ or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, a police-officer, tortures Z in order to induce Z to confess that he committed a crime. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

¹ Vide s. 325, sup.

⁷ Latifkhan, (1895) 20 Bom. 394.

PRACTICE;

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused hurt.¹

(2) That the accused caused such hurt in order to extort from the sufferer, or a person interested in him, a confession, or some information.²

(3) That such confession or information was required, as possibly leading to the detection of an offence, or of some misconduct.

Or prove—

(1) As above.

(2) That the accused caused such hurt in order to constrain the sufferer, or a person interested in him, to restore or to cause the restoration of some property, or valuable security, etc.

There must be immediate connection between the assault and the restoration of property. The intention of the person causing the assault must be proved to be to obtain from the person assaulted a confession of the restoration of property.³

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows.—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused hurt to AB for the purpose of extorting from the said AB (or from a certain person interested in the said AB, to wit—) a certain confession (or information) to wit—, which might lead to the detection of the offence of—(specify the person in respect of whom, and the place where, the offence was committed), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 330 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

331.

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt to extort confession or to compel restoration of property.

Whoever voluntarily causes hurt for the purpose of extorting from any person or any person interested in the sufferer any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer to restore or to cause the restoration of any property or valuable security, or to satisfy any claim or demand or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

... to the preceding...

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as required for s. 330, showing that the hurt caused was grievous hurt.⁴

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

¹ Vide s. 323, sup.

² Baboo Moondoo, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 23.

³ Satyra Deva Swami, (1918) 5 P. L. W. 109.

⁴ Vide s. 325, sup.

Charge.—See section 330. In the charge as given under that section substitute 'grievous hurt' for 'hurt.'

332. Whoever voluntarily¹ causes hurt to any person being a public servant² in the discharge of his duty as such public servant,³ or with intent to prevent or deter that person or any other public servant from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Voluntarily causing hurt to deter public servant from his duty.

COMMENT:

The protection given by this section is not confined to public servants, but will also extend to persons acting in good faith under their directions. The public servant must be acting in the discharge of his duty as such public servant. If he was acting for his own private work no offence would be committed.¹

This section resembles s. 353. Under it there is causing of hurt to the public servant: under s. 353 there is assault or criminal force for the same purpose.

1. 'Voluntarily.'—See s. 39, supra.

2. 'Public servant.'—See s. 31, supra.

3. 'In the discharge of his duty as such public servant.'—This expression means in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and does not cover an act done by him in good faith under colour of his office.² "A warrant," for example, "is handed to a Police officer for the arrest of a particular person. That warrant on the face of it does not direct him to break open premises, for instance, in order to effect the arrest, and yet it may be necessary for the officer in discharge of his duty in arresting the accused under the warrant to break into the accused's house, or to do some other act without the doing of which the warrant could not be executed. Such acts would be properly described as done or attempted to be done by the Police officer in the lawful discharge of his duty. If it was unnecessary to do such an act and it was done, the act would not be done by the Police officer in the lawful discharge of his duty, and therefore would not be covered by the concluding portion of s. 332."³

A warrant was issued by a Magistrate for the arrest of D under s. 114 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The warrant was sent to a thana to be executed. It was there, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana, made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana, it was discovered that D was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana: endorsed on the back the names of one N and some other constables, and having signed the endorsement sent N and the others out with this paper to arrest D. N and his companions arrested D; but, as they were returning with him in custody, some of D's friends, aided by D himself, attacked them, rescued D, and caused hurt to the police. It was held that the police-officers concerned in arresting D under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of this section so as to render the accused liable to conviction under it; but inasmuch as they were acting in good faith under colour of their office, s. 99 applied, and D and his associates might properly be convicted under ss. 147 and 323.¹ An Excise Inspector, in searching the house of a person, under the suspicion that he would find cocaine there, committed many irregularities. He had no warrant authorising him to make the search, he had brought only one search witness and he had directed a constable to scale the outer wall of the house. The accused assaulted and beat him. It was held that the Inspector and the constables were not acting in the discharge of their duties as public servants and the accused were not guilty of an offence under this section, but were guilty of an offence punishable under s. 323.² Where a person is arrested for an offence not really under a warrant, the mere fact that a warrant had been issued for his arrest, which warrant had been executed against other persons who have since been convicted, can hardly be put forward as a justification for the arrest.³ Where an order issued by a Magistrate ceased to have effect, a constable in carrying out the order could not be said to have been acting in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on him, and no conviction could take place under this section.⁴ If hurt is caused the accused may be convicted under s. 323.

¹ Hardit Singh, (1911) P. L. R. No. 161 of 40 All. 22.

² Dalip, (1896) 18 All. 246; Madho, (1917)

³ Per Edge, C. J., in Dalip, ibid.

A police constable investigating a charge of burglary under s. 457 is empowered, under s. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to arrest, without an order from a Magistrate or his superior officer, persons against whom a reasonable suspicion of having been concerned in the burglary exists, and if any of such persons resists the wish of the constable by force he is guilty of an offence under this section, if he causes hurt; or under s. 353, if an assault is simply committed and he is not protected under s. 99. But in the case of a scuffle merely a small fine is quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice.⁵ A police-officer authorized to investigate a charge of theft has a right to make a search, which is incidental to his right to investigate. In conducting the search, however if he ignores the provisions of s. 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the accused offer resistance they are guilty of an offence under this section for the officer so resisted would not be at the time acting in the discharge of his duty.⁶

Blow with an umbrella amounts to 'hurt.'—Where a blow was struck by the accused with an umbrella to a public servant this offence was held to have been committed.⁷

PRACTICE;

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused hurt.⁸

(2) That the person so hurt was a public servant.

(3) That such public servant was then discharging his duty as such.⁹

Or prove.

(1) and (2) as above, and further.

(3) That the accused did so, with intent to prevent or deter such public servant or any other public servant, from discharging his duty¹⁰; or

That he did so in consequence of something done, or attempted to be done, by such public servant, in the lawful discharge of his duty.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ Dalip, (1896) 18 All. 246. Nand Kishore, (1891) 12 A. W. N. 1, though not expressly overruled by this case, yet it is considered to have laid down bad law.

² Mulhar Ahmad, (1915) 37 All. 353.

³ Abdool Karim, (1905) 4 C. L. J. 92. See Chander Coomar Sen, (1899) 3 C. W. N. 605.

⁴ Madho, (1917) 40 All. 28.

⁵ Yusuf, (1910) P. R. No. 18 of 1910. See Mahomed Yakub, (1910) 7 M. L. T. 336.

⁶ Nirmal Singh, (1910) 17 A. L. J. R. 1047.

⁷ Sheo Gholam Lalla, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.)

67.

⁸ Fide s. 323, sup.

⁹ Sampat, (1917) 15 A. L. J. R. 565.

¹⁰ Kishen Lal, (1924) 22 A. L. J. R. 561.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily caused hurt to one AB, a public servant, in the discharge of his duties as such public servant, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 332 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—See the Criminal Tribes Act (II of 1897), s. 6.

333. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt to any person being a public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant, or with 'intent to prevent or deter that person or any other public servant from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt to deter public servant from his duty.

COMMENT.

This section provides for the aggravated form of the offence dealt with in the last. The hurt caused under it must be grievous.

See Comment on the preceding section.

Public servant must be acting in the discharge of his legal duties.—Two village watchmen arrested one F on suspicion that he was in possession of stolen property. While he was being taken to the police station he was rescued from the custody of the watchmen by certain persons. It was held that the watchmen were not members of the police force, and had no authority to arrest F on mere suspicion inasmuch as the statute whereunder they had been appointed was repealed, and that F could not be convicted under this section because it was necessary to make out that F and the actual rescuers were acting in pursuance of a common intention within the meaning of s. 34.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as for s. 332, showing that the hurt caused was grievous hurt.²

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—See s. 332.

Punishment.—See the Criminal Tribes Act (II of 1897), s. 6; the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4.

334. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt on grave and sudden provocation,¹ if he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause hurt to any person other than the person who gave the provocation, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term, which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Voluntarily causing hurt on provocation.

¹ Jafar, (1916) 14 A. L. J. R. 789;

² Vide s. 325, sup.

COMMENT.

This section serves as a proviso to ss. 323 and 324.

Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation is chargeable as an offence under this section, and not under s. 324.¹

1. 'Grave and sudden provocation.'—See Comment on s. 300, exception 1.

PRACTICE.

evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused bodily pain, disease, or infirmity.

(2) That it was caused when he was under grave and sudden provocation.

(3) That he neither intended nor knew it to be likely to cause it to any person other than the person who gave the provocation.

Onus.—The burden of proving sudden provocation, and that the accused neither intended nor knew that he was likely to cause hurt to any person other than the person giving the provocation, would lie on the accused.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Summary trial.

335. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation,² if he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt to any person other than the person who gave the provocation, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to four years, or with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—The last two sections are subject to the same provisos as exception 1, section 300.

COMMENT.

This section serves as a proviso to ss. 325 and 326.

1. 'Grave and sudden provocation.'—See Comment on s. 300, exception 1, p. 629. The provocation and its effects must be sudden as well as grave; and the deprivation of the power of self-control must continue in order to benefit a man who kills another under circumstances of grave provocation.² If the particular act of which the accused is found guilty is one which imports deliberate design, the plea of grave and sudden provocation has not the same effect as in the case of a man who in sudden and provoked anger strikes a blow, however serious that blow may be. Thus, where the accused cut the nose of his wife with deliberate design, the High Court enhanced the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment though there was grave provocation.³

'Sudden provocation.'—A person who, by a single blow with a deadly weapon, killed another, entering at dead of night into a dark room where he and his wife were sleeping separately, for the purpose of having criminal intercourse with her, was held guilty of causing grievous hurt on a grave and sudden provocation.⁴

Not sudden provocation.—A husband, suspecting his wife of infidelity, hid himself so as to see her with her paramour, and, having seen an improper act being committed, he came out and caused grievous hurt to the wife. It was held that

¹ Bhai Chula, (1863) 1 B. H. C. 17.

² Bechoo Saout, (1873) 19 W. R. (Cr.) 35.

³ Bhagwan Chhagan, (1914) 17 Bom. L. R.

68, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 1.

⁴ Chullundee Poramanick, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 55.

causing the provocation to be 'grave' or 'sudden' within the meaning of the section.

Amendment.—The word 'voluntarily' was inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 5, A. to the meaning of the word as in supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—I pose (1) that the accused caused bodily harm, disease, or infirmity.
(2) That he did so with the intention or knowledge of causing grievous hurt.
(3) That it was caused when he was under grave and sudden provocation.
(4) That he neither intended nor knew it to be likely to cause it to any person other than the person who gave the provocation.

Case.—The cause of proving sudden provocation, etc. would as in s. 331, be as the accused.

Procedure.—Criminal.—Summon.—Arrest.—Commitment.—when permitted by the Court before which a prosecution is pending.—Triable by Court of Session.—Magistrate.—Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I pose and offer of Magistrate, etc. hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the _____ day of _____, at _____, voluntarily caused grievous hurt to XY or grave and sudden provocation given to you by the said XY (or if the person XY is another say of grave and sudden provocation given to you by AB and not intending to (or knowing it to be likely that you would thereby, cause hurt to XY) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 336 of the Indian Penal Code and within my jurisdiction or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried (by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate) or (in cases tried by the said Court).

336. Whoever does any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to two hundred and fifty rupees or with both.

As endangering life or personal safety of others

COMMENT:

Rash and negligent acts, which endanger human life or the personal safety of others, are punishable under this section even though no harm follows. They are additionally punishable under s. 337 and 338 if they cause hurt or grievous hurt.

Many specific acts of rashness or negligence likely to endanger life or to cause hurt or injury are made punishable by Chapter XIV.

Object.—The provisions of s. 336 are intended to meet cases where acts which are in themselves lawful are done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.

The offence punishable by this and the following two sections is the doing of an act so rashly or negligently as to put in peril the lives and safety of others, but without an intention of causing hurt or any knowledge that hurt is likely to be thereby caused.

1. Act.—See s. 32, supra.

In order to determine whether an act was done rashly or negligently, no distinction ought to be drawn between the act itself and the instrument with which it is

¹ Ramzani, (1889) 9 A. W. N. 2.

COMMENT.

This section serves as a proviso to ss. 323 and 324.

Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation is chargeable as an offence under this section, and not under s. 324.¹

1. 'Grave and sudden provocation.'—See Comment on s. 300, exception 1.

PRACTICE.

Existence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused bodily pain, disease, or infirmity.

(2) That it was caused when he was under grave and sudden provocation.

(3) That he neither intended nor knew it to be likely to cause it to any person other than the person who gave the provocation.

Onus.—The burden of proving sudden provocation, and that the accused neither intended nor knew that he was likely to cause hurt to any person other than the person giving the provocation, would lie on the accused.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Summary trial.

335. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation,¹ if he neither intends Voluntarily causing grievous hurt on provocation.

nor knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt to any person other than the person who gave the provocation, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to four years, or with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—The last two sections are subject to the same provisos as exception 1, section 300.

COMMENT.

This section serves as a proviso to ss. 325 and 326.

1. 'Grave and sudden provocation.'—See Comment on s. 300, exception 1. The act and its effects must be sudden as well as grave; and the provocation must continue in order to benefit a person who has been provoked. If the particular act of which the accused is charged is one which imports deliberate provocation has not the same effect as in the provoked anger strikes a blow, however serious the accused cut the nose of his wife with deliberate design, the High Court enhanced the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment though there was grave provocation.²

'Sudden provocation.'—A person who, by a single blow with a deadly weapon, killed another, entering at dead of night into a dark room where he and his wife were sleeping separately, for the purpose of having criminal intercourse with her, was held guilty of causing grievous hurt on a grave and sudden provocation.³

'Not sudden provocation.'—A husband, suspecting his wife of infidelity, hid himself so as to see her with her paramour, and, having seen an improper act being committed, he came out and caused grievous hurt to the wife. It was held that

¹ Bhola Chula, (1863) 1 B. H. C. 17.

² Bechoo Saout, (1873) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 35.

³ Bhagwan Chhagen, (1914) 17 Bom. L. R.

68, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 1.

⁴ Chullundee Potamanuck, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 65.

assuming the provocation to be 'grave' it was not 'sudden' within the meaning of this section.¹

Amendment.—The word 'voluntarily' was inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 8. As to the meaning of this word see s. 39, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused bodily pain, disease, or infirmity.

(2) That he did so with the intention or knowledge of causing grievous hurt.

(3) That it was caused when he was under grave and sudden provocation

(4) That he neither intended nor knew it to be likely to cause it to any person other than the person who gave the provocation.

Onus.—The onus of proving sudden provocation, etc., would, as in s. 334, lie on the accused.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which a prosecution is pending—Triaible by Court of Session Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the——day of——, at——, voluntarily caused grievous hurt to XY on grave and sudden provocation given to you by the said XY [(or if the person hurt is another) say on grave and sudden provocation given to you by AB and not intending to (or knowing it to be likely that you would thereby) cause hurt to XY] and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 335 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

336. Whoever does any act¹ so rashly or negligently² as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred and fifty rupees, or with both.

Act endangering life or personal safety of others.

COMMENT:

Rash and negligent acts, which endanger human life or the personal safety of others, are punishable under this section even though no harm follows. They are additionally punishable under ss. 337 and 338 if they cause hurt or grievous hurt.

Many specific acts of rashness or negligence likely to endanger life or to cause hurt or injury are made punishable by Chapter XIV.

Object.—The provisions of s. 336 are intended to meet cases where acts which are in themselves lawful are done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.

The offence punishable by this and the following two sections is the doing of an act so rashly or negligently as to put in peril the lives and safety of others, but without an intention of causing hurt or any knowledge that hurt is likely to be thereby caused.

1. Act.—See s. 52, supra.

In order to determine whether an act was done rashly or negligently, no distinction ought to be drawn between the act itself and the instrument with which it was done. The accused, of whom four were Dharmakartas of a temple, were charged with having drawn a car which was not in a good condition and to have thereby done an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life. The Magistrate acquitted them on the ground that the rashness or negligence must relate to the act to bring it within the meaning of the section and not to the article or thing in respect of or in connection with which the act is done, because the rashness or negligence is the quality of the agent that does the act and not that of the subject of the action. The High Court disagreed with the opinion of the Magistrate and held that the real question for decision was whether the Dharmakartas had put the car into repair so as to satisfy themselves that it could be safely drawn.¹

¹ Ramzani, (1889) 9 A. W. N. 9.

2. 'Rashly or negligently.'—See s. 304-A, supra.

Act endangering personal safety of others should have been knowingly done.—A person, having a license to conduct swinging during a Hindu festival, was held not to render himself liable for this offence by allowing persons, in his absence, to swing by hooks inserted in the flesh, instead of by being attached to the pole by cloth, unless it was shown that he knew of it.²

The accused was the lessee of a certain temple. It appeared that on a certain day in the year pilgrims and others in large numbers visited this temple. Close by the gate leading from an outer courtyard into the inner temple there was a well which was surrounded by a masonry platform 1½ to 2 feet high and the ring or the parapet of the well stood again about one foot above the platform. Early at night on the day of the congregation of pilgrims, an accident having occurred, the accused at the instance of the police-officer in charge had a light placed on or near the one-foot parapet, but at a later hour the accused had the light removed and thereafter between 1 and 2 A.M., while the people were again entering into the inner temple, a boy, who had no previous knowledge of the well and, in the darkness, could not see it, fell into it, it was held that the accused was guilty under this section.³

The accused, a taxi-cab driver, was licensed to drive, but owing to his defective eyesight, was asked to wear spectacles at the time of driving. One night, whilst he was driving without spectacles, his car collided with another; but it appeared that he was not to blame for the accident. Medical evidence showed that the defect in the eyesight of the accused was not very much and that it would not appreciably interfere with his efficiency as a driver. He was charged under s. 279 with driving his car in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life. The trying Magistrate convicted him under this section of doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life. The High Court held that the accused had committed no offence under this section, inasmuch as it was not made out that if he drove his car without wearing spectacles he would be acting so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.⁴

Engine-driver letting off steam near a thoroughfare.—An engine-driver was taking an engine which was letting off steam, along a public thoroughfare, at a time when the traffic was exceptionally heavy and within a few yards of a large number of horses and carriages which had been parked together, in spite of warnings from the police that to do so would endanger the public safety. It was held that he was guilty of this offence though he might have believed that no danger would in fact be caused.⁵

Throwing stones on a person's house.—The mere throwing of stones on the roof of a person's house was held not to amount to a criminal offence, unless it was done

¹ Thippana, (1890) 1 Weir 337.

² Gopi Nath Mahto v. Mansaram Koomar, (1900) 5 C. W. N. 370.

³ Narsing Oharan Mahapatra, (1914) 16

C. W. N. 1176.

⁴ Abas Mirza, (1918) 20 Bom. L. R. 37-4 Bom. Cr. C. 231.

⁵ George Loveday, (1887) 1 Weir 337.

rashly or negligently so as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.¹ But if a person intentionally throws a stone at a house or on a house under such circumstances that, although he does not intend to cause hurt, and does not in fact cause hurt, yet he must know that he is likely to cause hurt, he commits an offence punishable under this section.²

2. 'Rashly or negligently.'—See s. 304-A, supra.

PRACTICE:

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused did the act in question.

(2) That it was done rashly or negligently.

(3) That it was such as to endanger the life or personal safety of others.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

337. Whoever causes hurt to any person by doing any act¹ so rashly or negligently² as to endanger human life, or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Causing hurt by act endangering life or personal safety of others.

COMMENT:

"Hurt may be caused involuntarily, yet culpably. There may have been no design to cause hurt, no expectation that hurt would be caused; yet there may have been a want of due care not to cause hurt."³

A party shall not be deemed to be culpable in respect of any hurt, damage or other evil consequence resulting from his act, although he did not use the utmost degree of caution that was possible, provided he used such a reasonable degree of caution for the exclusion of mischief as was appropriate to the nature of the act and the probability of danger in the particular case.⁴

Scope.—This section applies only to acts done without any criminal intent. Personal injury intentionally caused is neither a rash nor a negligent act.⁵

1. 'Act.'—See s. 32, supra.

2. 'Rashly or negligently.'—See s. 304-A, supra.

CASE:

Negligence with reference to a gun.—The causing of hurt by negligence in the use of a gun was held to fall within the purview of this section rather than of s. 286.

not sufficient evidence of rashness or negligence to support a conviction under this section.⁶

Negligence with reference to poisonous drugs.—A wife administered to her husband a love potion in his food to save her from the quarrelsome tongue of her husband. The husband took ill on eating the food but subsequently recovered. The potion was prepared from dhatūra seeds by accused No. 2 who was her lover and by accused No. 3 who was his friend. It was held that the wife was guilty under this section as she administered to her husband without any care or caution a powder which she received from her lover who was at enmity with her husband;

¹ Nga Tha Ku, (1879) S. J. L. B. 91.

² Nga Myat Thin, (1898) F. J. L. B. 426.

³ Note M, p. 154.

⁴ 7th Parl. R. 33.

⁵ Nga Saue Lu, (1904) U. B. R. (P. C.) 6.

⁶ Abdus Sattar, (1906) 28 All. 464.

that the accused No. 2 was guilty of an offence under ss. 307 and 109; and that accused No. 3 was guilty under ss. 328 and 109.¹

Rash operation.—The accused performed an operation with a pair of scissors on the lid of the complainant's eye, and stitched the wound with ordinary thread and needle. The operation was needless and performed in a primitive way without any precautions. The complainant's eyesight was damaged permanently to a certain extent. It was held that the accused was guilty under this section.²

PRACTICE;

Evidence.—Prove (1), (2) and (3) as for s. 336; and further (4) that hurt was actually caused.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which a prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

338. Whoever causes grievous hurt to any person by doing any act¹ so rashly or negligently² as to endanger human life, or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Causing grievous hurt by act endangering life or personal safety of others.

COMMENT:

This section deals with grievous hurt engendered by an act done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others. Otherwise the section is similar in terms to the last section.

1. 'Act.'—See s. 32, supra.

2. 'Rashly or negligently.'—See s. 304-A, supra.

CASES.

Sexual intercourse causing injury to wife.—Under no law it is a rule that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her. Hence, where a husband had sexual intercourse with his wife, aged eleven years, and she died from the injuries thereof, he was held guilty of causing grievous hurt by doing a rash act under this section.³ This case led to the passing of Act IV of 1891. See s. 375.

Death caused by allowing a cart to go unattended.—Where a person, by allowing his cart to proceed unattended along a road, ran over a boy who was sleeping on the road, it was held that he had committed an offence under s. 337 or under this section although the boy might have contributed to his own injury by going to sleep on the side of the road.⁴

Running over by a carriage.—Where the accused's carriage which was driven at an ordinary pace, on a dark night, knocked down an old deaf man and killed him, it was held that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently or rashly directed by the accused. If there was no such evidence the accused could not be convicted.⁵

¹ Bhagava Giryappa, (1916) 19 Bom. L. R. 64, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 1.

² Gulam Hyder Panjabi, (1915) 17 Bom. L. R. 334, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 47.

³ Hurree Mohun Mythee, (1890) 16 Cal. 49. In a similar case in the Central Provinces the husband was punished under s. 326: Mohammad Miran, (1893) 12 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 11. See Shambhu Khatri, (1924) 3 Pat. 410.

⁴ Malkaji, (1884) Unrep. Cr. C. 199.

⁵ (1871) 8 M. H. C. App. 31.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1), (2), (3) as for s. 336, and (4) that such act caused grievous hurt.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which a prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows.—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, caused grievous hurt to AB by doing an act, to wit—, so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 338 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Wrongful Restraint and Wrongful Confinement.

THE provisions under this head are for the punishment of offences, in which the offender, though he may have no design against human life, and no intention to inflict bodily hurt, either wholly deprives the injured person of his freedom or in some degree abridges his personal liberty. The personal restraint or confinement may, in some cases, be so slight as to deserve little more than a nominal punishment; but the arbitrary imprisonment of a person, which is often a quiet and convenient mode of persecuting him, is a most serious offence, deserving of exemplary punishment.¹

339. Whoever voluntarily obstructs any person¹ so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed,² is said wrongfully to restrain that person.

Exception.—The obstruction of a private way over land or water which a person in good faith believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence within the meaning of this section.

ILLUSTRATION.

A obstructs a path along which Z has a right to pass, A not believing in good faith that he has a right to stop the path. Z is thereby prevented from passing. A wrongfully restrains Z.

COMMENT.

Wrongful restraint means the keeping of a man out of a place where he wishes to be, and has a right to be.³

The slightest unlawful obstruction to the liberty of the subject to go when and where he likes to go, provided he does so in a lawful manner, cannot be justified, and is punishable under this section.³

The following illustrations, given in the original Draft Code, elucidate the meaning of this section:—

(a) A builds a wall across a path along which Z has a right to pass. Z is thereby prevented from passing. A wrongfully restrains Z.

(b) A illegally omits to take proper order with a furious buffalo which is in his possession and thus voluntarily deters Z from passing along a road along which Z has a right to pass. A wrongfully restrains Z.

¹ M. & M. 300.

² Note M, p. 154.

³ Saminada Pillai, (1882) 1 Weir 339.

(c) A threatens to set a savage dog at Z, if Z goes along a path along which Z has a right to go. Z is thus prevented from going along that path. A wrongfully restrains Z.

(d) In the last illustration, if the dog is not really savage, but if A voluntarily causes Z to think that it is savage, and thereby prevents Z from going along the path, A wrongfully restrains Z.

From these illustrations it will appear that a person may obstruct another by causing it to appear to that other impossible, difficult, or dangerous to proceed, as well as by causing it actually to be impossible, difficult, or dangerous for that other to proceed.

These illustrations were subsequently dropped as they were severely criticised but they indicate that the obstruction mentioned in the section does not mean physical obstruction alone but may mean show of force or threat which will induce a man to change his course. Thus, where the accused removed a ladder and thereby detained a person on the roof of a house, he was held to have committed 'wrongful restraint.'¹

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials:—

1. Voluntary obstruction of a person.
2. The obstruction must be such as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed.

1. 'Voluntarily obstructs, etc.'—This section relates to voluntary obstruction by a person and not to obstructions which are not voluntarily continued by the persons accused of the obstruction throughout the time the obstruction lasts.² See s. 39 as to the meaning of 'voluntarily.'

The obstruction must be physical. A verbal prohibition or remonstrance does not amount to such obstruction.³ But physical presence is not necessary. Where, therefore, the complainant and his wife and daughter occupied a house and during their temporary absence the accused put a lock on the outer door and thereby obstructed them from getting into the house, it was held that the accused was guilty of wrongful restraint.⁴

2. 'Prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed.'—The section requires that the obstruction should be so complete and successful as to prevent the person obstructed from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed. The wrong here defined is a wrong against the person, and is not completed where the person is at liberty to go in any direction he pleases. Thus, where the complainant driving a bullock cart, was obstructed from taking his cart through the passage; but there was no obstruction to the complainant passing through the passage alone without the cart, it was held that there could be no conviction for wrongful restraint for though the complainant was hindered from driving his cart through the passage, he himself was unobstructed.⁵

Bona fide claim.—If an act is done in good faith under a belief that it is justified by law, a conviction under this section will not stand.⁶ A person cannot be convicted of wrongful restraint, if he locks up a house under a bona fide claim to the same.⁷ The accused, one of the joint-owners of a shop, put her lock on the shop, which was let out by the other joint-owner without her consent. The tenant charged the accused with the offence of wrongful restraint in that he was prevented by the lock from entering the shop. It was held that the accused had committed no

¹ Telapolu Subbadu, (1884) 1 Weir 340.

² Abdul Satar Rahibax, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R.

30. ³ Karaturi Nagamma, (1882) 1 Weir 339.

⁴ Arumuga Nadar, [1910] M. W. N. 727.

⁵ Rama Lala, (1912) 15 Bom. L. R. 103, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 26; but see Lahann Manaji,

(1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1419.

⁶ Kanai Lal Gowala, (1897) 24 Cal. 885; Pramatha Nath Barat v. P. C. Lahiri, (1920).

47 Cal. 818; Kali Das Raha v. Deodhari, Mitra, (1925) 41 C. L. J. 633.

⁷ Hovana, (1889) Cr. R. No. 10 of 1889, Unrep. Cr. C. 451.

offence, inasmuch as she had affixed her lock to a house of which she was the joint owner and the complainant was no tenant of hers.¹

Exception.—It is not an offence to erect a wall against one's premises to prevent other persons from passing over it.² If the accused has acted bona fide then no conviction could be made.³

CASES:

Wrongful restraint.—Where [the complainant was taken to a police-station registered as a suspect, and passed on in charge of police-men from one police-beat to another⁴; where a police-officer refused to let a person go home until he gave bail;⁵ and where the accused prevented the complainants from proceeding in a certain direction with their carts and exacted from them a sum of money on a false plea,⁶ this offence was held to have been committed.

The fact that a person either is or pretends to be an intending emigrant and goes to the depot and is there treated as such, receiving meals and an advance of money does not confer either on the emigration agent or his watchman power to prevent him from leaving the depot when he desires to do so, and a person who restrains him from going out of the depot is guilty of wrongful restraint within the meaning of this section.⁷

The accused, a landlord, prevented a tenant of his who was holding over, from entering the room which the tenant had rented from the accused. It was held that he was guilty of wrongful restraint; for a tenant holding over had a position recognized by the law and he had a right to retain possession of the premises he occupied as even against the landlord himself until dispossessed in course of law.⁸ The accused, who were co-owners of a well, obstructed another co-owner (complainant) from using the mot to which he had yoked his bullocks on the slope to the well on the ground that he had not paid his share of expenses on the well. It was held that the accused were guilty of wrongful restraint inasmuch as they had obstructed the complainant from proceeding with his bullocks in a direction in which he had a right to proceed with his bullocks.⁹

No wrongful restraint.—Where the accused prevented the building of a party-wall between two adjoining backyards¹⁰; where toll was demanded of cartmen in good faith, and they went away with their bullocks, leaving the carts¹¹; where the complainant had, for the purpose of removal, placed certain goods upon a cart, and the accused came and turned the cart upside down, and the things fell to the ground, upon which the complainant went away¹²; where the accused placed an from a mere general dislike or dread of giving offence to A remained there¹⁴; and where the accused caused Pariahs to stand in a public street in the vicinity of a temple with the object of preventing the complainant from conducting a religious

¹ Bai Samrath, (1917) 20 Bom. L. R. 106,
⁴ Bom. Cr. C. 200.

L. R. 261, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 15.

⁵ Lahanu Manoji, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1419, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 185.

¹⁰ Yenkatachalam Pillai, (1881) 1 Weir 339.

¹¹ Padati Chenchu Reddi, (1883) Weir (3rd Edn) 258.

¹² Juggeshwar Dass v. Koylash Chunder Chatterjee, (1885) 12 Cal. 55.

¹³ (1899) 1 Weir 340.

¹⁴ Lalshman Kalyan, (1875) Cr. R. for 1875, Unrep. Cr. C. 89.

procession from fear of pollution, it was held that the act of the accused did not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of this section.¹

340. Whoever wrongfully restrains any person¹, in such a manner as to prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits,² is said "wrongfully to confine" that person.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A causes Z to go within a walled space, and locks Z in. Z is thus prevented from proceeding in any direction beyond the circumscribing line of wall. A wrongfully confines Z.

(b) A places men with firearms at the outlets of a building and tells Z that they will fire at Z if Z attempts to leave the building. A wrongfully confines Z.

COMMENT:

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials:—

1. Wrongful restraint of a person.
2. Such restraint must prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits.

1. "Whoever wrongfully restrains any person."—Wrongful confinement, which is a form of wrongful restraint, is the keeping of a man within limits out of which he wishes to go, and has a right to go.²

2. "Prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits."—"There must be a total restraint, not a partial one. If one man merely obstructs the passage of another in a particular direction, whether by threat of personal violence or otherwise, leaving him at liberty to stay where he is or to go in any other direction if he pleases, he can be said thereby to imprison him... Imprisonment is a total restraint of the liberty of the person, for however short a time, and not a partial obstruction of his will, whatever inconvenience it may bring on him."³

"Proof of actual physical obstruction is not essential to support a charge of wrongful confinement. I think, it must, in each case, be proved that there was at least such an impression produced in the mind of the prisoner as to lead him reasonably to believe that he was not free to depart and that he would be forthwith restrained if he attempted to do so. The mere threat of some future harm in case of departure will not suffice if the prisoner knew that it was open to him to go away and refrained from doing so lest he should suffer such harm. But if the circumstances were such as to justify and to create the belief that he could not depart without being seized immediately, then...it would be proper to hold that he was obstructed and confined."⁴

"Prevent that person from proceeding."—There can be no wrongful confinement when a desire to proceed has never existed, nor can a confinement be wrongful if it was consented to by the person affected⁵; or if an escape is open to a person if he wished to avail himself of it.⁶

The retaining of a person in a particular place, or the compelling of him to go in a particular direction, by force of an exterior will overpowering or suppressing in any way his own voluntary action, is an imprisonment on the part of him who exercises that exterior will.⁷

¹ Fenkata Subba Reddy, (1910) 7 M. L. T. 360, [1910] M. W. N. 72.

² Note M, p. 154.

³ Per Patterson, J., in Bird v. Jones, (1845) 7 Q. B. 742, 751, 752.

⁴ Per Fulton, J., in Shamlal Jaisram, (1902)

4 Bom. L. R. 79, 82.

⁵ Muhammad Din, (1893) P. R. No. 36 of 1894.

⁶ Ramdai, (1900) 4 C. W. N. cv.

⁷ Parankusam Narasaya Pantulu v. P. A. C. Stuart, (1865) 2 M. H. C. 396.

'Certain circumscribing limits.'—"A prison may have its boundary large or narrow, visible and tangible, or, though real, still in the conception only; it may itself be movable or fixed; but a boundary it must have; and that boundary the party imprisoned must be prevented from passing; he must be prevented from leaving that place, within the ambit of which the party imprisoning would confine him, except by prison-breach. Some confusion seems to me to arise from confounding imprisonment of the body with mere loss of freedom; it is one part of the definition of freedom to be able to go whithersoever one pleases; but imprisonment is something more than the mere loss of his power; it includes the notion of restraint within some limits defined by a will or power exterior to our own."¹ "If, in the course of a night, both ends of a street were walled up, and there was no egress from the house but into the street, I should have no difficulty in saying that the inhabitants were thereby imprisoned; but, if only one end were walled up, and an armed force stationed outside to prevent any scaling of the wall or passage that way, I should feel equally clear that there was no imprisonment. If there were, the street would obviously be the prison; and yet, as obviously, none would be confined to it."²

Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment, whether it be in a common prison, or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets.³

Moral force.—Detention through the exercise of moral force, without the accompaniment of physical force or actual conflict, is sufficient to constitute this offence.⁴

Malice is not an essential ingredient in the offence of wrongful confinement.⁵

Period of confinement.—The time during which a person is kept in wrongful confinement is immaterial, except with reference to the extent of punishment.⁶

Arrest by third persons at the direction of a police-officer.—If a police-officer, without arresting a person himself, directs some of the neighbours to take charge of him, the police-officer is responsible in the same way as if he had himself made the arrest, the person arrested by his order being in law in his custody.⁷

Difference between malicious prosecution and false imprisonment.—It becomes necessary here to consider the difference between s. 211 and this section, i.e., between malicious prosecution and false imprisonment. "The distinction between false imprisonment and malicious prosecution is well illustrated by the case, where, parties being before a magistrate, one makes a charge against another, whereupon the magistrate orders the person charged to be taken into custody and detained until the matter can be investigated. The party making the charge is not liable to an action for false imprisonment, because he does not set a ministerial officer in motion, but a judicial officer. The opinion and judgment of a judicial officer are interposed between the charge and the imprisonment. There is, therefore, at once a line drawn between the end of the imprisonment by the ministerial officer and the commencement of the proceedings before the judicial officer. It is fallacious to inquire whether or not the one is severable from the other, until you find some inseparable connection between them."⁸ Thus, the question is, does the defendant set a ministerial or a judicial officer in motion? If the former, he may be liable for false imprisonment, if the latter, for malicious prosecution.

CASES.

Wrongful confinement.—Where the accused refused to obey an order in writing improperly issued by a police-officer, and the police thereupon took her into

¹ Per Coleridge, J., in Bird v. Jones, (1845) 376

7 Q. B. 742, 744.

² Per Coleridge, J., in ibid., p. 746.

³ Blackstone, Vol. III, 4th Edn., p. 121.

⁴ Ventachala Mudali, (1881) 1 Weir 341.

⁵ Dhanias v. F. L. Clifford, (1888) 13 Bom.

⁶ Suprosunno Ghosaul, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.)

88.

⁷ Behary Singh, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 3.

⁸ Per Willes, J., in Austin v. Dowling, (1870) L. R. 5 C. P. 534, 540.

custody¹; where a Superintendent of Police illegally wrote a letter to a person, who was accused of an offence for which he could not be arrested without a warrant, directing him to present himself before a Magistrate, and sent two constables to accompany him, and prevented him from speaking to anyone²; where a prisoner discharged by a Magistrate was subsequently re-arrested on the same charge;³ where a police-officer arrested, without a warrant, a British subject in British India on a charge of criminal breach of trust or other cognizable offence committed outside British India⁴; where a Village Magistrate maliciously ordered a certain person, who had resisted the detention of pigs found trespassing, to be arrested⁵; where a Jail Doctor confined an offender, who was already undergoing imprisonment, in a cell within the jail for the purpose of administering enema against his will⁶; where an Abkari Inspector detained a man all night to prevent his being tampered with⁷; where a person living in a town where medical assistance was available kept in heavy chains his own brother who was subject to insanity of an intermittent kind and who was found to be sane by the District Judge who ordered his production before the Court⁸; and where the accused got the complainant who was their debtor arrested and taken to jail by a bailiff during the subsistence of a protection order in his favour⁹ the offence of wrongful confinement was held to have been committed.

The accused, a Police Constable, detained some persons as suspects for several days. They were not fettered, but they were made to stay in a circumscribed limit. Their meals were brought to them, or police or village servants were sent with them to their houses for their meals and they were brought back. It was held that the accused was guilty of wrongful confinement.¹⁰ Where two police-officers arrested without warrant a person who was drunk and creating disturbance in a public street, and confined him in the police station though one of them knew his name and address and it was not found to what extent he was a danger to others or their property, it was held that the arrest having been made by the police-officers without warrant, for a non-cognizable offence, their action amounted to wrongful confinement, unless it was justified under the provisions of the Code relating to the right of private defence or under s. 81.¹¹ Accused No. 1 brought a woman, who was his kept mistress, from Kolhapur and kept her with accused No. 2, a brothel-house-keeper in Bombay. On previous occasions too he had supplied women to accused No. 2 to be used as prostitutes. The woman was made to live as a prostitute in the house, the entrance to which was guarded, and a watch was kept over her movements. Occasionally she was allowed to go out under surveillance. It was held that both the accused were guilty of wrongfully confining the woman.¹²

Mistaken exercise of power by a police-officer.—Where a person went to a police station to lodge a complaint, and the police-officer, in consequence of something, restrained the person until he consulted his superior, and then discharged him on his own recognizance, he was held to have committed no offence. The Court said: "Although the petitioner may have exceeded the limits of his authority, and may have done an act which he was not justified in doing, and so rendered himself liable to a civil suit for damages, the facts found do not, in our judgment, amount to the criminal offence of wrongful restraint."¹³ The accused, a police-officer, came down to Bombay from up-country with a warrant to arrest a person. After reasonable inquiries and on well-founded suspicion he arrested the complainant under the warrant believing in good faith that he was the person to be arrested. The complainant having proceeded against the accused for wrongful confinement, it was held that the accused had committed no offence, since he was protected by s. 76.¹

Legal arrest.—Where the arrest is legal, the police-officer making the arrest cannot be successfully proceeded against on a charge under this section.² An officer arresting a judgment-debtor under a warrant which directs him to produce the judgment-debtor when arrested before the Court with all convenient speed, is not guilty of wrongful confinement if, having effected the arrest when the Court is not sitting, he confines him in the house of the judgment-creditor till the next sitting of the Court.³

341. Whoever wrongfully restrains any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Punishment for wrongful restraint.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused obstructed a person.

(2) That such obstruction prevented the person from proceeding in a direction in which he had a right to proceed.

(3) That the accused caused such obstruction voluntarily.⁴

The obstructor must intend or know or have reason to believe it to be likely that the means adopted would cause the obstruction of the complainant.⁵

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily

Magistrate cannot order the removal of an obstruction.—A Magistrate, while convicting an accused person for wrongfully restraining a person by the erection of a hut or by any similar act of obstruction, cannot pass an order, under this section, that the hut or other means of obstruction should be removed.⁶

Statutory application.—See the Madras City Municipal Act (Mad. Act IV of 1919), s. 364

Punishment.—“The offence of wrongful restraint, when it does not amount to wrongful confinement, and when it is not accompanied with violence, or with the causing of bodily hurt, is seldom a serious offence, and we propose, therefore, to visit it with a light punishment.”⁷

342. Whoever wrongfully confines any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Punishment for wrongful confinement.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused obstructed the complainant.

(2) That such obstruction was voluntary.

(3) That the effect of such obstruction was to restrain that person from proceeding beyond a certain limit.

¹ Gopalia Kallaya, (1923) 26 Bom. L. R. 138, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 128.

² Amarang Jetha, (1885) 10 Bom. 506.

³ Samuel, (1906) 30 Mad. 179

⁴ Id. s. 39, supra

⁵ Arumuga Nadar, [1910] M. W. N. 727

⁶ Mohini Mohan Chowdhry v. Harendra Chandra Chowdhry, (1904) 31 Cal. 691, F. B., overruling Debendra Chandra Chowdhry v. Mohini Mohan Chowdhry, (1901) 5 C. W. N. 432.

⁷ Note M, p. 154.

(4) That the restraint was wrongful.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Separate sentences.—Where the accused were convicted under this section and s. 352, and sentenced separately for each of the offences, the acts found against them being that they seized, dragged and pushed the complainant to a certain place in order to punish him, it was held that what the accused had been punished for was the whole series of acts, and that series of acts came within the definition both of wrongful confinement and using of criminal force, and accordingly the case fell within the second para. of s. 71.¹ Where wrongful confinement was the common object of an unlawful assembly, and that was the essential ingredient in the constitution of an offence under s. 147, it was held that having regard to the provisions of s. 71, a separate sentence for wrongful confinement was illegal.²

Charge.—The charge should run thus :—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows —

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, wrongfully confined AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

343. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for three days or more, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Wrongful confinement for three or more days.

COMMENT.

The period of three days will be counted from the time that the complainant is illegally confined.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) to (4) as for s. 342 and (5) that such restraint was for a period of three or more days.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—See the form of charge for s. 342. In that form for “confined AB” substitute “confined AB for—days.”

344. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for ten days or more, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Wrongful confinement for ten or more days.

COMMENT.

Object.—The authors of the Code say : “One aggravating circumstance is the duration of the confinement. Confinement for a quarter of an hour may sometimes be a mere frolic, which would deserve only a nominal punishment, which, indeed, might be so harmless as not to amount to an offence. . . But wrongful confinement continued during many days will always be a most serious offence. We have attempted to frame the law on this subject in such a manner as to give the offender

¹ Fakira Khan, (1903) 4 C. L. J. 90.

² Alim Sheikh v. Shabazda Singh Bar.

Kundaz, (1904) 1 Cr. L. J. 365.

a strong motive for abridging the detention of his prisoner."¹ The Law Commissioners observe: "One cannot conceive of a wrongful confinement continued for ten days or more without deliberation and reflection and a special regard to the penal consequences, and when a man sees that by persisting in his offence he is every day becoming liable to a certain additional punishment, the motive to set his prisoner free will grow stronger daily."²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) to (4) as for s. 312 and (5) that such restraint was for a period of ten or more days.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Punishment.—Fine alone is not a legal sentence for a prisoner convicted under this section.³

Charge.—See the form of charge for s. 312. In that form for "confined AB" substitute "confined AB for—days."

345. Whoever keeps any person in wrongful confinement, knowing that a writ for the liberation of that person has been duly issued, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years in addition to any term of imprisonment to which he may be liable under any other section of this Chapter.

Wrongful confinement of person for whose liberation writ has been issued.

COMMENT.

There must be knowledge on the part of the accused that a writ for liberation has been issued. Mere belief is not sufficient; 'knowledge' is a much stronger word than 'belief' as the latter is stronger than 'suspect'.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused kept a person in confinement.

(2) That such confinement was wrongful.

(3) That a writ of liberation had been duly issued.

(4) That the accused knew of such writ, when he kept the person wrongfully confined.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, wrongfully confined AB, knowing at the time of such wrongful confinement that a writ for the liberation of the said AB had been duly issued, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 345 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

¹ Note M, pp. 154, 155

² 1st Rep., s. 393.

³ Bahirji bin Krishnaji, (1863) 1 B. H. C.

(Cr. C.) 39.

⁴ Rango Timaji, (1880) 6 Bom. 402, 403.

346. Whoever wrongfully confines any person in such manner as to indicate an intention that the confinement of such person may not be known¹ to any person interested in the person so confined, or to any public servant,² or that the place of such confinement may not be known to or discovered by any such person or public servant as hereinbefore mentioned, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable for such wrongful confinement.

COMMENT.

The offence consists in wrongful confinement, aggravated by the offender's endeavour to deprive his prisoner and those interested in him or bound to protect him of the remedies which the law gives against this wrong.

1. 'Intention that confinement...may not be known.'—In order to render a person liable under this section, it must be shown that the wrongful confinement was of such a nature as to indicate an intention, that the person confined, should not be discovered. The complainant, a woman, went to the Court to lodge a complaint of ill-treatment and torture against some relatives of the accused. The case not having been finished that day, she was asked to attend the Court the next day. As she was departing she was accosted by the accused who put her into a carriage and drove her away, taking her to various places, all strange and unknown to her at one or other of which she was detained. But a stir having arisen in the meantime on account of her disappearance she was brought back by the accused and produced by them before a pleader, in whose premises she remained till next day when she was made over to the police. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused under this section but the High Court set aside the conviction on the ground that there was no intention that she should not be discovered and that her confinement was not actual but potential as she was induced but not forced.¹

2. 'Public servant.'—See s. 21, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) to (4) as for s. 342; and (5) that such confinement was secret against (a) any person interested in the captive, or (b) a public servant, or (c) discovery of the place of confinement

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

347. Whoever wrongfully confines¹ any person for the purpose of extorting from the person confined, or from any person interested in the person confined, any property or valuable security,² or of constraining the person confined, or any person interested in such person to do anything illegal or to give any information which may facilitate the commission of an offence,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

¹ Sreenath Banerjee, (1882) 9 Cal. 221.

COMMENT.

This and the next section may be compared with ss. 329 and 330, as the aggravating circumstances mentioned in the former are the same as in the latter.

1. 'Wrongfully confines.'—A Head Constable in charge of a police outpost agreed to drop proceedings against K, who had been arrested on a certain charge, on condition that K paid to him a sum of money. The Head Constable sent away K in charge of two chowkidars to procure the money. In order to effect this object the chowkidars subsequently confined K at various places and maltreated him. It was held that it would be impossible to hold the Head Constable guilty of abetting an offence under this section in the absence of proof that he gave definite orders to that end.¹

2. 'Valuable security.'—See s. 30, supra.

3. 'Offence.'—The word "offence" means a thing punishable under this Code or any special or local law (s. 40)

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) to (4) as for s. 312; and

(5) That such confinement was for the purpose of (a) extorting property, or (b) a valuable security, or (c) constraining the doing of anything illegal, or (d) the giving of information which might facilitate the commission of an offence.

(6) That such extortion or constraint was from, or of, the person confined, or someone else interested in him.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate, of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows —

That you, on or about the — day of —, at —, wrongfully confined AB for the purpose of extorting from the said AB [or from a certain person interested in the said AB, to wit, CD] a certain property, to wit —, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 317 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)]

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

348. Whoever wrongfully confines¹ any person for the purpose

Wrongful confinement to extort confession, or compel restoration of property of extorting from the person confined or any person interested in the person confined any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence,² or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the person confined or any person interested in the person confined to restore or to cause the restoration of any property or valuable security³ or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section may be compared with s. 329.

¹ Lucknow Special, (1904) 31 Cal. 510.

1. 'Whoever wrongfully confines.'—The person liable is the person who wrongfully confines. The appellants charged the prosecutor with theft, and he was handed over to the police. It was held that the police, and not the appellants, were responsible for any oppression or extortion practised by the police on the prosecutor while in confinement.¹

2. 'Offence.'—The word "offence" means a thing punishable under this Code or any special or local law (s. 40).

3. 'Valuable security.'—See s. 30, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) to (4) as for s. 342; and

(5) That such confinement was for the purpose (a) of extorting a confession, or (b) some information, etc., or (c) of constraining the restoration of some property, or (d) valuable security, etc.

(6) That such extortion or constraint was from, or of, the person confined, or some other person interested in him.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

As to joinder of charges, see Fakirapa.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, wrongfully confined one AB for the purpose of extorting from the said AB (or from one CD in whom the said AB was interested) any confession (or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence, or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the person confined to restore, or to cause the restoration of any property or valuable security, or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 348 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Of Criminal Force and Assault.

349. A person is said to use force to another if he causes

Force. motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact, with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contact affects that other's sense of feeling: Provided that the person causing the motion or change of motion or cessation of motion, causes that motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion in one of the three ways hereinafter described:

First.—By his own bodily power.

¹ Shambhoo Nath Panday, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr) 26. ² (1890) 15 Bom. 491.

Secondly.—By disposing any substance in such a manner that the motion or charge or cessation of motion takes place without any further act on his part, or on the part of any other person.

Thirdly.—By inducing any animal¹ to move, to change its motion, or to cease to move.

COMMENT.

This section gives an elaborate explanation of the expression "to use force." The illustrations to s. 350 exemplify the various clauses of the definition given in this section.

1. 'Animal.'—See s. 47, supra.

350. Whoever intentionally uses force to any person, without that person's consent,¹ in order to the committing of any offence,² or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury,³ fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) Z is sitting in a moored boat on a river. A unfastens the moorings, and thus intentionally causes the boat to drift down the stream. Here A intentionally causes motion to Z, and he does this by disposing substances in such a manner that the motion is produced without any other act on any person's part. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending or knowing it to be likely that this use of force will cause injury, fear or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(b) Z is riding in a chariot. A lashes Z's horses, and thereby causes them to quicken their pace. Here A has caused change of motion to Z by inducing the animals to change their motion. A has therefore used force to Z; and if A has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten or annoy Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(c) Z is riding in a palanquin. A, intending to rob Z, seizes the pole, and stops the palanquin. Here, A has caused cessation of motion to Z, and he has done this by his own bodily power. A has therefore used force to Z; and as A has acted thus intentionally, without Z's consent, in order to the commission of an offence, A has used criminal force to Z.

(d) A intentionally pushes against Z in the street. Here A has by his own bodily power moved his own person so as to bring it into contact with Z. He has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(e) A throws a stone, intending or knowing it to be likely that the stone will be thus brought into contact with Z, or with Z's clothes, or with something carried by Z, or that it will strike water, and dash up the water against Z's clothes or something carried by Z. Here, if the throwing of the stone produce the effect of causing any substance to come into contact with Z, or Z's clothes, A has used force to Z; and if he did so without Z's consent, intending thereby to injure, frighten or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(f) A intentionally pulls up a woman's veil. Here A intentionally uses force to her and if he does so without her consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten or annoy her, he has used criminal force to her.

(g) Z is bathing. A pours into the bath water which he knows to be boiling. Here A intentionally by his own bodily power causes such motion in the boiling water as brings that water into contact with Z, or with other water so situated that such contact must affect Z's sense of feeling. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury, fear or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force.

(h) A incites a dog to spring upon Z, without Z's consent. Here, if A intends to cause injury, fear or annoyance to Z, he uses criminal force to Z.

COMMENT.

The preceding section defined 'force.' This section says that 'force' becomes criminal when it is used (1) without consent and in order to the committing of an offence, or (2) when it is intentionally used to cause injury, fear, or annoyance to another to whom the force is used. The term 'force' as defined here applies to force used in connection with the human body.¹

The term 'criminal force' includes what in English law is called 'battery.' It will, however, be remembered that 'criminal force' may be so slight as not to amount to an offence (s. 95), and it will be observed that 'criminal force' does not include anything that the doer does by means of another person. The definition of 'criminal force' is so wide as to include force of almost every description of which a person is the ultimate object.²

The present definition of 'criminal force' was called 'assault' in the original Code. Speaking of it, the framers of the Code say: "We have found great difficulty in giving a definition of assault, and are by no means satisfied with that which we now offer. As, however, it at present appears to us to include all that we mean to include, and to exclude all that we mean to exclude, we have adopted it in spite of the objections which we feel to its harsh and quaint phraseology. We have adopted it with the less scruple, because we trust that the illustrations will render every part of it intelligible to an attentive reader.

"A large proportion of the acts which we have designated as assaults will be offences falling under the heads of hurt and restraint. Thus, a stab with a knife is an offence falling under the head of hurt, and it is also an assault. The seizing a man by the collar, and thus preventing him from proceeding on his way, is unlawful restraint, and is also an assault. But there will be many assaults which it is absolutely necessary to punish, yet which cause neither bodily hurt nor unlawful restraint. A man who impertinently puts his arm round a lady's waist, who aims a severe stroke at a person with a horsewhip, who maliciously throws a stone at a person, squirts dirty water over a person, or sets a dog at a person, may cause no hurt and no restraint, yet it is evident that such acts ought to be prevented."³

Ingredients.—The section requires the following essentials:—

1. The intentional use of force to any person.
2. Such force must have been used without that person's consent.
3. It must have been used—

(a) in order to the committing of any offence; or

(b) with the intention to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will cause, injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom it is used.

Illustrations.—Illustration (a) exemplifies 'motion', in s. 349; ill. (b), 'change of motion', ill. (c), 'cessation of motion'; ills. (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h), 'causes to any substance any such motion'; ills. (d), (e), (g), and (h), 'brings that substance into contact with any part of that other's body'; ills. (f) and (g), 'other's sense of

¹ Sadasib Mawla, (1913) 18 C. W. N. 1150.
² Rasul, (1888) P. R. No. 4 of 1889. See Rose v. Kempthorne, (1910) 22 Cox. 356, 27

T. L. R. 132.
³ Note M, p. 155.

feeling.' Clause (1) of s. 349 is illustrated by ill. (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g); cl. 2, by ill. (a); and cl. 3, by ill. (b) and (h).

1. 'Whoever intentionally uses force to any person without that person's consent.'—The use of force must be intentional. Mere submission by one who does not know the nature of the act done cannot be consent.¹ See s. 90 as to the meaning of 'consent.'

Where the accused went to the field of another and cut the crops sown by him and on the latter resisting they raised their sticks to strike him and that other ran away to save himself, it was held that the accused were guilty of using force by means of bodily power within the meaning of this section.² The accused having been brought to a certain place to serve as a cooly attempted to run away, but was obstructed and prevented from doing so by a peon. In the struggle which ensued the accused seized the peon by the wrist, and attempted to get away. It was held that the accused did not commit this offence as he had acted in self-defence.³

2. 'In order to the committing of any offence.'—The force must have been used for the purpose of committing an offence. See s. 40 as to the definition of 'offence.'

3. 'Intending by the use of such force to cause...injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used.'—The force must have been used with the intention to cause or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury, fear, or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used.

See s. 44, supra, as to the meaning of the word 'injury.'

Diseased spleen.—Where the accused struck a person, who had an enlarged spleen, in the course of a quarrel, and that person died owing to his bodily infirmity, it was held that the accused was guilty under this section.⁴ For other similar cases, see ss. 319 and 320.

Rescuing persons arrested by the police.—Two police constables in the bona fide execution of their duty carried out an arrest under a warrant which, unknown to them, was in fact not legally issued; whereupon certain persons came up and rescued the prisoner and tore up the warrant but did not cause hurt to any one. It was held that the rescuers were guilty of using criminal force.⁵

351. Whoever makes any gesture,¹ or any preparation,² intending or knowing it to be likely that such gesture or preparation will cause any person present to apprehend that he who makes that gesture or preparation is about to use criminal force to that person, is said to commit an assault.

*Explanation.*³—Mere words do not amount to an assault. But the words which a person uses may give to his gestures or preparations such a meaning as may make those gestures or preparations amount to an assault.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A shakes his fist at Z, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that A is about to strike Z. A has committed an assault.

(b) A begins to unloose the muzzle of a ferocious dog, intending, or knowing it to be likely, that he may thereby cause Z to believe that he is about to cause the dog to attack Z. A has committed an assault upon Z.

¹ Lock, (1872) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 10, 14.

² Jai Ram, (1914) 12 A. L. J. R. 154.

³ Ganpati, (1892) Unrep. Cr. C. 605.

⁴ Jai Dyal, (1876) P. B. No. 21 of 1876.

⁵ Gokal, (1922) 45 All. 142.

(c) A takes up a stick, saying to Z, "I will give you a beating." Here, though the words used by A could in no case amount to an assault, and though the mere gesture, unaccompanied by any other circumstances, might not amount to an assault, the gesture explained by the words may amount to an assault.

COMMENT.

... personal violence, that constitutes
...
so that ...
ped, then, this is an assault in point ...
he is stopped, ... his blow to take effect.

Assault : ... criminal force, the force ... assist in an attempt or offer by a person having ... hurt
... person of another. And it is committed whenever ... ended
... already partially or fully put in motion is created. ... of criminal force.²

English law.—An assault consists in an attempt or offer by a person having present ability, with force, to do any hurt or violence to the person of another. Striking at another with a cane, stick, or fist, although the blow misses, drawing a sword or bayonet, or throwing a bottle or glass with intent to wound or strike, presenting a loaded gun at a man within range, or any other act indicating an intention to use violence against the person of another, is an assault. Battery is defined to be "any least hurt or violence unlawfully and wilfully or culpably done to the person of another."

Ingredients.—The section requires two things—

1. Making of any gesture or preparation by a person in the presence of another.

2. Intention or knowledge of likelihood that such gesture or preparation will cause the person present to apprehend that the person making it is about to use criminal force to him.

1. 'Makes any gesture or preparation.'—See ill. (a) which illustrates that gestures which cause a person to apprehend that the person making them is about to use criminal force amount to an assault. It is an assault to point a loaded pistol at anyone.³

See ill. (b) as to 'preparation.' Though mere preparation to commit a crime is not punishable (see Comment on s. 511, infra) yet preparation with the intention specified in this section amounts to an assault.

2. 'Intending or knowing it to be likely, etc.'—Intention is the gist of the offence. The gesture or preparation must be of such a nature that the person in whose presence it is made should apprehend that criminal force would be used to him. Throwing a bottle into a house, among the inmates, with the intention of hurting or frightening them, constitutes assault.⁴

Where one of the accused hit a constable and the others surrounded the constable in a threatening manner, it was held that this finding was not sufficient to convict the others of assault.⁵

The appellant met the respondent in the street and tendered him an order for discovery, which had been made against the respondent in a County Court action, the appellant acting on behalf of the solicitor to the other party to the action. The respondent refused to accept the document, and the appellant thrust

¹ Stephens v. Myers, (1830) 4 C. & P. 319.

² M. & M. 309.

³ Jeremiah James, (1855) 1 C. & K. 520.

⁴ Pu Tau, (1899) 3 L. R. 191.

⁵ Munizaga, (1910) 8 M. L. T. 118.

it into the inner-fold of the respondent's coat. It was held that, as the appellant was entitled to serve the respondent personally, and as there was no evidence that the appellant touched the respondent more than was necessary to bring the document home to the respondent, the appellant was not guilty of an assault on the respondent.¹

Merely words do not amount to an assault, but the words which the party threatening uses at the time may either give his gestures such a meaning as may make them amount to an assault, or, on the other hand, may prevent them from being held to amount to an assault. In the latter case the effect of the words must be such as clearly to show the party threatened that the party threatening has no present intention to use immediate criminal force.² A preparation taken with words which would cause a person to apprehend that criminal force would be used to him, if he persisted in a particular course of conduct, does not amount to an assault. There must be evidence to show that the accused was about to use criminal force to him then and there.³ See ill. (c)

352. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

*Explanation.*¹—Grave and sudden provocation will not mitigate the punishment for an offence under this section, if the provocation is sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for the offence, or if the provocation is given by anything done in obedience to the law, or by a public servant, in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant, or if the provocation is given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.²

Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to mitigate the offence, is a question of fact.

COMMENT.

This section provides punishment for assault or use of criminal force when there are no aggravating circumstances.

1. 'Explanation.'—See Comment on exception 1 to s. 300, p. 623. If there is grave provocation very light punishment is to be inflicted.

2. 'Right of private defence.'—See ss. 96 to 100 and Comment thereon.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made a gesture of preparation to use criminal force.

(2) That the same was made in the presence of the complainant.

(3) That he intended, or knew, that it was likely that such gesture, etc., would cause the complainant to apprehend that such criminal force would be used.

¹ Ross v. Kempthorne, (1910) 22 Cox 356,
27 T. L. R. 132.

² Canal v. Morgan, (1861) 1 R. H. C. 203.
³ Borzel Khalifa, (1902) 29 Cal. 97.

- (4) That such gesture, etc., did cause the complainant to apprehend the same.
 (5) That the accused received no grave or sudden provocation from the complainant.

To substantiate a charge of assault on a particular person, it is not enough to show that the accused and the preparations made by the accused were calculated to cause harm, and that criminal force would be used to him, if he persisted in a course of conduct. There must be evidence to show that the accused was about to use criminal force at the time then and there.¹

Or prove (1) that the accused used force² to the complainant.

- (2) That he did so intentionally.
 (3) That he used such force, without the complainant's consent.
 (4) That he did so in order to commit an offence; or that he thereby intended to cause, or knew that he would thereby be likely to cause, injury, fear or annoyance to the complainant.
 (5) That he received no grave or sudden provocation from the complainant.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

The Punjab Rule.—It has come to notice that Magistrates are apt to confound ss. 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code, and to issue process and convict under the former section in cases in which the complaint is laid under s. 323, and the evidence for the prosecution establishes the fact of violence having been actually used.

2. In some cases this is possibly done purposely, because charges under s. 352 are triable as summons cases, whereas a charge under s. 323 must be tried as a warrant case. The procedure in the former class of cases is, no doubt, easier to the Magistrate; but it is less favourable to the accused, for in warrant cases the Magistrate is bound to call upon the accused for his defence, unless he discharges him (see ss. 253 to 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure), while in a summons case the accused is primarily responsible for the production of his evidence on the day fixed for hearing (s. 214).

3. It is accordingly pointed out that s. 352 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to cases where the offender uses criminal force which actually causes hurt to the person against whom it is displayed, and that such cases fall under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

4. It has been ruled that s. 304-A is inapplicable to cases in which an assault, however petty, is deliberately made, and death ensues. Such cases fall either under s. 302, s. 304, or s. 335, s. 325 or s. 323.³

Autrefois acquit.—A person who is tried and discharged for the offence of using criminal force under this section cannot again, upon the same complaint, be tried for causing hurt, for, under whatever denomination the offence is classed, it is the one offence of assault.⁴

Complaint.—A Munsiff held an enquiry under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and having come to the conclusion that the accused had committed offences under ss. 183 and 352 in connection with certain execution proceedings sent the case to the District Magistrate who transferred it to a Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate acquitted the accused on the ground that there was no sanction. On appeal, the High Court held that with regard to s. 183 the Magistrate ought to have proceeded with the case according to law, and that with regard to s. 352 no sanction was required.⁵

¹ Birbal Khalsi, (1902) 30 Cal. 97.

² Vide s. 349, supra.

³ P. C. C. R. & O., No. 32, Vol. II, p. 201.

⁴ Kaplan v. Smith, (1871) 7 Beng. L. R. App. 25, 16 W. R. (Cr.) 3.

⁵ Arjan Pramanik, (1904) 31 Cal. 664.

Punishment.—A sentence inflicting a fine of Rs. 50, and awarding imprisonment for one month in default of payment of fine, was held to be illegal with reference to s. 65 and this section.¹

353. Whoever assaults¹ or uses criminal force² to any person being a public servant³ in the execution of his duty as such public servant,⁴ or with intent to prevent or deter that person from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by such person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

If hurt is caused under the circumstances mentioned in the section then either s. 332 or s. 333 will apply.

1. 'Assaults.'—See s. 351, supra.

2. 'Criminal force.'—See s. 349, supra.

3. 'Public servant.'—See s. 21, supra.² A pagi who is a village watchman remunerated by fees paid by the villagers is held to be a public servant within the meaning of this section.³ Similarly a lascar in the Public Works Department distributing water from public irrigation channels is a public servant.⁴ The accused cannot claim exoneration on the ground that the person whom he assaulted was not attired in the livery which is ordinarily associated with the duty which he claimed to be discharging, if in fact the accused knew him to be a public servant acting in the execution of his duty as such servant.⁵

4. 'In the execution of his duty as such public servant.'—These words mean in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and do not cover an act done in good faith under colour of his office.⁶ The public servant must be acting in the execution of his duty as such public servant. A commissioner attempting to give possession under a time-expired warrant has no authority to go upon land in the possession of the party, who resists the execution. The persons offering resistance are not guilty of an offence under this section.⁷ A vaccinator who vaccinates in a place where vaccination is not compulsory is not discharging any duty under the law when attempting to vaccinate a child. A person, therefore, who prevents a vaccinator from vaccinating a child, in a place where vaccination has not been made compulsory, cannot be said to be committing an offence under this section.⁸ Where a cart-owner refused to give his cart for the use of a Forest Settlement Officer, who required it as per executive orders of Government, and assaulted the peon in preventing him from seizing his cart, it was held that he could not be convicted of an offence under this section, because the rules aforesaid had not the force of law, and a public servant acting under them was not acting in the execution of his duty.⁹ A Tabsildar deputed his peon by

¹ Jehan Bakh, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr) 142.

² Vide Weir, (3rd Edn.), 203.

³ Aja Narayan, Unreported (Bom.) Criminal Revision No. 377 of 1909, decided on 22nd February 1910. Chandavarkar and Knight, JJ.

⁴ Public Prosecutor of Madras v. Annam Naidu, (1923) 48 Mad. 567.

⁵ Lara, (1916) 13 N. L. R. 67.

⁶ See Dalip, (1896) 16 All. 246; Erman Singh, (1900) 28 Cal. 411, 414; Edna De, (1907) 35 Cal. 361; Ans. (1913) P. L. R. No. 325 of 1913.

⁷ Abinash Chandra Addys v. Ananda Chandra Pal, (1904) 31 Cal. 424; Nandlal, (1923) 19 N. L. R. 183.

⁸ Boragellaya, (1909) 19 M. L. J. P., 238.

⁹ Pathmaji, (1885) 9 Bom. 258.

a written order to procure some camels for the camp of the Settlement Officer. When the peon attempted to seize the camels of the accused he was assaulted by the accused and prevented from seizing the camels. It was held that the accused had committed no offence.¹ The Collector has no authority to issue a distress warrant to a police-officer under the Income Tax Act of 1922 for arrears of income-tax. A police-officer executing such a warrant is not acting in the execution of his duty as a police-officer, and resistance to him does not constitute an offence under this section.² A police constable, at midnight, entered upon the premises of a person who was regarded by the police as a suspicious character, and knocked at his door to ascertain if he was there, whereupon he came out and abused and pushed the constable and lifted a stick as if he were about to hit the constable with it. On a complaint being preferred under this section of using criminal force to deter a public servant in the execution of his duty, it was held that no offence had been committed. The constable was not engaged in the execution of his duty as a public servant and was technically guilty of house-trespass and his action was calculated to cause annoyance to the inmates of the house, and was insulting to the accused, who was justified in causing the slight harm which he had inflicted on the constable.³

Where a Collector's peon was deputed to keep the peace during a distraint, and, when on the road to execute the order, was assaulted by the accused who attempted to deprive him of his perwana, it was held that the accused had committed an offence under this section.⁴ A warrant of arrest was issued against R, on a charge of cheating, to the Sub-Inspector within whose jurisdiction R resided. That officer ordered his subordinate constables to be on the look-out for R and arrest him wherever found. One of the constables came across R and proceeded to arrest him informing him of the issue of a warrant against him. The warrant itself was, however, not produced. The accused interfered with the constable in arresting R and managed to prevent his arrest. It was held that under s. 54 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code the constable was empowered to make the arrest without warrant as he had credible information that the person wanted had committed a cognizable offence and in making the arrest he was occupied in the discharge of his duty as a police-officer and any interference with that arrest amounted to obstructing a police-officer in the discharge of his duty and was an offence under this section.⁵ If the act of the public servant is authorized by law any resistance will be deemed penal, e.g., assaulting a public servant carrying on a search,⁶ or executing a writ of delivery of possession,⁷ or resisting a public servant directed to survey the accused's land.⁸

CASES

Defect in a warrant.—Where the warrant for the arrest of a person, in execution of a civil process, was not signed in full under s. 251 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but was initialled by the officer issuing it, and was resisted by that person when the officer to whom it was entrusted sought to execute it, it was held that the person was guilty under this section, and the preliminary defect of the warrant formed no defence.⁹ It was held similarly where the provisions of s. 82 of the Civil Procedure Code were not complied with before the issuing of a warrant under which

¹ Ana, (1913) P. L. R. No. 325 of 1913. The case of Amir Khan, (1913) P. L. R. No. 183 of 1913, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 19 of 1913, seems to be of doubtful authority.

² Jairam Sahu, (1923) 4 P. L. T. 171.

³ Dorasamy Pillai, (1903) 27 Mad. 52.

⁴ Methi Mullak, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 49; Kandavrami Goundan, (1923) 46 M. L. J. 45. See Ramasami, (1889) 13 Mad. 131.

⁵ Gopal Singh, (1913) 36 All. 6; Prakash Chandri Kundu, (1914) 41 Cal. 536.

⁶ Bissar Misser, (1913) 41 Cal. 261.

⁷ Preo Lal Muljerjee, (1913) 18 C. W. N. 548.

⁸ Judogi Raut, (1916) 2 P. L. J. 18, 3 P. L. W. 429.

⁹ Janak Prasad, (1886) 8 All. 293. See Duxan Singh, (1885) 5 A. W. N. 244; Narasinghban, Weir (3rd Edn.) 204; Lakshmana Goundan, (1883) 1 Weir 343; Perumalu, (1885) 1 Weir 344; Abdul Gafur, (1896) 23 Cal. 896; Bankey Behary Singh, (1918) 3 P. L. J. 493.

the accused was arrested but rescued by his friends.¹ But if the warrant issued to a constable to arrest a person is invalid, as, for instance, where it is signed by an Honorary Magistrate who is not the presiding officer under s. 75, Criminal Procedure Code, the person against whom it is issued cannot be convicted under this section if with the assistance of other persons he manages to free himself from the constable and escapes.² But a warrant of execution which does not bear a date on or before which it should be executed is not a good warrant.³ A warrant issued by a Revenue Officer for the arrest of a defaulting witness, which does not contain the name of the person to be arrested, is illegal, and persons assaulting the public servant to help the witness to escape are not guilty of an offence under this section.⁴

Search without a proper order or warrant.—Where the accused resisted a public officer who attempted to search a house, in the absence of a proper written order authorizing him to do so, he was held to have committed no offence under this section.⁵ But a search without a search warrant was held not to justify an obstruction or resistance to an officer, if he was acting in good faith and without malice.⁶

Unlawful act of a public servant is a good defence.—Where a licensed vaccinator attempted to take lymph from a child of one petitioner to vaccinate the child of the other, and was assaulted in consequence and received slight injuries, it was held that he was not entitled to take lymph from the arm of any person who objected, ... rvant with ity of assaulting a public servant under this section.⁸ An Excise peon with the avowed object of seeing if chandul (a smoking mixture of opium) was not being manufactured ascended the stairs of accused No. 1's house and looked into the place where the accused No. 1 and his wife were sitting. The accused No. 1 on perceiving him came to the door, and shoved him down the stairs and followed him, when accused No. 2 came in and hit him. It was found that the peon was not injured in any way. The accused were convicted under s. 353. It was held that the conviction was illegal. The accused No. 1 was justified in turning out the peon for he was not authorized to enter the premises of the accused even with the object of seeing if chandul was being manufactured.⁹ Where a surveillance on a domiciliary visit being paid to him by a police-officer, refused to allow his thumb impression to be taken, and, on the officer attempting to take it, produced a club saying he would not allow the impression to be taken, and, if anyone asked for it, he would break his head, it was held that the act of the surveillance did not amount to an assault and that his conviction under this section could not be sustained.¹⁰ Where, under a warrant authorising distraint of the property of a person who had defaulted to pay water-tax, the person executing the warrant attempted to distrain the property of the lessee of the defaulter and was assaulted by the lessee, it was held that the lessee could not be convicted under this section.¹¹

¹ Narbadeshwar, (1903) 27 All. 491.

² Jagjit Aeri, (1917) 1 P. L. W. 300.

³ Mohini Mohan Banerji, (1916) 3 P. L. W. 64.

⁴ Jayendra Nath v. Hiralal, (1924) 51 Cal. 902.

⁵ Narain, (1875) 7 N. W. P. 204; Jagjit Nath Mandhata, (1887) 1 C. W. N. 233; Mahesh Sonar, (1915) 13 A. L. J. 1201.

⁶ Patel Aker, (1890) 19 Mad. 349. See also Poomalai Lalgan, (1895) 21 Mad. 275.

⁷ Manjundh Mucki, (1899) 3 C. W. N. 627; Nuranga Singh, (1900) 5 C. W. N. 134; Bahal, (1900) 3 A. L. J. 327.

⁸ Pitamba Aker, (1900) 1 Weir 345.

⁹ Alia Bakhsh, (1904) P. L. R. No. 105 of 1904.

¹⁰ Ertul Khalifa, (1902) 50 Cal. 97.

¹¹ Mahimpati Narasimam v. Sub Inspector of Police, (1924) 47 M. L. J. 447.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person assaulted, etc., was a public servant.
 (3) That the accused assaulted, or used criminal force to such public servant.
 (3) That when the accused assaulted, etc., him, he was acting in the execution of his duty as such public servant; ~~or~~ that such assault, etc., was committed with intent to prevent or deter such Provision. C. S. 302. W. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829. 830. 831. 832. 833. 834. 835. 836. 837. 838. 839. 840. 841. 842. 843. 844. 845. 846. 847. 848. 849. 850. 851. 852. 853. 854. 855. 856. 857. 858. 859. 860. 861. 862. 863. 864. 865. 866. 867. 868. 869. 870. 871. 872. 873. 874. 875. 876. 877. 878. 879. 880. 881. 882. 883. 884. 885. 886. 887. 888. 889. 890. 891. 892. 893. 894. 895. 896. 897. 898. 899. 900. 901. 902. 903. 904. 905. 906. 907. 908. 909. 910. 911. 912. 913. 914. 915. 916. 917. 918. 919. 920. 921. 922. 923. 924. 925. 926. 927. 928. 929. 930. 931. 932. 933. 934. 935. 936. 937. 938. 939. 940. 941. 942. 943. 944. 945. 946. 947. 948. 949. 950. 951. 952. 953. 954. 955. 956. 957. 958. 959. 960. 961. 962. 963. 964. 965. 966. 967. 968. 969. 970. 971. 972. 973. 974. 975. 976. 977. 978. 979. 980. 981. 982. 983. 984. 985. 986. 987. 988. 989. 990. 991. 992. 993. 994. 995. 996. 997. 998. 999. 1000.

public officer in the discharge of his duties, on failure of that charge, be convicted of an offence of having assaulted a private individual, viz., a witness in the case, especially in the absence of a complaint by that private individual.¹

Sanction.—A charge under this section requires no sanction for initiation of proceedings.²

Non-production of warrant at the trial.—One of the accused was convicted under this section, and two others of abetment of an offence under it. But the warrant of attachment under which the public servant was acting was not produced at the trial, nor was any secondary evidence given to show its contents. It was held that in the absence of any evidence as to the terms of the warrant either by the production of the original or in the form of secondary evidence, it was impossible to hold that the conviction was good.³

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about [date], at [place], did [describe the offence] to AB, a public servant, servant [or with intent to such public servant] and [describe the offence] under [section] of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

354. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any woman, intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Assault or criminal force to woman with intent to outrage her modesty.

COMMENT.

An indecent assault upon a woman is punished under this section.⁴ Rape is punished under s. 376. The offence under this section is of less gravity than the one under s. 376.

Scope.—Assaults committed with the intention to commit rape are not contemplated by this section.

1. 'Woman' is defined as a female human being of any age (s. 10). The accused took a girl of six years to his room, where he made her lie down and he lay on her. The girl immediately screamed and ran away. For this act the accused was convicted and sentenced by the Magistrate under s. 352 and not under this

¹ Atter Women, (1901) 6 C. W. N. 202.

² Deja Prasad, (1901) 31 Cal. 681.

³ Tajmal Ahmed Chaudhry, (1900) 25 Cal.

630; Chander Coomar Sen, (1899) 3 C. W. N. 603; Singh Ko, (1903) 3 L. B. P. 123.

⁴ Stankar, (1911) 5 Bom. 423.

section, on the ground that the girl was too young to have any modesty. It was held that the act of the accused was punishable under this section, for the girl, though young, was a 'woman' as defined by s. 10.¹

2. 'Intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty.'—There must be intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. What constitutes an outrage to female modesty is nowhere defined. This will differ according to the country and the race to which the woman belongs. It would be an outrage to the modesty of one woman to do to her what would be thought nothing of by another. A kiss that would be highly resented by a lady might be no affront to the maid.² To place hands on the shoulder of a woman will be an outrage on the modesty of a Hindu or a Mahomedan woman, but not a European.³

Knowledge that modesty is likely to be outraged is sufficient to constitute the offence without any deliberate intention having such outrage alone for its object. For instance, the pulling of a woman by the arm coupled with a request for sexual intercourse amounts to an offence under this section.⁴

CASES.

Where a master took indecent liberties with a female scholar it was held he was guilty of assault though she did not resist.⁵ Making a female patient strip naked under the pretence that the accused, a medical man, could not otherwise judge of her illness was held to be an assault.⁶ But where the evidence showed that the accused stripped a girl of eighteen or twenty nearly naked and was lying upon her when her cries attracted people to the spot, the accused was liable under s. 376 for attempt to commit rape and not under this section.⁷

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person assaulted, etc., was a female.

(2) That the accused assaulted or used criminal force to her.

(3) That he intended thereby to outrage her modesty; or that he knew it to be likely that he would thereby outrage her modesty.

The charge under this section is one which is very easy to make and very difficult to rebut, and when such a charge is made it is necessary to see whether it is supported by independent evidence besides that of the woman herself, or is corroborated by her conduct and the surrounding circumstances and is consistent with ordinary probabilities.⁸

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate, of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, assaulted [or used criminal force to] AB, a woman, intending to outrage [or knowing it to be likely that you would thereby outrage] the modesty of the said AB by such assault [or criminal force], and thereby committed an offence under s. 354 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

¹ Tatia Mahadev, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 961, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 205.

² 1st Rep., s. 413.

³ George Evans, (1906) Unreported (Bombay) Criminal Application for Revision No. 58 of 1906, decided on the 10th April 1906. Per Jenkins, C. J., and Aston, J.

⁴ Sena Shetty, (1890) 1 Weir 347.

⁵ John Nichol, (1807) R. & R. 130; McCavaran, (1852) 6 Cox 64.

⁶ Peter Rozinski, (1824) 1 Mood. Cr. C. 19.

⁷ Khadam, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 42 of 1910.

⁸ Nga Aung Duce, (1894) 1 U.B. R (1892-1896) 229.

Punishment.—See the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

355. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, intending thereby to dishonour that person, otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation¹ given by that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Assault or criminal force with intent to dishonour person, otherwise than on grave provocation.

COMMENT.

The intention to dishonour may be supposed to exist when the assault or criminal force is by means of gross insults, such as kicking a man, pulling a man's nose, assaulting with a shoe, or laying a whip across the shoulders.

Where an accused, while under trial, struck a Sub-Inspector of Police, who was in the witness-box giving evidence against him, it was held that he was guilty of an offence under this section.²

1. 'Grave and sudden provocation.'—See exception 1 to s. 300, p. 629.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the assault or use of criminal force by the accused.

(2) That the accused intended thereby to dishonour the person assaulted, etc.

(3) That he did not receive grave or sudden provocation from the person so assaulted, etc.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, assaulted [or used criminal force to] AB, intending by such assault [or criminal force] to dishonour the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 355 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

356. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, in attempting¹ to commit theft² on any property which that person is then wearing or carrying, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Assault or criminal force in attempt to commit theft of property carried by a person.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section applies to cases of using criminal force in an attempt to commit theft and not to those cases in which theft has been actually committed.² It provides a separate punishment for the rare case of criminal force used in an attempt to commit theft, and yet not amounting to robbery.

The section will generally apply to pickpockets.

1. 'Attempting.'—See s. 511, infra.

2. 'Theft.'—See s. 378, infra.

¹ Alaf Khan, (1907) 47 A. W. N. 166

² Mukun, (1863) Unrep. Cr. C. 3.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the assault or use of criminal force by the accused.

(2) That the person assaulted, etc., at the time, was wearing, or carrying the property in question.

(3) That the accused committed such assault, etc., in attempting to commit theft of such property (vide ss. 511 and 378).

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, assaulted [or used criminal force to] AB in attempting to commit theft of certain property, to wit—, which the said AB was then wearing [or carrying], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 356 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

357. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, in attempting¹ wrongfully to confine² that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Assault or criminal force in attempt wrongfully to confine a person.

COMMENT.

This section deals with an assault committed in attempting wrongfully to confine a person.

1. 'Attempting.'—See s. 511, infra.

2. 'Wrongfully to confine.'—See s. 340, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the assault, or use of criminal force by the accused.

(2) That he did so in an attempt to wrongfully confine the person assaulted, etc.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, assaulted [or used criminal force to] AB, in attempting wrongfully to confine the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 357 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

358. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person

Assault or criminal force on grave provocation.

on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—The last section is subject to the same explanation as section 352.

COMMENT.

This is a somewhat mitigated form of the offence described in s. 352.

The Explanation is not happily worded. The expression 'the last section' is incorrect. The purport of the Explanation is that this section is subject to the same Explanation as s. 352.

PRACTICE.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Summary trial.

Of Kidnapping, Abduction, Slavery and Forced Labour.

359. Kidnapping is of two kinds: kidnapping from British India, and kidnapping from lawful guardianship.

COMMENT.

Kidnapping is divided into two kinds. But there may be cases in which the two kinds overlap each other. For instance, a minor may be kidnapped from British India as well as from his lawful guardianship.

360. Whoever conveys any person beyond the limits of British India¹ without the consent² of that person, or of some person legally authorized to consent on behalf of that person, is said to kidnap that person from British India.

Kidnapping from British India.

COMMENT.

The offence of kidnapping is sometimes committed by means of assault, and is sometimes attended with restraint; but this is not always the case. For instance, a labourer who has been induced to embark on board a ship by false assurances that he shall be taken to a country where he shall have good wages, but whom the captain of the ship intends to sell for a slave, has not as yet been either assaulted or retained although he is kidnapped.

Ingredients.—This section requires two essentials—

1. Conveying of any person beyond the limits of British India.
2. Such conveying must be without the consent of that person.

1. 'Conveys any person beyond the limits of British India.'—This offence may be committed on a grown-up person or a minor by conveying him or her beyond the limits of 'British India.'

See s. 15, supra, as to the definition of 'British India.'

2. 'Without the consent of that person.'—The conveying must be without the consent, express or implied, of the person conveyed. Where the accused induced certain women to leave British India for Ceylon on the misrepresentation that they were to be married to his sons, and after arriving at Ceylon made them work as coolies on a tea estate, it was held that the women must be held to have been taken without their consent and that the accused was guilty of kidnapping from British India.¹

A person kidnapping a girl of fifteen years of age out of British India with her consent does not come within the purview of this section.²

See s. 90, supra, as to the definition of 'consent.'

¹ Periaswami Kanganai, (1910) 6 M. L. T. 91, [1910] M. W. N. 262.

² Haribhai Dada, (1918) 20 Bom. L. R. 372, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 227.

361. Whoever takes or entices any minor¹ under fourteen years of age, if a male, or under sixteen years of age, if a female,² or any person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian³ of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian,⁴ is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship.

Explanation.—The words “lawful guardian” in this section include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of such minor or other person.

Exception.—This section does not extend to the act of any person who in good faith believes himself to be the father of an illegitimate child, or who in good faith believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose.

COMMENT:

Object.—The object of this section is at least as much to protect children of tender age from being abducted or seduced for improper purposes, as for the protection of the rights of parents and guardians having the lawful charge or custody of minors or insane persons.

Under English law this offence is known as ‘child-stealing.’

Scope.—Kidnapping is an offence irrespective of any intent with which it is committed. It may be committed without assault or wrongful restraint or confinement. A child, for example, who is decoyed from its guardian, who soon forgets its home, and who consents to remain with the kidnapper, cannot be said to have been assaulted or restrained. This offence may be committed in respect of either a minor or a person of unsound mind. To kidnap a grown up person, therefore, is not this offence¹

Ingredients.—The section has four essentials—

1. Taking or enticing away a minor or a person of unsound mind.
2. Such minor must be under fourteen years of age, if a male, or under sixteen years of age, if a female.
3. The taking or enticing must be out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind.
4. Such taking or enticing must be without the consent of such guardian.

1. ‘Takes or entices any minor...or person of unsound mind.’—The taking need not be by force, actual or constructive, and it is immaterial whether the girl consents or not.² There must be a taking of the child out of the possession of the parent. If a child leaves its parents’ house for a particular purpose with their consent, it cannot be said to be out of the parents’ keeping. A mere leading of a not unwilling child will be sufficient.

The period of detention is immaterial to the offence. Where, therefore, it was proved that the accused having met a girl by arrangement, stayed with her away from her father’s house for three days, sleeping with her at night; and that he took her away without her father’s consent and against his will, in order to gratify his passions and then allowed her to return home, but not with a view of keeping her away from her home permanently, it was held that he was guilty of this offence.³

¹ (1867) 6 W. R. (Cr. L.) 11.

² Manitowoc, (1853) 6 Cox 143.

³ Timmins, (1860) 8 Cox 401; Baillie, (1859)

8 Cox 238. But see Hibert. (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 184.

If a girl under sixteen has been found in the streets by herself and seduced away, that is not a taking out of the possession of the father, even though he is living in the place and she lives with him.¹ If a man, by previous promises to a girl as to what he will do if she will leave her parents' house and go to live with him, induces her at length to do so, and then receives and harbours her secretly, he is guilty of taking her out of the possession of her parents.²

It is not necessary to show a trespass or any thing of that nature in the taking, other than the act of taking.³

Bramwell, B., in stating the law on the subject, said: "I am of opinion that if a young woman leaves her father's house without any persuasion, inducement, or blandishment held out to her by a man, so that she has got fairly away from home, and then goes to him, although it may be his moral duty to return her to her parents' custody, yet his not doing so is no infringement of this Act of Parliament, for the Act does not say he shall restore her, but only that he shall not take her away. It is, however, equally clear that, if the girl, acting under his persuasion, leaves her father's house, although he is not present at the moment, yet, if he avails himself of that leaving which took place at his persuasion that would be a taking her out of her father's possession, because the persuasion would be the motive cause of her leaving. Again, although she may not leave at the appointed time, and although he may not wish that she should have left at that particular time, yet if, finding she has left, he avails himself of that to induce her to continue away from her father's custody, in my judgment he is also guilty, if his persuasion operated on her mind so as to induce her to leave."⁴

If the suggestion to go away with the accused came from the girl only, and he took the merely passive part of yielding to such suggestion, he is entitled to an acquittal.⁵

'When taking is complete.'—A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has decided that the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from lawful guardianship; it is not an offence continuing so long as the minor is kept out of such guardianship. The act of taking is not, in the proper sense of the term, a continuous act; when once the boy or girl has been actually taken out of the keeping, the act is a completed one.⁶

The Madras High Court is of opinion that so long as the process of taking the minor out of the keeping of his lawful guardian continued, the offence of kidnapping might be abetted.⁷ In the above Calcutta case this ruling has been distinguished on the ground that this was a case of kidnapping out of British India and, as, when the accused in this case intervened, the minor had not been actually taken out of British India, the process of taking was regarded as still going on, or continuing. In a later case the ruling in the above-mentioned Calcutta case has been approved of.⁸

The Allahabad High Court has laid down that the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence.⁹ The offence is completed as soon as the minor is actually taken out of the custody of his or her guardian and is not an offence continuing as long as the minor is kept out of such guardianship. There can be no abetment of this offence in such a case on the hypothesis that the offence is a continuing one.¹⁰ But if there is a conspiracy before the kidnapping takes place, a conviction for abetment of kidnapping can be sustained.¹¹

¹ Green, (1862) 3 F. & F. 274, followed in Hibbert, (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 184; Primett, (1858) 1 F. & F. 60.

² Robb, (1864) 4 F. & F. 59; George Kipps, (1850) 4 Cox 167.

³ Fraser, (1861) 8 Cox 440.

⁴ Christian Officer, (1866) 10 Cox 402, 404.

⁵ James Jarvis, (1902) 20 Cox 249. See Ngā San Hwang, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 205.

⁶ Nema's Chatteraj, (1900) 27 Cal. 1041, F. R.

⁷ Samin Kaundan, (1876) 1 Mad. 173.

⁸ Chekultu, (1902) 26 Mad. 451.

⁹ Ram Dei, (1896) 13 All. 350; Ram Sundar, (1896) 13 All. 109.

¹⁰ Abdur Rahman, (1916) 38 All. 684.

¹¹ Followed in Gokaran, (1920) 24 O. C. 329.

¹² Tika, (1903) 26 All. 177.

The former Chief Court of the Punjab took the same view as the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts. It said that there could be no abetment of kidnapping by conduct, which commenced only after the minor had once been completely taken out of the keeping of the guardian and the guardian's keeping of the minor was consequently at an end, the question whether such taking was or was not complete being one for determination with reference to the circumstances proved in the particular case.¹ Speaking generally, the keeping of the guardian will be at an end when the person of the minor has been transferred from the custody of the guardian or some person on his behalf into the custody of some person not entitled to the custody of the minor.² The offence of kidnapping not being a continuing one there could be no abetment of the taking after the minor had once been completely taken out of the keeping of her lawful guardian.³

'Enticing' is an act of the accused by which the person kidnapped is induced of his own accord to go to the kidnapper. It is not necessary that the taking or enticing should be shown to have been by means of force or fraud.⁴ For instance, the enticing away of a child playing on a public road is sufficient.⁵

'Minor.'—This word includes married as well as unmarried female minors.⁶ According to Mahomedan law the occurrence of puberty determines minority and the mother's right to custody, but for the purpose of this section regard must be had only to the definition of minority in s. 3, Indian Majority Act.⁷

2. 'Under sixteen years of age.'—A person is said to be under sixteen years of age when he or she is under sixteen years of age at the time of the offence, or when he or she is of a greater age, but has not yet attained the age of sixteen years, or when he or she turns out to be under sixteen he must take the consequences⁸; even though he bona fide believed and had reasonable ground for believing that she was over sixteen.¹⁰

3. 'Out of the keeping of the lawful guardian.'—"The Legislature has advisedly preferred this phrase to the word 'possession' which frequently recurs in the Code—in connection with inanimate objects. The word 'keeping'...connotes the fact that it is compatible with independence of action and movement in the object kept. It implies neither prehension nor detention but rather maintenance, protection and control, manifested not by continual action but as available on necessity arising. And this relation between the minor and the guardian is...certainly not dissolved so long as the minor can at will take advantage of it and place herself within the sphere of its operation."¹¹ Similarly, where a girl was driven away from her parental roof and was found some days after in the company of the accused, no offence was held to have been committed.¹²

There must be a taking or enticing of a child out of the keeping of the lawful guardian without his consent. Where, therefore, a girl runs away from home in consequence of ill-treatment, and, on meeting the accused on the road, agrees to take service as a cooly and goes with him, this offence is not committed.¹³

A child under ten years of age is, prima facie, subject to guardianship, and any one removing such child without permission properly obtained takes the risk

¹ Chanda, (1892) P. R. No. 6 of 1894; Muhammad Balish, (1892) P. R. No. 8 of 1894.

² Gurdil Singh, (1916) P. W. R. No. 25 of 1916, P. L. R. No. 55 of 1916.

³ Durga Das, (1904) P. R. No. 13 of 1904.

⁴ Bhawpre Akur, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

⁵ Amjad Begum, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

⁶ Koondan Singh, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 15.

⁷ Musammat Oozernun, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 62 (1867).

⁸ Kamru, (1878) P. R. No. 12 of 1878.

⁹ Muthu Ilachi, (1813) 37 Mad. 567.

¹⁰ Polins, (1844) 1 C. & K. 456.

¹¹ Christian Oliver, (1866) 10 Cox 402; Myrick, (1871) 12 Cox 28.

¹² P. R. No. 12 of 1878.

¹³ Pandeyram Sastrulu, (1912) M. W. N. 538.

¹⁴ Gunder Singh, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 6.

of such act upon himself; the fact of having omitted to inquire whether the child has a guardian or not is no defence.¹

If the minor is not in the custody of a lawful guardian the offence cannot be committed whatever the belief of the taker may be.² If a minor girl leaves the protection of her husband and parents of her free will or voluntarily, and subsequently stays with another man of her own accord, that man will not be guilty of taking her out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor.³

In the case of a grown-up person of unsound mind there must be evidence of some kind of persuasion or moral force as a result of which he was taken out of the protection of his guardian.⁴

'Lawful guardian.'—The word 'lawful' does not necessarily mean that the person who entrusts a minor to the care or custody of another must stand in the position of a person having a legal duty or obligation to the minor. It is a sufficient compliance with the section and its Explanation if the entrusting of the minor to the care of another is effected without illegality or the commission of any unlawful act by a person legally competent to do so.⁵ The explanation of these words is intended to obviate the difficulty the prosecution might be put to in being bound to prove strictly, in cases of abduction, that the person from whose care the minor had been abducted was the guardian of such minor within the meaning of the legal acceptance of the word.⁶ But it must be shown that the minor was abducted from lawful guardianship, and lawful guardianship is the guardianship of a person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. A girl of fourteen years, being left an orphan, accompanied a woman to a town where they lived by begging and selling grass. She was persuaded by a man G to depart with him without the knowledge of the woman. She remained with him for some months and was betrothed to one of his sons. One B persuaded her to quit G's house and to go with him. This she did. B was, thereupon, convicted of an offence under s. 363. The High Court quashed the conviction on the ground that G was not the lawful guardian of the minor as he had not been lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of her.⁷

"The explanation... is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors. It is intended to extend that protection by including in the term 'lawful guardian' any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant or friend, for a limited purpose and for a limited time, cannot... determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purposes of the criminal law... the Court must consider all the facts and see whether they are consistent or not with the continuance of the father's legal possession of the minor. If the facts are not inconsistent, the minor must be held to be in the father's possession or keeping even though the actual physical possession should be temporarily with a friend or other person."⁸ De facto guardianship is sufficient.⁹ The term 'lawful guardian' does not include a person who has himself gained possession of the minor by an offence under this section. But it does include, not only the parents or relations in whose house the minor lives and is brought up, but any other person with whom the minor resides by the consent, express or implied, of those who have the higher legal right. Thus, a husband of a minor girl, under sixteen years of age, sold her to another while she was living with that man she decided on 21

¹ *Uma*² *HardKhuda Ba*³ *RamEuz Ali*⁴ Abdul

(Bom.) Crim

nd Shah, J.

3 Bom. 178

No. 7

No. 27

A. L. J.

tella,

86 of tt,

⁵ Mussammal Kesar, (1918) 4 P. L. J. 74.Pema

ulde

r.

8 Cal. 871.

W. P. 286.

in Jagannadha Rao v.Mad. 284, 291 *Baz.*v. Narayana Sastri, was persuaded by the accused to leave his house and to go away with a third man, it was held that for the purpose of this section the person to whom the girl was sold was the lawful guardian of the girl and that the accused was consequently guilty of kidnapping her from lawful guardianship.¹

L. J. 185.

Explanation.—The word 'entrusted' means the giving, handing over, or confiding of something by one person to another. It involves the idea of active power and motive by the person reposing the confidence towards the person in whom the confidence is reposed. For an entrusting, within the meaning of this explanation, there must necessarily be three persons, viz., (1) the person reposing the confidence or trust; (2) the person in whom the trust is reposed; and (3) the person constituting the subject-matter of the trust. This Explanation contemplates a declaration of trust by a person competent to make such a declaration, conveying, handing over and confiding a minor to the care and custody of another in whom a confidence and trust is imposed. It is necessary for the person accepting the trust to do so either by express assent, or by necessary implication arising from tacit acquiescence in the performance of the trust. Neither the declaration of trust nor its acceptance need be necessarily in writing; it is sufficient if the declaration is verbally made and given, or if it arises from a course of conduct consistent only with the existence of such antecedent declaration, and accepted verbally or by necessary implication arising from the conduct of the person so entrusted with the duty imposed.²

Hindu law.—A father is the guardian of his children and is ordinarily entitled to their custody. A mother cannot have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adversely to the father. Ordinarily, the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the right of the father as guardian, and not as taking out of his keeping. If a mother removes a girl from her father's house for the express purpose of marrying her without his consent, it will a-

of the
from the mother. If he does so he will be guilty of kidnapping.⁴ The taking away of a minor Hindu girl from the custody of a person in temporary charge of her by major male relation of the minor and such a relationship would not in law be a defence to a charge of kidnapping a minor from the custody of a de facto guardian.⁵

The mother is the natural guardian of her minor children after the father, if the father has not appointed any one else as their guardian.⁶

The mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture. And where the mother, on her death-bed, entrusts the care of such child to a person who accepts the trust and maintains the child, such a person is "lawfully entrusted" with the care and custody of the minor.⁷

The husband is the lawful guardian of a girl after marriage. The husband of a Hindu girl of fifteen is her lawful guardian; and, if the father of the minor takes away the girl from her husband, without the latter's consent, such taking

¹ Fatti, (1911) P. R. No. 7 of 1911.

² Musammal Kesar, (1918) 4 P. L. J. 74.

³ Prankrishna Surma, (1882) 8 Cal. 969.

⁴ See Dhara Singh v. Musammal Kahn, (1877)

P. R. No. 8 of 1878.

⁵ Damodardas Kuberdas Soni, (1917) Crim.

Appln. for Revision No. 313 of 1917, decided by Heaton and Shah, JJ., on 30th November 1917.

away amounts to kidnapping from lawful guardianship even though the father may have had no criminal intention in so doing.¹

The husband's relations, if any exist, within the degree of a sapinda are guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father or his relations. If a minor widow has taken up her residence with her husband's mother, the husband's mother is the lawful guardian of the girl.²

A minor brother cannot be the guardian of his sister and cannot therefore maintain a complaint for kidnapping.³

Mahomedan law.—Under Mahomedan law, if the father take away a son under seven years; or a daughter under puberty, if Sunni, or under seven years, if Shiah, or an illegitimate child from the custody of the mother, he can be said to kidnap his own child: because the mother is by law the lawful guardian.⁴ According to Sunni law, the mother is the guardian of the minor daughter till she reaches puberty which is presumed when the daughter completes her fifteenth year. Even a divorced wife is entitled to the custody of her children.⁵ In the absence of mother, mother's mother is the lawful guardian of a girl who has not attained puberty.

The husband becomes the guardian of his wife after she attains puberty.⁶ The husband is not the lawful guardian of her person before puberty. In the absence of any evidence that a lawful guardian entrusted the custody of a Mahomedan minor girl to her husband, a person cannot be convicted for kidnapping her from the custody of her husband. Where the maternal uncle of a minor girl carried her away from her husband's house by force, it was held that, in the absence of evidence to prove that the husband was lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of the girl, the maternal uncle had committed no offence.⁷

The mother is the natural guardian of her illegitimate children.

Other nationalities.—In the case of Europeans, Parsis, and Native Christians the father has the preferential right to the guardianship of minor children.

In the case of illegitimate children, under the English law, neither the father nor the mother has a preferential right. During the period of nurture the mother would naturally be preferred,⁸ but after that period the putative father would have the preference.⁹

4. "Without the consent of such guardian."—The consent of the minor is immaterial.¹⁰

Consent given by the guardian after the commission of the offence would be of no avail. Where a temporary guardian is proved to have been in collusion with the other party, and the taking away is accomplished in consequence of such collusion, there could be no such consent of the lawful guardian as the section requires.¹¹ The English Courts have held that by the fraud of the temporary guardian the right to possession of the child reverts to the natural guardian.

A consent given on a misrepresentation of a fact is one given under a misconception of fact within the meaning of s. 90, and as such is not useful as a consent under this section. A misrepresentation as to intention of a person is a mis-

¹ Dhuronidhur Ghose, (1889) 17 Cal. 298; Behari Maharaj, (1906) 1 P. W. R. (Cr. J.) 14

² Tek Chand, (1915) P. R. No. 27 of 1915.

³ Mam Raj, (1921) 3 L. J. 588.

⁴ Muast. Raj Begum v. Nawab Reza Hossein, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr. Rul.) 76; Nur Kadir v. Zuleikha Bibi, (1885) 11 Cal. 649; Hamid Ali v. Imhazan, (1878) 2 All. 71; Idu v. Amiran, (1886) 8 All. 322.

⁵ Ayubabai, (1904) 6 Bom. L. R. 536; Zarnabibi v. Abdul Rezzak Nakhshband, (1910) 12 Bom. L. R. 891

⁶ Nur Kadir v. Zuleikha Bibi, sup.; Wazeer

Ali v. Kaim Ali, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 160.

⁷ Derajuddin Akanda, (1923) 27 C. W. N. 631, 37 C. L. J. 329.

⁸ Pemantle, (1882) 8 Cal. 971; Barnardo v. McHugh, [1891] A. C. 388.

⁹ Nash, (1883) 10 Q. B. D. 454.

¹⁰ Bhungee Ahur, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 6; Amgad Bugeah, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 61; Koord Singh, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 16; Sooke, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 36 [54]; Gooroodoss Rajbunare, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 7; Musammal Soma, (1910) P. R. No. 17 of 1916.

¹¹ Ganesh, (1902) 31 All. 448.

representation of a fact.¹ If a minor is taken with the consent of the guardian and subsequently married improperly without the consent of the guardian to any person, such improper marriage would not by itself amount to kidnapping.²

If a man by false and fraudulent representations induce the parents of a girl to allow him to take her away, such taking will amount to kidnapping.³ But where a mother had by her conduct countenanced the daughter in a lax course of life, by permitting her to go out alone at night and to dance at public houses, and she was taken away for a day by the accused, it was held that the act of the accused could not be said to have happened against her will.⁴ Similarly, where a female minor went to the house of a mutual friend and had sexual intercourse with the accused, she having previously had sexual intercourse with the accused in the presence and with the consent of her guardian, her mother, in her mother's house, it was held that the accused could not be convicted of kidnapping as there was no taking of the minor; and even if there was a constructive taking, as the mother was proved to have connived at the seduction of her daughter, there was reason to believe that the subsequent taking was effected with her consent.⁵

CASES.

Taking away out of the keeping of the lawful guardian.—Where a person carried street and went away voluntarily with that person, it was held that she was just as much in the possession of her legal guardian when she was walking in the street, unless she had given up the intention of returning home, as if she had actually been in her guardian's house when taken off.⁷ Where a female minor, by preconcerted arrangement with the accused, left the house of her parents of her own accord, intending not to return, and met the accused at a place appointed and eloped with him willingly, it was held that the accused was an active participator in the minor's leaving her parents' house, and was, therefore, guilty of this offence.⁸ Where a female minor went to the accused's house and asked him to take her away, and she had no intention of leaving her parents if the accused did not consent, it was held that the minor had no such intention of not returning as to remove her from her parents' guardianship, and consequently the accused had committed this offence.⁹ A jat girl under sixteen years of age was ordered by her father to take food to the bullocks. As she was coming home, one of the accused came to her and persuaded her to accompany him. Her hair was cut and she was dressed in boy's clothes. She lived for some time with both the accused. After this both the accused were taking away the girl when they were discovered by a chowkidar. She was crying and told the chowkidar that she was a girl and not a boy. The chowkidar then arrested the accused. It was held that the accused were guilty of kidnapping having removed the girl from the lawful guardianship of her father without his consent.¹⁰

A low class girl under sixteen years of age left the custody of her husband and his parents and voluntarily stayed with the accused for a month. After that she was made over to certain other persons who performed certain operations on her so as to make her appear as much as possible a jat woman. She then changed hands several times and was finally made over to a person in order to be married

¹ Jaladu, (1911) 36 Mad. 453, Meenarat Soma, (1910) 17 B. L. No. 17 of 1910.

² Ibid.

³ James Heylins, (1847) Car. & M. 254.

⁴ Prinzel, (1855) 1 L. & E. 50.

⁵ Abdul Rahman, (1917) U. B. R. 150.

⁶ Cardozo v. Eysenach, (1915) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 7; Mookoo Paul, (1905) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 4.

⁷ Nga Nee Thoo, (1907) 1 U. B. R. (1907-1909) (P.C.) 1.

⁸ Nga Te Hia, (1907) 1 U. B. R. (1907-1909) (P.C.) 11; Nga Saa Hing, (1907) 1 U. B. R. 205.

⁹ Jayar Ali, (1907) 1 U. B. R. (1907-1909) (P.C.) 27.

¹⁰ Hakish, (1915) 40 All. 807.

to his brother. It was held that the accused was not guilty of the offence of taking or enticing a minor out of the keeping of her lawful guardian.¹

A, a married woman under sixteen years of age, being dissatisfied with her mother-in-law, left her husband's home to go to her maternal uncle. On the way she was induced by K to accompany him and he deceitfully took her to a village where she was kept in the house of K's brother. Here negotiations were set on foot by K to re-marry the girl as a jat, but on the girl disclosing her indenture to the enquirers K left the village. Thereupon K's brother took her to the police-station, and pending enquiry by the police she lived for a month at his place. It was held that K was guilty of kidnapping, inasmuch as although the girl left home of her own accord she did not cease to be under the guardianship of the husband, her lawful guardian, but that K's brother was not guilty of any offence as he had done nothing in furtherance of a common intention.²

Where on an application by the husband for divorce the District Judge made a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage and also directed the wife to deliver up to the husband the son born of the marriage, and subsequent to the decree the husband without the assistance of the Court obtained the custody of the son, but before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court the wife removed the boy from the father's custody and was charged for kidnapping, it was held that the order for custody which was made was an order nisi without legal effect until confirmed by the High Court and the wife had committed no offence in removing the boy from the father's custody.³

Where the accused was put in charge of a boy, below the age of fourteen, by his father for the purpose of teaching and feeding but he took him away to a distant city with the object of teaching him how to paint scenes so that he might join a theatrical company, it was held that the removal of the boy amounted to taking him out of the keeping of the lawful guardian.⁴

English cases.—A went in the night to the house of B, and placed a ladder against a window, and held it for J, the daughter of B, to descend, which she did, and then eloped with A. It was held that this was a taking of J out of the possession of her father.⁵ A girl under the age of sixteen years having, by persuasion, been induced by the accused to leave her father's house and go away with him without the consent of the father, left her home alone by a preconcerted arrangement between them, and went to a place appointed, where she was met by the accused, and then went away together some distance, without the intention of returning. It was held that there was a taking of the girl out of the father's possession when he met the girl and went away with her at the appointed place, as up to that moment she had not absolutely renounced her father's protection.⁶ A met a girl in the street going to school, and induced her to go with him to a town some miles distant, where he seduced her. They returned together and he left her where he met her. The girl then went to her home, where she lived with her father and mother, having been absent some hours longer than would have been the case if she had not met A. A made no inquiry, and did not know who the girl was, or whether she had a father or mother living or not, but he had no reason to, and did not, believe that she was a girl of the town. It was held that A was not guilty of having unlawfully taken the girl out of the possession of her father under s. 55 of 24 & 25 Vic., c. 100, which says 'whosoever shall take an unmarried girl, under the age of sixteen, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care and charge of her, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.'⁷ Under similar circumstances the accused in this

¹ Flora Ali, (1915) 37 All. 624.

² Karan Singh, (1916) 14 A. L. J. R. 792.

³ Barthwick v. Barthwick, (1913) 18 C. W.

N. 34.

⁴ Mohammad Hussain, (1924) 23 A. L. J. R.

10.

⁵ Robins, (1844) 1 C. & K. 456.

⁶ Manfield, (1853) 6 Cox 143.

⁷ Hibbert, (1809) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 181.

country will be guilty of kidnapping because his omission to inquire whether a minor has a guardian or not is no defence.¹

Marrying a girl without the consent of her 'lawful guardian.'—Where the mother had assigned by a will the guardianship of her minor daughter, and the duty of marrying her, to R, and a paternal relative of the daughter removed her by fraud and force for the purpose of getting her married to a person other than the one selected by R, it was held that the paternal relative had been guilty of kidnapping as well as abducting.² Where a Hindu woman left her husband's house, taking with her infant daughter and went to the house of A, and on the same day the daughter was married to B, the brother of A, without the father's consent, it was held that A had committed an offence, under ss. 109 and 363, of abetting the offence of kidnapping.³

Taking away in good faith is not kidnapping.—Where the mother in good faith believed that she was entitled to the custody of her own minor children a father's interference was set aside.⁴ The father, however, believes in Kidnapping from guardianship is not a continuing offence.—J, a minor girl, was taken away from her husband's house to the house of R and there kept for two days. Then one M came and took her away to his own house and kept her there for twenty days, and subsequently clandestinely removed her to the house of the petitioner, and from that house the petitioner and M took her through different places to Calcutta. It was held that the taking away out of the guardianship of the husband was complete before the petitioner joined the principal offender in taking the girl to Calcutta, and that the petitioner, therefore, could not be convicted under s. 363.^e

Temporary guardianship does not oust lawful guardian's right.—Where a girl who was under the temporary guardianship of a person was taken away with his consent and married to a boy without the consent of her father, this offence was held to have been committed.⁷ A girl under sixteen years of age, living under the guardianship of her mother, was sent by the latter with another woman. On a visit to her sister and on the way there the accused kidnapped her and took her to their own village and there she was married to one of the accused. The accused were convicted of an offence under s. 366 as it was immaterial whether the girl was kidnapped with the consent of the woman in charge of her, as she had no authority to give such consent.⁸

The taking should be out of the keeping of the lawful guardian.—Where a servant girl had permission from her master to go and see her parents from Sunday to Monday night, and went to see them on the Sunday for a few hours only, and then told them that she was going back to her employment, instead of which she remained with the prisoner all night, and did not return to her master's employment until some days afterwards, it was held that the girl was under the lawful charge of her master, and not of her father, at the time of the alleged offence, and that there would be no conviction for kidnapping.⁹ Similarly, where a girl was employed as a bar-maid at a distance from her father's home, it was held that she was under the lawful charge of her employer, and not in the possession of her father.¹⁰

¹ Umsatdbailsh, (1878) 3 Boin 178

* Bai Mahalor, (1893) Cr. R. No. 66 of 1895, Unrep. Cr. C. 820

3 Dec-14, 1-4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 84

* Nemas Chatterji, (1900) 27 Cal 1041.

¹ Jagannadha Rao v. Kamaraju, (1900) 24 Mad. 284.

¹ Bar., (1922) 3 Lab. 213.

* Miller, (1876) 13 Cox 179.

¹⁰ Henkers, (1886) 16 Cox 257

Removal of a child wife from the custody of her mother-in-law.—The removal of a Mahomedan girl of eleven or twelve years of age from the house of her mother-in-law in whose charge her husband had left her, by a third person acting at the instance, and under the instigation, of her mother, was held to be not a taking from "lawful guardianship" because under the Mahomedan law the mother was entitled to the custody of her daughter, in preference to the husband, until the girl attained the age of puberty.¹

Removal of a child wife from the custody of her mother.—S, a Mahomedan married girl under sixteen years of age, who had attained puberty, was taken away from her mother's house with whom she was living (her father being dead) by the respondents. The Magistrate convicted the accused under ss. 366 and 368. On appeal, the Sessions Judge quashed the conviction on the ground that as under Mahomedan law a mother could be a guardian only until her daughter attained puberty or completed her fifteenth year, S had become sui juris and that therefore the accused had not kidnapped her from lawful guardianship. On an appeal being preferred by Government against the acquittal, it was held that the mother of the girl was her lawful guardian within the terms of this section; and that the accused had been rightly convicted of the charge of kidnapping S from the guardianship of her mother.²

362. Whoever by force compels, or by any deceitful means induces,¹ any person to go from any place,² is said to abduct that person.

COMMENT.

This section merely gives a definition of the word 'abduction,' which occurs in some of the penal provisions which follow. There is no such offence as abduction under the Code, but abduction with certain intent is an offence.³

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials—

1. Forceful compulsion or inducement by deceitful means.
2. The object of such compulsion or inducement must be the going of a person from any place.

1. 'Whoever by force compels, or by deceitful means induces.'—Where no force or deceit is practised on the person abducted, a conviction cannot stand.⁴ The force or fraud must have been practised upon the child itself.⁵

An orphan girl about seventeen years of age was brought up by A as his own daughter. The accused, A's neighbour, induced her to leave home on the pretext that he would either marry her himself or get her married. He did neither but debauched her himself and handed her over to a friend of his who also proceeded to have connection with her. It was held that the expression 'deceitful means' is wide enough to include the inducing of a girl to leave her guardian's house by means of a representation that the person to whom she went would either marry her himself or arrange for her marriage and that the accused was guilty of this offence.⁶

2. 'Any person to go from any place.'—The offence of abduction is a continuing offence and a girl is being abducted not only when she is first taken from any place but also when she is removed from one place to another.⁷

Abduction and kidnapping.—'Abduction' differs from 'kidnapping' because there may be abduction without a removal of the person from the protection of

¹ Korban, (1904) 32 Cal. 444.

² Miran Balash, (1905) P. R. No. 60 of 1905.

³ Diddamoollee Dubee v. Sreenath Mailer, (1870) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 4, 4 Beag. L. R. App.

⁴ Ganga Dei, (1914) 12 A. L. J. R. 91.

⁵ Amul Dass, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

⁶ Barret, (1885) 16 Cox 538.

⁷ Mabbub, (1907) 27 A. W. N. 199.

⁸ Ganga Dei, sup.

the law, or even from lawful guardianship. It differs from kidnapping as regards the element of force or fraud existing in it.

Abetment.—A married woman cannot abet her own abduction as herein defined.¹

363. Whoever kidnaps any person from British India or from lawful guardianship, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT

This section specifies the punishment for the offences defined in ss. 360 and 361.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For kidnapping from British India prove—

- (1) That the person in question was at the time of the offence in British India.
- (2) That the accused conveyed that person beyond the limits of British India.
- (3) That he did so without the consent of that person, or of some person legally authorised to consent on that person's behalf.

For kidnapping from guardianship prove—

- (1) That the person in question was at the time of the offence a minor under fourteen years of age (if a male), or under sixteen years of age (if a female); or that such person was of unsound mind.

Where in a case under this section the Magistrate finds that there is prima facie sufficient evidence to show that the girl was enticed away he should not be content merely with finding that the girl was not proved to be under sixteen, but should examine and decide the question whether the accused can be charged with an offence under s. 363 or some other cognate offence against a female of over sixteen.²

- (2) That such minor, or person of unsound mind, was, at the time, lawfully entrusted to the keeping of a guardian.

- (3) That the accused took or enticed such minor, or person of unsound mind, out of such keeping.³

- (4) That he so took or enticed, etc., without the consent of such guardian.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Court in British India within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped may be conveyed or concealed or detained.⁵

The offence of kidnapping may be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped or abducted was kidnapped or abducted or was conveyed or concealed or detained.⁶

¹ V. v. S. A. (1889) 2 N. 11 1889

(Cr.) 39

² Bhuta Santal v. Dama Santal, (1915) 20 C. W. N. 62.

³ The Criminal Procedure Code, s. 181 (4). This section as framed now by Act V of 1898 settles the conflict of opinion existing between several High Courts. See Thaku, (1884) 8 Bom 312; James Ingle, (1891) 16 Bom. 200; Ram Dei, (1896) 18 All. 350; Surja, (1883) 13 A. W. N. 164; Abbi Reddi, (1894) 17 Mad. 402, Jaimal Singh, (1900) P. R. No. 1 of 1901.

Magistrates should not give themselves jurisdiction by trying cases under s. 363 which really fall under s. 366. The form of kidnapping which is punishable by s. 366 is a seriously aggravated form, which only Sessions Courts and the District Magistrates in the exercise of their special powers have jurisdiction to try.¹

Section 349 and 363.—Where an act of restraint or confinement in an attempt to kidnap has been exercised in furtherance of the attempt, and goes to form part of that offence, and is not done with an intention or object which can be separated from the general intention to kidnap, it will constitute an integral part of that offence and should not form the subject of a separate conviction and sentence.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, kidnapped AB [a female minor under—years] from British India [or from lawful guardianship of CD, her—], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.³

Punishment.—The maximum sentence prescribed for this offence should only be awarded in a case of the most aggravated nature.⁴ See the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

364. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person in order that such person may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered, shall be punished with transportation for life or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Kidnapping or abducting in order to murder.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) ... from British India, intending or knowing it to be likely that Z may be

(b) murdered. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

This section punishes the kidnapping or abducting of a person in order to take his life.

PRACTICE.

... by the accused.⁵
question in order (a) that such person might be so disposed of, as to be put
(1) ... question.
(2) ... he induced that person to do so by deceitful means.

¹ Nga Po Saw, (1901) 1 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 328.

² Mungroo and Pattoo, (1871) 6 N. W. P. 293.

³ (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr. L.) 1; (1867) 18 W. R.

(Cr. L.) 11.

⁴ Mussamat Bhodeep, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.)

2. ⁵ Id. s. 363, sup.

(3) That he so abducted the person in question in order that (a) such person might be murdered, or (b) such person might be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, kidnapped [or abducted] AB in order that the said AB might be murdered [or might be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 361 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

365. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person with intent to cause that person to be secretly and wrongfully confined, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Kidnapping or abducting with intent secretly and wrongfully to confine person.

COMMENT.

This section lays down the same penalty as s. 363, but it punishes abduction not mentioned in that section. It requires an intention to confine a person secretly and wrongfully.¹

Where a person was abducted in order that he might be held to ransom by his abductors, it was held that this section was applicable.²

The accused abducted a girl B in order to put pressure upon her friends to restore another girl whom they had abducted. She was restored a few days after B was abducted and then B was also let go. It was not found that any harm was done to B. It was held that under such circumstances heavy sentences of imprisonment were not necessary.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) kidnapping by the accused; ⁴ or abduction by him.⁵

(2) That the accused thereby intended that the person kidnapped or abducted should be kept in wrongful or secret confinement.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Conviction under s. 452 no bar to a subsequent trial under this section.—One Merai Kurmi formed intimacy with one Mussammat Hulla, a widow, and Hulla took up her abode in Merai's house. Some of Hulla's relations attacked the house of Merai, beat him and his brothers, and carried off Hulla. For this they were tried and convicted under s. 152 of the Code. After being removed from Merai's house, Hulla disappeared, and, after all efforts to find her had been unavailing for a space of some two years, the persons who had been concerned in the attack on Merai's house were put on their trial under this section. It was held that their previous conviction under s. 152 was no bar to their being tried under this section.⁶

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ Albar Ali, (1925) 7 L.J. 520, 26 P.L.R. 734.

² Po Lan, (1912) 6 L.B.R. 160; Samundar, (1923) 1 L.C. 17.

³ Waris, (1916) P.L.R. No. 89 of 1916.

⁴ Vide s. 363, sup.

⁵ Vide (1) and (2), s. 364, sup.

⁶ Baldeo Prasad, (1906) 26 A.W.N. 32.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, kidnapped (or abducted) one XY with intent to cause the said XY to be secretly and wrongfully confined, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried {by the said Court (in cases tried by the Magistrate omit these words)} on the said charge.

366. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any woman¹ with intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled,² to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse,³ or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

And whoever, by means of criminal intimidation as defined in this Code or of abuse of authority or any other method of compulsion, induces any woman to go from any place with intent that she may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall also be punishable as aforesaid.

COMMENT.

The offence under this section is merely an aggravated form of the offence under s. 363 and the same person cannot be convicted on the same facts under both the sections.¹ An intention to seduce subsequent to the elopement is an essential part of this offence.

Scope.—The former Chief Courts of Lower Burma and the Punjab held that this section did not apply to a case in which a minor girl, at the time of the kidnapping from lawful guardianship, intended to cohabit of her own free will with the kidnapper.² It applied where she was compelled to marry a person against her will or where she was forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that the offence of kidnapping a minor girl, in order that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse, is established by the accused taking her from lawful guardianship, with such object, although she left home with the intention of having illicit intercourse with him. Sanderson, C. J., observed: "It is further conceded that the offence dealt with by this section is merely an aggravated form of the offence created by s. 363; and it would, therefore, seem to follow that when the matter under consideration, in relation to this section, is the seduction to illicit intercourse of a girl under sixteen years of age, as in this case, her consent or intention would be just as immaterial as it would be in connection with the offence dealt with under s. 363. One object of the sections under consideration is not only to protect the rights of parents and others having the lawful guardianship of girls under the age of sixteen, but also to protect the girls themselves and to prevent persons taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience."³

Ingredients.—This section requires—

1. Kidnapping or abducting any woman.
2. Such kidnapping or abducting must be

¹ Isree Panday, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 56.

² Ngā Ghazā Myā, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 297.

Ngā Ngē, (1905) 11 Burma L. R. 326.

U B R. (P. C.) 17; Durga Das, (1938) P. B. No. 13 of 1901

³ Safdar Raza, (1922) 49 Cal. 905, 909

(a) with intent that she may be compelled or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled to marry any person against her will ; or

(b) in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.

The second part of the section requires two things :

(1) By criminal intimidation or abuse of authority or by compulsion inducing any woman to go from any place.

(2) Such going must be with intent that she may be, or with knowledge that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with some person.

1. 'Kidnaps or abducts any woman.'—See s. 10 as to the definition of 'woman.' The word 'woman' includes a minor female.¹

It is not necessary that the accused should know definitely who the guardian of a minor girl is whom he finds wandering about and makes use of for his own ends.²

2a. 'With intent that she may be compelled.. to marry against her will, etc.'—

This section makes use of the words "compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled." If, therefore, a woman is not compelled to do the acts specified in the section no offence under this section is committed. Where a procuress induced a married woman of twenty years of age to become a prostitute, whatever the woman's secret inclinations were, she would have had no opportunity of carrying them out but for the prisoner.³ Where certain persons conspired together to induce by deceitful means a girl of eighteen to leave her home and accompany them to another place with the intention of making her over to the accused's to accept the company of the acc aged her, it was held that the a

The section requires a special intent or knowledge. Such intent could not be presumed in the case of a young girl of thirteen years.⁵

If a minor is taken with the consent of the guardian and subsequently married improperly without the consent of the guardian to any person, such improper marriage would not by itself amount to kidnapping.⁶

The word 'marry' implies going through a form of marriage whether the same is in fact valid or not.⁷

2b. 'Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.'—'Seduction' in its ordinary sense means the inducing of a girl to part with her virtue for the first time.⁸ The words 'illicit intercourse' mean merely sexual intercourse between a man and a woman who are not husband and wife.⁹ Where a man kidnaps a minor girl from lawful minor girl and quite independent of any question as to whether she had surrendered her chastity before the act of kidnapping¹⁰ "I am unable to hold that the words in s. 366, 'seduce to illicit intercourse,' refer only to the first act of seduction or

¹ Dhera Singh v. Mussummat Kahno, (1877) P. R. No. 8 of 1878.

² Idu, (1923) 27 O. C. 32.

³ Srimotee Poddee (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 45.

⁴ Sundar Singh, (1124) 2 O. W. N. 17.

⁵ Mussummat Mehran, (1916) P. R. No. 13 of 1916.

⁶ Jaladu, (1911) 36 Mad. 453.

⁷ Taher Khan, (1917) 45 Cal. 641.

⁸ Moon, [1910] 1 K. B. 818, 820.

⁹ Mahtub, (1907) 27 A. W. N. 199.

¹⁰ Nga N' Ta, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 196, U. B. R. (P. C.) 15.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, kidnapped (or abducted) one XY with intent to cause the said XY to be secretly and wrongfully confined, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 365 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by the Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

366. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any woman¹ with intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled,^{2a} to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse,^{2b} or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

And whoever, by means of criminal intimidation as defined in this Code or of abuse of authority or any other method of compulsion, induces any woman to go from any place with intent that she may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall also be punishable as aforesaid.

COMMENT.

The offence under this section is merely an aggravated form of the offence under s. 363 and the same person cannot be convicted on the same facts under both the sections.¹ An intention to seduce subsequent to the elopement is an essential part of this offence.

Scope.—The former Chief Courts of Lower Burma and the Punjab held that this section did not apply to a case in which a minor girl, at the time of the kidnapping from lawful guardian, intended to

It applied where she was compelled.

was forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.

opinion that the offence of kidnapping a seduced to illicit intercourse, is established.

guardianship, with such object, although she left illicit intercourse with him. Sanderson, C. J., observed that the offence dealt with by this section is merely an aggravated form of the offence created by s. 363; and it would, therefore, seem to follow that when the matter under consideration, in relation to this section, is the seduction to illicit intercourse of a girl under sixteen years of age, as in this case, her consent or intention would be just as immaterial as it would be in connection with the offence dealt with under s. 363. One object of the sections under consideration is not only to protect the rights of parents and others having the lawful guardianship of girls under the age of sixteen, but also to protect the girls themselves and to prevent persons taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience."²

Ingredients.—This section requires—

1. Kidnapping or abducting any woman.
2. Such kidnapping or abducting must be

¹ Izee Panday, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr) 56.

² Nga Ghaz Mya, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 297.

Nga Nge, (1905) 11 Burma L. R. 326.

U. B. R. (P. C.) 17; Durga Das, (1931) P. R. No. 13 of 1904.

³ Saffar Reza, (1922) 40 Cal. 935, 937.

Object.—This section and s. 366-B were introduced to punish the export and import of girls for prostitution.

1. 'By any means whatsoever.'—The means employed may be legal or illegal.

2. 'Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.'—See Comment on s. 366, supra, p. 757.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused induced a girl.

(2) That the girl was under eighteen years of age.

(3) That the girl was induced to go from a place or to do an act.

(4) That the accused did as above with intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person.

Procedure.—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, induced AB—a girl under eighteen years of age [to go from— (specify the name of the place)] or [to do the following act, to wit—] with intent that the said AB may be (or knowing that it is likely that the said AB will be) forced (or seduced) to illicit intercourse with— (name the person) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 366-A of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

366 B Whoever imports into British India from any country outside India, any girl under the age of twenty-one years with intent that she may be, or knowing it to be likely, that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person,

Importation of girl from foreign country.

and whoever with such intent or knowledge imports into British India from any State in India any such girl who has with the like intent or knowledge been imported into India, whether by himself or by another person, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section was introduced along with s. 366-A by Act XX of 1923. See Comment on s. 366-A.

Object.—Section 366-A dealt with procuration of minor girls from one part of British India to another. This section makes it an offence to import into British India from any country outside India or from any State in India girls below the age of twenty-one years for the purpose of prostitution.

1. 'Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.'—See Comment on s. 366, supra, p. 757.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused imported a girl into British India;

(2) That the girl was imported from any country outside India or from any State in India.

(3) That such girl was under the age of twenty-one years.

means of criminal intimidation (or abuse of authority or other method of compulsion to wit—) and thereby committed an offence punishable under the second part of s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

366-A. Whoever, by any means whatsoever,¹ induces any minor girl under the age of eighteen years to go from any place or to do any act with intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse² with another person shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section and s. 366-B were added by Act XX of 1923 to give effect to certain Articles of International Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children. The material Articles of the Convention which was signed at Paris on 4th May 1910 are as follows:—

“Article 1.—Whoever, in order to gratify the passions of another person, has procured, enticed, or led away, even with her consent, a woman or girl under age, for immoral purposes, shall be punished notwithstanding that the various acts constituting the offence may have been committed in different countries.”

“Article 2.—Whoever, in order to gratify the passions of another person, has, by fraud, or by means of violence, threats, abuse of authority, or any other method of compulsion, procured, enticed, or led away a woman or girl over age, for immoral purposes, shall also be punished notwithstanding that the various acts constituting the offence may have been committed in different countries.”

“Article 3.—The Contracting Parties whose legislation may not at present be sufficient to deal with the offences contemplated by the two preceding articles engage to take or to propose to their respective Legislatures the necessary steps to punish these offences according to their gravity.”

The Statement of Objects and Reasons stated:³ “The principles in this International Convention were endorsed in the International Convention regarding the Traffic in Women and Children which was adopted by the Second Assembly of the League of Nations. In Article 1 of this Convention it is provided that the High Contracting Parties in the event of their not being already parties to the International Convention of the 4th May 1910 shall transmit with the least possible delay their ratifications of, or adhesions to, that instrument in the manner laid down therein. Further, the term “under age” which did mean under 20 completed years of age according to paragraph B of the Final Protocol of the Convention of 1910 is now interpreted as meaning under 21 completed years of age by virtue of the provisions of Article 5 of the International Convention, adopted by the Second Assembly of the League of Nations

In view of the resolutions adopted by the Council of State on the 31st January 1922 and by the Legislative Assembly on the 7th February 1922 the International Convention adopted by the Second Assembly of the League of Nations was signed at Geneva on behalf of the Government of India by His Majesty's Minister at Berne on the 28th March 1922, with the following reservation:—

“India reserves the right of its discretion to substitute the age of sixteen years or any greater age that may be subsequently decided upon for the age limits prescribed in paragraph B of the Final Protocol of the Convention of May 4th, 1910, and in Article 5 of the present convention.”

¹ Vide Gazette of India, (1922) Part V, p. 313.

Object.—This section and s. 366-B were introduced to punish the export and import of girls for prostitution.

1. 'By any means whatsoever.'—The means employed may be legal or illegal.

2. 'Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.'—See Comment on s. 366, supra, p. 757.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused induced a girl.

(2) That the girl was under eighteen years of age.

(3) That the girl was induced to go from a place or to do an act.

(4) That the accused did as above with intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person.

Procedure.—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, induced AB—a girl under eighteen years of age [to go from—(specify the name of the place)] or [to do the following act, to wit—] with intent that the said AB may be (or knowing that it is likely that the said AB will be) forced (or seduced) to illicit intercourse with—(name the person) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 366-A of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

366-B. Whoever imports into British India from any country outside India, any girl under the age of twenty-one years with intent that she may be, or knowing it to be likely, that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person,

Importation of girl from foreign country.

and whoever with such intent or knowledge imports into British India from any State in India any such girl who has with the like intent or knowledge been imported into India, whether by himself or by another person, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section was introduced along with s. 366-A by Act XX of 1923. See Comment on s. 366-A.

Object.—Section 366-A dealt with procurement of minor girls from one part of British India to another. This section makes it an offence to import into British India from any country outside India or from any State in India girls below the age of twenty-one years for the purpose of prostitution.

1. 'Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.'—See Comment on s. 366, supra, p. 757.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused imported a girl into British India ;

(2) That the girl was imported from any country outside India or from any State in India.

(3) That such girl was under the age of twenty-one years.

(4) That the accused imported the girl with intent that she may be, or knowing it to be likely that she will be, forced or seduced to 'illicit intercourse' with some person.

Procedure.—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, imported into British India from—(specify the name of the country) a country outside India (or a State in India) by yourself [or by—(mention the name of the person)] AB, a girl under the age of twenty-one years with intent that she may be (or knowing it to be likely that she will be) forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person to wit,—and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 366-B of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

367. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person¹ in order that Kidnapping or abducting in order to subject person to grievous hurt, slavery, etc.

such person may be subjected, or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being subjected, to grievous hurt,² or slavery,³ or to the unnatural lust⁴ of any person, or knowing it to be likely that such person will be so subjected or disposed of, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Kidnapping for grievous hurt, slavery, or unnatural offence, is punishable under this section.

1. 'Person.'—See s. 11, supra.
2. 'Grievous hurt.'—See s. 320, supra.
3. 'Slavery.'—See ss. 370, 371, infra.
4. 'Unnatural lust.'—See s. 377, infra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) kidnapping by the accused;¹ or abduction by him.²

(2) That he so kidnapped or abducted the person in question—

(a) in order that such person might be subjected to grievous hurt, slavery, etc., or to unnatural lust, etc.;

(b) in order that such person might be so disposed of as to be put in danger thereof;

(c) knowing it to be likely that such person would be so subjected or disposed of

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, kidnapped (or abducted) XY in order the said XY may be subjected (or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being subjected) to grievous hurt [(or slavery or to the unnatural lust of —)] or knowing it to be likely that such person will be so subjected or disposed

¹ Vide s. 363, sup.

² Vide (1) and (2), s. 364, sup.

off], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 367 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

368. Whoever, knowing that any person has been kidnapped or has been abducted, wrongfully conceals¹ or confines such person, shall be punished in the same manner as if he had kidnapped or abducted such person with the same intention or knowledge, or for the same purpose as that with or for which he conceals or detains such person in confinement.

COMMENT.

This is one of those sections in which subsequent abetment is punished as a substantive offence.

Scope.—This section refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who has been kidnapped and not to the kidnappers¹; and for the purpose of this section, it is not necessary to prove that the person confined was abducted by any particular person.

1. 'Wrongfully conceals.'—These words, taken in their plain and ordinary meaning, refer to some act or omission whereby the actual person of the individual concealed is withdrawn from observation. Doubtless lies told about such a person may as effectually hoodwink those interested in discovering him or her; but what we have to assign to the word "conceals" is only its plain signification. On this principle, as well as on that of "noscentur a sociis"—looking at the alternative act mentioned in the same section, which is keeping such person in confinement, it appears that the act of concealment refers to the withdrawal from the actual observation of others, by removal or otherwise, of the person kidnapped or abducted, and does not include the mere giving of false information about such person.² The mere fact of a girl being received into a house and retained there by the owner, even after he may have become aware of or found reason to believe that she had been kidnapped, does not amount to concealment of her unless an intention of keeping her out of view be apparent.³

CASES.

Concealing a kidnapped girl.—Where a girl of eleven years of age was taken out of the custody of her lawful guardian by the first prisoner and offered for sale in marriage to another, and the second prisoner illegally concealed her, the conviction of the former was upheld under s. 363, and of the latter, under s. 368.⁴ A girl under sixteen years of age who lived with her widowed mother was going to a vegetable market in search of work. On her way she met another woman who asked the girl to accompany her under a promise of obtaining work for her. The woman took the girl to her house and kept her there till evening, when she was removed by the accused in a closed carriage to a solitary bungalow far away from the town. The girl was kept there during two days and nights, after which she was permitted to return to her house. It was held that the accused had committed this offence.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person in question has been kidnapped or abducted.

¹ Sheil Ozeer, (1886) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 17.

² Phula Singh, (1874) P. R. No. 10 of 1874.

³ Jhurrup, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 133, Musau-

mat Chulloo, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 189.

⁴ Irree Panday, (1867) 7 W. R. 56.

⁵ Jetha Nathoo, (1904) 6 Bom. L. R. 785.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

371. Whoever habitually imports, exports, removes, buys, sells, traffics or deals in slaves shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Habitual dealing in slaves.

COMMENT.

This section is enacted for the punishment of the slave-trader, who is habitually engaged in the traffic of buying and selling human beings. The last section dealt with a casual offender. A slave dealer on land is punished under this section; such a dealer on sea is treated as a pirate by all civilised nations and punished severely.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused imported, exported, etc., slaves.
(2) That he did so habitually.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

372. Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of¹ any person under the age of eighteen years² with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose,³ or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Selling minor for purposes of prostitution, etc.

Explanation I.—When a female under the age of eighteen years is sold, let for hire, or otherwise disposed of to a prostitute or to any person who keeps or manages a brothel, the person so disposing of such female shall, until the contrary is proved, be presumed to have disposed of her with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

Explanation II.—For the purposes of this section ‘illicit intercourse’ means sexual intercourse between persons not united by marriage or by any union or tie which, though not amounting to a marriage, is recognised by the personal law or custom of the community to which they belong or, where they belong to different communities, of both such communities, as constituting between them a quasi-marital relation.

COMMENT.

This section has been materially altered.

The age-limit was raised to eighteen years from sixteen by Act V of 1924, s. 2. The words “person under the age of eighteen years with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be” were substituted for the words minor under the age of sixteen years with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be" by Act XVIII of 1924, s. 2. Explanations I and II were added by s. 3 of the same Act. "The amendment is designed to make it clear that an offence is committed under section 372 or 373 of the Indian Penal Code, when the minor is either disposed of or procured for the purpose of being sexually known either before or after attainment of the age of eighteen years, and whether she is made over to a life of immorality or merely subjected to an isolated act of carnal intercourse. In either case the child is equally deserving of protection."¹

The gist of the offence under this section or s. 373 consists in the intention that the person under the age of eighteen years shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for illicit intercourse, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or in the knowledge that it is likely that such person will be employed or used for any such purpose. In the absence of any intention or knowledge of the kind referred to the mere buying, selling, letting, or obtaining possession of such person is not per se a criminal act.² But where such intention or knowledge does exist, and a change in the position or circumstances of the person has been effected with such knowledge or intention, it is quite immaterial whether third persons have or have not observed any ceremonies recognized by custom as necessary to give prostitutes a particular status.³ The offence consists in the intentional or conscious exposure of a person under eighteen years, whether a male or a female, to the danger of degradation.

This section deals with the person who sells such person, the next section punishes the person who buys such person.

Scope.—This section applies to a person under the age of eighteen years who is employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for illicit intercourse, or for any unlawful and immoral life.⁴

Ingredients.—The section requires the following essentials:—

1. Selling, or letting to hire, or other disposal of a person.
2. Such person should be under the age of eighteen years.
3. The selling, letting to hire, or other disposal must be with intent, or knowledge of likelihood that the person shall at any age be employed or used for
 - (i) the purpose of prostitution, or
 - (ii) illicit intercourse with any person, or
 - (iii) any unlawful and immoral purpose.

1. 'Sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of.'—The terms 'sell' and 'hire' do not necessarily connote a present or immediate transfer of possession and where a transfer of possession is contemplated the offence is complete on proof of the sale or hiring and without any proof of a transfer of possession.⁵ The words 'lets to hire' are the counterpart of the word 'hire' in s. 373. The section now contemplates a case of letting or hiring or other similar transaction by which the possession of a girl is obtained with the intention of employing her habitually for the purpose of indiscriminate sexual intercourse, or with the intention of subjecting her to an isolated act of sexual intercourse.⁶ Where a young

¹ Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to Bill No. 9 of 1924, Gazette of India, 1924, Part V, p. 36.

² See Khashaba, (1880) P. R. No. 27 of 1880.

³ Bhimde Panda Deoli, (1900) 7 Bom. L. R. 362.

⁴ Kamru, (1878) P. R. No. 12 of 1879.

⁵ See Ramanna, (1889) 12 Mad. 273.

⁶ See Ismail Rastomkhan, (1900) 8 Bom.

L. R. 236.

⁷ (1881) 1 Weir 359, 362, F. R.

⁸ Ahmedkhan, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 902; Duckath Bee v. Shaik Ali, (1870) 5 M. H. C. 473; Mussumat Rahman, (1872) P. R. No. 29 of 1872; Mohabbat, (1873) P. R. No. 16 of 1873; Nga Shree Thier, (1907) 1 U. B. R. (1907-09) (P. C.) 1 are of no authority.

prostitute was brought to a house of assignation by the accused at the request of the complainant and for his supposed use on that one occasion, it not being contemplated that the girl should be sold or let out for a period of employment; or for the purpose of being employed by the complainant as a prostitute, or for the purpose of being disposed of by him for that course of life, it was held that such a letting out by the accused was not within the meaning of this section.¹ Under the present amended section such letting out will amount to an offence.

Where a girl was deserted by her husband and after living with prostitutes and others for a time, finally took up her residence in the brothel kept by the accused, well knowing their occupation and there prostituted herself to all comers, the accused housing, feeding and clothing her in consideration of receiving the wages of her prostitution, it was held that the accused by thus receiving money did not let the girl to hire within the meaning of this section, and that the persons, whom the girl, in consideration of a money payment to the accused, allowed to have intercourse with her, did not hire her within the meaning of s. 373.²

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that the term 'dispose of' has many meanings. It denotes (inter alia) "to bestow for an object or purpose;" "to make a change in the circumstances"; it does not necessarily imply that there has been a transfer of possession, nor indeed do the terms 'sell' or 'hire' necessarily connote a present or immediate transfer of possession, and where, as is no doubt generally the case, a transfer of possession is contemplated, the offence is complete on proof of the sale or hiring and without any proof of a transfer of possession.³ It is not necessary that there should have been a disposal tantamount to a transfer of possession or control over the minor's person.⁴ In a later case, the same Court said: "The term 'dispose of' has many meanings. In Webster's Dictionary it is defined as (a) to determine the fate of, to exercise the power of control over, to fix the condition, employment, etc., of, to direct or assign for a use; (b) to exercise finally one's power of control over, to pass over into the control of someone else as by selling, to get rid of. Seeing that the term in s. 372, Indian Penal Code, is used it would seem that the Legislature intended to include any mercenary purpose or the exercise of some power of control which would be final and irrevocable in its moral effects, more especially as the words used are 'sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of,' thus suggesting other acts ejusdem generis."⁵ Where the accused, who was a customer of a brothel, came across a minor girl, who had run away from her father's house, unable to bear the ill-treatment of her step-mother, and directed her to the brothel, it was held that such a mere direction to her or recommending to her to go there would not constitute an offence under this section.⁶

The Bombay High Court held that the ceremony of tying a Talisman to a minor girl does not constitute an offence under this section.⁷ Similarly, it has held that the ceremony of tying a Talisman to a minor girl, worshipping a basin of water by her and distributing food, is merely a preliminary step before the selling, letting out, or disposing of the girl for the purpose of prostitution, and is no offence under this section.⁸

2. 'Person under the age of eighteen years.'—The age-limit was raised to eighteen years by Act V of 1924, s. 2. The section applies to all persons under eighteen years, whether males or females.

¹ Sukee Raur, (1893) 21 Cal. 97; Noorjan, (1870) 14 W. R. (Cr.) 39, 6 Beng. L. R. App. 34. See Maddila Mutyalu, (1918) 33 M. L. J. 157.

² Ahmed Khan, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 902.
³ (1881) 1 Weir 353, 362, F. R.; Muralidhan (1881) 1 Weir 364. See Noorjan, sup.

⁴ Arumachellam, (1876) 1 Mad. 164.

⁵ Per Parker, J., in Srinivasa v. Annaswami, (1892) 15 Mad. 323, 329.

⁶ Nari, (1924) 48 M. L. J. 594, 21 L. W. 472.

⁷ Farmeshwari Subbi, (1920) 22 Bom. L. R. 894, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 237.

⁸ Sakthara Birappa, (1923) 27 Bom. L. R. 1022, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 66.

3. 'With intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose.'—It is necessary that the person shall be employed for an immoral purpose. It would be sufficient to show that the girl was given and accepted with the intention mentioned in the section. When an act is not per se criminal the specific intent which renders it criminal must be established by cogent evidence.

'At any age.'—The introduction of these words takes away the defence that though a girl was made over to a prostitute it was not intended that she should actually be used for the purpose of prostitution until she had passed the age of eighteen years.¹

'Prostitution.'—This word is not confined to acts of natural sexual intercourse, but includes any act of lewdness. Prostitution is proved if it is shown that a woman offers her body for purposes amounting to common lewdness in return for the payment of money.²

'Illicit intercourse with any person.'—These words were added by Act XVIII of 1924, s. 2. If the person disposing of a girl knew that she would be used for illicit intercourse he would be liable. Explanation II explains what is meant by 'illicit intercourse'. These words take away the defence that though the girl was handed over to a particular man for his carnal knowledge of her, yet it was not intended that she should be a prostitute at all, and that though the act or acts for which she was given may have been immoral, yet they were not unlawful.³ The accused will not be able to rely on the plea that the girl was not destined for a life of prostitution but merely for a single act of sexual intercourse.

'Unlawful and immoral purpose.'—The purpose must be both unlawful and immoral. The accused transferred his daughter to a person for the purposes of concubinage. It was held that the accused was guilty under this section.⁴

Adoption of a daughter by a dancing girl.—Where a dancing girl adopted a daughter, it was held that she had committed no offence if the girl was to be brought up as a daughter, and not as a prostitute or a girl was adopted:

same High Court has held that such a Penal Code.⁵ The Bombay High Court Under the present section such act would section. The burden of proof that the obtained by a prostitute for leading an he possession of such girl and the person to this section and s. 373.

Explanation. 1.—This explanation provides that if a minor girl is disposed of to a prostitute or to a brothel-keeper or manager, the person so disposing of her shall be presumed to have done so with the improper intent mentioned in the section.⁶ The same presumption is raised in the case of a prostitute or a brothel-keeper who obtains possession of a girl under Explanation I to s. 373.

¹ Ramanna, (1889) 12 Mad. 273; Karuna Baietobi, (1894) 22 Cal. 164, overruled.

² De Muncie, [1918] 1 K. B. 635.

³ Muta, (1888) P. R. No. 13 of 1888, overruled.

⁴ Ponrangam, (1885) 1 Weir 373.

⁵ Ramanna, sup.; Ponrangam, sup.

⁶ Gaddati Reddi, Olata v. Ganapati, Kondan-

no, [1912] M. W. N. 1138, 23 M. L. J. 493.

⁷ Mathura Naikin v. Fenu Naikin, (1880) 4 Bom. 545; Hira Naikin v. Radha Naikin, [1912] 14 Bom. L. R. 1129. But see Manjamma v. Sheshagiri Rao, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 116.

⁸ Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to Bill No. 9 of 1921, Gazette of India, Part V, p. 36.

Explanation 2.—This explanation defines the expression ‘illicit intercourse.’

Dev Dasi.—The dedication of girls under eighteen years to the service of a temple as dasi will amount to a disposal of such minors, knowing it to be likely that they will be used for the purpose of prostitution, within the meaning of this section.¹ The Member introducing the Bill amending this section said: “We have not...definitely assumed that employment as dev dasi is equivalent to employment for purposes of prostitution, but should such employment actually prove to come within that definition our Bill will enable it to be dealt with more effectively than hitherto.”²

In a Madras Full Bench case³ under the old s. 372 it was suggested:—“The acts imputed to the accused could not constitute an offence because they are sanctioned by the religious usages of Hindus.” But the Court said: “The 372nd and 373rd sections of the Indian Penal Code were intended for the protection of minors. They involve the declaration as a matter of general law that no person under the age of majority shall be devoted to a life of prostitution nor employed in, nor used for, any unlawful or immoral purpose nor placed in a position in which it is likely such person will be employed in, or used for, any such purpose.

“This rule, which is obviously suggested by the highest considerations of justice and morality, must control the exercise of all private law, even in those cases in which the private law assumes to vindicate itself on the specious plea of religion. If the terms in which the law is expressed are sufficient to include within their provisions acts done under colour of religion, those who participate in such acts are liable to the penal consequences, however laudable their motives according to the peculiar standard of morality adopted by the professors of their religion.

“The point was fully considered and decided by this Court in ex parte Padmarati.⁴... The learned Judges observe: ‘The argument that the treatment of such a transaction as criminal is impossible, because the Hindu religion sanctions the practice, and the private law recognizes private rights as flowing from it, is manifestly of no weight. An offence is every transgression of a penal law, and a rule of penal law is a rule of public law, and necessarily overrides every precept of private law, and cannot be affected by any argument derived from that law...With respect to the argument from religion, it is only necessary to observe that, if the precepts of a particular religion enjoin acts which transgress the rules of penal law, these acts will clearly be offences. Where the Legislature intended that acts which would otherwise be offences should not be so because connected with religious observances, they have expressed that intention (Penal Code, s. 292).’

“The cases in which persons have been held amenable to the penal law for participation in Sati, in Meriah sacrifices, and in the procuring of slaves, though these acts were sanctioned by the religious law of the parties implicated, show that the plea, that the practice is enjoined or allowed by the religious law of the accused, is not allowed to prevail over the injunctions of the penal law.

“The word ‘allowed’ is used advisedly, because the Court do not understand that the dedication of minors is anywhere enjoined. A dedication may be made after the girl has attained her age of majority. It is represented to the Court that it is only because it is regarded as a point of honour that a girl should be married before she attains puberty, that the dedication which is deemed equivalent to marriage takes place ordinarily during minority. Where the objection is founded

¹ See (1881) 1 Weir 359, r. B.; Dasi Mari-muthu, (1884) 1 Weir 364; Padmarati, (1870) 5 M. H. C. 415; Arunachellam, (1876) 1 Mad. 164; Basava, (1891) 15 Mad. 75; Srinivasa v. Annasami, (1891) 15 Mad. 41, 323, Kannammal, [1913] M. W. N. 207, 13 M. L. T. 131, 24 M. L. J. 211; Rajammal, [1911] 2 M. W. N. 479, 10 M. L. T. 501; Jasli Bhavin, (1869) 6 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 60; Tippa, (1892) 16 Bom. 737. See Baku, (1889) 24 Bom. 287, 1 Bom. L. R. 678, where the question of jurisdiction is discussed.

² Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly, dated February 11, 1924, pp. 447, 448.

³ 1 Weir 359, 360, r. B.

⁴ (1870) 5 M. H. C. 415, 416.

not on a religious injunction but on a usage allowed by religion and suggested merely by sentiment, there can be no reluctance on the part of the Court so to interpret the law as to protect minors from a life considered by civilized nations as shameful."

Amendment.—The age-limit was raised to eighteen years from sixteen years by Act V of 1921, s. 2. The words "person under the age of eighteen years with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be" were substituted for the words "minor under the age of sixteen years with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be" by Act XVIII of 1921, s. 2.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person in question was under eighteen years of age at the time of the offence.

(2) That the accused sold, let to hire, or otherwise disposed of such person.

(3) That he did so with intent that such person should be employed or used at any age for the purpose of prostitution, or for illicit intercourse with any person, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose; or with knowledge that it was likely that such person would be employed or used for any such purpose.¹

The question whether or not the disposal of the person was effected with the intent or knowledge stipulated by this section is a question of fact which must be proved by the prosecution.²

—Not compoundable—
Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc., etc.) charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, sold (or let to hire, or disposed of) a person under the age of eighteen years, to wit—, [with intent that such person should at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for illicit intercourse with a person to wit—, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, viz., (state the purpose)] or [knowing it to be likely that such minor would be employed or used for any such purpose], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 372 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (omit these words if the case is tried by a Magistrate)] on the said charge

373. Whoever buys, hires or otherwise obtains possession¹ of Buying minor for purpose of prostitution, etc.

any person under the age of eighteen years² with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose,³ or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation I.—Any prostitute, or any person keeping or managing a brothel, who buys, hires, or otherwise obtains possession of a female under the age of eighteen years shall, until the contrary is proved, be presumed to have obtained possession of such female with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

¹ Sri Lal, (1880) 2 All. 694, F. R.; Khushala, 1880) F. R. No. 27 of 1880; Durga Das, (1804)

P. R. No. 13 of 1904, P. L. R. No. 114 of 1904.
² (1881) 1 Weir 359, F. R.

Explanation II.—‘Illicit intercourse’ has the same meaning as in section 372.

COMMENT.

This section has been materially altered similar to s. 372. The age-limit was raised to eighteen years from sixteen by Act V of 1924, s. 2. The words "person under the age of eighteen years with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be" were substituted for the words "minor under the age of sixteen years with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be" by Act XVIII of 1924, s. 2, Explanations I and II were also added by s. 4 of the same Act.

This section applies to a case of buying or hiring or other similar transaction by which possession of a person under eighteen years of age is obtained with the intention of employing or using that person for prostitution, or illicit intercourse with any person, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose. It includes both males and females under the age of eighteen years. It is a counterpart of s. 372.

Sections 372 and 373.—Both the sections relate to the same subject-matter. The former contemplates an offence committed by the person who 'sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of' any person under the age of eighteen years, with the requisite intent or knowledge. The latter relates to the case of the person who 'buys, hires, or otherwise obtains possession of' any person under the age of eighteen. Section 372 strikes at any bargain of the nature contemplated by it, whoever may be the party who sells or lets the person, even though it should be the father, mother or lawful guardian. Section 373 strikes at the bawds, keepers of brothels and all others who fatten on the profits arising from the general prostitution of the girls.

1. $\frac{1}{2}$ ml. of 1% solution of H_2O_2 in 1% solution of H_2SO_4 .

3. The buying, hiring, or otherwise obtaining possession must be with intent or knowledge of likelihood that the person shall at any age be employed or used

- (i) for the purpose of prostitution, or
- (ii) for illicit intercourse, or
- (iii) for any unlawful and immoral purpose.

1. 'Buys, hires, or otherwise obtains possession.'—It is not essential to the offence that the buying, hiring, or otherwise obtaining of the possession of the person should be from a third person. The language of the section is capable to an agreement or retention of a third person, and certainly not of any less enormity in the latter case.

Scotland, C. J., observed in Dowlath Bee's case: "But to bring a case within the section, it is, in my opinion, essential to show that possession of the minor has been obtained under a distinct arrangement come to between the parties that the minor's person should be, for some time, completely in the hands of the possessor, and under the control and direction of the possessor, and that the possession is ostensibly for a proper purpose or not. The words 'in the hands of the possessor' mean that meaning according to their ordinary acceptation; and, giving them due effect, it seems to me that the associated words 'or otherwise obtains possession' were not intended to do more than include other modes of obtaining the same kind of possession as that of a buyer or hirer. This, I think, is shown more clearly to be the meaning intended by the provision which follows as to the other essential of the offence—the intent or knowledge of its being likely 'that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful and immoral purpose,' indicating plainly as it does an employment or use of the minor at some time future to the obtaining of possession:—its effect is to my mind strong to show that complete possession and control of the minor's person obtained by buying, hiring, or otherwise, with the intent or knowledge that, by the effect of such possession and control, the minor should or would afterwards be employed or used for either of the purposes stated, is what the section was intended to make punishable as a crime. The provision seems to me to exclude the supposition that an obtaining of possession in the sense in which that expression is, no doubt, sometimes used, of merely having sexual connection with a woman, could have been in the contemplation of the framers of the section."¹ The present section expressly overrules this view as it contains the words "illicit intercourse with any person" which were not in the old section.

'Possession' means possession with a power of disposal.

The offence is complete so soon as the obtaining possession, with the requisite intention or knowledge, of the girl is accomplished.

A person taking possession of a girl under eighteen years for the purpose indicated in the section is guilty of an offence. It is not necessary that the possession of the girl should be obtained from her person.²

2. 'Person under the age of eighteen years.'—The age-limit was raised to eighteen years by Act V of 1924, s. 2.

3. 'With intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose.'—Proof of intention or knowledge is almost entirely a matter of inference from circumstances. Under the old section, the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts held that the offence was not committed if, notwithstanding the existence of the requisite guilty intention or knowledge, the employment that was intended or known to be likely was to take place after the completion of the nineteenth year.³ The Madras High Court,⁴ though once of this opinion, latterly held that the offence was committed if the intention or knowledge was that the person should be employed or used at any age. The Calcutta and Allahabad cases and the earlier ruling of the Madras High Court are, therefore, no longer of any authority.

¹ Dowlath Bee v. Shauk Ali, (1870) 5 M. H. C. 473, 475; Maddila Mutyalu, (1918) 35 M. L. J. 157; Nga Shree Thrice, (1907) U. B. R. (1907-09) (P. C.) I, 13 Burma L. R. 389; Ganga, (1897) 11 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 6.
² Shamsunderbai, (1920) 22 Bom. L. R. 1234, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 269.

³ Kamalakshi v. Ramasami Chetti, (1895) 19 Mad. 127, 135.
⁴ Kannammal, [1913] M. W. N. 207, 24 M. L. J. 211, 13 M. L. T. 131.

'For the purpose of prostitution.'—Prostitution means the surrender of a girl's chastity for money.¹ "Acts of improper sexual intercourse are acts of prostitution in one strict sense of the term. But proof of more than that... is required. The ordinary and commonly understood meaning of the word prostitution is the offering of the person for promiscuous sexual intercourse with men, and that... must be taken to be its meaning in the section, there being nothing in the context opposed to it, but rather the contrary."²

'Illicit intercourse with any person.'—The meaning of 'illicit intercourse' is explained in Explanation II to s. 372. See Comment on s. 372. Cases which laid down that no offence is committed if employment for prostitution is not habitual are no longer of any authority.³

'Unlawful and immoral purpose.'—Section 372 and this section do not "prohibit by punishing a transaction in which the employment or use contemplated is for a purpose that is merely unlawful or for a purpose that is merely immoral, except the purpose of prostitution. No transaction of the kinds described in these sections, with the exception just noted, is an offence under these sections, unless the purpose of the contemplated use of the person is both unlawful and immoral."⁴

Amendment.—The word 'eighteen' was substituted for 'sixteen' by Act V of 1924, s. 2, before the section was altered by Act XVIII of 1924.

CASES.

Selling and buying a girl for prostitution.—A, the father of two girls, was charged with selling a girl for prostitution. In a charge against a dancing girl for having purchased a girl with intent that she would be used for the purpose of prostitution or knowing it to be likely that she would be so used, evidence was given of the fact of purchase for a consideration and that numerous other dancing girls residing in the neighbourhood were in the habit of obtaining girls and bringing them up as dancing girls or prostitutes, and that there were no instances of girls brought up by dancing girls ever having been married. On its being contended that there was no evidence of intent to support a conviction under this section, it was held that there was evidence to support it.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person in question was under eighteen years of age at the time of the offence; (2) that the person was employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or illicit intercourse with any person, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose; or with knowledge that it was likely that such person would be employed or used for any such purpose.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—See s. 372.

¹ 35 M. L. J. 157, 24 M. L. T. 77.

² Per Plowden, J., in Mula, (1888) P. R. No. 13 of 1888, p. 20.

374. Whoever unlawfully compels¹ any person to labour against the will² of that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Unlawful compulsory labour.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section is intended to prevent abuses arising from forced labour which ryots were sometimes compelled to render to landlords.

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials—

1. Unlawful compulsion of any person.
2. Such compulsion must be to labour against the will of that person.

1. 'Unlawful compulsion of any person.'—“I do not think that a person who insists that another who has consented to serve him shall perform his work, unlawfully compels such person to labour, because it is the thing which he or she has agreed to do, and although if the employer assault the servant for not working to his satisfaction, he undoubtedly renders himself liable to rigorous imprisonment under s. 352, I do not think he thereby commits an offence under s. 374.”¹ Where the accused induced the complainants, who, he alleged, were indebted to him in various sums of money, to consent to live on his premises and to work off their debts, and the complainants were to, and did in fact, receive no pay, but were fed by the accused as his servants, and he insisted on their working for him, and punished them by beating them if they did not do so, it was held that a conviction under this section could not be upheld.²

2. 'To labour against his will.'—The word 'labour' will apply either to mental or to bodily labour, though probably the latter was principally contemplated by the framers of the Code.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused compelled the person in question to labour.

- (2) That such compulsion was unlawful.
- (3) That the accused did so against the will of that person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, unlawfully compelled AB to labour against his will and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 374 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Rape.

375. A man is said to commit “rape” who, except in the case hereinafter excepted, has sexual intercourse¹ with a woman under circumstances² falling under any of the five following descriptions:—

1. First.—Against her will.

¹ Per Petheram, C. J., in Madan Mohan Biswas, (1892) 19 Cal. 572, 581. ² Madan Mohan Biswas, ibid.

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her in fear of death, or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband, and that her consent is given because she believes that he is another man to whom she is or believes herself to be lawfully married.

Fifthly.—With or without her consent, when she is under fourteen years of age.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under thirteen years of age, is not rape.

[Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife is not rape although the wife has not attained the age of thirteen years, if he was married to her before the date on which this Act comes into operation and she had attained the age of twelve years on that date.][†]

376. Whoever commits rape shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, unless the woman raped is his own wife and is not under twelve years of age, in which case he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

In the definition of rape, the first clause operates, where the woman is in possession of her senses, and therefore capable of consenting; the second, where she is insensible whether from drink or any other cause, or so imbecile that she is incapable of any rational consent; the third and the fourth, where there is consent, but it is not such a consent as excuses the offender, because in the one case it is extorted by putting the woman in fear, and in the other, it is obtained by deception of a particular kind, and the fifth, where the intercourse is with a girl so young that consent is immaterial.

English law.—A boy under fourteen years of age cannot be convicted of rape.¹ "The rule at common law is...that in regard to the offence of rape malitia non supplet ætatem; a boy under fourteen is under a physical incapacity to commit the offence. That is a presumptio juris et de jure, and judges have time after time refused to receive evidence to show that a particular prisoner was in fact capable of committing the offence."² But a boy under fourteen can be convicted of an indecent assault under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.³ The presumption of English law against the possibility of the commission of the offence of rape by a boy under the age of fourteen years has no application to India.⁴

[†] This is enacted by s. 4 of Act XXIX of 1925 which came into force on September 23, 1925.

¹ Jordan, (1839) 9 C. & P. 118.

² 48 & 49 Vic., c. 69, ss. 4, 9; Williams,

³ Per Coleridge, C. J., in Watte, [1892] 2 (1893) 1 Q. B. 320.

Q. B. 600, 601.

⁴ Paras Ram Dube, (1915) 37 All. 182

374. Whoever unlawfully compels¹ any person to labour against the will² of that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Unlawful compulsory labour.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section is intended to prevent abuses arising from forced labour which ryots were sometimes compelled to render to landlords.

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials—

1. Unlawful compulsion of any person.
2. Such compulsion must be to labour against the will of that person.

1. 'Unlawful compulsion of any person.'—"I do not think that a person who insists that another who has consented to serve him shall perform his work, unlawfully compels such person to : : : : : has agreed to do, and although if : : : : : to his satisfaction, he undoubtedly : : : : : under s. 352, I do not think he thereby commits an offence under s. 374."¹ Where the accused induced the complainants, who, he alleged, were indebted to him in various sums of money, to consent to live on his premises and to work off their debts, and the complainants were to, and did in fact, receive no pay, but were fed by the accused as his servants, and he insisted on their working for him, and punished them by beating them if they did not do so, it was held that a conviction under this section could not be upheld.²

2. 'To labour against his will.'—The word 'labour' will apply either to mental or to bodily labour, though probably the latter was principally contemplated by the framers of the Code.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused compelled the person in question to labour.

(2) That such compulsion was unlawful.

(3) That the accused did so against the will of that person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, unlawfully compelled AB to labour against his will and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 374 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Rape.

375. A man is said to commit "rape" who, except in the case hereinafter excepted, has sexual intercourse¹ with a woman under circumstances² falling under any of the five following descriptions:—

First.—Against her will.

¹ Per Petheram, C. J., in Madan Mohan Biswas, (1892) 19 Cal. 572, 581. ² Madan Mohan Biswas, ibid.

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her in fear of death, or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband, and that her consent is given because she believes that he is another man to whom she is or believes herself to be lawfully married.

Fifthly.—With or without her consent, when she is under fourteen years of age.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under thirteen years of age, is not rape.

[Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife is not rape although the wife has not attained the age of thirteen years, if he was married to her before the date on which this Act comes into operation and she had attained the age of twelve years on that date.][†]

376. Whoever commits rape shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, unless the woman raped is his own wife and is not under twelve years of age, in which case he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

In the definition of rape, the first clause operates, where the woman is in possession of her senses, and therefore capable of consenting; the second, where she is insensible whether from drink or any other cause, or so imbecile that she is incapable of any rational consent; the third and the fourth, where there is consent, but it is not such a consent as excuses the offender, because in the one case it is extorted by putting the woman in fear, and in the other, it is obtained by deception of a particular kind; and the fifth, where the intercourse is with a girl so young that consent is immaterial.

English law.—A boy under fourteen years of age cannot be convicted of rape.¹ "The rule at common law is...that in regard to the offence of rape malitia non supplet ætatem; a boy under fourteen is under a physical incapacity to commit the offence. That is a presumptio juris et de jure, and judges have time after time refused to receive evidence to show that a particular prisoner was in fact capable of committing the offence."² But a boy under fourteen can be convicted of an indecent assault under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.³ The presumption of English law against the possibility of the commission of the offence of rape by a boy under the age of fourteen years has no application to India.⁴

[†] This is enacted by s. 4 of Act XXIX of 1925 which came into force on September 23, 1925.

¹ Jordan, (1839) 9 C. & P. 118.

² 48 & 49 Vic., c. 69, ss. 4, 9; Williams,

³ Per Coleridge, C. J., in Watts, [1892] 2 (1893) 1 Q. B. 320.

⁴ Paras Ram Dube, (1915) 37 All 182.

Ingredients.—This section requires two essentials.—

1. Sexual intercourse by a man with a woman.

2. The sexual intercourse must be under circumstances falling under any of the five clauses in the section.

1. 'Sexual intercourse.'—The sexual intercourse must be with a woman. The term 'man' is defined as a male human being of any age (s. 10). The term 'woman' is defined as a female human being of any age (s. 10).

2. 'Under circumstances.'—The five clauses of the section denote the circumstances which render the sexual intercourse an offence under this section.

Second clause: 'Without consent.'—Consent of the woman should have been obtained prior to the act. It is no defence that the woman consented after the fact.¹ As to the elements which make a consent void, see s. 90, supra.

Stephen, J., in R. v. Clarence says: "It seems to me that the proposition that fraud vitiates consent in criminal matters is not true if taken to apply in the fullest sense of the word, and without qualification. It is too short to be true, as a mathematical formula is true. If we apply it in that sense to the present case, it is difficult to say that the prisoner was not guilty of rape, for the definition of rape is having connection with a woman without her consent; and if fraud vitiates consent, every case in which a man seduces a woman or commits bigamy the second wife being ignorant of the first marriage, is also a case of rape. Many seductions would be rapes, and so might acts of prostitution procured by fraud, as for instance by promises not intended to be fulfilled. . . . The only sorts of fraud which so far destroy the effect of a woman's consent as to convert a connection consented to in fact into a rape are frauds as to the nature of the act itself, or as to the identity of the person who does the act."²

A sleeping person can never consent. Where, therefore, a man had connection with a woman while she was asleep, he was held to have committed rape.³

Consent of a girl under ten was held to be quite immaterial where the charge was for attempt to commit rape. Consent means a willing mind on the part of the girl to allow the act to be done. If from her tender years, not knowing what was being done, she merely submits without the exercise of any will by her, it will not amount to a consent.⁴

Consent given by a woman of unsound mind is of no avail (s. 90). Where, therefore, a man had carnal knowledge of a girl of imbecile mind, and the jury found that it was without her consent, she being incapable of giving consent from defect of understanding, it was held that his act amounted to rape.⁵ But there must be evidence that the connection was against the will or without the consent of the woman.⁶ However, if the girl was in such a state of idiocy as to be incapable of expressing either consent or dissent, and the prisoner had connection with her consent, he ought to be convicted.⁷

Similarly, consent given by an intoxicated woman is of no avail. Where the accused made a girl of thirteen years quite drunk, and whilst she was insensible violated her person, he was held to have committed rape.⁸

Passive non-resistance or consent obtained by fraud.—If a girl does not resist intercourse in consequence of misapprehension, this will not amount to a consent on her part. Where a medical man, to whom a girl of fourteen years of age was sent for professional advice, had criminal connection with her, she making no resistance from a bona fide belief that he was treating her medically, it was held

¹ 1 Hawk. P. C., p. 122.

² (1880) 22 Q. B. D. 23, 43, 44.

³ Jayers, (1872) 12 Cox 311; Young, (1878)

14 Cox 114.

⁴ Beale, (1865) 35 L. J. (M. C.) 60.

⁵ Fletcher, (1869) 8 Cox 131; Pressy, (1867)

10 Cox 635.

⁶ Fletcher, (1866) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 39.

⁷ Barratt, (1873) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 81; Ryan,

(1846) 2 Cox 115.

⁸ William Camplin, (1845) 1 Cox 220;

Ryan, sup.

that he could be convicted of rape.¹ Similarly, where the accused professed to give medical advice for money, and a girl of nineteen consulted him with respect to illness from which she was suffering, and he advised that a surgical operation should be performed and, under pretence of performing it, had carnal intercourse with her, it was held that he was guilty of rape.² The accused who was engaged to give lessons in singing and voice production to a girl of sixteen years of age, had sexual intercourse with her under the pretence that her breathing was not quite right and that he had to perform an operation to enable her to produce her voice properly. The girl submitted to what was done under the belief, wilfully and fraudulently induced by the accused, that she was being medically and surgically treated by the accused and not with any intention that he should have sexual intercourse with her. It was held that the accused was guilty of rape.³

"That consent obtained by fraud is no consent at all is not true as a general proposition either in fact or in law. If a man meets a woman in the street and knowingly gives her bad money in order to procure her consent to intercourse with him, he obtains her consent by fraud, but it would be childish to say that she did not consent."⁴

Third clause.—The mere fact that a woman submits through fear does not take the offence out of the category of rape.⁵

The fear must be of death or hurt. 'Hurt' is defined in s. 319, supra.

Fifth clause.—There may be cases in which the check of the law may be necessary to restrain men from taking advantage of their marital right prematurely. Instances of abuse by the husband in such cases will fall under this clause.

The age-limit was raised from ten to twelve years by Act X of 1891 for the following reasons: "The limit at which the age of consent is now fixed (i.e., ten years) favours the premature consummation by adult husbands of marriages with children who have not reached the age of puberty, and is thus, in the unanimous opinion of medical authorities, productive of grievous suffering and permanent injury to child-wives and of physical deterioration in the community to which they belong."

It was raised from twelve to fourteen years by Act XXIX of 1923, s. 2, for the following reasons: "Books of medical jurisprudence establish the fact that the age of puberty in India is attained by a girl upon her reaching the age of fourteen. Even though puberty may be reached at that age, it is obvious that girls are unfit for sexual cohabitation till they are older and more developed in physis and strength. The appalling infant mortality in the country is partially ascribed to early marriages and the consummation which follows with immature girls. It is, therefore, necessary to raise the age of consent to a higher level, so as to prevent the production of progeny that the ... premature cohabitation,⁷ and (b) from immature prostitution.

The accused, a youth of about eighteen, had, without any ancillary violence, sexual intercourse with a well-developed girl probably under twelve years of age; the girl did not consent; her vagina was ruptured and, as a result, she died of shock; it was held that the accused was guilty of rape.⁸

Explanation.—The explanation says that penetration is sufficient to constitute rape. To constitute penetration it must be proved that some part of the virile member of the accused was within the labia of the pudendum of the woman, no

¹ W. R. (Cr.) 21.

² Id.

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Albar Kaze, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 21.

⁷ Statement of Objects and Reasons to Bill No. 12 of 1924, Gazette of India, 1924, Part V, p. 45.

⁸ Vide Hurree Mohun Muthie, (1861)

18 Cal. 49.

⁹ Shambhu Khatri, (1924) 3 Pat. 410

Complaint of prosecutrix.—Evidence of the fact that a complaint was made by the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged occurrence, and the particulars of such complaint may, so far as they relate to the charge against the prisoner, be given on the part of the prosecution, not as being evidence of the facts complained of, but as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness-box, and as negativing consent on her part.¹ The prisoner was indicted for an indecent assault on a girl under the age of thirteen years, whose consent to the act was therefore immaterial. At the trial evidence was admitted of the answer given by the girl to a question put by another child, in the absence of the prisoner, as to why the girl had not waited for the other child at the prisoner's house. The girl's reply was a complaint of the prisoner's conduct to her. It was held that the evidence was admissible, not as evidence of the truth of the charge alleged, but as corroborating the credibility of the girl and as evidence of the case, cannot be given in evidence.² In rape, not only what the prosecutrix said immediately after the occasion but what was said in answer to her is evidence.³ See also illustration (j) to s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act.

In cases of rape, where the prosecution evidence is not sufficiently strong to warrant a conviction, it is unsafe to convict merely on the accusation of the woman who has been raped.⁴

Collateral evidence in confirmation or otherwise.—It is no mitigation of this offence that the woman at last yielded to the violence. Nor is it any excuse for the party indicted that the woman consented after the fact; nor that she was a common strumpet, for she is still under the protection of the law, and may not be forced; nor that she was first taken with her own consent, if she were afterwards forced against her will; nor that she was a concubine to the ravisher, for a woman may forsake her unlawful course of life, and the law will not presume her incapable of amendment.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

If the sexual intercourse was by a man with his own wife not being under twelve years of age—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate.

If the sexual intercourse was by a man with his own wife being under twelve years of age—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

False charge of rape.—Rape is an offence punishable with transportation for life or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years. The offence, therefore, of making false charge of rape is triable exclusively by the Court of Session.⁵

Punishment.—The offence is capable of degrees. On the one hand let us take the case of the chaste high caste female, who would sacrifice her life to save her honour, contaminated by the forcible embrace of a man of low caste, ... On the other hand that of the woman without character, or any pretension to purity, who is wont to be easy of access. In the latter case if the woman, from any motive, refuses to comply with the solicitation of a man and is forced by him, the offender

¹ Liversidge, [1877] 2 Q. B. 147; Perkins & Redgrave, [1877] 14 Q. B. 415.
² R. v. Bland, [1875] 1 D. & L. 251.
³ Murray, [1871] 13 Q. B. 412.

⁴ *Ex p. (1870) 2 F. & F. 571.
⁵ Arundell, Ex p., [1875] 1 F. W. R. (Ct. No. 11 of 1875).
⁶ Edwards, [1873] 1 Comp. Ct. R. 353.*

ought to be punished; but surely the injury is infinitely less in this instance than in the former.

But in a case it has been remarked that the measure of punishment in a case of rape should not depend on the social position of the party injured, but on the greater or less atrocity of the crime, the conduct of the criminal, and the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female.¹

Under ss. 57, 376 and 511, a sentence of ten years' transportation, or of fifteen years' rigorous imprisonment, may be passed for the offence of attempt to commit rape; but a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment commutable under s. 59 to seven years' transportation is illegal.²

As to whipping, see the Whipping Act.³

As to crimes on the frontier see the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 6, 11 (3) (d), and 12 (2).

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed rape on AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 376 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Of Unnatural Offences.

377. Whoever voluntarily has carnal intercourse against the order of nature with any man, woman or animal,¹ shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—Penetration² is sufficient to constitute the carnal intercourse necessary to the offence described in this section.

COMMENT:

This offence consists in a carnal knowledge committed against the order of nature by man with man, or in the same unnatural manner with woman, or by man or woman in any manner with beast.

According to the English law if the party on whom the offence is committed be within the age of discretion, namely, under fourteen, it is not felony in him, but only in the agent. If both be of the age of discretion, it is felony in both.⁴ A man who, as pathic, committed sodomy with a boy of the age of twelve years, was convicted of that offence, though the boy was discharged.⁵

A married woman who consents to her husband's committing an unnatural offence with her is an accomplice.⁶

1. 'Voluntarily has carnal intercourse against the order of nature with any man, woman or animal.'—As to the definition of 'voluntarily,' see s. 39; of 'man,' s. 10; of 'woman' s. 10; of 'animal,' s. 4.

Where the accused forced open a child's mouth, and put in his private parts and proceeded to a completion of his lust, it was held that this did not constitute

¹ Jhantal Nooloo, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 59.

² Joseph Merian, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

³ Act IV of 1909, s. 4 (a). A sentence of fifteen stripes for the offence of rape was held to be inadequate in the case of a juvenile offender in Po Br, (1914) 8 L. B. R. 143.

⁴ 1 East P. C. 480; 1 Hale P. C. 670.

⁵ Allen, (1849) 3 Cox 270.

⁶ Jellyman, (1835) 8 C. & P. 604.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

THE following offences affect property :—

- | | |
|--|---|
| <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Theft. 2. Extortion. 3. Robbery and Dacoity. 4. Criminal Misappropriation of Property. 5. Criminal Breach of Trust. 6. Receiving of Stolen Property. | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 7. Cheating. 8. Fraudulent Deeds and Dispositions of Property. 9. Mischief. 10. Criminal Trespass. |
|--|---|

Of Theft.

378. Whoever, intending to take dishonestly¹ any moveable property² out of the possession of any person³ without that person's consent,⁴ moves⁵ that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft.

*Explanation 1.*⁶—A thing so long as it is attached to the earth, not being moveable property, is not the subject of theft; but it becomes capable of being the subject of theft as soon as it is severed from the earth.

*Explanation 2.*⁷—A moving effected by the same act which effects the severance may be a theft.

Explanation 3.—A person is said to cause a thing to move by removing an obstacle which prevented it from moving or by separating it from any other thing, as well as by actually moving it.

Explanation 4.—A person, who by any means causes an animal to move, is said to move that animal, and to move everything which, in consequence of the motion so caused, is moved by that animal.

Explanation 5.—The consent mentioned in the definition may be expressed or implied, and may be given either by the person in possession, or by any person having for that purpose authority either express or implied.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A cuts down a tree on Z's ground, with the intention of dishonestly taking the tree out of Z's possession without Z's consent. Here, as soon as A has severed the tree in order to such taking, he has committed theft.

(b) A puts a bait for dogs in his pocket, and thus induces Z's dog to follow it. Here, if A's intention be dishonestly to take the dog out of Z's possession without Z's consent, A has committed theft as soon as Z's dog has begun to follow A.

(c) A drives the bullock of Z, and takes away Z's treasure. As soon as the bullock begins to move, A has committed theft of the treasure.

(d) A being Z's servant, and entrusted by Z with the care of Z's plate, dishonestly runs away with the plate, without Z's consent. A has committed theft.

(c) Z, going on a journey, entrusts his plate to A, the keeper of a warehouse, till Z shall return. A carries the plate to a goldsmith and sells it. Here the plate was not in Z's possession. It could not therefore be taken out of Z's possession, and A has not committed theft, though he may have committed criminal breach of trust.

(f) A finds a ring belonging to Z on a table in the house which Z occupies. Here the ring is in Z's possession; and if A dishonestly removes it, A commits theft.

(g) A finds a ring lying on the high road, not in the possession of any person. A, by taking it, commits no theft, though he may commit criminal misappropriation of property.

(h) A sees a ring belonging to Z lying on a table in Z's house. Not venturing to misappropriate the ring immediately for fear of search and detection, A hides the ring in a place where it is highly improbable that it will ever be found by Z, with the intention of taking the ring from the hiding place and selling it when the loss is forgotten. Here A, at the time of first moving the ring, commits theft.

(i) A delivers his watch to Z, a jeweller, to be regulated. Z carries it to his shop. A, not owing to the jeweller any debt for which the jeweller might lawfully detain the watch as a security, enters the shop openly, takes his watch by force out of Z's hand, and carries it away. Here A, though he may have committed criminal trespass and assault, has not committed theft, inasmuch as what he did was not done dishonestly.

(j) If A owes money to Z for repairing the watch, and if Z retains the watch lawfully as a security for the debt, and A takes the watch out of Z's possession, with the intention of depriving Z of the property as a security for his debt, he commits theft, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(k) Again, if A, having pawned his watch to Z, takes it out of Z's possession without Z's consent, not having paid what he borrowed on the watch, he commits theft, though the watch is his own property, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(l) A takes an article belonging to Z, out of Z's possession without Z's consent, with the intention of keeping it until he obtains money from Z as a reward for its restoration. Here A takes dishonestly; A has therefore committed theft.

(m) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent for the purpose merely of reading it, and with the intention of returning it. Here, it is probable that A may have conceived that he had Z's implied consent to use Z's book. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(n) A asks charity from Z's wife. She gives A money, food and clothes, which A knows to belong to Z, her husband. Here it is probable that A may conceive that Z's wife is authorised to give away alms. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(o) A is a paramour of Z's wife. She gives a valuable property, which A knows to belong to her husband Z, and to be such property as she has not authority from Z to give. If A takes the property dishonestly, he commits theft.

(p) A, in good faith, believing property belonging to Z to be A's own property, takes that property out of B's possession. Here, as A does not take dishonestly, he does not commit theft.

379. Whoever commits theft shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

The offence of theft under the Penal Code differs materially from the offence known as larceny in the English law.

English law.—Larceny is the wilful and wrongful taking away of the goods of another against his consent and with the intent to deprive him permanently of his property.

Differences between larceny and theft—(1) Under larceny, the stolen property should be the property of some one; whereas under theft, it should be in the possession of some one.

(2) Under theft, everything becomes its object which is moveable, i.e., capable of being severed from its place. Hence, it is theft to sever and remove things which are attached to the ground such as trees, vegetables, etc.¹ In larceny, no offence is committed if the objects removed "savour of the reality, and are, at the time they are taken, part of the freehold". So strict was this rule at common law that a larceny could not be committed of title-deeds.²

(3) Under larceny, it is necessary to show an intention to appropriate a chattel and exercise an entire dominion over it. If it be taken with the intention of making a temporary use of it only, and then of letting the owner have it again, there is no larceny.³ Under theft it makes no difference that the person does not intend to assume entire dominion over the property taken, or to retain it permanently.⁴

(4) Under larceny, it must be shown that the taking was against the person's consent and was not only wrongful and fraudulent, but was also "without any colour of right"; under theft, it will be sufficient to show that it was without his consent.

(5) To constitute theft it is not necessary to prove that the thief ever had the stolen thing in his power, but there can be no larceny, even if there has been an actual removal, if the offender has never had the thing in his power.

(6) Theft may be committed though the person from whom the thing is taken has no title thereto; in the case of larceny the alleged owner should have some (general or special) ownership of it, and it must have been taken out of the owner's actual or constructive possession.

Ingredients.—In order to constitute theft five factors are essential:—

(1) Dishonest intention to take property.

(2) The property must be moveable

(3) It should be taken out of the possession of another person.

(4) It should be taken without the consent of that person.

(5) There must be some removal of the property in order to accomplish the taking of it.

1. 'Intending to take dishonestly.'—Intention is the gist of the offence. It is the intention of the taker which must determine whether the taking or moving of a thing is theft. The intention to take dishonestly exists when the taker intends to cause wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person.⁵ Where, therefore, a party of five persons, each of whom had a share in the property, and retained possession of the property, and the accused, who was one of the party, must exist at the time of the moving of the property (vide ill (h)). If the act done is not done animo furandi, it will not amount to theft.⁷ Where the owner is kept out of possession temporarily not with any such intention, but only with the object of causing him trouble in the sense of mere mental anxiety, and with the ultimate intention of restoring the thing to him without exacting or expecting any recompense, the detention does not amount to causing wrongful loss in any sense.⁸ Otherwise, a person keeping concealed for a time a valuable thing belonging to a friend, who is a careless man, in jest for the purpose of causing him a little anxiety

¹ Explanation 1; Shivram, (1891) 15 Bom. 702.

² 1 Hale P. C. 510.

³ Trebilcock, (1858) 27 L. J. (M. C.) 103; William Holloway, (1848) 1 Den. 370.

⁴ Nagappa, (1890) 15 Bom 344, 346.

⁵ Madaree Chowkeelar, (1805) 3 W. R.

(Cr.) 2, 3.

⁶ Nobin Chunder Holdar, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 79. See Sheomeshur Rai, (1888) 8 A.W.N.

97.

⁷ Thomas Bailey, (1872) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347.

⁸ Nabi Baksh, (1897) 25 Cal. 416.

or in earnest for the purpose of teaching him the salutary lesson of being careful, will be guilty of theft, a result which the legislature could never have intended. Where the accused found the complainant's pony at large, not within the compound or the stable of the complainant, it having broken from its tether to which it had been tied the previous night, and mounted it, and took a ride on it, returning home on the following day in the evening, it was held that the accused had not committed theft.¹ The Calcutta High Court has gone to the extent of deciding that illegal seizure and impounding of cattle is not theft even if effected with the malicious intent of subjecting the owner to additional expense, inconvenience and annoyance.²

Where there is no proof of 'taking' of the property found in the possession of the accused, the offence committed is not theft but criminal misappropriation.³

Taking need not be with the intention of retaining property permanently.—It is not necessary that the taking should be permanent or with an intention to appropriate the thing taken.⁴ The remarks of Norris, J., in *Adu Shikdar's case*⁵ that "with regard to the charge of stealing... there is not only no evidence that the prisoner intended to convert it (the property) to his own use, and make it permanently his own property" are in accordance with the English law on the subject, which is quite different from the definition of theft as given in the Code. The learned Judge seems to have overlooked the fact that under the Code a temporary taking might constitute theft (vide ill. (1)).

No wrongful gain is necessary.—It matters not whether the intention of the thief was or was not to derive a profit from his crime.⁶ Thus, where the accused took credit for the property of another, and then sold it, he was held guilty of theft, although he had no intention of deriving a profit from it. In Queen v. Bhatia,⁷ the accused, who clandestinely took their master's oats with intent to give them to their master's horses, and without any intent to apply them to their own private benefit, were held guilty of larceny, even though they were not answerable at all for the condition of the horses. In Queen v. Bhatia,⁸ the accused, who clandestinely took their master's plate to a pressing tailor, and tell him to pay himself :

Bona fide dispute or claim.—Where property is removed in the assertion of a contested claim of right, however ill-founded that claim may be, the removal thereof does not constitute theft.⁹ The dispute as to ownership must be bona fide.¹⁰ Mere assertion of a fair claim of property or right, or the mere existence of a doubt, is not enough. The claim to property must be proved by evidence to be fair and good.¹¹ It is the duty of the Court to determine what was the intention of the offender, and if it arrives at the conclusion that he was not acting in the 143.

¹ Rup Lal Singh v. Durga Prasad, (1917) 1 P. L. W. 416.

² Aradhun Mandal v. Myan Khan, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

³ Bom. Cr. C. v. Kheter Nath Dutt v. Indro Jalia, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 68, [78]; Algarasawma Teyan, (1904) 28 Mad. 304; Chaitan

d. 1017,

J. 416;

1 Weir

1 Weir

407;

908.

Kishen Goala, (1923) 4 P. L. T. 608; Harman Singh, (1923) 6 Lab. 56.

¹⁰ Hari Bapuji, (1897) Cr. R. No. 24 of 1897, Unrep. Cr. C. 920.

¹¹ Nasib Choudhry v. Nannoo Choudhry, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 47; Runnoo Singh v. Kish Churn Misser, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 18; Huris Chandra Das v. Bolai Audhicaree, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 75; Madhab Hari, (1887) 15 Cal. 390a; Bhagant Saran Misra, (1916) 14 A. L. J. R. 392.

Manney, (1904) Cal. & M. 547; Richard Morfit, (1818) R. & R. 307.

⁹ Bhatia, (1862) Unrep. Cr. C. 22; Ravi-shanker Jagjivan, (1925) 28 Bom. L. R.

exercise of a bona fide claim of right then it cannot refuse to convict him.¹ If there be any fair pretence of property or right in the prisoner or if it be brought into doubt at all, the Court should direct an acquittal.² It should not convict unless it is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence.³ In a case of alleged theft of fish from a tank which the accused claimed to have been in their possession and not in the complainant's, it was held that if the accused asserted a claim to the thing alleged to have been stolen by him, he should not be convicted unless the Court was in a position to say that the claim was a mere pretence.⁴

A went into possession of the disputed land in 1906. B, the complainant, obtained a decree for possession against A and obtained actual possession of the land in September 1917. Before the execution of the decree, A grew paddy but reaped it on the 14th December 1917. It was held that A having been a trespasser on the land at the time the paddy was grown, he had no right to go upon the land after the complainant had obtained possession and removed the paddy. Consequently when the paddy was cut A had no right to remove it and there was no bona fide dispute.⁵ Where the accused, acting as tenants had planted paddy crops on certain land of which possession was given under a civil Court decree to the claimant, and the accused removed the crops planted by them believing they had a right to the same, it was held that they had acted under a claim of right and were not guilty of theft.⁶ Where the accused were convicted of theft for having cut and removed crops which had been sown by the complainant, and in appeal the accused raised the point that the crops stood upon fields which were in the cultivatory possession of themselves, it was held, it was immaterial whether the complainant had or had not good title to cultivate the fields; it was sufficient that she sowed the crops; and the accused were rightly convicted.⁷

Mistake.—If a person takes of fact and in ignorance of law, t because there is no dishonest int

Stealing one's own property.—The owner of moveable property cannot be

B with the value of the to his servant to carry in the possession of a Con- was held that the Constable had special property in it and the accused was therefore guilty of theft.¹⁰ But if there is no dishonest intention it will not be theft (vide ill (i)). Thus, retaking of cattle unlawfully restrained will not amount to theft.¹¹ If goods have been seized by the sheriff under an execution levied on the property of some person other than the owner of the goods, the owner, by taking possession of them, cannot be guilty of larceny.¹²

¹ Budh Singh, (1879) 2 All. 101, referred to in Sabasing, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 936, 939; Pandita alias Rahmatulla Pramanil v. Eakimulla Akundo, (1900) 27 Cal. 501.

² 2 East P. C. 639. See Harendra Narayan v. Ramjan Khan, (1913) 41 Cal. 433.

³ Hari Bhairam, (1903) 9 C. W. N. 974.

⁴ Dhirendra Mohan Goswami, (1909) 14 C. W. N. 409; Ram Lal Singh v. Hari Charan Ahir, (1909) 11 C. L. J. 410.

⁵ Abinash Chandra Sarkar, (1918) 23 C. L. J. 120, 23 C. W. N. 385.

⁶ Sit Pein, (1923) 2 B. L. J. 160.

⁷ Muhammad Ali, (1921) 19 A. L. J. R. 961.

⁸ Nagappa, (1890) 15 Bom. 344.

⁹ 1 Hale P. C. 513. See Nowell Wilkinson, (1821) R. & R. 470.

¹⁰ Sheikh Husan, (1887) Unrep. Cr. C. 343.

¹¹ Yagamurthi Tharan, (1883) 1 Weir 422.

¹² Thomas Knight, (1903) 1 Cr. App. R. 185.

complainant to the act, but adduced no evidence, it was held that even if the complainant offered no resistance to the taking through fear of opposing the accused it was dishonest taking which was covered by the provisions of this section.¹ The complainant pledged some fishing nets with the accused. The nets remained in possession of the complainant, but the accused was at liberty to sell the goods if within three years the debt was not paid. The debt was not paid within the stipulated time and the complainant sold away one of the nets pledged. The accused, in the absence of the complainant, removed the nets. It was held that she could not be convicted of theft as it might fairly be contended that she bona fide supposed that she was justified in her action.² Where the accused, a ship-owner, alleging that money was due to him on account of certain transactions with the complainant, seized the complainant's goods which were in transit to another ship-owner and detained them, it was held that he was guilty of theft.³ But where a creditor appropriated payment, which the debtor made under a misapprehension, towards a time-barred debt, he was held not guilty of this offence.⁴

Obtaining cigarette from an automatic box.—Against the wall of a public passage was fixed what is known as an 'automatic box,' the property of a company. In such box was a slit of sufficient size to admit a penny piece, and in the centre of one of its sides was a protecting button or knob. The box was so constructed that upon a penny piece being dropped into the slit and the knob being pushed in a cigarette would be ejected from the box. Upon the box were the following inscrip

"The property of the [illegible] Company. No person shall be entitled to take any cigarette from this box unless he has first inserted a penny piece into the slit and pushed in the knob. Any person who takes a cigarette from this box without doing so shall be liable to be prosecuted for theft."

2. 'Any moveable property.'—'Moveable property' is defined in s. 22. Explanations 1 and 2 state that things attached to the land may become property by severance from earth, and that the act of severance is theft (vide ill. (a)). Thus, the thief who severs and carries away the same position as if he carried away what had previously been cut of trees belonging to others and not cut down at the time of sale of the trees for theft.⁶

It is not necessary that the thing stolen must have been the right of property. But an abuse of this section which "will prevent the law of theft from being applied to those venial violations of the right of property which mankind readily distinguishes from crime. such as a twig from a hedge, of a boy who takes a stone and throw at birds, of a servant who dips his hand into the accused took a false rope from the room of the accused guilty of theft because although the rope was of no value as a piece of cordage which had been used for ty

w.
out it

v. 175.
Pardus

Char. Tra
W. N.

guilty of breach of trust. If they have to try a case which lies on the frontier, one of those thefts which are hardly distinguishable from breaches of trust, or one of those breaches of trust which are hardly distinguishable from theft, they will not trouble themselves with subtle distinctions, but, leaving it undetermined by which name the offence should be called, will proceed to determine what is infinitely of greater importance, what shall be the punishment."¹

The property must be in the possession of the prosecutor.² Thus, there can be no theft of wild animals, birds, or fish while at large, but there can be a theft of tamed animals. Similarly, where property dishonestly taken belonged to a person who was dead, and therefore in nobody's possession, or where it is lost property without any apparent possessor, it is not the subject of theft, but of criminal misappropriation (vide ill. (g)). Where the owner of bullocks had lost them and could not find them on search and the bullocks were found in the possession of the accused, it was held that they could not be convicted of theft but of criminal misappropriation.³ Where the accused removed some bricks from a heap which had been left lying for eight years, it was held that it was open to the assumption that the bricks had been abandoned and their removal under the circumstances did not constitute theft.⁴

Possession of a trustee,⁵ or a bailee,⁶ is a sufficient possession within the definition of theft.

In a Bombay case it is said that to constitute theft it is sufficient if property is removed, against his wish, from the custody of a person who has an apparent title, or even colour of right, to such property.⁷ In this case the accused owed the complainant Rs. 60, and during the accused's absence his wife sold his working implements to the complainant for Rs. 25 of the debt. On accused's return he took back the implements against the wish of the complainant's wife, complainant himself not being present. The Magistrate thereupon convicted the accused of theft. But the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court on the ground that the offence of theft was not committed because it was not proved that the accused intended to act dishonestly in taking the implements nor was there evidence that he had authorized his wife to give the implements. West, J., said that the complainant held by an apparent title or at least an assertion of title that was not illusory; and that against even a colour of right a person aggrieved should not take the law into his hands. The conviction was, therefore, upheld. No doubt the accused made himself liable to a suit for damages by taking the law into his own

... proved to be a dishonest

... said to have committed

... paddy was grown upon his joti, and that he cut and removed it as a matter of right and in an assertion of a bona fide claim to the land. The complainant admitted that there had been a boundary dispute between his landlord and the landlord of the accused, but claimed the paddy as his own as it was in his possession. It was held that the accused had no justification in taking the law into his own hands, even if he was entitled to hold the land because he was not in actual possession of them.⁸

There may be theft without an intention to deprive the owner of the property permanently. In this respect the Penal Code differs from the English law. Where, therefore, a person snatched away some books from a boy as he came out of school and told him that they would be returned when he came to his house, it was held that he had committed theft.⁹

¹ Note N, pp. 159, 160, 161.

² Hossene Sheikh v. Rajkrishna Chatterjee, (1873) 20 W. R. (Cr.) 80; Jodha Singh, (1912) 11 A. L. J. R. 270.

³ Nga Shwe Zan, (1917) 10 B. L. T. 261.

⁴ Takit Tami, (1924) 3 B. L. J. 197.

⁵ Nga Po Saw, (1887) S. J. L. R. 410.

⁶ Soukhi Chand Sao, (1917) 3 P. L. J. 354.

⁷ Gangaram Santram, (1884) 9 Bom. 135.

See the judgment of Stevens, J., in Pandita v. Rahimulla, (1900) 27 Cal. 561.

⁸ Pandita v. Rahimulla, sup; Jayat Chandra Roy v. Rakhal Chandra Roy, (1899) 4 C. W. N. 190. See Bullara Goud, (1897) 1 Weir 426.

⁹ Nasir Ali Khan, (1911) 34 All. 82.

'Any person.'—For the definition of the word 'person' see s. 11, supra. The person from whose possession the property is taken may or may not be the owner of it and may have his possession either rightful or wrongful. Mere physical control of the person over the thing is quite enough (vide ills. (j) and (k)).

Attachment.—It has been held that theft can be committed by the owner of a crop under attachment by removing it.¹ Here the attachment was by distraint made by a Revenue Court, and the mode and effect of attachment by a civil Court as regards possession was not considered. Hence, where a judgment-debtor, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force, it was held that he could not be convicted of theft but of offences under ss. 424 and 403.²

The mere cutting and removal of a crop under attachment do not constitute the offence of theft without proof of dishonest intention. Such intention is negatived where the removal was in order to save the crop from being washed away³, or was in the nature of distraint by a landlord after it was attached.⁴

Goods in the shop of the accused were attached in execution of a decree and the decree-holder himself was given possession of the goods on his executing a complainant or gain to himself, and hence there was no theft.⁵

Possessory order.—The order of a Mamlatdar in a possessory suit is operative only as against the parties to the suit. Where in execution of such an order passed against a person, symbolical possession of a field with crops standing thereon was given to another, and the former's brothers cut and removed the crops, it was held that they could not be convicted of theft.⁶

Joint possession.—Where there are several joint owners in joint possession, and any one of them dishonestly takes exclusive possession, he will be guilty of theft.⁷ Similarly, if a co-parcener dishonestly takes the separate property of another co-parcener, he will be guilty of theft.⁸

Cases.—Taking out of the possession of another person.—The complainant washed a carpet at the village tank and hung it up there to dry; the accused dishonestly took the same away. It was held that the carpet had never left the complainant's possession, and the offence committed was that of theft.⁹

Where certain trees were uprooted by a dust-storm and were removed by tenants, it was held that the removal caused wrongful loss to the Zamindar and wrongful gain to the tenants and that they were therefore guilty of theft.¹⁰ Accused Nos. 2 and 3 having made a default in the payment of land revenue, the

¹ Periyannan, (1883) 1 Weir 423; Dadala Atchigadu, (1881) 1 Weir 420; Chunnu, (1911) 8 A. L. J. R. 656.

² Obayya, (1898) 22 Mad. 151. See also Subbayya, (1882) 1 Weir 421. Cf. Ramasami, (1909) 16 Mad. 381.

³ 23.

⁴ 58.

⁵ 16

⁶ L. W. 15, 42 M. L. J. 490.

⁷ C. 598.

⁸ C. P. L. R. 174. See Phul Singh, (1912) 10 A. L. J. R. 527, where it appeared that a landlord had jointly cultivated land with a non-occupancy tenant and had cut and removed the crops, but the Court held that the landlord could not be deemed to be part owner and in portion of the other part owner. The issue in the report are meagre.

⁹ Sita Ram Rai, (1880) 3 All. 181.

¹⁰ Mahli, (1886) Cr. R. No. 70 of 1886, Unrep. Cr. C. 314.

¹¹ Dunyapat, (1910) 17 A. L. J. R. 974, 1 U. P. L. R. 133.

Mamlatdar proceeded to their house and made a panchnama declaring their buffaloes to be under attachment. At the instigation of accused No. 1, the other accused untied and removed the buffaloes. It was held that they were guilty of theft for the Mamlatdar was to be deemed to be in possession inasmuch as he had a statutory right to take possession, he came to the place where the buffaloes were with the intention of taking possession, he made a declaration and a panchnama that he had taken possession, and he exercised the right of possession by forbidding the defaulters from removing them.¹

English cases.—Where a person, having ordered a tradesman to bring goods to his house, took out a certain quantity, asked their price, separated them from the rest, and then sent the tradesman home on pretence of wanting other articles, and ran away with the goods, it was held that this amounted to larceny.² Getting goods delivered into a hired cart on the express condition that they would be paid for before they were taken out from the cart, and then getting them from the cart without paying the price was held to be larceny.³ The prisoner put his hand into the prosecutor's pocket, got hold of his purse, and pulled it up to the edge of the pocket when the corner caught on a belt worn by the prosecutor. The prosecutor at that moment grasped the purse and put it back. It was held that the accused was guilty of larceny. Pickford, J., said: "If a man put his hand into another's pocket, and removed a purse from the position in which it was to the edge, and was only prevented from getting full possession of it because it accidentally caught in the belt, there was a sufficient asportation to constitute larceny."⁴

Joint property.—The removal of even the whole of the crop by a ryot in a zamindari holding on a taram tenure without delivering to the Zemindar his share of the crop does not constitute theft.⁵ A had in her possession forty baskets of paddy out of which B was entitled, under a decree of a civil Court, to thirty-five baskets. The decree awarded her this specific paddy as being the produce of a specified farm. B took the thirty-five baskets of paddy out of A's possession without A's consent. It was held that the act of B, though irregular and improper, did not amount to theft.⁶

English cases.—H, a member of a friendly society, was in possession of a shop where goods were sold for the benefit of the society. Each member partook of the profit, and was subject to the loss arising from the shop. H had the sole management, and was answerable for the safety of all the property and money coming to 1, also a member of d for stealing money although a member of the society.⁷

4. 'Without that person's consent.'—The thing stolen must have been taken without the consent of the person in possession of it. The primary inquiry to be made is whether the taking were invito domino, or without the will or approbation of the owner. Hence, where a debtor gave certain property to his creditor, and subsequently found out that the debt was time-barred, it was held that the charge of theft could not be sustained against the creditor, inasmuch as there was a full unqualified consent on the part of the debtor at the time of his giving away the

¹ Lallu Waghji, (1918) 21 Bom. L. R. 251,
⁵ Bom. Cr. C. 5

² Sharpless (1872) 2 East P. C. 675

³ C. v. D. v. D. (1870) 12 Q. B. 250

⁴

⁵

26M.

M. W. N. 106; Sankaranarayanan Iyer, [1914]
 M. W. N. 483.

⁶ Maung Po, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 334.

⁷ William Webster, (1861) 9 Cox 13; William Burgess, (1863) 9 Cox 302; William Cain, (1811) 2 Mood. 204.

property.¹ Explanation 5 says that consent "may be expressed or implied, and may be given either by the person in possession, or by any person having for the purpose authority either express or implied" (vide ill. (m) and (n)). But consent given under improper circumstances will be of no avail (vide ill. (o)). As to what is a valid 'consent' see s. 90, supra.

Cases.—A sought the aid of B, a servant of B's master, to remove the property of B's master. B, the purpose of procuring A's aid, was held that as the property removed was so taken with the knowledge of the owner, the offence of theft was not committed, but A would be guilty of abetment of theft.² Really of the property.

intention: cf. ill. (m) and (o). The thief had no knowledge of the owner's consent and it cannot, therefore, be construed as a consent. In two English cases, on similar facts, the offence of larceny was held to have been committed. The owner of goods, knowing of an intention in the accused to steal them, they having plotted so to do with his servant, directed his servant to carry on the business with a view to the detection of the thieves. The servant with the consent of his master agreed with the accused to open the door of the house and let them in. They broke open inner apartments and took the goods. It was held that they were guilty of larceny.³

The accused suggested to a servant of the prosecutrix a plan for the commission of a robbery by the accused at the shop of the prosecutrix. The servant, pretending to agree to the accused's suggestion, lent the keys of the shop to the accused, who made duplicate keys, with one of which, on a day arranged with the servant, the accused unlocked a padlock attached to the outer door and entered the shop where he was arrested. The prosecutrix had been informed by the servant of the accused's plan and knew that he intended to enter the shop on the day in question. The accused was convicted on an indictment which charged him with having broken and entered the shop with intent to steal therein. It was held that the conviction was right, notwithstanding that the prosecutrix knew that the accused had been supplied with the means of breaking and entering by her servant.⁴ Removal of official papers without the consent of the official head amounts to theft.⁵

Unauthorised consent.—Possession of wood by a Forest Inspector who is a servant of Government, is possession of the Government itself, and a dishonest removal of it, without payment of the necessary fees, from his possession, albeit with his actual consent, was held to constitute theft, as the consent obtained was unauthorised and fraudulent.⁶

5. 'Moves that property in order to such taking.'—The least removal of the thing taken from the place where it was before is a sufficient asportation though it be not quite carried off.⁷ It is not necessary that the property should have been removed out of its owner's reach or carried away from the place in which it was found. Upon this ground the guest, who having taken off the sheets from his bed with intent to steal them carried them into the hall and was apprehended before he could get out of the house, was adjudged guilty of larceny. So also was he, who having taken a horse in a close with intent to steal it, was apprehended before he could get it out of the close. And such was the case of him, who, intending to steal plate, took it out of the trunk wherein it was and laid it on the floor, but was surprised before he could remove it any further.⁸

¹ Muhammad Piar Dulaiya, (1904) 1 A. L. J. R. 508.

² Troyluckho Nath Chowdhry, (1878) 4 Cal. 366. See Benjamin, Bonnen, (1844) 1 C. & K. 295, 301.

³ Eggington, (1801) 2 East P. C. 666.

⁴ Chandler, [1913] 1 K. B. 125.

⁵ Vallabhrum, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1391.

⁶ Hanmanta, (1877) 1 Bom. 610.

⁷ 2 East P. C. 553.

⁸ Ibid, 555-556; Simson, (1664) Kel. 31.

Explanations 3 and 4 state how 'moving' could be effected in certain cases. Illustrations (b) and (c) elucidate the meaning of Explanation 4.

The offence of theft is completed when there is a dishonest moving of the property, even though the property is not detached from that to which it is secured.¹

Cases.—The accused, being in the employ of Government in the Post Office Department, while assisting in the sorting of letters, secreted two letters with the intention of handing them to the delivery peon and sharing with him certain moneys payable upon them. It was held that he was guilty of theft and of attempt to commit criminal misappropriation of property.²

On suspicion of theft of the train, in which four coolies were not found, but, hidden were discovered pieces of cloth, which on investigation were ascertained to have been abstracted from the next van. It was held that none of the four coolies travelling in the van where the pieces of stolen cloth were found could be convicted of theft of the cloth in the absence of evidence to connect one or more of them individually with the possession of the cloth.³

English cases.—Where the accused lifted up a bag from the bottom of a boot of a coach but was detected before he had got it out, and it did not appear that it was entirely removed from the space it at first occupied in the boot, but the raising it from the bottom had completely removed each part of it from the space that specific part occupied, it was held that this was a complete asportation.⁴

Where the servant of a tallow-chandler removed fat belonging to his master from the room in which it was kept, to a room where his master was accustomed to buy fat from persons who had it to sell, and placed it on a pair of scales there, with intent to sell it to his master, and appropriate the proceeds to his own use, this was held to be larceny.⁵ Pulling wool from the bodies of live sheep and lambs was held to be larceny.⁶ The prisoner was a letter-carrier and it was his duty to deliver letters given to him, and, if from any cause he was unable to deliver them, to bring them back to the Post Office in his pouch. He did not deliver a letter containing money which had been sorted to him for delivery, nor did he return it to the Post Office on the completion of his round; but, on being asked for it soon afterwards, he produced it from his pocket, and gave a false excuse for not having delivered it. It was held that there was sufficient taking to constitute larceny.⁷ In an indictment for stealing five pints of porter, it appeared that the prisoner was discovered standing by a barrel of porter, out of a hole in which the porter was running into a can on the ground, and that above five pints had run into the can. It was held that there was sufficient asportation proved of the porter in the can.⁸

Explanations 1 and 2.—The moving by the same act which effects the severance may constitute theft.⁹ Carrying away of trees after felling them is theft,¹⁰ but mere sale is not.¹¹ In the case of growing grass, a moving by the same act which effects its severance from the earth amounts to theft.¹² Where certain land, on which there was a standing crop of paddy, was entrusted to the accused to take care of and watch till the paddy was ripe when they were to give notice to the factory people who would reap it, it was held that by cutting the crops themselves

¹ Nga Po Hle, (1886) 8 J. L. B. 399.

² Venkatasami, (1890) 14 Mad. 229. See to the same effect, Eggington, (1801) 2 East 247.

³ Id. ⁴ Id. ⁵ Id. ⁶ Id. ⁷ Id. ⁸ Id. ⁹ Id. ¹⁰ Id. ¹¹ Id. ¹² Id.

¹ Hall, (1849) 3 Cox 245.

² Robert Martin, (1777) 1 Leach 171.

³ Thomas Poynton, sup.

⁴ Wallis, (1845) 3 Cox 67.

⁵ (1870) 5 M. H. C. App. 36.

⁶ Bhoga: Purnoo, (1897) Cr. R. No. 36 of 1897, Unreg. Cr. C. 92a.

⁷ Eske alias Hussain Sahib, (1882) 1 Weir 419.

⁸ Samsuddin, (1860) 2 Bom. L. R. 752.

and disposing of the same, the accused were guilty of theft if not of criminal breach of trust.¹

Husband and wife.—Hindu law.—There is no presumption of law that a husband and wife constitute one person in India for the purpose of criminal law. If the wife, removing her husband's property from his house, does so with dishonest intention, she is guilty of theft.² A Hindu woman, who removes from the possession of her husband, and without his consent, her palla or stridhan, cannot be convicted of theft.³

So also a husband cannot be convicted of robbing his wife, she being completely under the control of her husband. He can be convicted if he steals his wife's stridhan which is her absolute property.

The proposition that everything acquired by a woman during coverture is the property of her husband has no foundation in Hindu law.⁴

Mahomedan law.—It is laid down that a Mahomedan wife may be convicted of stealing from her husband; because under this system of law, there does not exist the same union of interest between husband and wife which exists between an English husband and wife.⁵ The same reasoning would apply in the case of a Mahomedan husband.

English law.—There is such a unity of interest between husband and wife that ordinarily the wife cannot steal the goods of the husband, nor can an indifferent person steal the goods of the husband by the delivery on the part of the wife; and if the wife deliver the goods of the husband to an indifferent person, for that person to convert them to his own use, this is no larceny; but if the person to whom the goods are delivered by the wife be an adulterer it is otherwise, and an adulterer can be properly convicted of theft even though they be delivered to him by the wife. If no adultery has actually been committed by the parties, but the goods of the husband are removed from his house by the wife and the intended adulterer, with an intent that the wife should elope with him and live in adultery with him, this taking of the goods is, in point of law, a larceny.⁶ But as a husband and wife are one person in law, the wife cannot steal her husband's goods whether she had committed adultery or not.⁷ But a person who receives money stolen by a wife from her husband will be punishable for misdemeanour under the Married Women's Property Act.⁸ In order to punish the adulterer the goods should be traced in any way to his personal possession.⁹

Under ss. 12 and 16 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the stealing of her husband's goods by a wife when about to leave or desert him or when living separate from him, is made punishable.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quo ad jura privata.—Where a man in extreme want of food or clothing steals either in order to relieve his present necessities, the law allows no such excuse to be considered. See the doctrine of self-preservation discussed at page 139 and of necessity at page 171.

Abetment.—The carrying off of certain buffaloes to the complainant by order of the accused, and the retention of them in the custody of the latter's servant, was held to be an abetment of theft.¹⁰ Where it was found that theft was actually committed by certain members of an unlawful assembly, but it was not

¹ Durga Teccari, (1909) 36 Cal. 758.

² Butch, (1893) 17 Mad. 401.

³ Natha Kalyan, (1871) 8 B. H. C. (Cr. C.)

11.

⁴ Ramasami Padeiyatchi v. Virasami Padeiyatchi, (1867) 3 M. H. C. 272.

⁵ Khatibai, (1869) 6 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 9.

⁶ Tollette, (1841) Car. & M. 112; Fen- therstone (1850)

10 Car

⁷ Kenny, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 307.

⁸ Payne, (1906) 1 K. H. 97.

⁹ Rosenberg, (1843) 1 C. & F. 233.

¹⁰ Tarinee Prosoud Banerjee, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 8.

found that the accused himself committed it by removing any property or that he had made any preparation for committing it or aiding anyone in the commission of it, it was held that he could not be convicted under this section read with s. 114, though he could be under this section read with s. 149.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question is moveable property.

(2) That such property was in the possession of a person.

(3) That the accused moved such property whilst in the possession of that person.

(4) That he did so without the consent of that person.

(5) That he did so in order to take the same out of the possession of that person.

(6) That he did so with intent to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to that person.²

It is not sufficient that the property found in the accused's possession was like the one stolen; there must be a finding to the effect that that property was the stolen property.³

Presumption.—Possession of stolen goods soon after the theft raises the presumption that the possessor is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen.⁴ Whether the possession of stolen property is recent enough to warrant a conviction for the substantive offence is a matter entirely for the jury.⁵ But unexplained possession of non-identifiable matter (such as paddy) alleged to be stolen does not amount to proof of theft.⁶ In considering whether the possession of stolen goods raises a presumption of dishonest receipt of stolen property, the attention of the jury should be drawn to the necessity of satisfying themselves that the possession is clearly traced to the accused.⁷ The question of what is or what is not a recent possession of stolen property is to be considered with reference to the nature of the article stolen. Thus, where two ends of woollen cloth in an unfinished state, consisting of about twenty yards each, are lost, and were in the possession of the accused two months after being stolen, and still in the same state, it was held that this was a possession sufficiently recent to call on the accused to show how he came by the property.⁸ Where a stolen buffalo was not traced to the accused until twelve months after the theft, it was held that this was not recent possession which would justify the presumption, in the absence of an explanation as to the manner in which the accused got the buffalo, that the accused stole it.⁹ Where circumstances are highly suspicious, and the suspicion is not rebutted when rebuttal may be reasonably expected, if the suspicion is wrong, suspicion becomes confirmed and becomes much more than suspicion. Where recent possession of stolen property and mere recent possession is relied upon to prove theft or dishonest possession, such mere possession must be exclusive.¹⁰

Where the evidence of theft is not direct but circumstantial, such evidence must be exhaustive and exclude the possibility of guilt of any other person or must point conclusively to the complicity of the accused.¹¹

¹ Hansa Pathak v. Dansi Lal Das, (1901) 8 C. W. N. 519.

² Madan, (1882) 1 Weir 411; Abdool Biswas v. Khater Mondal, (1899) 3 C. W. N. 332.

³ Bava Chela, (1886) Cr. R. No. 5 of 1886, Unrep. Cr. C. 227.

⁴ Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. Motee Jolaha, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 66; Jogeshur Bagdee, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 73 [109];

No. 19 of 1879; Tabu, (1891) P. R. No. 15 of 1891.

⁵ Guzzala Hanuman, (1902) 26 Mad. 467.

⁶ (1873) 7 M. H. C. App. 19, followed in Royappan, (1894) 1 Weir 429; Sini Teran, (1886) 1 Weir 429.

⁷ Malhari, (1882) 6 Bom. 731.

⁸ Partridge, (1830) 7 C. & P. 551. See Poromeshur Aheer, sup; Burke, (1884) 6 All. 224, 227.

⁹ Nga Paul, (1885) S. J. L. B. 366.

¹⁰ Nga Tha Dwe, (1896) P. J. L. B. 279.

¹¹ Chiraguddin, (1914) 18 C. W. N. 1144.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily if property not worth more than Rs. 50.

Venue.—The offence of theft, or any offence which includes theft or the possession of stolen property, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such offence was committed or the property stolen was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen.¹

Joint trial.—A and B are both charged with a theft, and B is charged with two other thefts committed by him in the course of the same transaction. A and B may be both tried together on a charge charging both with one theft, and B alone with the other two thefts.²

Joinder of charges.—Theft and concealing stolen property.—A charge under s. 380 cannot be joined to a charge under s. 414, such joinder, being opposed to s. 233, Criminal Procedure Code, constitutes not merely an irregularity but an illegality.³

House-breaking and theft.—When offences under ss. 457 and 380 are committed in one transaction, it is very desirable that formal convictions under both sections should be recorded, in order that if the accused subsequently commits another theft, technical difficulties may not arise.⁴

Theft and receipt of stolen property.—A person committing theft and a person who receives the stolen property may be tried jointly where practicable.⁵ Where there are several receivers of stolen property this should not be done.⁶

Theft and mischief.—Where a person who has stolen an animal subsequently kills it for the purpose of eating it, he cannot be convicted under both ss. 379 and 429. Where after a thief has stolen and killed an animal, another person assists him in skinning the carcass, the person so assisting is not guilty either of an offence under s. 379, or of an offence under s. 429.⁷

Conviction for a different offence.—A person accused of theft may be convicted of criminal misappropriation, criminal breach of trust, or cheating, and vice versa.⁸

It is irregular to convict and punish a person for abetment of theft, and at the same time to convict and punish him for receiving the stolen property.⁹

Repetition.—Every repetition of theft is a grave offence when it indicates a habit not cured by previous light punishments.¹⁰ See s. 75, supra.

Single or several thefts.—Removal by one single act of several articles constitutes one offence of theft only, although the articles belong to different persons.¹¹

The Central Provinces Rule.—As there appears to be a difference of practice in respect of treating thefts as single or several, if in one transaction things belonging to different persons have been stolen it is necessary to issue some instructions that is here set out can in any way control the discretion given to Magistrates by s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to the framing of separate charges or the holding of separate trials, whenever it appears appropriate to do so.

¹ Bhima, (1910) 14 A. L. J. R. 344.

² Balabhai Hargovind, supra.

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id.

⁷ Id.

⁸ Id.

⁹ Id.

¹⁰ Id.

¹¹ Agarwal (1905) 29 D. L. J. 100.

of 1897, Unrep. Cr. C. 22; one Id. Id. (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 38; Har Dial. (1905) P. L. R. No. 144 of 1905.

If the property, which it was the thief's intention (as shown by the circumstances or by his admission) to take, consisted of a number of contiguous articles, which were reached by one and the same act of trespass or which were the subject of a single enterprise, the moving of each article, in the course of removal of the whole bulk of property, cannot ordinarily be considered to be a distinct theft. The thieving project in such a case was single, although it may have been achieved in detail and the fact that the spoil taken consisted of several things, whether belonging to the same or the different owners, does not necessarily break up the unity of the transaction.

If, on the other hand, the property taken consisted of a number of articles so distantly or diversely situated as to require a distinct act of trespass or a distinct enterprise for the removal of each, the transaction must ordinarily be held to have been not single but complex, and its achievement to have involved the commission of more than one separate theft.

The following examples will make the distinction clear—

(a) A thief enters a house and removes one by one all the articles of value which he finds there. As all the property is got at by one and the same act of trespass, the theft is single although some of the articles may have belonged to friends of the owner of the house.

(b) A thief goes to a threshing-floor, where the grain of four cultivators is stored and steals a little from every heap. Unless it is shown that he had distinct designs against the several owners, it is plain that there was but one act of thieving accomplished through one and the same trespass.

(c) A thief snatches from a man's hand a bag containing articles belonging to several persons. The theft thus achieved by a single enterprise is not made multiple by the fact that the things snatched had different owners.

(d) A cattle-lifter drives off a herd of six heads, being the bullocks of half a dozen separate cultivators, which were in charge of a boy. This is a single act of theft, the enterprise being single, and is not six thefts, because there were six owners.

(e) In a crowded public place, a thief picks the pockets of A, B and C in succession. Three thefts have been committed.¹

Restoration of stolen property.—The property stolen may be returned to the person from whom it was stolen under s. 517, Criminal Procedure Code, and an innocent purchaser may be compensated for the price paid under s. 519, if any money is found in the possession of the thief. But the property restored should be in existence at the time of theft. R's cow, having been stolen, the thief after a lapse of a year and a half was convicted. Six months after the theft V innocently purchased the cow, which, while in his possession, had a calf. The Magistrate ordered that the cow and the calf should be delivered up by V to R. It was held that as the calf was not even in embryo at the date of the theft the order to deliver the calf was illegal.²

A difference, however, should be noted when the thing stolen is (a) a negotiable instrument, or (b) a bank note.

(a) When an instrument, such as a promissory note, has been stolen, the person from whom it was stolen has a good title to it, not only as against the thief, but also as against any person who subsequently becomes the holder, unless such person can prove that the instrument had become negotiable at the time it was stolen, and that he had obtained it bona fide for value without notice of theft.³

(b) A currency note being in legal tender money, the property in it passes by mere delivery, and in the interests of commerce and the security of human dealing it from an honest purchaser.

² Bank of Bengal v. Mendes, (1880) 5 Cal. 654.

³

380. Whoever commits theft in any building,¹ tent or vessel,² which building, tent or vessel is used as a human dwelling, or used for the custody of property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Object.—The object of the section is to give greater security only to property deposited in a house so as to be under the protection of the house and not to property about the person of the party from whom it is stolen. Theft from a person in a dwelling house is, therefore, simple theft under s. 379.¹

Scope.—There is nothing in the section which prevents a person from being convicted under this section for a theft committed by him in his own house. It might at first seem that it was the intention of the legislature to protect property by this section, not from the owner of the house but from others. The section is nearly identical with s. 60 of 24 & 25 Vic., c. 96, and it has been repeatedly held in England that the essential point in the offence of theft in a building is that the property should be under the protection of the building, and that the offence may be committed by the owner of the building or other person who has lawful access to the building.²

1. 'In any building.'—The term 'building' means a permanent edifice of some kind. Theft should, under this section, have been committed in any such building.³

Theft from a verandah,⁴ or the roof of a house,⁵ or a brakevan,⁶ or a railway carriage,⁷ is not theft in a building. But, where the accused stole some luggage and cash from a railway carriage, when it was at a railway station, it was held that though the railway carriage was not a building, the railway station was, and that the accused had committed an offence under this section.⁸ An entrance half surrounded by a wall in which there were two door-ways but without doors, which was used for custody of property, is held to be a building.⁹ A courtyard¹⁰ is, but a compound¹¹ is not, a building.

Where the accused entered the dwelling house of the complainant and in his presence dishonestly took away certain property, in spite of his remonstrances, it was held that he had committed an offence under this section.¹²

Theft by constables of property from the house they were employed to guard was held to be punishable under this section and not under s. 109.¹³

Where a carter removed from the godown of a railway company a bag filled with pilferings from a number of bags consigned to others, it was held that the bag being in the possession of the railway as bailees, the taking it out of the godown amounted to theft.¹⁴

Where a person while inspecting the record of a case removed from it a document with the intention of substituting another fabricated by him in its place and

¹ Good, P. M. (1866) D. D. No. 1 of 1866.

Weir 436.

² Sheikh Sahab, (1886) Cr. R. No. 36 of 1886, Unrep. Cr. C. 293.

³ Dad, (1878) P. R. No. 10 of 1879.

⁴ Shera, (1879) P. R. No. 35 of 1879; Ghulam Jelani, (1889) P. R. No. 16 of 1889; Surja, (1882) 2 A. W. N. 224.

⁵ Rama, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 481.

⁶ Kashinath Bhaushet, sup.

⁷ Baidnath Singh, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 29.

⁸ Soukhi Chand Sao, (1917) 3 P. L. J. 354.

⁹ Ali Husain, (1901) 23 All. 306; (1880) 1

1. 'Clerk or servant.'—A clerk or servant is a person bound either by an express contract of service, or by conduct implying such a contract, to obey the orders and submit to the control of his master in the transaction of the business which it is his duty as such clerk or servant to transact.¹ "What is a test as to the relationship of master and servant? A test used in many cases is, to ascertain whether the prisoner was bound to obey the orders of his employer so as to be under his employer's control... It is not necessary that there should be a payment by salary—for commission will do—not that the whole time should be employed, nor that the employment should be permanent,—for it may be only occasional, or in a single instance—if, at the time, the prisoner is engaged as servant."² "The test is very much this, viz., whether the person charged is under the control and bound to obey the orders of his master. He may be so without being bound to devote his whole time to this service; but if bound to devote his whole time to it, that would be very strong evidence of his being under control."³ The allowance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant.⁴ It is necessary that the objects of the service of a 'clerk or servant' should not be criminal, but a man may be such a clerk or servant although the objects of his service are in part illegal as being contrary to public policy.⁵

CASES.

Clerk.—Where the clerk of a toll-contractor illegally levied toll on carts laden when leaving a town, and prevented the carts from passing through the toll gate unless the toll demanded was paid, he was held guilty of this offence.⁶

Servant.—Where some policemen stole a sum of money shut up in a box, and placed it in the Police Treasury building, over which they were mounting guard as sentinels, they were held to have committed an offence under this section and not one under s. 409.⁷ Where a person engaged to cart tamarind fruits from a forest abstracted a portion of it, it was held that he was not the less a servant because his employment was temporary.⁸ But a hired boatman was held to be not a servant.⁹

An unpaid apprentice is held to be a 'servant' within the meaning of this section.¹⁰

English cases.—The following are held to come within the expression 'clerk or servant.'—An apprentice under the age of eighteen¹¹; a person paid for his services by a commission or share in the profits¹²; a person who is occasionally employed¹³; a person who is not a general servant but employed for a particular purpose¹⁴; a person employed by different persons at the same time for different purposes¹⁵; a person who acted as a clerk or servant though not expressly appointed as such¹⁶ and a director of a company.¹⁷

The prisoner, a servant of B, a horse-dealer, was sent by him to the prosecutor to deliver a horse. The prosecutor asked the prisoner to sell a pony for him to C for £ 5 and not less. The prisoner took the pony to another person, sold it for £ 3 and absconded with the money. It was held that the pony was in the

¹ Stephen's Dig. of Crim. L., Art. 335;
Sohan Lal, (1905) P. R. No. 50 of 1905

¹¹ William Batty, (1812) 2 Mood. 257;

¹² Thomas, (1853) 6 Cox 403.

¹³ Henry Hughes, (1832) 1 Mood. 370;

¹⁴ Winnall, sup.

¹⁵ William Batty, (1812) 2 Mood. 257;

¹⁶ Thomas, (1853) 6 Cox 403.

¹⁷ Henry Hughes, (1832) 1 Mood. 370;

¹⁸ Winnall, sup.

¹⁹ William Batty, (1812) 2 Mood. 257;

²⁰ Thomas, (1853) 6 Cox 403.

²¹ Henry Hughes, (1832) 1 Mood. 370;

²² Winnall, sup.

²³ William Batty, (1812) 2 Mood. 257;

²⁴ Thomas, (1853) 6 Cox 403.

²⁵ Henry Hughes, (1832) 1 Mood. 370;

²⁶ Winnall, sup.

²⁷ William Batty, (1812) 2 Mood. 257;

²⁸ Thomas, (1853) 6 Cox 403.

¹ (1905) 1 P. R. 401.

² Bawool Mamjee, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 32.

³ Sohan Lal, sup.

custody of the prisoner in the character of a servant to the prosecutor, and that it was not in his possession as bailee, and that he was therefore guilty of larceny.¹

The following persons are held not to fall under the expression 'clerk or servant.'—The driver of a coach hired for the day of the party hiring²; the person employed to collect the sacrament money from the communicants of the minister of church wardens³; a person requested to receive money in a single instance only⁴; a person employed to solicit orders for a particular person only but at liberty to apply for orders whenever he thought most convenient and to be paid by commission⁵; a person employed to get the orders for goods, and to receive payment for them, but who was at liberty to get the orders and receive the money where and when he thought proper and was to be paid by a commission on the goods sold⁶; the treasurer of a friendly society who received no payment for filling the office⁷; an accountant and a debt-collector engaged by the complainant to collect debts on terms of receiving five per cent. on the amount collected⁸ and a member of a committee appointed to conduct an excursion and who received no remuneration for his services.⁹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as for s. 379; and further—

(7) That the accused was at the time a clerk, or servant and was employed in such capacity by the person in whose possession the stolen property was.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily if the property is not worth more than Rs. 50.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, being a servant [or clerk or employed in the capacity of a clerk or servant] of AB, committed theft by stealing property, to wit—, in the possession of the said AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 381 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.¹⁰

382. Whoever commits theft, having made preparation

Theft after preparation made for causing death, hurt or restraint, in order to the committing of the theft.

for causing death, or hurt, or restraint, or fear of death, or of hurt, or of restraint, to any person, in order to the committing of such theft, or in order to the effecting of his escape after the committing of such theft, or in order to the retaining of property taken by such theft, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A commits theft on property in Z's possession; and, while committing this theft, he has a loaded pistol under his garment, having provided this pistol

¹ Stanbury, (1847) 2 Cox 272.

² Haydon, (1836) 7 C. & P. 443.

³ John Burton, (1829) 1 Mood. 237.

⁴ William Nettleton, (1830) 1 Mood. 239.

⁵ Neyre, (1873) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 34.

⁶ Bowers, (1866) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 41. See

Polley, (1871) 12 Cox 56, where the accused was to get remuneration by commission but was bound to give the whole of his time and it was held that he was a servant.

⁷ Tyree, (1869) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 177.

⁸ James Hall, (1875) 13 Cox 49.

⁹ Bren, (1893) 9 Cox 295.

¹⁰ (1863) 2 W. R. (Cr. L.) 15.

for the purpose of hurting Z in case Z should resist. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A picks Z's pocket, having posted several of his companions near him, in order that they may restrain Z, if Z should perceive what is passing and should resist, or should attempt to apprehend A. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

"The possession by a thief at the time of his committing a theft of a knife or other weapon, which, if used on a human being, might cause death or hurt, would not of itself justify a conviction under the section. There must be something to show or from which it may properly be inferred, that the offender made preparation for causing one or more of the results mentioned in the section."¹

If hurt is actually caused when a theft is committed, the offence is punishable as robbery, and not under this section.² In robbery there is always injury. In offences under this section the thief is full of preparation to cause hurt, but he may not cause it. A stole some rice from a house. While carrying it away he was seized by B. He thereupon dropped the rice and then stabbed B with a knife. He was convicted of causing hurt while committing robbery under s. 394. It was held that as A dropped the rice before stabbing B, he could not have caused the hurt for the purpose of carrying away the rice, and the offence was therefore not robbery, but one under this section and s. 324.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as for s. 379; and further—

(7) That the accused, when committing such theft, made preparation for causing death, hurt, or restraint or fear of death, hurt, or restraint.

(8) That he did as above in order (a) to the committing of such theft; or (b) to effect his escape after having committed such theft; or (c) to retain property taken by such theft.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed theft of (specify the article) the property of AB, after having made preparation for causing death [or hurt or restraint] by (specify the mode of preparation made) in order to the committing of the said theft and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 382 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to crimes on the Frontier, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901). As to enhanced punishment in the case of a criminal tribe, gang, or class, see the Criminal Tribes Act, 1897, s. 6. As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

Of Extortion.

383. Whoever intentionally puts any person in fear of any injury to that person, or to any other,¹ and thereby dishonestly induces the person so put in fear to Extortion.

¹ Per Fox, J., in Nga Shan Gale, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 87, 89.

² Hushrut Sheikh, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 85.

³ Nga Paing, (1907) 4 L. B. R. 147.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—able by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Where it is doubtful whether property is obtained by fraudulent inducement or by putting in fear of injury, the accused can be punished either for extortion or for cheating.¹

Place of trial.—See ill. (c) to s. 179, Criminal Procedure Code.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed extortion by putting AB in fear of a certain injury, to wit—, and thereby dishonestly induced the said AB to deliver to you a certain property, to wit—; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 383 of the Indian Penal Code and with my cognizance [or the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—For enhanced punishment in the case of members of a tribe or gang, or class, see the Criminal Tribes Act (II of 1897), s. 6.

385. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts any person in fear, or attempts to put any person in fear, of any injury,¹ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Putting person in fear of injury in order to commit extortion.

COMMENT;

By this section a distinction between the inchoate and the consummated offence is recognised. The attempt to commit extortion has proceeded so far towards completion that a person has been put in fear of injury, or that there has been an attempt to excite such fear; but the offence is incomplete because there has been no delivery of property, etc. The Court must be satisfied that the putting in fear is with the intention of extorting a delivery of property.²

1. 'Injury.'—See s. 44, supra.

PRACTICE;

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused put the complainant in fear, or attempted to put him in fear.

(2) That the fear was regarding some injury.

(3) That the accused did as above to commit extortion.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

386. Whoever commits extortion by putting any person in fear of death or of grievous hurt to that person or to any other, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Extortion by putting a person in fear of death or grievous hurt.

¹ Ramnarain Chowkeedar, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 32. ² M. & M. 347.

COMMENT.

If the fear caused is that of death or of grievous hurt it naturally causes great alarm. The section, therefore, provides for severe penalty in such cases.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as those required for s. 384, but prove in the point (1) that the fear was of death or of grievous hurt.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

387. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts or attempts to put any person in fear of death or of grievous hurt¹ to that person or to any other, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Putting person in fear of death or of grievous hurt, in order to commit extortion.

COMMENT.

The relation between this section and s. 386 is the same as that between s. 385 and s. 384.

1. 'In fear of death or of grievous hurt'.—It is not necessary that the fear of death or of grievous hurt should be instantaneous.¹

See s. 46 as to the meaning of 'death' and s. 320 as to 'grievous hurt.'

The feigning of an attempt to commit suicide in order to extort money is an offence under this section.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove that the accused put or attempted to put the complainant in fear of death or of grievous hurt to him or to some other person in order to commit extortion.³

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Separate convictions.—Separate convictions cannot be passed under both s. 365 and this section.⁴

Charge.—See s. 385. For the expression "in fear of injury" substitute "in fear of death or grievous hurt."

Punishment.—As to crimes on the Frontier, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 11 (3) (d); 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

388. Whoever commits extortion by putting any person in fear of an accusation¹ against that person or Extortion by threat of accusation of an offence punishable with death or transportation, etc.

any other, of having committed or attempted to commit any offence² punishable with death, or with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, or of having attempted to induce any other person to commit such offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and

¹ Tun Baw, (1912) 6 L. B. R. 100, F. B.

² Gregory, (1866) 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 423.

³ Vide s. 384, sup.

⁴ Po Lan, (1912) 6 L. B. R. 160.

shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offence be one punishable under section 377 of this Code, may be punished with transportation for life.

COMMENT.

The aggravating circumstance under this section is the threat of an accusation of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life or with imprisonment for ten years. If the accusation is of unnatural offence (s. 377) then the penalty provided is severer.

1. 'Fear of an accusation'.—It is immaterial whether the person against whom the accusation is threatened be innocent or guilty if the prisoner intended to extort money.¹

2. 'Offence'.—The word 'offence' means a thing punishable under the Code or any special or local law (s. 40.)

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points as those required for s. 384, showing that the fear was occasioned by a threat of an accusation of having committed, or having attempted to commit, or induced some one else to commit, an offence punishable with death, or with transportation for life, or ten years' imprisonment, or unnatural offence (s. 377).

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed extortion by putting AB in fear (or attempted to commit—, for life, or with imprisonment, etc.), to offence), and thereby dishonestly induce the thing or property); and that you under s. 388 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.²

389. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts Putting person in fear of accusation of offence in order to commit extortion.

or attempts to put any person in fear of an accusation, against that person or any other, of having committed or attempted to commit an offence punishable with death or with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offence be punishable under section 377 of this Code, may be punished with transportation for life.

COMMENT.

This section bears the same relation to s. 388 as s. 385 bears to s. 381.

1. 'Offence'.—The word 'offence' here denotes a thing punishable under the Code or any special or local law (s. 40).

¹ James Gardner, (1824) 1 C. & P. 479; ² Id. (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr. L.) 4. Richards, (1869) 11 Cox 43.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused put, or attempted to put, a person in fear.

(2) That the fear was of an accusation of an offence, or an attempt to commit it.

(3) That such offence was punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for at least ten years.

(4) That he did so in order to commit extortion (see s. 384).

For the last provision, prove further that the accusation was of an unnatural offence (s. 377).

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—See s. 385.

Punishment.—As to crimes on the Frontier, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

Of Robbery and Dacoity.

Robbery. 390. In all robbery there is either theft or extortion.

Theft is "robbery" if, in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away¹ or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end,² voluntarily causes³ or attempts to cause to any person⁴ death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death⁵ or of instant hurt,⁶ or of instant wrongful restraint.⁷

Extortion is robbery if the offender, at the time of committing the extortion, is in the presence⁸ of the person put in fear, and commits the extortion by putting that person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint to that person, or to some other person,⁹ and, by so putting in fear, induces the person so put in fear then and there to deliver up the thing extorted.

Explanation.—The offender is said to be present if he is sufficiently near to put the other person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A holds Z down, and fraudulently takes Z's money and jewels from Z's clothes, without Z's consent. Here A has committed theft, and, in order to the committing of that theft, has voluntarily caused wrongful restraint to Z. A has therefore committed robbery.

(b) A meets Z on the high-road, shows a pistol, and demands Z's purse. Z, in consequence, surrenders his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z by putting him in fear of instant hurt, and being at the time of committing the extortion in his presence. A has therefore committed robbery.

(c) A meets Z and Z's child on the high-road. A takes the child, and threatens to fling it down a precipice, unless Z delivers his purse. Z, in consequence, delivers his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z, by causing Z to be in fear of instant hurt to the child who is there present. A has therefore committed robbery on Z.

(d) A obtains property from Z by saying: "Your child is in the hands of my gang, and will be put to death unless you send us ten thousand rupees." This is extortion, and punishable as such: but it is not robbery, unless Z is put in fear of the instant death of his child.

COMMENT.

Robbery is a special and aggravated form of either theft or extortion.

The authors of the Code say: "In one single class of cases, theft and extortion are in practice confounded together so inextricably, that no judge, however sagacious, could discriminate between them. This class of cases therefore has, in all systems of jurisprudence, been treated as a perfectly distinct class... We have therefore made robbery a separate crime.

"There can be no case of robbery which does not fall within the definition either of theft or of extortion; but in practice it will perpetually be matter of doubt whether a particular act of robbery was a theft or an extortion. A large proportion of robberies will be half theft, half extortion. A seizes Z, threatens to murder him, unless he delivers all his property, and begins to pull off Z's ornaments. Z in terror begs that A will take all he has, and spare his life, assists in taking off his ornaments, and delivers them to A. Here, such ornaments as A took without Z's consent are taken by theft. Those which Z delivered up from fear of death are acquired by extortion. It is by no means improbable that Z's right-arm bracelet may have been obtained by theft, and left-arm bracelet by extortion; that the rupees in Z's girdle may have been obtained by theft, and those in his turban by extortion. Probably in nine-tenths of the robberies which are committed, something like this actually takes place, and it is probable that a few minutes later neither the robber nor the person robbed would be able to recollect in what proportions theft and extortion were mixed in the crime; nor is it at all necessary for the ends of justice that this should be ascertained. For though, in general, the consent of a sufferer is a circumstance which very materially modifies the character of the offence, and which ought, therefore, to be made known to the Courts, yet the consent which a person gives to the taking of his property by a ruffian who holds a pistol to his breast is a circumstance altogether immaterial".¹

The chief distinguishing element in robbery is the presence of imminent fear or violence.

The Explanation and illustrations (c) and (d) mark the distinction between simple extortion and extortion which is robbery.

1. 'Carrying away.'—Even if death, hurt, or wrongful restraint, or fear of any of these, is caused after committing the theft in order to carry away the property obtained by theft, this offence would be committed. According to English law the force which converts theft into robbery must be used before or at the time of taking, and must be of such a nature as to show that it was intended to overpower the party robbed, and prevent his resisting, and not merely to get possession of the property stolen. Thus, if a man walking after a woman in the street were by violence to pull her shawl from her shoulders, though he might use considerable violence, it would not be highway robbery, because the violence was not for the purpose of overpowering the party robbed, but only to get possession of the property.²

2. 'For that end.'—Death, hurt, or wrongful restraint, must be caused in committing theft, or in carrying away property obtained by theft.³ The use of violence will not convert the offence of theft into robbery unless the violence be

¹ Note N, p. 162.

² Thomas v. Gason, (1821) 1 C. & P. 204.

³ Edman v. Klen, (1863) 3 W. R. (Cr.)

14; Kalso Kario, (1872) Cr. R., 214 Jinn
1872, Unrep. Cr. C. 62.

committed for one of the ends specified in this section. Where the accused abandoned the property obtained by theft and threw stones at his pursuer to deter him from continuing the pursuit, it was held that the accused was guilty of theft and not of robbery¹. The essence of the offence consists in the offender voluntarily causing or attempting to cause any person death or hurt, etc., for the purpose of committing theft or carrying away or attempting to carry away properties obtained by theft.

Hurt independent of theft does not amount to robbery.—Where hurt or fear of instant hurt was caused by five or more persons for the purpose of dispossessing persons already in possession of some premises and had no relation to the commission of theft, although the theft might have been committed at the same time as a perfectly independent act, it was held that this did not amount to robbery².

Where a child of four years of age was stripped of its ornaments and when the child threatened to tell his mother it was beaten, it was held that the offence committed was one of theft and not robbery³.

A had set wires in which game was caught. B, a game-keeper, found them and took the game and wires for the use of the lord of the manor. A demanded them with menaces, and B gave them up. The jury found that A acted under a bona fide impression that the game and wires were his property. It was held that A had not committed robbery⁴.

3. 'Voluntarily causes.'—These words denote that an accidental infliction of injury by a thief will not convert his offence into robbery. Thus, where a person while cutting a string, by which a basket was tied, with intent to steal it, accidentally cut the wrist of the owner, who at the moment tried to seize and keep the basket, and ran away with it, it was held that the offence committed was theft and not robbery⁵. But, where, in committing theft, there is indubitably an intention, seconded by an attempt, to cause hurt, the offence is robbery⁶.

'Voluntarily'—See s. 39, supra.

4. 'To any person.'—The person need not be the one from whose possession the thing is taken.

5. 'Death.'—See s. 46, supra.

6. 'Hurt.'—See s. 319, supra. Where A and B were stealing mangoes from a tree, C surprised them, on which A knocked him down senseless with a stick⁷; and where a person, in snatching a nose-ring, wounded the woman in the nostril, and caused her blood to flow⁸, this offence was held to have been committed.

7. 'Wrongful restraint.'—See s. 339, supra. The accused stopped the complainant's boat in the stream representing themselves to be persons in authority and saying that the boat was required by a Magistrate to carry treasure, and then they plundered it. It was held that they were guilty of robbery⁹. If a bailiff handcuff a prisoner under pretence of carrying him to prison with greater safety, and by means of this violence extort money, he is guilty of robbery¹⁰.

Where a police-officer obtained Rs. 7 from two prisoners on a promise of releasing them and threatened them that unless they gave him Rs. 200, he would confine them in the lock-up and keep them there for months while a charge of bribery against them, in respect of Rs. 7, was being investigated, and on his threat he was allowed to take certain ornaments, it was held that the offence committed was that of robbery¹¹.

¹ (1865) 1 Weir 442; Kalio Kero, (1872) Unrep. Cr. C. 65; Cr. R., 27th June, 1872.

² Otaruddin Manjhi v. Kafiluddi Manjhi, (1900) 5 C. W. N. 372.

³ Padam Singh, (1892) 6 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 36.

⁴ Hall, (1828) 3 C. & P. 409.

⁵ Edwards, (1843) 1 Cox 32.

⁶ Teeka Bheer, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 85.

⁷ Hushrut Sheikh, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 85.

⁸ Teeka Bheer, supra.

⁹ Duleelooddeen Sheikh, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 19.

¹⁰ Samuel Gascoigne, (1783) 1 Leach 280.

¹¹ Basant Rai, (1896) P. R. No. 12 of 1896.

8. 'Presence.'—The Explanation says that the offender is said to be present if he is sufficiently near to put the other person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

9. 'Fear of instant death,...to some other person.'—Imminent fear of death, hurt, etc., is necessary to bring the section into operation. If a man holds another's child over a river and threatens to throw it in unless the other gives him money, this will amount to robbery¹. The principle of robbery is violence; where the money is delivered through fear, that is constructive violence.

CASES:

Where the accused forced an earring from the ear of a lady²; where the accused tore some hair from a lady's head in snatching a diamond pin from it³; where the accused took goods from the prosecutrix of the value of eight shillings, and by threats compelled her to take thirteen pence as payment for them⁴; where the accused, while the complainant was proceeding in a street, caught hold of the seals and chain of the complainant's gold watch and pulled the watch out of his fob and by giving two or three jerks broke the steel chain with which it was attached and then made off with it⁵; and where a person ran up against another for the purpose of diverting his attention while he picked his pocket⁶, it was held that the force was sufficient to constitute the offence of robbery.

391. When five or more persons conjointly commit or attempt to commit a robbery, or where the whole number of persons conjointly committing or attempting to commit a robbery, and persons present and aiding such commission or attempt, amount to five or more, every person so committing, attempting or aiding, is said to commit "dacoity."

COMMENT.

Dacoity is robbery committed by five or more persons. Abettors who are present and aiding when the crime is committed are counted in the number.

The essentials of the offence of dacoity are that the theft should be perpetrated by means either of actual violence or of threatened violence. The threatened violence may be implied in the conduct and character of the mob. It is not necessary that the force or menace should be displayed by any overt act. It cannot avail the accused to say, or reduce the gravity of their offence, that no actual hurt was caused as no one dared to resist the overwhelming show of force, which was sufficient to terrify, and did in fact terrify, those whose business it was to protect the property⁷.

The authors of the Code say: "We have provided punishment of exemplary severity for that atrocious crime which is designated in the Regulations of Bengal and Madras by the name of dacoity. This name we have thought it convenient to retain for the purpose of denoting, not only actual gang-robbery, but the attempting to rob when such an attempt is made or aided by a gang." The popular notion of dacoity was that of an outrage committed, at the very dead of night, by a band of ruffians, whose heads were covered and whose faces were disguised by chalk or some other mixture, and who had no private enmity with the peaceable and unfortunate house-holder, whom some one of the gang had previously, by secret enquiries, marked out for a prey.

¹ 2 East P. C. 735, 736.

² James Lepier, (1784) 1 Leach 320.

³ Robert Moore, (1784) 1 Leach 335.

⁴ Simons, (1773) 2 East P. C. 712.

⁵ George Mason, (1820) R. & R. 419.

⁶ Anon., (1825) 1 Lewin 300.

⁷ Chandra Krishna, (1908) 10 Bom. L. R. 632.

⁸ Note N., p. 163.

Under this section the number of persons committing robbery must be five or more. Where the evidence showed that there were six robbers but at the trial three were acquitted, it was held that a conviction under this section was not sustainable, and that the accused should be convicted under s. 392¹.

Dacoity is either theft or extortion.—If no property is carried off, there is no dacoity but an offence under s. 402.² Where several Hindus acting in concert forcibly removed an ox and two cows from the possession of a Mahomedan, not themselves or wrongful loss to the owner the killing of the cows, it was held but only of riot³. But in a subsequent case the principle of this decision has been held to be limited to the partiof subsequently restoring the cattle to the Mahomedans, it was held that they were guilty of dacoity. The Court said: "The Indian Penal Code is a statute of the Legislature applicable to Muhammadans, Hindus, Christians and all other sects alike. It is necessary in every civilized state that in order to protect the lives and property of the members of the community penal laws should exist and be enforced, and should be enforced no matter whether the person who commits an offence against them is a Christian, or a Muhammadan, or a Hindu or member of any other religious denomination. Penal laws are made for the protection of all classes alike, and they do not recognize any exception in the case of any particular denomination. A theft or a dacoity would not be any the less a theft or a dacoity if committed by members of one denomination upon the members of another; for example, no Christian or Muhammadan could plead in a Court of justice that he was not liable to be punished for theft because he acted under the incentive of some religious motive, if the facts showed that theft had in reality been committed. There must, in all states in which law and order are to abide, be penal laws equally enforceable against every denomination; and it is further necessary, unless we are to return to barbarous times, that persons who choose to wage a species of civil war on their neighbours should be adequately punished, not only as a punishment to themselves, but as a warning to deter others from committing similar acts." A cow is an animal which in this country is property and over which he is entitled and so long as that Muhammadan in

Indian Penal Similarly the the exercise

of his rights of property. If a Muhammadan, a Hindu or a Christian or a member of any other denomination commits an offence against the Penal Code, the law can be put in force against him by the process of the Criminal Code and by that process only. If he does not commit an offence in exercising his rights of property the law does not allow any one to interfere with him in the exercise of those rights, and people who take upon themselves either to take the law into their own hands, or to override or exceed the law, must expect the punishment which the law awards for criminal acts"⁴.

Good faith.—When all that is done under a claim of right in good faith entertained by the accused, however erroneously, the charge cannot be sustained.⁵

¹ Pidda Enumandugaru, (1910) 7 M. L. T. 340. See Ikram-ud-din, (1917) 39 All. 348.

² (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr. L.) 5.

³ Ragunath Rai, (1892) 15 All. 22.

⁴ Ram Baran, (1893) 15 All. 299, 301.

⁵ Karaka Nachiar, (1866) 3 M. H. C. 254.

8. 'Presence.'—The Explanation says that the offender is said to be present if he is sufficiently near to put the other person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

9. 'Fear of instant death,...to some other person.'—Imminent fear of death, hurt, etc., is necessary to bring the section into operation. If a man holds another's child over a river and threatens to throw it in unless the other gives him money, this will amount to robbery¹. The principle of robbery is violence; where the money is delivered through fear, that is constructive violence.

CASES:

Where the accused forced an earring from the ear of a lady²; where the accused tore some hair from a lady's head in snatching a diamond pin from it³; where the accused took goods from the prosecutrix of the value of eight shillings, and by threats compelled her to take thirteen pence as payment for them⁴; where the accused, while the complainant was proceeding in a street, caught hold of the seals and chain of the complainant's gold watch and pulled the watch out of his pocket and by giving two or three jerks broke the steel chain with which it was attached and then made off with it⁵; and where a person ran up against another for the purpose of diverting his attention while he picked his pocket⁶, it was held that the force was sufficient to constitute the offence of robbery.

391. When five or more persons conjointly commit or attempt to commit a robbery, or where the whole number of persons conjointly committing or attempting to commit a robbery, and persons present and aiding such commission or attempt, amount to five or more, every person so committing, attempting or aiding, is said to commit "dacoity."

COMMENT.

Dacoity is robbery committed by five or more persons. Abettors who are present and aiding when the crime is committed are counted in the number.

The essentials of the offence of dacoity are that the theft should be perpetrated by means either of actual violence or of threatened violence. The threatened violence may be implied in the conduct and character of the mob. It is not necessary that the force or menace should be displayed by any overt act. It cannot avail the accused to say, or reduce the gravity of their offence, that no actual hurt was caused as no one dared to resist the overwhelming show of force, which was sufficient to terrify, and did in fact terrify, those whose business it was to protect the property⁷.

The authors of the Code say: "We have provided punishment of exemplary severity for that atrocious crime which is designated in the Regulations of Bengal and Madras by the name of dacoity. This name we have thought it convenient to retain for the purpose of denoting, not only actual gang-robbery, but the attempting to rob when such an attempt is made or aided by a gang."⁸ The popular notion of dacoity was that of an outrage committed, at the very dead of night, by a band of ruffians, whose heads were covered and whose faces were disguised by chalk or some other mixture, and who had no private enmity with the peaceable and unfortunate house-holder, whom some one of the gang had previously, by secret enquiries, marked out for a prey.

¹ 2 East P. C. 735, 736.

² James Laper, (1784) 1 Leach 320.

³ Robert Moore, (1784) 1 Leach 335.

⁴ Simons, (1773) 2 East P. C. 712.

⁵ George Mason, (1820) R. & R. 419.

⁶ Anon., (1825) 1 Lewin 300.

⁷ Chandra Krishna, (1908) 10 Bom. L. R. 632.

⁸ Note N., p. 163.

Under this section the number of persons committing robbery must be five or more. Where the evidence showed that there were six robbers but at the trial three were acquitted, it was held that a conviction under this section was not sustainable, and that the accused should be convicted under s. 392¹.

Dacoity is either theft or extortion.—If no property is carried off, there is no dacoity but an offence under s. 402.² Where several Hindus acting in concert forcibly removed an ox and two cows from the possession of a Mahomedan, not for the purpose of causing wrongful gain to themselves or wrongful loss to the owner of the cattle but for the purpose of preventing the killing of the cows, it was held that they could not be convicted of dacoity but only of riot³. But in a subsequent case the principle of this decision has been held to be limited to the particular facts of that case. Where, therefore, a large body of Hindus acting in concert and apparently under the influence of religious feeling attacked certain Mahomedans who were driving cattle along a public road and forcibly deprived them of the possession of such cattle under circumstances which did not indicate any intention of subsequently restoring the cattle to the Mahomedans, it was held that they were guilty of dacoity. The Court said: "The Indian Penal Code is a statute of the Legislature applicable to Muhammadans, Hindus, Christians and all other sects alike. It is necessary in every civilized state that in order to protect the lives and property of the members of the community penal laws should exist and be enforced, and should be enforced no matter whether the person who commits an offence against them is a Christian, or a Muhammadan, or a Hindu or member of any other religious denomination. Penal laws are made for the protection of all classes alike, and they do not recognize any exception in the case of any particular denomination. A theft or a dacoity would not be any the less a theft or a dacoity if committed by members of one denomination upon the members of another; for example, no Christian or Muhammadan could plead in a Court of justice that he was not liable to be punished for theft because he acted under the incentive of some religious motive, if the facts showed that theft had in reality been committed. There must, in all states in which law and order are to abide, be penal laws equally enforceable against every denomination; and it is further necessary, unless we are to return to barbarous times, that persons who choose to wage a species of civil war on their neighbours should be adequately punished, not only as a punishment to themselves, but as a warning to deter others from committing similar offences. A cow is an animal which in this country a Muhammadan is entitled to hold as his property and over which he is entitled to exercise all the lawful rights of an owner, and so long as that Muhammadan in dealing with his own property does not, in the exercise of his rights of ownership, commit an offence against the Indian Penal Code, the law must and will protect him in the exercise of his rights. Similarly the law will protect a Hindu or a member of any other denomination in the exercise of his rights of property. If a Muhammadan, a Hindu or a Christian or a member of any other denomination commits an offence against the Penal Code, the law can be put in force against him by the process of the Criminal Code and by that process only. If he does not commit an offence in exercising his rights of property the law does not allow any one to interfere with him in the exercise of those rights, and people who take upon themselves either to take the law into their own hands, or to override or exceed the law, must expect the punishment which the law awards for criminal acts"⁴.

Good faith.—When all that is done under a claim of right in good faith entertained by the accused, however erroneously, the charge cannot be sustained.⁵

¹ Pidda Enumandugaru, (1910) 7 M. L. T.

² See Iram-ud-din, (1917) 39 All. 348

³ (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr. L.) 5.

⁴ Ragunath Rai, (1892) 15 All. 22.

⁵ Ram Baran, (1893) 15 All. 299, 301.

⁶ Karaka Nachiar, (1866) 3 M. H. C. 254.

Abetment.—Knowing of a design to commit a dacoity, and voluntarily concealing the existence of that design, with the knowledge that such concealment will facilitate the commission of dacoity, does not amount to an abetment of the dacoity.¹

Fear of instant death, or of hurt or of wrongful restraint.—Imminent fear of death, hurt, etc., will be sufficient to bring the section into operation. Where several persons attacked a house and took away property, but the inmates obtaining information beforehand had fled before the attack, it was held that the fact of the inmates running away was sufficient proof of the fear of hurt or of wrongful restraint and the accused were guilty of dacoity.²

392. Whoever commits robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the robbery be committed on the highway between sunset and sunrise, the imprisonment may be extended to fourteen years.

COMMENT:

This section specifies the punishment which can be inflicted in case of simple robbery. The next section punishes attempt to commit robbery.

If hurt is caused in committing robbery, s. 394 applies; if there is an attempt to cause death or grievous hurt, s. 397 applies; and if the offender is armed with a deadly weapon, s. 398 applies.

PRACTICE:

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed theft (vide s. 379 for the points to be proved).

(2) That he caused or attempted to cause to some person (a) death, hurt, or wrongful restraint; or (b) fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

(3) That he did as above (a) in committing such theft; or (b) in order to commit such theft; or (c) in carrying away, or attempting to carry away, the property obtained by such theft.

(4) That he acted as in (2) voluntarily.

Or Prove—

(1) That the accused committed extortion (vide s. 384 for the points to be proved).

(2) That he was, at the time of committing it, in the presence of the person so put in fear.

(3) That he committed it by putting that person or some other person in fear of instant death, or of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

(4) That he thereby induced the person so put in fear to deliver up then and there the thing extorted.

As an example of relevant facts, see ill. (a) to s. 7, and ill. (f) and (k) to s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

¹ Augood, (1863) 4 W. P. (Cr.) 2.

² Kissore Patra, (1867) 7 W. P. (Cr.) 25, (33)

be may 1 iree
 sep ent
 houses, they must be tried separately on each of the three charges.²

It is not open to a Magistrate to split up a graver offence into a number of smaller offences which, when combined, constitute that offence, in order to give himself jurisdiction.³

Punishment.—In robbery, the legislature has provided three different degrees of punishment which may be inflicted. Under s. 392, the punishment may be extended to fourteen years' imprisonment. It is not permissible to award a sentence of fine only without imprisonment for the offence of robbery.⁴ Under s. 394, it may be extended to transportation for life, and under s. 397, it cannot be less than seven years. Section 392 is the general section, and the two other sections specify the same offence under aggravated circumstances. See the Whipping Act (IV of 1909), s. 4. A sentence of whipping may be imposed where, in the commission of a robbery, hurt is caused. As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6 and 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). As to members of a criminal tribe or gang, see the Criminal Tribes Act, 1897, s. 6, Schedule.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused,) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, robbed (state the name) and, thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 392 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.⁵

393. Whoever attempts to commit robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Attempt to commit robbery.

COMMENT.

This is a specific section for punishing attempt to commit robbery. A present intent to rob combined with an act in execution of such intention which falls short of the offence intended, is an attempt to rob.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove that the accused attempted to commit robbery.

As to what constitutes an attempt, see s. 511, infra.

As to the points requiring to be proved for robbery, see s. 392.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Punishment.—As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b), Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11, (3) (d), and 12 (2).

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused person) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—at—, did an act, to wit—, and which amounted to an attempt to rob AB and thereby committed an offence

² Illustration (m), s. 235, Criminal Procedure Code. (1900) 5 C. W. N. 372.

³ Iturceae Dome, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 83.

⁴ Otaruddi Manjhi v. Kafloodi Manjhi, (9)

⁵ Badri Prasad, (1922) 44 All. 533.

⁶ Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. V, XXVIII that section. That section imposes a specific penalty for a specified act ; and if there is prima facie ground for believing that the accused has committed that act, he should be charged with it.¹

Where hurt is caused in the commission of a theft, the causing of hurt changes the theft into robbery, and the charge should be laid under this section for causing hurt in the commission of robbery.²

Comment:—If a Magistrate find that an accused—

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed [or attempted to commit (or were jointly with XY concerned in committing)] (or attempting to commit) robbery of the property of AB, and that as such you (or XY) voluntarily caused hurt to AB (or—), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 394 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.⁴

Punishment.—As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

395. Whoever commits dacoity shall be punished with trans-

Punishment for dacoity. portation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section prescribes punishment for simple dacoity ; s. 396, for dacoity accompanied with murder ; s. 397, for dacoity with attempt to cause death or grievous hurt ; s. 398, for attempt to commit dacoity when the offender is armed with a deadly weapon ; s. 399, for making preparation to commit a dacoity ; s. 400, for belonging to a gang of dacoits ; and s. 402, for assembling for the purpose of committing dacoity.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that robbery was committed or attempted.⁵

(2) That five or more persons committed or attempted to commit robbery ; or that the whole number of persons committing or attempting to commit robbery was five or more.⁶

(3) That such persons were acting conjointly.

As to the nature of evidence requisite to be taken in a case of dacoity, see the cases of Modhoo Manjee,⁷ *Ram Sagor*⁸ and Kamal Fukeer.⁹

Presumption.—When a prisoner is apprehended eight days after a dacoity with part of the plunder in his possession, there is a good ground for charging him with the dacoity as with having received or retained with guilty knowledge, and he ought to be charged in the alternative form.¹⁰ When persons are found,

¹ Nga Po Lon, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 232.

² (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr. L.) 6.

³ Jobania, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 476, Cr. R. No. 36 of 1889. But see Surji Doss, (1888) 1 Weir 449.

⁴ 2 W. R. (Cr. L.) 6.

⁵ Id. s. 392, sup.

⁶ State v. Sagor, 10 B. L. R. 100.

⁷

⁸

⁹

¹⁰ within six hours of the commission of a dacoity, with portions of the plundered property in their possession, the presumption of law is, that they are participators in the dacoity.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

A person convicted of dacoity under s. 395 cannot be convicted also of dishonestly receiving stolen property under s. 411, or of receiving property transferred by commission of dacoity under s. 412, when there is no evidence of the commission of more than one offence.²

Direction to jury.—In a case of dacoity the Judge should direct the jury to convict only if they find that all the prisoners had the intention of causing wrongful gain or loss to the prosecutor.³ The jury must be distinctly instructed that unless they are satisfied that there were five or more persons committing the robbery or that the persons present and aiding in the commission of the robbery numbered five or more persons, there could be no dacoity.⁴

Attempt.—Section 511 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to a case of dacoity. An attempt to commit dacoity should be charged under this section as the definition of 'dacoity' includes attempt.⁵

Abetment.—An abettor of dacoity is punishable under this section and s. 109 without any reference to s. 397 which is applicable only to persons actually committing a dacoity in which one of the acts specified in it is done.⁶

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed dacoity, an offence punishable under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.⁷

Punishment.—A sentence of fine only is illegal.⁸ Sentence of transportation under this section must be either for life or for a period not exceeding ten years if given in lieu of imprisonment.⁹

Where a person, notwithstanding a previous conviction of dacoity and consequent punishment and after having a locus penitentia afforded him, again, after completing a previous term of sentence, commits the same offence, he shall be liable to whipping in addition to any sentence of imprisonment awarded. He has, that is to say, been undeterred by imprisonment, and therefore may be punished on the second occasion with stripes in addition.¹⁰

As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) and (d) 12 (2).

396. If any one of five or more persons, who are conjointly committing dacoity, commits murder in so committing dacoity,¹ every one of those persons shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Dacoity with murder.

¹ Cassry Mul, (1863) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 10.
² Shahabul Shakik, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 42.
³ Benomally Ghose, (1864) W. R. (Gap. No.)

Cr. S.
⁴ Mookkandi, (1903) 1 Weir 446.
⁵ Koonce, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 48.
⁶ Chaitar Singh, (1901) P. R. No. 15 of 1901.

⁷ Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. v, XVIII (1) (10).
⁸ Blaja, (1886) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 54.
⁹ Arara, (1903) 1 Cr. L. J. R. 80, P. R. No. 31 of 1903.
¹⁰ Udai Patnait, (1869) 4 Benj. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 5; Lo Essing, (1907) 14 Burma L. R. 156.

COMMENT:

Object.—In providing this section the object of the legislature seems to be that the extreme penalty of death may be inflicted on a person convicted of taking part in a dacoity in the course of which a murder is committed, even though there is nothing to show that he himself committed the murder or that he abetted it.

Ingredients.—The first essential of an offence under this section is that the dacoity is the joint act of the persons concerned; and the second essential of the offence is that the murder is committed in the course of the commission of the dacoity in question.¹

1. 'Conjointly committing dacoity, commits murder, etc.'—The Allahabad High Court once ruled that in order to support a conviction under this section it was necessary to establish, not only that the accused had committed dacoity conjointly with others, but it must also be shown that the murder had been committed in his presence.² But it has subsequently held that when, in the commission of a dacoity, a murder is committed, it matters not whether the particular dacoit was inside the house where the dacoity is committed, or outside the house (as in the above case of Umrao Singh), or whether the murder was committed inside or outside the house, as long as the murder was committed in the commission of the dacoity, and has been followed by the Bombay High Court⁴ and the Allahabad High Court⁵. If a dacoit in the progress of, and in pursuance of, the commission of a dacoity, commits a murder, all of his companions, who are participating in the commission of the same dacoity, may be convicted under this section, although they may have no participation in the murder beyond the fact of participation in dacoity.⁶ The common object of an assembly and there was a general purpose to resist all point of death. This unlawful assembly did while retreating on the advent of villagers in superior force, one of its members shot and killed one of the villagers. It was held that as the murder was committed in effecting a safe retreat it should be ascertained whether the retreat was so separated by time or space from the offence which formed the common object of the assembly as not to form part of it; but as there was no such separation in that particular case and the retreat was an essential part of the common criminal purpose, it was a continuation of the actual

Where, after the commission of a dacoity, in which the dacoits, being interrupted by villagers, did not get any plunder, the dacoits while attempting to escape, and one or more of them in order to facilitate the escape, attacked and killed one of the pursuing party, it was held that this section did not apply, but only the person or persons actually taking part in the killing were liable therefor.⁷ This case does not lay down sound law in view of the above-mentioned decisions.

If a person concerned in a dacoity unintentionally commits murder he is liable to punishment under this section, but he cannot be separately convicted of murder under s. 302 and of dacoity under s. 395.¹⁰

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the commission of dacoity.¹¹

¹ Mathura Thakur, (1901) 6 C. W. N. 72.

² Umrao Singh, (1894) 16 All. 437.

³ Teja, (1895) 17 All. 86.

⁴ Girja Laxmappa, (1904) 6 Bom. L. R.

⁵ Sakharam Khandu, (1900) 2 Bom. L. R.

325; Sitaram, (1925) 2 O. W. N. 550.

⁶ Vitti Tharan v. Vitti Tharan, (1906) 17

M. L.

248.

⁷ Chittu, (1900) P. R. No. 4 of 1900.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹

¹¹ See supra, supra.

30.

If this was not the object of the accused there would be no conviction under this section.¹

(2) That one of the accused committed murder.²

(3) That the murder was committed during the commission of dacoity.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

If, when a dacoity is planned, murder is contemplated from the first and is committed in the dacoity, any person, who joins in the conspiracy, is liable under s. 302 read with s. 109 to transportation for life, even if he does not eventually join in the commission of the dacoity with the other conspirators.³

"If an accused takes part in any dacoity accompanied with murder, the proper section of the Penal Code to apply to him is s. 396 in addition to s. 400, and he is liable to be sentenced to death, or transportation for life, or ten years' rigorous imprisonment and fine. If he has not rendered himself liable to this extent, a distinction must still be made between those dacoits who, though belonging to an organized band, have only recently joined it, and have perhaps not taken part in more than one or two dacoities at the utmost, and those who have belonged to a gang for years and have taken part in many dacoities; between those who have belonged to the worst gangs, who go about armed defying the authorities and inflicting grievous hurt upon the people, and those smaller and less dangerous gangs who dacoit only because driven to do so by want and starvation, and because they are afraid to surrender, and who inflict no injury upon the people beyond that of depriving them of a few fowls and baskets of paddy, the food they are in search of."⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed dacoity, and that, in the commission of such dacoity, murder was committed by one of your number, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 396 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.⁵

Punishment.—As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1893), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (b) and 12 (3).

397. If, at the time of committing robbery or dacoity, the offender uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt¹ to any person,² or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years.

Robbery or dacoity, with attempt to cause death or grievous hurt.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section is merely a rider to s. 394. It does not create any substantive offence. It is complementary to ss. 392 and 395 which create the substantive offences. It merely regulates the punishment already provided for dacoity, by fixing a minimum term of imprisonment when its commission has been attended with certain aggravating circumstances, viz., (1) use of a deadly weapon, or (2) causing of grievous hurt, or (3) attempting to cause death or grievous hurt. The ¹ Mothura Thakur, (1901) 6 C. W. N. 72; Arshed Molla, (1919) 29 C. L. J. 323.

² Per Ward, J. C., in Nga Lu Nge Gy, (1889) 5 J. L. B. 441, 442.

³ Vide, s. 300, 1 supra.

⁴ Vide Muttirulappan, (1878) 1 Weir 417.

⁵ Vide s. 441 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 20.

provisions of this section are obligatory as "the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years."¹

1. 'The offender uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt.'—A very wide interpretation was put upon the expression 'uses a deadly weapon' by the former Chief Court of Lower Burma. It held that this expression must include the carrying of a weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed. "It may be argued," observed Twomey, J., "that to 'use' a stabbing weapon is to stab some person with it, to 'use' a cutting weapon is to cut some person with it, and to 'use' a gun is to shoot at some person with it. According to this narrow interpretation, brandishing a dagger or levelling a gun at a man might be regarded as merely threatening to use or preparing to use it, not as actually using it. But it is not clear that the word 'uses' in s. 397 should be interpreted with such strictness. The very next s. 398 imposes a minimum punishment of seven years' imprisonment on persons convicted of merely carrying a deadly weapon when attempting to rob. It seems probable that the Legislature intended to impose the same minimum where the robbery is actually completed. I am inclined to think therefore that the word 'uses' in s. 397 should be construed in a wide sense so as to include not merely cutting, stabbing, shooting (as the case may be) but also carrying the weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed. It is no doubt at first sight remarkable that wider language is employed in s. 397 ('uses any deadly weapon') than in s. 398 ('is armed with any deadly weapon'). The explanation is apparently that in attempted robberies it is often difficult to prove any 'use' of the deadly weapon except the mere fact that the accused carried it, whereas in a case of completed robbery it generally happens that the accused not only carries the deadly weapon but also overawes the person robbed or even stabs, cuts or shoots at him. The wider view of s. 397 is supported by a passage in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes².—'If he [a man] walks with a gun with intent to kill game, he 'uses' the gun for that purpose without firing, within the statute which makes using a gun with that intent penal.' English and American authorities are given for this interpretation. . . If the accused had merely attempted to take the complainant's property by overawing him with a dagger but (owing to infirmity of purpose on his own part or resistance on the part of the complainant) had not carried out his design, he would undoubtedly be liable to the minimum punishment provided in s. 398. The Legislature cannot have intended that if the criminal goes a step farther and actually accomplishes his purpose he should thereby establish a claim to more lenient treatment. It cannot have been intended that a criminal should be urged to complete his criminal purpose by the reflection that if he stops short at an attempt he must get seven years, while if he completes the offence he may get off with imprisonment for two or three years."³

According to the Bombay,⁴ Madras,⁵ and Calcutta High Courts⁶ the liability to an enhanced punishment is limited to the offender who actually causes grievous hurt or uses a deadly weapon, and not to the case of persons associated with such offender in the commission of the offence. The words "offender" and "such offender" refer only to the persons who are proved to have actually 'used' deadly weapons and not to the others who in combination with such persons have committed robbery or dacoity. Section 34 has no application in the construction of this section though it may be read with ss. 392 and 395 to determine the substantive offence which is created.⁷ In one case the Allahabad High Court held that the words "such offender" include any person taking part in the dacoity

¹ (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr. L.) 2

² 6th Edition, p. 492.

³ Nga J. (1911) 6 L. B. R. 41.

⁴ Deoji Keru, (1872) Unrep. Cr. C. 65, Cr. R., 1st August 1872; Nga Sein, (1905) 3 L. B. R. 121; Po Win, (1913) 7 L. B. R. 26; Po Myaing, (1920) 10 L. B. R. 269; Bhagwant, (1900) 3 O. C. 263; Bhura Añir, (1903) 16 C. P. L. R. 97.

⁵ Arunachella Thevan, (1911) 22 M. L. J. 186; Komali Viswasam, (1886) 1 Weir 450

⁶ Ali Mirza, (1923) 51 Cal. 265

⁷ Ibid.

who, though he may not himself have struck the blow causing the grievous hurt, is nevertheless liable for the act by reason of s. 34.¹ But, subsequently, in the same year, another Division Bench of the same High Court dissented from this view and laid down that the punishment provided for by this section applies only to those persons taking part in a dacoity who themselves used deadly weapons or themselves caused grievous hurt. It does not apply to such persons taking part in a dacoity as may be liable for grievous hurt, committed by one of the party only in virtue of s. 34. This latter decision has been subsequently followed by the same High Court in preference to the former.² The former Chief Court of the Punjab³ adopted the view expressed in Mahabir Tiwari's case.⁴ The Lahore High Court in one case⁵ has followed in the footsteps of the former Chief Court of the Punjab and in another case⁷ has given up the old path and adopted the later view of the Allahabad High Court.

'Deadly weapon'.—See s. 448, infra. A lathi is not a deadly weapon within the meaning of this section.⁸

'Grievous hurt'.—See s. 319, supra.

'Person'.—See s. 11, supra.

Violence should have been used in committing robbery or dacoity.—The accused fractured one of the arms of a woman by striking one or two blows with a stick, and thereby causing her to fall to the ground, his object being to steal the pony on which she was riding. He then attempted to mount and ride off on the pony but was prevented from doing so by the girth of the pony's saddle breaking. It was held that this section was applicable.⁹

The accused and another attacked a man and beat him with clubs. There was no evidence as to which of them it was who struck the blow which broke his finger. It was held that the accused were not liable to enhanced punishment under this section.¹⁰

Where several persons were found endeavouring to break into a house, and some of them, being armed, used violence, but only in attempting to escape being arrested, it was held that they could not properly be convicted under this section read with s. 511.¹¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the commission of robbery;¹² or dacoity.¹³

In the case of robbery a conviction under this section is equally good, whether the number of the accused be five or under.¹⁴

(2) That the accused used a deadly weapon; or caused grievous hurt; or attempted to cause death or grievous hurt.

(3) That the above acts were done during the commission of robbery or dacoity.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Where, in a case of robbery, there is no intention of causing death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, the conviction must be under this section of "voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery."¹⁵

Charge.—To justify a conviction under this section there must be a charge framed of the offence in which the carrying of arms is distinctly alleged. Where

¹ Mahabir Tiwari, (1899) 21 All. 263.

² Senia, (1899) 19 A. W. N. 186.

³ Nageshwar, (1906) 28 All. 404.

⁴ Mohana, (1901) P. R. No. 16 of 1901 and Chatur Singh, (1901) P. R. No. 15 of 1901.

⁵ (1899) 21 All. 261.

⁶ Dargaz Khan, (1922) 5 L. L. J. 224.

⁷ Mohar Singh, (1903) 2 L. C. 5, 26 P. L. R. 398.

⁸ Lad Khan, (1912) P. L. R. No. 117 of 1912.

⁹ Harnaman, (1900) P. R. No. 6 of 1901.

¹⁰ Bhagwant, (1900) 3 O. C. 263.

¹¹ Beni, (1900) 23 All. 78.

¹² Idem s. 292, sup.

¹³ Idem s. 293, sup.

¹⁴ Dwarka Akker, (1885) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 49.

¹⁵ Chatur Hater, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 16.

the accused are charged with, and convicted for, an offence punishable under s. 395, they cannot be punished under s. 398 of the Code.¹ This section does not create a substantive offence and a Court, therefore, should not frame a charge under it but under s. 392 read with s. 397, or s. 395 read with s. 397, as the case may be.²

The charge should be for the substantive offence of robbery or dacoity, and the following clause should be added to the charge.

And that at the time of committing the said robbery (or dacoity) you used a deadly weapon, to wit—(mention the deadly weapon). [or caused grievous hurt to AB, or attempted to cause death or grievous hurt to AB], and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

Punishment.—The maximum term of imprisonment that can be passed under this section cannot exceed ten years (see s. 396).³

398. If, at the time of attempting to commit robbery or dacoity, the offender is armed with any deadly weapon, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years.

Attempt to commit robbery or dacoity when armed with deadly weapon.

COMMENT:

To such of the offenders as are armed with deadly weapons, though they do not use them in the attempt to rob or commit dacoity, an imprisonment of not less than seven years must be awarded. It is the terror which the possession of a deadly weapon naturally creates that has led the legislature to provide for a severe sentence where the offender has such a weapon.

It is necessary to show that at the time of committing robbery the accused was armed with a deadly weapon and not merely that one of the robbers who was with the accused at that time carried one.⁴ The words "offender" and "such offender" refer only to the persons who are proved to have actually been "armed with" deadly weapons and not to the others who in combination with such persons have committed robbery or dacoity. Section 34 has no application in the construction of this section, though it may be read with ss. 392 and 395 to determine the substantive offence which is created.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) the attempt to commit robbery or dacoity.

(2) That the accused was armed with a deadly weapon.

(3) That he was so armed when the robbery or dacoity was committed.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

Charge.—See the last section.

Punishment.—As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d), and 12 (2).

¹ Punya Sakham, (1897) Cr. R. No. 25 of 1897, Unrep. Cr. C. 921.

² Bhagwant, (1900) 3 O. C. 263; Dangar Khan, (1922) 5 L. J. 224; Po Myaing, (1920) 10 L. B. R. 269.

³ Nama Dulab, (1908) Criminal Revisional

Application No. 223 of 1903. Unreported. (Bombay) Decided on the 28th 12 1903

" " " " " "

" " " " " "

⁵ Ali Mirza, (1923) 51 Cal. 265.

399. Whoever makes any preparation¹ for committing dacoity, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Making preparation to commit dacoity.

COMMENT.

Under the Code, mere preparation to commit an offence is punishable in three cases: (1) preparation to wage war against the King (s. 122); (2) preparation to commit depredation on territories of a power at peace with the King (s. 126); and (3) preparation to commit dacoity. Preparation to commit any other offence such as house-breaking or robbery, is not an offence.¹

1. 'Makes any preparation.'—These words point to acts done prior to a commencement of the execution of the guilty purpose and it may be before any particular dacoity is planned. It will be enough if there is a general design to commit dacoity, or to engage in an expedition for this purpose, though the plans of the dacoits are not yet matured. The making 'preparation' should be shown to the satisfaction of the Court by some act, such as the collection of men, arms, provisions, etc., which, coupled with other circumstances, plainly manifest the intention to commit dacoity.² A mere assembling without further preparation is not a preparation within the meaning of this section. Mere assembling without proof of other preparation is punishable under s. 402. A person may be not guilty of dacoity, yet guilty of preparation, and not guilty of preparation yet guilty of assembling.³ In order to constitute preparation it is not necessary that an overt act towards the commission of dacoity should have been done. The law requires that the accused should have done some act to get ready for committing dacoity. Where it is found that the members of a gang had taken in their possession instruments for house-breaking and arms for the purpose of offence and defence and had actually proceeded to a place near the scene of the contemplated dacoity, the Court is justified in holding that there was not a mere assemblage but that the members of the assemblage had got ready for the actual commission of a dacoity.⁴

As to the distinction between preparation and attempt, see s. 511, infra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Provs (1) that the act of the accused amounted to preparation.

(2) That it was preparation to commit dacoity.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, made preparation, to wit—, for committing dacoity, an—
s. 399 of the Indian Penal Code, and
And I hereby direct that you

Punishment.—As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

400. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong¹ to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity², shall be punished with transportation for life, or with Punishment for belonging to gang of dacoits.

¹ Shera, (1868) P. R. No. 18 of 1868.

² ML & M. 357.

³ Ramesh Chandra Banerjee, (1913), 41 Cal.

350.

⁴ Karmun, (1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 37 of 1916.

rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section was intended by the legislature to provide for the punishment of those who belong to a gang of persons who make it their business to commit dacoity; and it is not essential for the purpose of conviction that the evidence should show the same degree of particularity as to the commission of each individual dacoity as is required to support a simple and substantive charge of that crime. It is sufficient to establish that the person accused belongs to a gang whose business is the habitual commission of dacoity, or, in other words, that he was associated with others for the habitual pursuit of that offence.¹ It is not necessary that the person belonging to a gang must have taken part in any one dacoity. But actus reus must be proved. The evidence both of actus reus and of mens rea must be proved. The offence under this section.² The offence is of a very special character.

1. 'Belong.'—The word 'belong' implies something more than the idea of casual association; it involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connection with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity.³ Where at the trial of a gang of habitual dacoits who were charged with the commission of ten dacoities, the evidence against an individual was no more than that he had joined them in the commission of one dacoity and that he must have known that they were a gang of habitual dacoits, it was held that it was not established that he belonged to the gang, within the meaning of this section.⁴ The mere fact that women lived as wives or mistresses with men who were dacoits is not sufficient for a Court to hold that they belonged to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity within the meaning of this section, unless it be proved that the women themselves were associated with the husbands or protectors for the purpose of themselves habitually committing dacoities.⁵

abatement of dacoity though they might be punishable under s. 216-A.⁶ Generally speaking, only those persons can be convicted under this section, who have either taken active part in the crime or been employed for the purpose of scouting or in other ways facilitating the commission of the crime.⁷

2. 'Associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity.'—The word 'habitual' means constant.⁸ The element of the offence under this section is association with the knowledge that the gang is formed for the purpose of committing dacoities habitually and conviction can be had under this section even where no actual commission of dacoity by a particular accused person is proved.⁹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused belonged to the gang in question.

(2) That such gang was associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity.¹⁰

¹ Kure, (1886) 6 A. W. N. 65, 66; Kader Sundar, (1911) 16 C. W. N. 69; Murli Brahman, (1924) 27 O. C. 385.

² Kader Sundar, sup.

³ Hira Lal, (1910) 13 O. C. 243; Bhabuti, (1921) 19 A. L. J. R. 725.

⁴ Bhabuti, sup.

⁵ Yelli kom Yella, (1896) Cr. R. No. 26 of 1896, Unrep. Cr. C. 883

⁶ Gaya Din, (1908) 13 O. C. 235.

⁷ Nidhi, (1924) 1 O. W. N. 660.

⁸ See Baburam Kansari, (1891) 19 Cal. 190.

One of the chief points to establish in a case of gang dacoity is association in the crime, and if it can be proved that certain persons have joined together to commit burglaries as well as dacoities, the former fact is strong evidence of criminal association and is relevant to show that they are members of the gang. If a gang can be shown to have been associated for the habitual commission of dacoities, evidence as to other crimes committed by the gang, e.g., burglaries, may very well be relevant against the accused.¹

The associating and the purpose of the association may be proved by direct evidence or by proof of facts from which they can be reasonably inferred. Evidence that the accused or groups of them had been concerned in a large number of dacoities in a comparatively short space of time may be sufficient evidence of such association.² It is not sufficient to prove simply that the accused gave shelter and assistance to dacoits.³ The special conspiracy must be proved.⁴

The general criminality of a tribe or caste cannot be imputed to individual members operating in gangs where the prosecution is under this section, and the fact that members of the tribe generally were alleged to have been implicated in several dacoities within a period of ten years preceding the trial was not sufficient proof against the persons under trial when it appeared that the tribe contained within it thousands of human beings.⁵

Where association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity had not been made out, the mere fact that some of the accused had been previously convicted of dacoity or theft or had been bound down to be of good behaviour under s. 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, was of no consequence.⁶ The accused were charged, under this section, with belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity. The prosecution sought to prove against some of the accused that they had been previously convicted of theft or had been ordered to give security for good behaviour on the ground of being habitual thieves. It was held that evidence regarding previous conviction or bad livelihood was not admissible under s. 14 of the Indian Evidence Act, because the offence for which the accused were being tried was the particular one of belonging to a gang of dacoits and simple theft or bad livelihood, in which the order for giving security was based on evidence that the accused habitually committed thefts, was not evidence indicating an intention to commit the particular crime of which the accused were charged.⁷

But where there is sufficient evidence to establish association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, convictions of bad livelihood are more cogent than those of isolated thefts.⁸

Previous conviction of the accused for dacoity along with other dacoities is relevant against him under Explanation 2 to s. 14 of the Evidence Act. But the propriety of the conviction of the accused must be judged exclusively by reference to the evidence adduced by the prosecution at the trial.⁹ The fact that some of the persons undergoing trial for an offence under this section had once been sent up on a charge of dacoity of which they were acquitted could not be relied on to prove that they were habitual dacoits. No adverse inference can be drawn against accused persons after their acquittal.¹⁰

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

¹ Nidhi, (1924) 1 O. W. N. 860.

² Bonigiri Pottigadu, (1908) 32 Mad. 179.

³ P. A. P. v. P. A. P., (1900) 1 Bom. L. R. 156, Cr.

⁴ id., 523, 540.

⁵ id., 523, 540.

⁶ id., 523, 540.

⁷ Haji Sher Mahomed, (1921) 25 Bom. L. R. 214, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 48.

⁸ Bhona, (1911) 38 Cal. 408; Ledu Molla,

(1925) 52 Cal. 595.

⁹ Walia, (1910) P. L. R. No. 18 of 1910.

¹⁰ Kader Sundar, sup.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, belonged to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 400 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—"There are...many points which have to be considered...in determining what is an adequate sentence to pass upon an accused convicted of an offence as follows :—

(1) !
(2) .. gang since the accused joined it ?

(3) In how many of these dacoities did the accused actually take part ? (If the accused are being separately prosecuted for every dacoity in which they have been concerned as members of the gang, this point must be left out of consideration).

(4) What was the character of the dacoities in which the accused actually took part ? Were they accompanied with murder, culpable homicide, grievous hurt, torture, or with any acts of a specially brutal character, or were they only dacoities of the ordinary character?"¹

In the case of a gang consisting of desperate men prepared to proceed to all lengths in carrying out their crimes, the heaviest possible sentences should be passed. In awarding sentences the Court ought to consider not so much whether particular offenders were concerned in only one or more of the dacoities committed by the gang, as whether it was clearly established that they did in fact join a recognized gang.²

Separate sentences can be passed on an accused person, who has been proved to have taken part in a particular dacoity and also to have been a member of a gang of dacoits. The limit of punishment prescribed by s. 71 does not apply to such a case. The provisions of s. 397 of the Code of Criminal Procedure will apply to such a case and then it will be at the discretion of the criminal Court whether the two sentences should run concurrently or not.³

As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 11 (d) and 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

401. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong to any wandering or other gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually¹ committing theft or robbery, and not being a gang of thugs, or dacoits, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

The principle enunciated in the last section is extended by this section to a gang of thieves or robbers. The gist of an offence under this section is association for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery.

¹ Per Ward, J. C., in Nga Lu Nge Gyi, (1889) No. 45 of 1911, P. L. R. No. 68 of 1911.
S. J. L. R. 441.

² Ghulam Mustafa, (1911) P. W. R. (Cr.)
³ Murlu Brahman, (1921) 27 O. C. 385.

The 'association' referred to in the section must be a conscious association with the primary object of committing the offences mentioned therein.¹

Scope.—This section "no doubt has excellent objects and uses; but it ought not to be resorted to when the persons sought to be brought within its four corners, might have been made responsible for distinct and individual offences: nor is it intended to affect them, unless an association for the habitual commission of theft or robbery is clearly made out."²

1. 'Habitually.'—Habit is to be proved by the aggregate of acts, and though the charge is a charge of a single offence, the period over which the association extends is often very long; and the longer the period the better it is to establish habit.³

CASES.

Where it was proved that certain persons were found together at some distance from their houses, that they were all intimately connected with one another and were in the habit of visiting melas together, that one of them was arrested in the act of picking a pocket, and that when they were arrested many of them gave false names and false addresses, it was held that they could not be convicted under this section, there being no proof that they were persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. Evidence against the accused was of three kinds: viz., (1) that they were seen together at midnight in a certain place with implements of house-breaking on a certain night; (2) that some of them were seen together in different places where house-breaking and theft were immediately afterwards committed; and (3) that they had been each convicted at different times of theft, etc. It was held that the above circumstances were not sufficient proof of the association and of the association being for the habitual committing of theft which are required to be established to support a charge under this section.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that there existed a gang of persons.

(2) That those persons were associated for the purpose of committing theft or robbery.

(3) That theft or robbery was to be committed habitually.⁵

(4) That the accused was a member of such gang.

Proof of each of these will prove the habit.⁶ It is not necessary to prove that a gang, however small, was formed by the accused and other persons who thereafter, within the purview of this section.⁷ Any person who knowing of the existence of such a gang joins that gang for the purpose of committing even one theft is guilty under this section. At the same time a person may have taken part in a theft with one or more members of a gang without himself becoming a member of that gang.⁸ Merely being seen getting on board a boat with four persons, who have on

¹ Ajila, (1912) 9 A. L. J. R. 565.

² Per Straight, J., in Jehangira, (1886) 6 A. W. N. 18.

³ Kasem Ali, (1919) 47 Cal. 154, 159.

Dania, (1899) 3 C. W. N. ccxxxviii (338a); Ajila, sup.; Peera, (1889) P. R. No. 37 of 1869; Afridi, (1879) P. R. No. 9 of 1880; Ishar Das, (1912) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 36 of 1912.

⁷ Savaldas, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 418.

⁸ Beja, (1913) P. R. No. 13 of 1914.

⁹ Wasqua Singh, (1918) P. L. R. No. 110 of 1916.

their own admission been convicted of belonging to a gang of dacoits, is held not sufficient evidence against those so seen.¹

Evidence of the commission of several thefts, of meeting together at different places, before and after the commission of thefts and burglaries in bazaars, boats to support a conviction under this section.²

The possession of stolen property by the gang, and the fact that the country through which the gang passed was free from petty crimes when they were not about, are admissible facts.³ Similarly, evidence of previous convictions of some of the accused for theft, house-breaking, receiving or concealing stolen property both prior and subsequent to the year when the gang was found to have been first formed is admissible.⁴

Evidence of character of the accused.—The character of the accused not being a fact in issue in the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft, evidence of bad character or reputation of the accused is inadmissible.⁵ This case has been doubted in a subsequent case where it is held that where other evidence establishes association for the purpose of habitually committing theft, evidence of previous convictions of offences against property and of bad livelihood is admissible to prove habit; and for this purpose convictions of bad livelihood are more cogent than those of isolated thefts.⁶ For the purpose of determining whether a party of accused persons constituted a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitual theft, the evidence that each individual of that party is a convicted thief is relevant. Such evidence can be tendered before or after the prosecution have established the association.⁷

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge to jury.—The Judge should put clearly to the jury—(1) the necessity of proof of association; and (2) the need of proving that that association was for the purpose of habitual theft, and that habit is to be proved by an aggregate of acts.⁸

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, belonged to a (wandering) gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft (or robbery), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 401 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

“If an accused takes part in any dacoity accompanied with murder, the proper section of the Penal Code to apply to him is s. 396 in addition to s. 400, and he is liable to be sentenced to death, or transportation for life, or ten years’ rigorous

¹ Kamal Fukeer, (1872) 17 W. R. (Cr.) 50.

² „ „, (1872) 17 W. R. (Cr.) 50.

³ Mankura Pasi, (1899) 27 Cal. 139.

⁴ Bhona, (1911) 38 Cal. 403.

⁵ Tularam Malhari, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 373, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 136.

⁶ Shriram Venkatasami, (1871) 6 M. H. O. 120.

imprisonment and fine. If he has not rendered himself liable to this extent, a distinction must still be made between those dacoits who, though belonging to an organized band, have only recently joined it, and have perhaps not taken part in more than one or two dacoities at the utmost, and those who have belonged to a gang for years and have taken part in many dacoities; between those who have belonged to the worst gangs, who go about armed defying the authorities and inflicting grievous hurt upon the people, and those smaller and less dangerous gangs who dacoit only because driven to do so by want and starvation, and because they are afraid to surrender, and who inflict no injury upon the people beyond that of depriving them of a few fowls and baskets of paddy, the food they are in search of.¹

402. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall be one of five or more persons assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section applies to mere assembling without proof of other preparation. Where there is preparation s. 399 applies.²

Five or more persons (which makes an unlawful assembly) meeting for a common purpose to commit dacoity are subject to the severe punishment provided in this section, even though the persons assembled may not have proceeded one step towards the accomplishment of their object.

CASES.

Where the accused knew that the assembly, of which they formed a part, was an assembly for the purpose of committing dacoity, and that all the persons of the assembly lived on the proceeds of dacoity and had no other means of living, they were held guilty of this offence.³ Several persons were found at eleven o'clock at night on a road just outside the City of Agra, all carrying arms (guns and swords) concealed under their clothes. None of them had a license to carry arms, and none of them could give any reasonable explanation of his presence at the spot under the particular circumstances. It was held that they were guilty under this section.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that five or more persons were assembled.

(2) That they were assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity.

(3) That the accused was one of such persons.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows —

That you, on or about the — day of —, at —, were one of five (or more) persons assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 402 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

¹ Per Ward, J.C., in Nga Lu Ngo Gyn, (1899) S. J. L. R. 441, 442.

² Ramesh Chandra Banerjee, (1913) 41 Cal. 350.

³ Kendra Kamar, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

⁴ Bholu, (1906) 23 All. 124. This decision is somewhat startling as from the facts given in the report it does not appear that it was the object of the accused to commit dacoity and not any other offence. It has been referred to with approval in Bholu, (1921) 22 A. L. J.R. 1028.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b).

Of Criminal Misappropriation of Property.

403. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use¹ any moveable property,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A takes property belonging to Z out of Z's possession, in good faith, believing, at the time when he takes it, that the property belongs to himself. A is not guilty of theft; but if A, after discovering his mistake, dishonestly appropriates the property to his own use, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

(b) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent. Here, if A was under the impression that he had Z's implied consent to take the book for the purpose of reading it, A has not committed theft. But if A afterwards sells the book for his own benefit, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

of B's possession does not disturb the whole

Explanation 1.—A dishonest misappropriation for a time only is a misappropriation within the meaning of this section.

ILLUSTRATION.

A finds a Government promissory note belonging to Z, bearing a blank endorsement. A, knowing that the note belongs to Z, pledges it with a banker as a security for a loan, intending at a future time to restore it to Z. A has committed an offence under this section.

Explanation 2.—A person who finds property not in the possession of any other person, and takes such property for the purpose of protecting it for, or of restoring it to, the owner, does not take or misappropriate it dishonestly, and is not guilty of an offence; but he is guilty of the offence above defined, if he appropriates it to his own use, when he knows or has the means of discovering the owner, or before he has used reasonable means to discover and give notice to the owner and has kept the property a reasonable time to enable the owner to claim it.

What are reasonable means or what is a reasonable time in such a case, is a question of fact.

It is not necessary that the finder should know who is the owner of the property, or that any particular person is the owner of it: it is sufficient if, at the time of appropriating it, he does not believe it to be his own property, or in good faith believes that the real owner cannot be found.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A finds a rupee on the high road, not knowing to whom the rupee belongs. A picks up the rupee. Here A has not committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A finds a letter on the road, containing a bank note. From the direction and contents of the letter he learns to whom the note belongs. He appropriates the note. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c) A finds a cheque payable to bearer. He can form no conjecture as to the person who has lost the cheque. But the name of the person who has drawn the cheque appears. A knows that this person can direct him to the person in whose favour the cheque was drawn. A appropriates the cheque without attempting to discover the owner. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(d) A sees Z drop his purse with money in it. A picks up the purse with the intention of restoring it to Z, but afterwards appropriates it to his own use. A has committed an offence under this section.

(e) A finds a purse with money, not knowing to whom it belongs; he afterwards discovers that it belongs to Z, and appropriates it to his own use. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(f) A finds a valuable ring, not knowing to whom it belongs. A sells it immediately without attempting to discover the owner. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

COMMENT.

"Criminal misappropriation takes place when the possession has been innocently come by, but where, by a subsequent change of intention, or from the knowledge of some new fact with which the party was not previously acquainted, the retaining becomes wrongful and fraudulent."¹ The offence consists in the dishonest misappropriation or conversion, either permanently or for a time, of property which is already without wrong in the possession of the offender.² See illustra-according to which the intention of the accused at the time of obtaining possession of property is only taken into account. If the intention was not dishonest intention does not convert

"Section 403 requires that the property shall not be appropriated or converted to his own use by the accused. The mere possession of the property does not constitute an appropriation. I have been mis-of any other overt act indicating conversion or appropriation. It did any interval of time worth considering elapse between the taking and the arrest to raise any presumption, from the mere act of detention, of an intention to misappropriate or convert. Explanation (2) to s. 403... makes the necessity of some positive proof of this sort quite clear. Illustration (a) shows that the picking up of a rupee, whose owner is not known, is not an offence. Similarly, illustration (c) shows that the taking of an unknown owner's property for his own use is necessary to

According to the English law innocent taking followed by conversion, owing to subsequent change of intention, is a civil wrong but not an offence.

² Per Norris and Oboe, JJ., in Bhagiram Dome v. Abar Dome, (1888) 15 Cal. 388, 400.
³ Ramakrishna, (1888) 12 Mad. 49, 60.

² Per Chatterji, J., in Pharmen, (1907)
P. R. No. 11 of 1903.

Theft and Criminal misappropriation.—In theft the object of the offender always is to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession; and the offence is complete as soon as the offender has moved the property in order to a dishonest taking of it. In criminal misappropriation, there is not necessarily an invasion of the possession of another person by an attempt to take from him that which he possesses. The offender is already in possession of the property; and is either lawfully in possession of it, because either he has found it or is a just owner of it, or his possession, if not strictly lawful, is not punishable as an offence because he has acquired it under some mistaken notion of right in himself or of consent given by another.

Ingredients.—The section requires—

1. Dishonest misappropriation or conversion of property for a person's own use.

2. Such property must be movable.

1. 'Dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use.'—"In order to be dishonest the property must be misappropriated or converted 'with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another,' that is, with the intention to cause gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining it is not lawfully entitled, or the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is lawfully entitled. The gain or loss of property, and the gain or loss of the possession of property are not necessarily identical things, and the distinction is especially clear when the loss of possession is only temporary, and is intended by the person who causes such loss to be temporary only. When there is no intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss of property, and merely an intention to deprive the owner temporarily of the use of property, dishonesty is not made out."¹ The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender, irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued, but only on the act which has been done.² A wrong opinion that the accused was justified in keeping the thing does not constitute this offence.³

'Dishonestly misappropriates.'—The verb 'to appropriate' in this connection means setting apart for, or assuming to, a particular person or use; and to 'misappropriate' means to set apart for or assume to the wrong person or a wrong use, and this act must be done dishonestly.⁴ The word 'misappropriation' is in the illustrations and in the explanations to the section explained by the expression "appropriate to his own use," which seems equivalent to "setting apart for his own use to the exclusion of others." It does not, of course, follow from this that setting apart by one person for the use of some person other than himself and the true owner, is not a misappropriation. A Hindu girl having picked up a gold bangle and made it over to a European girl, the accused, the brother of the finder, represented to the latter that the bangle belonged to a girl of his acquaintance and thus got possession of it from her. On enquiry by a Police Constable a few hours later, he repeated the representations but afterwards gave up the bangle. These representations were found to be untrue to the knowledge of the accused. It was held that the accused had committed this offence.⁵

'Converts to his own use.'—There must be actual conversion of the thing appropriated to the use of some person other than the person entitled thereto. Where the accused found a thing and merely retained it in his possession, it was held that he could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation.⁶ Similarly,

¹ See Flower, J., in Jinks, (1897) 2 R. 51, 52 of 1897.

² See Exhibition v. R., (1897) 2 R. 51, 52.

³ C. W. S. 572.

⁴ Exhibition, (1897) 2 R. 51 of 1897.

Case, C. C. 774.

⁵ See Lal, (1897) 12 A. L. J. 2111.

⁶ Jinks, etc.

⁷ 1897, (1897) 12 W. R. (C.) 224.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A finds a rupee on the high road, not knowing to whom the rupee belongs. A picks up the rupee. Here A has not committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A finds a letter on the road, containing a bank note. From the direction and contents of the letter he learns to whom the note belongs. He appropriates the note. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c) A finds a cheque payable to bearer. He can form no conjecture as to the person who has lost the cheque. But the name of the person who has drawn the cheque appears. A knows that this person can direct him to the person in whose favour the cheque was drawn. A appropriates the cheque without attempting to discover the owner. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(d) A sees Z drop his purse with money in it. A picks up the purse with the intention of restoring it to Z, but afterwards appropriates it to his own use. A has committed an offence under this section.

(e) A finds a purse with money, not knowing to whom it belongs; he afterwards discovers that it belongs to Z, and appropriates it to his own use. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(f) A finds a valuable ring, not knowing to whom it belongs. A sells it immediately without attempting to discover the owner. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

COMMENT.

"Criminal misappropriation takes place when the possession has been innocently come by, but where, by a subsequent change of intention, or from the knowledge of some new fact with which the party was not previously acquainted, the retaining becomes wrongful and fraudulent."¹ The offence consists in the dishonest misappropriation or conversion, either permanently or for a time, of property which is already without wrong in the possession of the offender.² See illustrations.

English law according to which the intention of the accused at the time of obtaining the possession of property is only taken into account. If the intention was not dishonest when the possession was obtained, subsequent change of intention does not convert it into an offence. Explanation 2 emphasizes the difference between the property should be shown to have been misappropriated or converted to his own use by the accused. The mere possession of the property is not sufficient for proving the charge without something to indicate the appropriation or conversion, though long possession without any attempt to find it of any value did any to raise appropriate positive proof of this sort quite clear. Illustration (a) shows that the picking up of a rupee, whose owner is not known, is not an offence. Similarly, illustration (e) shows that the finding of a purse with money belonging to an unknown owner is not an offence, but the appropriation of it to the finder's own use is necessary to complete it."³

According to the English law innocent taking followed by conversion, owing to subsequent change of intention, is a civil wrong but not an offence.

¹ Per Norris and Ghose, JJ., in Bagiram Doss v. Abar Doss, (1883) 15 Cal. 358, 400.

² Ramakrishna, (1888) 12 Mad. 49, 50.

³ Per Chatterji, J., in Phuman, (1907) P. R. No. 11 of 1903.

Theft and Criminal misappropriation.—In theft the object of the offender always is to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession; and the offence is complete as soon as the offender has moved the property in order to a dishonest taking of it. In criminal misappropriation, there is not necessarily an invasion of the possession of another person by an attempt to take from him that which he possesses. The offender is already in possession of the property; and is either lawfully in possession of it, because either he has found it or is a just owner of it, or his possession, if not strictly lawful, is not punishable as an offence because he has acquired it under some mistaken notion of right in himself or of consent given by another.

Ingredients.—The section requires—

1. Dishonest misappropriation or conversion of property for a person's own use.

2. Such property must be moveable.

1. 'Dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use.'—"In order to be dishonest the property must be misappropriated or converted 'with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another,' that is, with the intention to cause gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining it is not legally entitled, or the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled. The gain or loss of property, and the gain or loss of the possession of property are not necessarily identical things, and the distinction is especially clear when the loss of possession is only temporary, and is intended by the person who causes such loss to be temporary only. When there is no intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss of property, and merely an intention to deprive the owner temporarily of the use of property, dishonesty is not made out."¹ The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender, irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued, but only on the act which has been done.² A wrong opinion that the accused was justified in keeping the thing does not constitute this offence.³

'Dishonestly misappropriates.'—The verb 'to appropriate' in this connection means setting apart for, or assigning to, a particular person or use; and to 'misappropriate' means to set apart for or assign to the wrong person or use. The act must be done dishonestly.⁴ The word 'misappropriates' is explained in the explanations to the section replaced by 'to his own use,' which seems equivalent to "setting apart for his own use to the exclusion of others." It does not, of course, follow from this that setting apart by one person for the use of some person other than the owner is not a misappropriation.

over to a sweeper girl, the latter that the necklet belonged to a jat of his acquaintance and thus got possession of it from her. On enquiry by a Police Constable a few hours later, he repeated the representations but afterwards gave up the necklet. These representations were found to be untrue to the knowledge of the accused. It was held that the accused had committed this offence.⁵

'Converts to his own use.'—There must be actual conversion of the thing appropriated to the use of some person other than the person entitled thereto. Where the accused found a thing, and merely retained it in his possession, it was held that he could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation.⁶ Similarly,

¹ Per Plowden, J., in Jhandu, (1886) P. R. No. 27 of 1886.

² Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha, (1917) 21 C. W. N. 573.

³ Khanderao, (1894) Cr. R. No. 30 of 1894,

Unrep. Cr. C. 700.

⁴ Sohan Lal, (1915) 13 A. L. J. R. 1131.

⁵ Jhandu, sup.

⁶ Abdool, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 23-A.

where the accused found a purse on the pavement of a temple in a crowded gathering caught a strayed sheep intended for sacrifice and on his transfer, from the thana to which he was attached, to another thana he took it with him there, it was held that it was sufficient evidence of dishonesty.²

2. 'Any moveable property.'—The misappropriation must be of 'moveable property.' As to the meaning of this expression, see s. 22, supra.

There cannot be any criminal misappropriation with regard to immoveable property.

A bull set at large in accordance with a Hindu religious usage is not 'property' of any one, and not the subject of ownership by any person, as the original owner on the beast its freedom subject of criminal mis- attention from the cow- him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not inconsistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors.⁴

The offence of criminal misappropriation is committed, either permanently or for a time, of property which is already without wrong in the possession of the offender. The dishonest intention to appropriate the property of another is common to theft and to criminal misappropriation. But this intention, which in theft is sufficiently manifested by a moving of the property, must in the other offence be carried into action by an actual misappropriation or conversion.⁵

Temple property.—The property of an idol or a temple must be used for the purposes of that idol or temple: any other use will be a malversation of that property, and, if dishonest, will amount to criminal misappropriation.⁶

Retention of money paid by mistake.—Where money is paid to a person by mistake, and such person, either at the time of receipt or at any time subsequently, discovers the mistake, and determines to appropriate the money, that person is guilty of criminal misappropriation.⁷ In England, the law is doubtful on this point.⁸

Joint property.—Where the accused is interested in the property jointly with others, he is not necessarily guilty of a criminal act if he takes possession of it, and disposes of it.⁹ But joint property might be criminally misappropriated.¹⁰ No co-parcener in a joint Hindu family having before division a right in or to any specified share in any p. misappropriation until the accounts have been ing member may be liable to a charge of misappropriation, if, after a division of property has taken place, and the share of each member of the family has been ascertained, it is found that the manager has wrongfully applied to his own use the share that

¹ Phuman, (1907) P. R. No. 11 of 1908.

² Sarju Mallah, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 145;

³ U. P. L. R. 88.

⁴ Bandhu, (1885) 8 All. 53; Nihal, (1887) 9 All. 348.

⁵ Ramesh Chunder Sanyal v. Huru Mondal, (1890) 17 Cal. 852.

⁶ M. & M. 359

⁷ Gadgaya v. Guru Siddheswar, (1897) Unrep. Cr. C. 919.

⁸ N. W. P. 475.
C. C. R.
Flowers
12 I.R.

⁹ Parbutty Churn Chuckerbutty, (1870) 14

W. R. (Cr.) 13.

¹⁰ Pania, (1881) 1 A. W. N. 89.

¹¹ (1880) 1 Weir 453.

belongs to one of the other co-parceners ; but so long as no account of produce or money has been taken, or the shares ascertained, no member of an undivided Hindu family has the right to claim any particular share or property as his separate property, and no prosecution against the manager for misappropriation would lie. The mere fact that there has been a general agreement to divide does not entitle one of the co-parceners to claim any defined portion of the estate, nor does it even enable him to say that he is entitled to any particular quantum in an isolated item of the property ; until division, the law entrusts the property to the manager."¹

Explanation 1.—"This explanation refers only to cases in which there is a 'dishonest misappropriation,' and explains that the section includes temporary as well as permanent misappropriation of that description. It does not extend the section so as to include not only cases of wrongful gain or loss of property, but also cases of wrongful gain or loss of the possession of property, as distinct from gain or loss of the property itself."²

A servant, who misappropriates his master's property with the intention of restoring it after a time, ought to be punished. He has no more right to steal his master's property for a time than for ever. It is no answer for a trustee who misappropriates his trust property to say that he intended to put it back again. The fact is that when once a man makes away with property in this way, it generally happens that he never has the means of making restitution. So with regard to the thief, the probability is that when he steals another's property he will never change his mind about restoring the same to the owner.³

Explanation 2.—There can be no criminal misappropriation of things which have actually been abandoned.⁴ The property must have its owner to render a person guilty of misappropriating it.

Where property is cast away or abandoned, any one finding and taking it acquires a right to it which will be good even as against the former owner, if the latter should be minded to resume it, but that, when a thing is accidentally lost, the property is not divested, but remains in the owner who loses it.⁵

Property found drifting in a river.—The accused found two logs of wood drifting in a river during a high flood and took possession of them. The logs were left by the accused in front of his house unused and exposed for several months. It was held that a conviction under this section could not be upheld.⁶

Lost property.—Where the accused found a gold mohur on an open plain, and sold it the next day to a shroff for the full value and appropriated the sale-proceeds, it was held that, in the absence of any information as to the circumstances under which the coin was lost, and as it was not impossible that the property in the coin had been abandoned by the original owner, the accused could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation.⁷ A person who takes possession of property which the rightful owner has lost is guilty of criminal misappropriation if he appropriates or converts such property to his own use.⁸

Treasure trove.—A person who found money from a piece of land purchased by him and appropriated it to his own use was held not to have committed this offence.⁹

In England the law seems to be this : "If a man find goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny. But if he take them

¹ Anon, (1880) 1 Weir 453 (454).

Item 212.

² Per Plowden, J., in Jhandu, (1886) P. R. No. 27 of 1886.

³ P. L. C. 1861, p. 1270.

⁴ Bandhu, (1885) 8 All. 51 ; Nikal, (1887) 9 All. 348 ; Domesh Chander Sanyal v. Huru Mondal, (1890) 17 Cal. 852 ; Sita, (1893) 18

⁵ Glyde, (1868) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 139.

⁶ Murugan, (1883) 1 Weir 455.

⁷ Sita, 21p. See Phuman, (1907) P. R. No. 11 of 1906.

⁸ Nya Shree Zan, (1916) 10 B. L. T. 261.

⁹ Chakrapa, (1868) Unrep. Cr. C. 8.

with the like intent though lost, or reasonably supposed to be lost but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny."¹

The law with regard to the finder of the lost property does not apply to the case of property of a passenger accidentally left in a railway carriage, and found there by a servant of the company.²

The possessor of land is generally entitled, as against the finder, to chattels found in the land.³

CASES.

Dishonest intention necessary.—The accused was found riding on a mare which had strayed away from the possession of its owner. The day after he was found riding he confessed that he had found the mare hobbled, had unfastened the rope and used it as a bridle, had mounted the mare intending to ride her to his house and to loose her when he reached his house. Subsequently he stated before the Magistrate that his intention was to
He was convicted under this section. It for it could not be assumed that the int subsequent statement being attributable to fear did not affect the question of the accused's guilt.⁴ The accused, who had lost his buffalo some time back, found a buffalo very much resembling his own entering into his house and tied her in on an open verandah which overlooked a public road and refused to permit the complainant, who claimed the buffalo as his, to remove the same. It was held that the essential element of a dishonest intention to make up the offence was wanting.⁵ Where the accused removed posts and shutters for firewood from a house which they believed was deserted, it was held that they did not commit criminal misappropriation for there was no dishonesty in the act.⁶ Where the accused took certain hides from the prosecutrix, but refused to pay for them on the ground that she owed a sum to him, it was held that he had not committed this offence.⁷

Claim of right.—A servant, who retained in his hands money which he was authorised to collect and which he did collect from the debtor of his master, because money was due to him as wages, was held guilty of criminal misappropriation.⁸

Servant misappropriating money received on behalf of his master.—Where the accused, a Government servant, whose duty it was to receive certain monies and to pay them into the treasury on receipt, admitted that he had retained two sums of money in his possession for several months, but on fearing detection he paid them the time in his books with a view to avert village karnam, received money from the remitting it to the Public Treasury, but omitted to do so until after an inquiry had been held into arrears due by the villagers¹⁰ it was held that this offence was committed.

Secreting letters.—The accused, a servant in the Postal Department, while with the intention of handing certain moneys payable upon attempt to commit dishonest misappropriation of property and of theft.¹¹

A letter addressed to W was handed by a postman to W, who was at the time in a room in the occupation of H. W read the letter, and put it on a table in the ¹ Per Park, B., in Thurborn. (1849) 18 L. J. (M. C.) N. S. 140, 144.

v. Sharman,

R. No. 28 of 1906.

² Dwarkan Das v. Narasimhan Naidu, (1922) 44 M. L. J. 128.

³ Nawtara Singh, (1904) 10 Burma L. R. 356.

⁴ Boystum Moochee, (1872) 17 W. R. (Cr.) 11.

⁵ Bissessor Roy, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 51.

⁶ 12 Mad. 49; Ka-

⁷ Veir 455.

room and left it there. H took the letter, and subsequently attempted to file it as an exhibit attached to an affidavit made by him in a suit for judicial separation between W and his wife, for the purpose, as he afterwards stated, "of strengthening Mrs. W's case and of improving his own position." The Court, however, refused to receive the letter. It was held that in the circumstances H could not be convicted of dishonest misappropriation of property with respect to his retention of the letter.¹

Harvesting crops under an attachment.—A judgment-debtor, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force. It was held that he had committed this offence.²

Exchanging of railway tickets.—A and B were about to travel by the same train from Benares City. A had a ticket for Ajudhia. B had two tickets for Benares Cantonment. A voluntarily handed over her ticket to B in order that he might tell her if it was right. B, under the pretence of returning A's ticket substituted therefor one of his own, and kept A's ticket. It was held that the offence committed by B was that of criminal misappropriation rather than that of cheating.³

English cases.—A person purchased, at a public auction, a bureau in which he afterwards discovered, in a secret drawer, a purse containing money, which he appropriated to his own use. At the time of the sale no person knew that the bureau contained anything whatever. It was held that if the buyer had express notice that the bureau alone, and not its contents, if any, was sold to him; or if he had no notice, that the contents were sold, the abstract of the case is as follows:

b a

discovered money in a secret drawer of it, which he, unnecessarily as to its repair, breaks open, and converts the money to his own use, it is a felonious taking of the property, unless it appear that he did it with intention to restore it to its right owner.⁴ A servant indicted for stealing bank-notes, the property of her master, in his dwelling-house, set up, as her defence, that she found them in the passage, and not knowing to whom they belonged, kept them to see if they were advertised. It was held that she ought to have inquired of her master whether they were his notes or not, and that not having done so, but having taken them away from the house, she was guilty of stealing them.⁵ The prisoner stole some iron from a canal, in which it was found when the canal was in process of being cleaned. In an indictment against him for stealing the iron, it was held that the proprietors of the canal had a sufficient property in the iron to justify alleging of the property to be in them.⁷

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question is moveable property.

(2) That the accused misappropriated it or converted it to his own use.

(3) That he did so dishonestly.⁸

See the Indian Evidence Act, s. 14, ill. (b).

When a case comes under the second Explanation it should be ascertained whether the person accused had reasonable belief that the owner could be found, by evidence of his previous acquaintance with the ownership of the particular chattel the place where it is found, or the nature of the marks upon it. In some cases it would be apparent, in others appear, only after examination. It would probably he presumed that the taker would examine the chattel as an honest man ought to do at the time of taking it, and if he did not restore it to the owner the jury might conclude that he took it, when he took complete possession of it.¹

The mere fact that the prosecutor gave the prisoner time to make out his accounts and pay the balance due does not vitiate a conviction for dishonest misappropriation, or show that the matter is one for civil Courts only.²

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by any Magistrate.

In a case of complaint under this section, it is open to a Magistrate in case of doubt to hold an inquiry under s. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code before summoning the accused in order to find out whether a prima facie case was made out or whether the accused should be summoned or not.³

Venue.—The offence of criminal misappropriation may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person, or the offence was committed.⁴

Separate offences.—The appropriation of each separate item of money with which a person is entrusted is a separate offence, and the facts connected with it should form the subject of a separate enquiry. The duty of a committing officer in such a case is to select certain distinct items, to frame his charges upon them, and to adduce evidence specially upon those items.⁵

Joinder of charges.—When two persons are implicated in a case of criminal misappropriation of a certain sum of money, the charges against each of them may be framed for the same sum of money, and of abetment in the other because they are both guilty of misappropriation of the same sum of money. It is also open to the Court to frame charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriation or of abetment.⁶

Charge.—When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money it is sufficient to charge him with the appropriation of particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of s. 234: Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year.⁷

The charge should run as follows:—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly misappropriated [or converted to your own use] certain property, to wit—, belonging to AB, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 403 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.⁸

¹ Thurborn, (1849) 18 L. J. (M. C.) N. C. 140

² Freelant Biswas, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 56.

³ Gurkaran Lal v. Sarjoo Sane, (1920) 3

U. P. L. R. (P.) 2.

⁴ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 181 (2).

⁵ Chetter, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

⁶ Gurwar Narain, (1912) 16 C. W. N. 600.

⁷ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 222 (2).

⁸ Vide Parbhatty Churn Chuckerbutty, (1870)

14 W. R. (Cr.) 12.

404. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates¹ or converts to his own use property,² knowing that such property was in the possession³ of a deceased person at the time of that person's decease, and has not since been in the possession of any person legally entitled to such possession, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offender at the time of such person's decease was employed by him as a clerk or servant, the imprisonment may extend to seven years.

Dishonest mis-appropriation of property possessed by deceased person at the time of his death.

ILLUSTRATION.

Z dies in possession of furniture and money. His servant A, before the money comes into the possession of any person entitled to such possession, dishonestly misappropriates it. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

COMMENT.

This section relates to a description of property peculiarly needing protection. The offence consists in the pillaging of moveable property during the interval which elapses between the time when the possessor of the property dies, and the time when it comes into the possession of some person or officer authorized to take charge of it.¹

The section is intended only to punish servants and strangers who could possibly have no right to, or interest in, the effects of a dead man and who misappropriated such effects but not to punish near relations who take possession of and deal with the deceased's effects under a claim of independent ownership or a claim to succeed as heir to the deceased.²

1. 'Dishonestly misappropriates.'—A person may commit the offence of dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death by dishonestly misappropriating the money entrusted to him although he does not bring such money to his own use.³ As to the meaning of 'dishonestly,' see s. 24, supra.

2. 'Property.'—The word 'property' in this section does not refer to immoveable property, but only to moveable property. Hence, where a person was convicted of misappropriating the house of a deceased person the conviction was annulled.⁴ See s. 22, supra, as to the meaning of 'moveable property.'

3. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Under this section all the elements required to constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation in respect of a person who is alive will be necessary.⁵ Prove (1) that the property in question is moveable property.

(2) That it was in the possession of a deceased person at the time of his death.

(3) That it was not thereafter in the possession of any person legally entitled to its possession.

(4) That the accused misappropriated it or converted it to his own use.

(5) That he did so dishonestly.⁶

¹ M. & M. 364.

² Karri Mangadu, [1914] M. W. N. 791.

³ Enayet Hossein, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 1;

Nobin Chunder Sircar, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.)

30.

⁴ Girdhar Dharumdas, (1869) 6 B. H. C.

(Cr. C.) 33; Jugdown Sinha, (1895) 23 Cal. 372.

⁵ Nobin Chunder Sircar, sup.

⁶ Vide s. 24, sup.

(6) That he knew the circumstances mentioned in (2) and (3).

For the second clause prove further that the accused was, at the time of the owner's death, employed by him as a clerk or servant.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable¹—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly misappropriated [or converted to your own use] certain property, to wit—, knowing that such property was in the possession of AB, a deceased person, at the time of the said AB's decease, and had not since been in the possession of any person legally entitled to such possession; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 404 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Of Criminal Breach of Trust.

405. Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property,¹ dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property,^{2a} or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust,^{2b} or wilfully suffers any other person so to do, commits "criminal breach of trust."

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, being executor to the will of a deceased person, dishonestly disobeys the law which directs him to divide the effects according to the will, and appropriates them to his own use. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(b) A is a warehouse-keeper. Z, going on a journey, entrusts his furniture to A, under a contract that it shall be returned on payment of a stipulated sum for warehouse-room. A dishonestly sells the goods. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(c) A, residing in Calcutta, is agent for Z, residing at Delhi. There is an express or implied contract between A and Z, that all sums remitted by Z to A shall be invested by A according to Z's direction. Z remits a lakh of rupees to A, with direction to A to invest the same in Company's paper. A dishonestly disobeys the directions, and employs the money in his own business. A has committed breach of trust. A, being a Bengali, and having no faith, believing that he could not be traced, disobeys the directions, and employs the money in his own business. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

Company's paper, here, though a civil action against A on account of that loss, yet A, having no faith, believing that he could not be traced, disobeys the directions, and employs the money in his own business. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(e) A, a Revenue-officer, is entrusted with public money, and is either directed by law, or bound by a contract, express or implied, with the Government, to pay into a certain treasury all the public money which he holds. A dishonestly appropriates the money. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(f) A, a carrier, is entrusted by Z with property to be carried by land or by water. A dishonestly misappropriates the property. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

406. Whoever commits criminal breach of trust shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for criminal breach of trust.

COMMENT.

To constitute the offence of criminal breach of trust, there must be dishonest misappropriation by a person in whom confidence is placed as to the custody or management of the property in respect of which the breach of trust is charged.¹ The offence of criminal breach of trust closely resembles the offence of embezzlement under the English law.

Scope.—The terms of the section are very wide. It applies to one who is in any manner entrusted with property or dominion over property. The section does not require that the trust should be in furtherance of any lawful object. The section then provides, inter alia, that if such a person dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use the property entrusted to him, he commits criminal breach of trust. This part of the definition is complete in itself. It has no reference to the provisions as to disposal in violation of a direction of law, or of a legal contract. There are separate ways in which criminal breach of trust may be committed.² The section embraces the cases of all those offenders not specifically provided for in ss. 407, 408 and 409. Offences committed by trustees with regard to trust property fall within the purview of this section.

Criminal Misappropriation and Criminal Breach of Trust.—In criminal misappropriation the property comes into the possession of the offender by some casualty or otherwise, and he afterwards misappropriates it. In the case of criminal breach of trust the offender is lawfully entrusted with the property and he dishonestly misappropriates the same, or wilfully suffers any other person to do so, instead of discharging the trust attached to it.

Ingredients.—The section requires—

1. Entrusting any person with property or with any dominion over property.

2. The person entrusted (a) or converting to his own use that property; or (b) of that property or wilfully suffering any other person of that property

(i) of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or

(ii) of any legal contract made touching the discharge of such trust.

1. 'Entrusted with property, or dominion over property.'—It is an essential condition under this section that the property which is the subject-matter of the section must have been entrusted to a person. A 'trust' of some kind is necessary.

A 'trust' is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner.³ Hence, where there is no original confidence, there is no trust, and a misappropriation, if punishable at all, will be under s. 403

¹ Isaac Chunder Ghose v. Peara Mohan Palit, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 39; Ko Set Siewa, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 110, (1903) 1 U. B. R.

(P. C.) 8.

² Nya Te, (1904) 2 L. B. R. 216, r. 2.

³ Indian Trusts Act, II of 1952, s. 3.

It is clear that the terms used are wide enough to include trustees of every kind; that is, those who are such, not only by reason of some employment for which they receive remuneration, but by reason of some trust constituted by express deed, or even by mere implication of law, though the office may be gratuitous. It also includes the case of a person who commits this offence by misappropriation of property to the advantage of a third person.¹

Where the complainant entrusted the accused with his property in order to prevent it from being taken in execution of a decree that might be passed against him, it was held that that was not a legal defence to a charge under this section, when the accused had misappropriated the property for his own use.²

The trust may not be legal or in furtherance of a lawful object. But if there is no trust there will be no offence under this section. Thus, a person who takes a sum of money by way of a loan is not entrusted with any property.³ But a servant who obtains money by false pretences from his master for using it in a particular way may be guilty of criminal breach of trust. Where the accused, a servant of a company, misappropriated a large sum of money made up of amounts which he received from the manager at various times on the false pretence that they were required for paying coolies, it was held that he was guilty of criminal breach of trust. When he received the money he did so as the servant of the company for the purpose of spending it for his master's benefit in a particular way. He was not guilty of criminal breach of trust. The fact that he was present at the time of the receipt of the money was immaterial.⁴

Mere breach of contract is not made synonymous with criminal breach of trust. In all cases given in the illustration to s. 305 in which the person is said to have committed the offence, the property in respect of which it is said to have been committed is property of another person, or property of which the offender was not the beneficial owner, although in one case, that of the executor, he had the legal title. The property in respect of which criminal breach of trust can be committed must be either the property of some person other than the person accused, or that the beneficial interest in or ownership of it, must be in some other person and the offender must hold such property on trust for such other person or in some way for his benefit.⁵ Moneys advanced to a broker for the specified purpose of purchase and supply of paddy with the agreement that the broker is to suffer the loss or get the profit by a fall or rise in market price cannot be said to be entrusted to him within the meaning of this section, although by the agreement the company bound itself to take delivery of the paddy purchased and an express trust was declared in regard to the amounts advanced. The accused entered into an agreement with the complainant company under which he received Rs. 4,500 by way of advance and undertook to employ the money in the purchase and transport of paddy to it. There were stipulations in the agreement that the money in trust for the company and that the paddy purchased therewith was to remain with the company. The accused was, however, inconsistent with other clauses of the agreement which inter alia provided that he was to hold the money in trust for the company and that the paddy purchased therewith was to remain with the company for any loss of either paddy or money, whatever the cause. There was no real trust and that the accused was in failing to devote the money to the purchase and transport of paddy.⁶

The complainant owed money to the accused on a mortgage bond and on a certain day went to their house and paid the amount settled as due in full satis-

¹ Nobin Chunder Sircar, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 39.

² Chinna Karuppa Muppan, (1889) 1 Weir 463.

³ Wong Yone Main, (1911) 6 L. B. R. 46.

⁴ Theophilus Ramappa, (1911) 22 M. L. J.

112, 10 M. L. T. 517.

⁵ Po Seik, (1912) 6 L. B. R. 62, F. R., followed in Hok Chong & Co. v. Tha Ka Do, (1913) 7 L. B. R. 16, F. R.

⁶ Po Yuet, (1914) 7 L. B. R. 278.

saction of the bond. An endorsement of payment was made on the back of the bond by one of the witnesses for the prosecution and the accused went inside their house with the bond and money saying that they would keep the money and return the bond, but they did not come back that day and afterwards denied the receipt of the money. It was held that on the facts there was no trust which could bring the case within the terms of this section.¹

'Property' referred to in this section must be moveable property. Criminal breach of trust cannot be committed in respect of immoveable property. The accused was a Jemadar of an indigo factory and in such capacity was entrusted with dominion over certain plots of zerail land. His duty was to see that the plots were cultivated with indigo, but he knowingly allowed them to be cultivated with other crops. It was held that the accused was not guilty of criminal breach of trust.²

This section does not cover misappropriation by a person of the sale-proceeds of the property entrusted to him.³

A cancelled cheque falls within the term 'property'. The question of the value of the property in respect of which the breach of trust is committed is, except so far as s. 95 of the Code is concerned, quite immaterial.⁴

An association not expressly sanctioned by law, yet not criminal, is not incapable of holding any property at all.⁵

'Dominion over property.'—The property regarding which the offence is alleged to have been committed must have been 'entrusted' to the accused or he must have 'dominion over' it. Where it is the duty of a Municipal Water Works Inspector to supervise and cheque the distribution of water from the Municipal water-works, he has dominion over the water belonging to his employers. If he deliberately misappropriates such water for his own use or for the use of his tenants for which he pays no tax and gives no information to his employers he is guilty of criminal breach of trust.⁶

If a mortgagor in possession, who is entrusted with the dominion over the mortgaged property by the mortgagee in whom the property is in a mortgage in the English form, willfully defaults and causes the property to be sold for arrears of Government revenue for the purpose of defrauding the mortgagee, and purchases it benami, he is liable to be punished for this offence.⁷ The accused hypothecated to the complainant by a written contract all his claims as a contractor against Government in respect of work done and materials supplied to the Executive Engineer, and undertook regularly and without fail to convey and make over to the complainant all cheques drawn by the Executive Engineer in his favour, and, subsequently, in violation of the said contract, cashed two such cheques and, appropriated the proceeds. It was held that the accused had committed criminal breach of trust.⁸

Partner.—The words of the section are wide enough to include the case of a partner, if it be proved that he was in fact entrusted with the partnership property, or with a dominion over it, and had dishonestly misappropriated it or converted it to his own use.⁹ A partner is entitled to be called upon for an account of the expenditure of the money, which he has received, and it is open to him to spend

¹ Golam Hossain, (1917) 22 C. W. N. 1005.

² Judgoven Sinha, (1895) 23 Cal. 372; Bhagu, Fishnu, (1897) Cr. R. No. 36 of 1897, Unrep. Cr. C. 928; Cr. Rev. Case No. 779 of 1924, 100 Cal. 40.

³ Shuduthroy Bisseshurdas v. Agama Mistry, 100 Cal. 117.

Bhudarmull Marwari v. Ramchander Marwari, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 127; Edmund Balls, (1871) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 328; Tankard, 100 Cal. 117.

If, instead of denying the appropriation of property, the accused, in rendering his account, admits the appropriation, alleging a right in himself, no matter how unfounded, or setting up an excuse, no matter how frivolous, this offence will not be committed.¹ Bare refusal by the accused to allow the removal of a box left in his house by the complainant, unless some debt due to him by the complainant was paid, is held not to amount to a criminal breach of trust.²

'Misappropriates.'—"There may be appropriation by a mental act without any actual expenditure of the money thus appropriated. The fact that the money has not been expended is a circumstance to be taken into account as evidence in favour of the view that there has been no mental appropriation; but the circumstance is not conclusive that there has been no such appropriation. Again, the mental appropriation must be established by some overt and visible act, but actual expenditure of the money is not the only proof of it."³

Dishonest conversion.—Where a Magistrate made over a pony, which had been condemned by the Municipal authorities as unfit for work, to a person professing to be the Secretary of a Society for the maintenance of incurable animals, and as such Secretary agreed to take charge of the pony, but afterwards sold it to an eka driver,⁴ this offence was held to have been committed.

A lady wishing to get a railway ticket, finding a crowd at the pay-place at the station, asked the accused, who was nearer into the pay-place to get a ticket for her, and handed him a sovereign to pay for it. The price of the ticket was 10s. He took it, intending to steal it, and instead of getting the ticket immediately ran away with the money. It was held that he was guilty of larceny at common law, as the lady being present retained the dominion and possession, in point of law, after she had handed it to him for the intended purpose.⁵

Where the accused asked for a gold Mohar from the complainant in order that he might play with the child who was weeping, using the Mohar as a play thing, and subsequently misappropriated it, it was held that he was guilty of criminal breach of trust.⁶

Where a municipal board undertakes house scavenging by means of "customary sweepers," the rubbish and night-soil collected by the sweepers is the property of the board. Hence, where a sanitary inspector, having induced the sweepers to deposit the matter collected by them in a place other than that prescribed by the board, thereafter sold it for his own benefit, it was held that he was guilty of criminal breach of trust.⁷

Stake-holder.—A stake-holder, who misappropriates to his own use the stakes deposited with him for a wager, is guilty of criminal breach of trust.⁸

2-b. 'Dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law... or of any legal contract... touching the discharge of such trust.'—A user of property comes within this definition when such user causes substantial or appreciable loss to the owner of the property or gain to the accused. The use by a printer of certain blocks entrusted to him to print the complainant's catalogue for the purpose of printing a rival firm's catalogue amounts to criminal breach of trust.⁹ But the Madras High Court has held that for either wrongful loss or gain the property must be lost to the owner or the owner must be wrongfully kept out of it. The deterioration of an article, such as a turban, by use, is, according to its

¹ John Norman, (1842) Car. & M. 501.

² Adinarayana Iyer, (1907) 17 M. L. J.

413.

³ Per Flouwen, J., in Kesho Ram, (1889) P. R. No. 38 of 1889.

⁴ Gauri Shankar, (1894) 14 A. W. N. 197.

⁵ George Thompson, (1842) 32 L. J. (M. C.)

53.

⁶ Bagubir Kurmi, (1919) 1 U. P. L. R. 69.

⁷ Hori Lal, (1922) 45 All. 281.

⁸ Nga Te, (1901) 2 L. B. R. 216, 10 Burma L. R. 219, r. n., overruling Nga Po Tse, (1891) S. J. L. R. 150.

⁹ Keshab Chandra Boral v. Nityanand Bhowra, (1901) 6 C. W. N. 207

opinion, not such a loss of property to its owner, and the wrongful beneficial use of property by the accused is not such a gain to him.¹

Willful omission to account.—If a person receives money which he is bound to account for and does not do so, he commits this offence, although no precise time can be fixed at which it was his duty to pay over the money.² "Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. On the other hand, when the latter fails to account for the money entrusted to him, the owner naturally comes to the conclusion that he has dishonestly misappropriated it. Whether a civil suit for account does or does not lie, and whether the complainant or informant has or has not been led to institute criminal proceedings, merely because he has not got an account, are immaterial. The question is whether the facts constitute the offence defined in this section."³

If a servant immediately on receiving a sum for his master, enters a smaller sum in his master's books and ultimately accounts to his master for the smaller sum, he may be considered as embezzling the difference at the time he makes the entry. It will make no difference though he received other sums for his master the same day, and in paying those and the smaller sum to his master together, he might give his master every piece of money or note he received at the time he made the false entry.⁴

It is not necessary to prove that any particular sum or sums were received from any particular person. Where a prisoner had debited himself with an amount, forming the balance of a large number of receipts and payments, this was held sufficient.⁵

The position of a shroff of a Battery with reference to the custody of the Government moneys entrusted to him being that of a cashier, his failure to produce the entire amount of the balance of cash entrusted to him amounts to criminal breach of trust.⁶

It was the duty of a servant, authorized to receive money for his employer, to account to his employer on the evening of every day for the money received during the day by him for his employer, and to pay over the amount. He received three sums for his employer on three different days, and neither accounted for those sums nor paid them over. He never denied the receipt of them, nor rendered any written account in which they were omitted. It was held that, if the servant wilfully omitted to account for these sums, and pay them over on the respective days on which he received them, they were embezzlements, and that such wilful omissions to account and pay over were equivalent to a denial of the receipt of them.⁷

False accounting.—The accused had received a cheque which he was to get cashed, and lay out the proceeds in the market. He did cash it, but did not lay out the proceeds as he ought to have done, and in the prosecutor's books gave a wrong account of the manner in which the money had been expended. It was held that this offence had been committed.⁸

"In violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged or of any legal contract touching the discharge of such trust."—The misappropriation, conversion, etc., must be in violation of a legal direction prescribing the mode in which the person entrusted with the property is to carry out the trust or the contract. Where the accused were entrusted with some silver for

¹ (1866) 3 M. R. C. App. 6.

² Wells v. Wells, 1862, 12 M. R. 100.

³ "Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. On the other hand, when the latter fails to account for the money entrusted to him, the owner naturally comes to the conclusion that he has dishonestly misappropriated it. Whether a civil suit for account does or does not lie, and whether the complainant or informant has or has not been led to institute criminal proceedings, merely because he has not got an account, are immaterial. The question is whether the facts constitute the offence defined in this section."

⁴ "Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. On the other hand, when the latter fails to account for the money entrusted to him, the owner naturally comes to the conclusion that he has dishonestly misappropriated it. Whether a civil suit for account does or does not lie, and whether the complainant or informant has or has not been led to institute criminal proceedings, merely because he has not got an account, are immaterial. The question is whether the facts constitute the offence defined in this section."

⁵ "Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. On the other hand, when the latter fails to account for the money entrusted to him, the owner naturally comes to the conclusion that he has dishonestly misappropriated it. Whether a civil suit for account does or does not lie, and whether the complainant or informant has or has not been led to institute criminal proceedings, merely because he has not got an account, are immaterial. The question is whether the facts constitute the offence defined in this section."

⁶ "Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. On the other hand, when the latter fails to account for the money entrusted to him, the owner naturally comes to the conclusion that he has dishonestly misappropriated it. Whether a civil suit for account does or does not lie, and whether the complainant or informant has or has not been led to institute criminal proceedings, merely because he has not got an account, are immaterial. The question is whether the facts constitute the offence defined in this section."

⁵ Hira Lal, (1907) P. R. No. 19 of 1908.

⁷ Jackson, (1844) 1 C. & K. 384; Charles Lister, (1856) 26 L. J. (M. C.) 26.

⁸ Goodenough, (1853) 6 Cox 206; see also Guelder, (1860) 8 Cox 372.

the : introduced copper into the ornaments, it breach of trust.¹

. al under an agreement that property therein was to pass only if he exercised his option to take them and paid cash in full for certain articles and in part for others, the trust continues till the option is exercised and cash payments made, and he commits criminal breach of trust if he sells them without such payments.²

The servant of a liquor contractor was entrusted with liquor by his master to sell. For selling it, he was to receive a certain quantity himself, and he was to account for the remainder to his master, with whom he made a legal contract that he would not adulterate it with water before selling it. In violation of that contract he mixed water with the liquor, and having thus increased its amount, sold it at the same rate per gallon as was chargeable for unadulterated liquor, and appropriated the profit thus made to his own use. It was held that having thus gained by unlawful means money to which he was not legally entitled, he acted dishonestly within the meaning of the Code, and was guilty of criminal breach of trust.³ In both the cases the accused were entrusted with property for a particular purpose and there was a contract with them which they violated. But where an Assistant Station Master whose duty it was to issue tickets to the passengers and to charge fares as fixed by the railway made an over-charge over some of the tickets and did not credit the excess so realized to the railway, it was held that he was not guilty of criminal breach of trust as he was not a trustee within the meaning of this section. The Court observed: "A trustee is a person in whom is invested the legal or formal interest in property, the equitable or beneficial interest vesting in and belonging to some other person. In the present case it is beyond doubt that dishonestly recovered and in fact in direct contravention of their own instructions."

No breach of trust if there is no dishonest use or disposal.—Where a cloth was entrusted to the accused, a washerman, on the understanding that it was not to be washed by men of certain class, ... to be worn by the prohibited class, the article

. TO HAVE BEEN for the purpose for which it was . vaccinated accepted two annas from a vaccinator under a promise to take the child to another village where the vaccinator wanted to take lymph out of the baby and she subsequently refused to take the child there⁴; where a Sub-Inspector of Police purchased a pony which had been impounded⁵; and where the accused failed to deliver the full quantity of hides entrusted to him as the tindal of a cargo boat to be carried on a steamer⁶, this offence was held not to have been committed. Where the accused were entrusted by a Court officer with certain moveable property attached in execution of a decree, but at the time of sale they did not produce the property and evaded the service of notice, it was held that they could not be held guilty of criminal breach of trust inasmuch as they did not misappropriate the property or convert it to their own use or dispose of it in any manner contrary to the terms of the trust.¹¹

¹ Babaji bin Bhau, (1867) 4 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 18.

² Kailash Chandra Deb Roy, (1924) 51 Cal. 796.

³ Jameetji, (1899) Cr. R. No. 53 of 1898, Unrep. Cr. C. 395.

⁴ Kudrat Nath, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 125.

⁵ (1880) Weir (3rd Edn.) 259.

⁶ Jaffir Naik, (1864) 2 B. H. C. 127.

⁷ Ardeskhir Merwanjer, (1899) Cr. R. No. 50 of 1899, Unrep. Cr. C. 451.

⁸ Sataur, (1891) Unrep. Cr. C. 557.

⁹ Rajkristo Bueas, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 52.

¹⁰ Ramaya, (1904) 10 Burma L. R. 170.

¹¹ Harnam Singh, (1919) 16 A. L. J. R. 100.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was entrusted with property or with dominion over it.¹

(2) That he (a) misappropriated it, or (b) converted it to his own use, or (c) used it, or (d) disposed of it.

(3) That he did so in violation of (a) any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust was to be discharged, or (b) any legal contract, express or implied, which he had made touching the discharge of such trust; or that he wilfully suffered some other persons to do as above.

To make out a case of criminal breach of trust it is not sufficient to show that money has been retained. It must also be shown that the accused disposed of it in some way other than that in which he was bound to apply it and that he did so dishonestly. The mere fact that the accused did not at once apply the money to the purpose for which it was intended does not amount to criminal breach of trust. There must be some dishonest use of money to constitute the offence.² Mere retention of money does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation to one's own use, but dishonest misappropriation may sometimes be inferred from the circumstances without direct evidence.³

(4) That he acted as in (2) dishonestly.⁴

Where at the trial for an offence under this section, the accused admits having received the money alleged to have been misappropriated by him, but defends himself by saying that he made it over to the proper person, the onus does not lie on him to prove payment, but on the prosecution to prove non-payment; for it is only when the latter is proved that a presumption will arise of misappropriation or breach of trust.⁵

Evidence given of acts of embezzlement other than those charged in the indictment.—An indictment charged the prisoner with having embezzled three sums of £2, the money of his employers, he being a clerk or servant. Evidence was given of the embezzlement of these sums, and it was then proposed to give evidence of other sums not charged in the indictment, but which had also been embezzled, to show that if it should be contended the sums charged in the indictment were subjects of unaccountable and unexplained expenditure, the evidence would be admissible.⁶

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

In a case of criminal breach of trust arising out of the misappropriation of a number of sums, the proper course is for the prosecutor to select three items on which to proceed in the first instance and to give some general evidence as to the amount believed to have been misappropriated.⁷ In view of s. 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code this is not necessary, but if it is done the accused cannot complain of multifariousness. Where a person receives money for the express purpose of using it for his master's benefit in a particular way, he is entrusted with money, and his misappropriation of it to himself amounts to criminal breach of trust; and consequently a conviction for criminal breach of trust committed by

¹ Gowri Narayan Barua v. Tillakram Chetri, (1921) 25 C. W. N. 838.

² Nga Hmu (1901) 1 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 345.

³ Nga Tha Zan, (1905) U. B. R. (P. C.) 19.

⁴ Najappa Melkappe, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. J. 120.

⁵ Hari Dagdu, (1896) Cr. R. No. 47 of 1896, Unrep. Cr. C. 872; Ramchandra Ganesh, (1896) Cr. R. No. 27 of 1896, Unrep. Cr. C. 860.

⁶ Richardson, (1861) 8 Cox 448; William Proude, (1861) 9 Cox 22.

⁷ Vallabhai Gorinda Menon, (1883) Weir (3rd Edn.) 270.

misappropriation of a large sum of money made up of various items (more than three in number) on false pretences is not illegal.¹

The offence of criminal breach of trust involves entrustment or dominion over property and dishonest misappropriation, conversion, use or disposal thereof. It is not possible to find these elements unless one can form a conception as to what that property is. There must, therefore, be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused in order to form the basis of his conviction.²

Agreement to refund will not bar prosecution.—An agreement between the prosecutor and the prisoner that the money embezzled shall be refunded cannot be pleaded in bar of the prosecution.³

Venue.—The offence of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person, or the offence was committed.⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, being entrusted with certain property, to wit—, committed criminal breach of trust; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 406 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence; Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year.⁵ Prior to the enacting of this clause there was a difference of opinion between the various High Courts as to the legality of charging a person for a general deficiency without specifying particular items or exact dates. This clause is in accordance with the present English law. Where an accused person is charged with having misappropriated or committed criminal breach of trust in respect of an aggregate sum of money, the whole sum being alleged to have been wrongfully dealt with by the accused within a period not exceeding one year, the mere fact that the items composing such aggregate sum are specified and may be more than three in number will not render the charge obnoxious to the prohibition implied by s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁶ In a charge of criminal misappropriation there were three counts. Each count specified the sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused on a particular day; but in two out of the three cases the total sum consisted of three separate items in each instance. It was held that a charge so framed did not offend against s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁷ An accused person was tried for criminal breach of trust in respect of three distinct sums, and one charge was drawn up specifying all the three sums and the persons

¹ Theophilus Ramappa, (1912) 22 M. L. J. 112, 12 M. L. T. 203.

² Khirode Kumar, (1924) 29 C. W. N. 54, 40 C. L. J. 555.

³ Mayandi Pillai, (1886) 1 Weir 462; Ramagunam Nandan, (1893) 1 Weir 465.

⁴ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 181.

⁵ Ibid., s. 222 (2). The cases of Ramchandra Govind Harsh, (1895) 19 Bom.

749; Luchminarayan, (1886) 14 Cal. 123; Pursotam Dass Morarjee, (1896) 24 Cal. 193; Chatter, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr.) 5; Ekrum Ali, (1898) 2 C. W. N. 341, are no longer of any authority. See Kellie, (1895) 17 All. 153; Buddhu v. Babu Lal, (1895) 18 All. 116.

⁶ Gulzari Lal, (1902) 24 All. 254.

⁷ Ishtiaq Ahmad, (1904) 27 All. 69.

from whom he collected them. He was not charged with three offences, but with one offence under s. 409 and was convicted and sentenced to one term of imprisonment. It was held that the charge as framed was not contrary to law, it being in accordance with s. 222, sub-s. (2) and s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.¹

Where the charge against the accused was to the effect that he on or before the 21st June 1907 committed breach of trust in respect of some deeds which he took from the complainant and was thereby guilty of an offence punishable under this section, but at the trial he was convicted of embezzling not the deeds but amounts obtained by dealing with those deeds, it was held that the conviction was bad.²

Punishment.—A case of embezzlement of money is not a case contemplated by s. 62; and hence, in a sentence under this section, the Court is not competent to order that the rents and profits of the property of the accused should be forfeited to Government during the period of his imprisonment.³

407. Whoever, being entrusted with property as a carrier,¹ wharfinger² or warehouse-keeper,³ commits criminal breach of trust by carrier, etc. breach of trust in respect of such property shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Those who receive property under a contract, express or implied, to carry it or keep it in safe custody are punishable under this section for a criminal breach of duty with respect to such property. The persons specified in this section are alike in being entrusted with the custody of property for which they are remunerated, their employment being not continuous, but intermittent, and in relation to specific goods.

1. 'Carrier.'—A 'carrier' is a person who undertakes to transport the goods of other persons from one place to another for hire.⁴ Any one who undertakes to carry the goods of all persons indifferently, for hire, is a common carrier.⁵ Railway companies are carriers.⁶

2. 'Wharfinger.'—The term 'wharfinger' means a person who owns or keeps a wharf, which is 'a broad plain place, near some creek or haven, to lay goods and wares on that are brought to or from the water.'⁷

3. 'Warehouse-keeper.'—One who keeps a warehouse, which is a house to deposit or keep wares in. Ware is an article of merchandise, fabric, especially in the plural, goods, commodities, merchandise.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused is a carrier, wharfinger, or warehouse-keeper.

(2) That he was as such entrusted with the property in question.

(3) That he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of it.⁸

See the Indian Evidence Act, s. 15 (b).

¹ Sat Narain Tewari, (1905) 32 Cal. 1085.

² Bipra Das Giri v. Niramamon Bewa, (1908) 12 C. W. N. 577; Balhasar, (1914) 41 Cal. 844.

³ Amrit Lal, (1906) 29 All. 25.

⁴ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 143.

⁵ Gisbourn v. Hurst, (1710) 1 Salk. 249.

⁶ Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890. Their civil liability is restricted by ss. 72-82.

⁷ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 108.

⁸ Id. s. 406, sup.

To establish the essential elements of this offence it is necessary to show at least that some of the property entrusted to the accused cannot be accounted for by him.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, being entrusted with property, to wit—, as a carrier [or wharfinger, or warehouse-keeper] committed criminal breach of trust in respect of such property; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 407 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

408. Whoever, being a clerk¹ or servant² or employed as a clerk or servant,³ and being in any manner entrusted in such capacity with property,⁴ or with any dominion over property,⁵ commits criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Section 381 punishes theft by a clerk or a servant. This section inflicts enhanced punishment on such a person for criminal breach of trust.

Scope.—The offence is committed even where the act of the accused is to cause wrongful loss to his master for a time only.⁶

1. 'Clerk.'—In modern usage this word means a writer in an office, public or private, either for keeping accounts or entering minutes. See s. 381, supra.

2. 'Servant.'—Master and servant, a relation whereby a person calls in the assistance of others, where his own skill and labour are not sufficient to carry out his own business or purpose.⁷ See s. 381, supra. A person hired by a market gardener to do a day's work and sent by him to sell vegetables at market and bring back the proceeds is a servant to his employer in respect of such employment.⁸ A person engaged by a trading firm on commission to make purchases under instructions from the firm is a servant of the firm.⁹

3. 'Employed as a clerk or servant.'—If a person acts as a clerk or servant although there is no contract binding on him to work, yet so long as he does the duties he will come under the category of clerk or servant.¹⁰

If a servant receives money on his employer's account, and embezzles it he is guilty of a felony, though his employers had no right to it, and were wrong-doers in receiving it.¹¹

4. 'Entrusted in such capacity with property.'—The property must have been entrusted to the accused in his capacity of a clerk or a servant.¹² If it is not

¹ Parabhu Ghatgeppa, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. 229.

² Tulsidas Chakragandhi, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 931.

³ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 530.

⁴ Winnall, (1851) 5 Cox 326. See Pyo

Gyi, (1910) 10 L. B. R. 31, 12 B. L. T. 31, infra.

⁵ Pyo Gyi, sup.

⁶ Foullet, (1875) L. R. 2 C. C. R. 150.

⁷ See Karim-ud-din, (1918) 40 All. 563.

⁸ Richard Beccall, (1824) 1 C. & P. 434.

⁹ (1865) 3 W. R. (C. L.) 12.

entrusted in such capacity the clerk or servant will be liable under s. 406 and not under this section.

If a servant secrete moneys which his master has marked and sent by a friend to make a purchase at his shop, with a view to try the honesty of the servant, it is a felonious breach of trust.¹

Accused was engaged by the complainant as a tonga driver on a monthly salary of Rs. 15 to drive the tonga on hire within the limits of the Ludhiana Municipality. He was to bring the tonga back each evening and pay over his earnings to the complainant. If he did not do so, he was liable to be punished. He was pursued and arrested at the station. The accused was brought before the Magistrate but was acquitted on appeal to the Sessions Judge who found that there had been no criminal breach of trust as the accused had not disposed of the tonga. It was held that there was no doubt that the accused intended to deprive his master of the tonga and that his intent or mental act of his was the gist of the offence of criminal breach of trust and the accused was therefore guilty of an offence punishable under this section.²

5. 'Or with dominion over property.'—If a clerk or servant who has dominion over the property of his master in some way or other misappropriates or converts to his own use such property he commits criminal breach of trust. For instance, where it is the duty of a Municipal Water-works Inspector to supervise and check the distribution of water from the Municipal Water-works, he has dominion over the water belonging to his employers. If he deliberately misappropriates such water for his own use or for the use of his tenants for which he pays no tax and gives no information to his employers he is guilty of criminal breach of trust.³ Where a Municipal Water-works Inspector, being the lessor of a house within municipal limits which he had sub-let, had such house connected with a municipal water main and accepted a yearly payment as water tax from his tenants, but neither informed the municipal board that the connection had been made nor credited to the board the money which he received as water tax from his tenants, it was held that he was properly convicted under this section.⁴

Commission obtained by a servant.—The principle applying to cases where a servant employed to pay a bill for his master, obtains a commission or a reduction of a price for his own benefit, has been thus laid down. "If the account is an open one, that is, an account of which the items have never been checked or settled, and if the transaction amounts to a taxation of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant, it is obvious that the servant obtains the reduction for his master; that the money in his hands always remains the master's property, and that if he appropriates it, he steals it. But if the master himself has settled the account with the tradesman for a specific sum, and he sends the servant with the money, and the servant after making the payment, asks the tradesman for a present, then if the servant takes the present and keeps it, he is not guilty of stealing, because he has no intention to steal; the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it. It may be that, according to the strict equitable doctrines of the Court of Chancery, the servant is bound to account to his master for the money. But, however this may be, his act is a very different matter from a criminal offence, and I do not think he can be convicted of criminal breach of trust merely because, by a mere equitable doctrine of the Court of Chancery, it was obligatory upon him to render an account."⁵

¹ William Headge, (1809) 2 Leach 1033

² Dina, (1925) 6 Lah. 257.

³ Bimata Charan Roy, (1913) 35 All. 361.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Per Petheram, C. J., in Imdad Khan, (1885) 8 All. 120, 138.

CASES.

Conversion by a servant under a special trust.—Where a Court Inspector improperly delegated to a constable the custody, etc., of Government moneys taking from him private security to save himself from loss in case of defalcation, and the constable dishonestly converted the money to his own use, although he afterwards restored it, it was held that his offence fell under this section and not under s. 409, the money having been entrusted to him in his private and not public capacity.¹ A servant who received money for a specific purpose, and did not use it for that purpose, and, on being called on to account for the money, falsely said that he used it for that purpose, was held to have committed this offence.²

If a servant immediately on receiving a sum for his master enters a smaller sum in his master's books, and ultimately accounts to his master for the smaller sum, he may be considered as embezzling the difference at the time he makes the entry. It will make no difference though he received other sums for his master the same day, and in paying those and the smaller sum to his master together, he might give his master every piece of money or note he received at the time he made the false entry.³ The accused was given money by complainant company to purchase specified paddy at specified prices. He was to be paid all expenses incurred in purchasing the paddy and bringing it to the mill, and was to receive a commission of rupee one per hundred baskets. This commission was his only form of remuneration, and he could not suffer any loss by the transaction. It was held that the accused was a servant of the company in this transaction, that the money was entrusted to him for a specific purpose, and that the accused was guilty of criminal breach of trust under this section.⁴

Property must have been entrusted to a person as a clerk or servant.—A Station Master on the East Indian Railway, under an arrangement with the Company, received a fixed allowance in respect of the marking, loading and unloading work at his station and used to engage his own men for that purpose. One of such men, engaged as a marksman, was first allowed to keep certain registers, which it was the duty of the Station Master to maintain, and next allowed to receive cash payments and make entries in the cash register. Whilst so employed, he received a sum of Rs. 5-10-0 as an overcharge or demurrage in respect of certain goods which passed through his hands, and appropriated the same. To this sum, however, the Railway Company made no claim. He was also alleged to have received and appropriated to his own use two other sums of money under somewhat similar circumstances. In respect of these three sums he was tried and convicted on three counts under s. 408. It was held that the offence, if any, committed with regard to the sum of Rs. 5-10-0 did not fall within this section at all, and, this being so, the joinder of the three charges in one trial was illegal.⁵

Using the property entrusted for the benefit of another person.—Where a person entrusted another with some blocks of wood-engraving to print his catalogue, and that other person used the blocks or allowed other persons to use the blocks to print a rival firm's catalogue, it was held that such dealing with the blocks was a violation of an implied contract and caused wrongful gain to the accused, for he obtained a catalogue at a less expense, and wrongful loss to the owner, inasmuch

¹ Banet Madhub Ghose, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.)

1. This case has been modified by Ram Dhun Dey, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 77, in which a conviction under s. 409 was maintained.

² Watson & Co v Golab Khan, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 28. See also Lolu Mohan Sarkar, (1894) 22 Cal. 313.

³ John Hall, (1821) R. & R. 463.

⁴ Pyo Gyi, (1819) 10 L. R. R. 31, 12 B. L. T. 31.

⁵ Karim-ud-din, (1918) 40 All. 565.

as his property deteriorated in value, and therefore constituted criminal breach of trust.¹

Appropriation by a servant of property ordered to be destroyed.—The accused, a servant, was ordered by his employers to take certain bags of papers and forms belonging to them to their yard and there to burn and destroy them. Instead of doing this, the accused carried the papers away to a certain place. It was held that the act of the accused did not amount to this offence.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was the clerk or servant of the person reposing trust.

(2) That he was in such capacity entrusted with the property in question or with dominion over it.

(3) That he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of it.³

Actual conversion need not be proved. A mental act of fraudulent appropriation may be inferred from conduct.⁴

To support a conviction for abetment of criminal breach of trust by a servant it must be proved that the transaction was a dishonest transaction, that the accused knew that, in respect of such transaction, the servant was acting dishonestly and was committing a breach of trust, and that he abetted the servant in effecting it.⁵

Excessive delay in remitting revenue collections to the Treasury is held to be evidence of a dishonest misappropriation on the part of a village officer.⁶

Where property is entrusted to a servant and such servant fails to return or to account or gives an account which is shown to be false and incredible, it is ordinarily a reasonable inference that he has criminally misappropriated the property so entrusted to him and dishonestly converted it to his own use. In such cases the Courts are entitled to draw hostile inferences and presumptions from the action and statements of the servant.⁷

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Jurisdiction.—The Court, within whose jurisdiction the consequence of an accused's act occurs, can inquire into the charge.⁸

Charge.—Where an accused person was charged under this section with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of money misappropriated by him within the period of one year and the charge specified not only the gross sum taken and the dates between which it was taken, but also set out the items, twenty-two in number, composing such gross sum, giving the dates and the amount alleged to have been misappropriated on each date, it was held that the charge came within s. 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that by specifying the items composing the gross sum the charge went beyond what was necessary and was to that extent favourable to the accused.⁹

The charge should run thus :

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, being a servant in the employment of AB, and in such capacity entrusted with [or with dominion over] certain property, to wit—, committed criminal breach of trust with respect to

¹ Keshab Chandra Boral v. Nityanand Biswas, (1901) 6 C. W. N. 203.

² Pro Nath Chowdhry, (1902) 29 Cal. 489.

³ Ides 406, sup.

⁴ Kraka Ram, (1889) 1 P. R. No. 36 of 1889.

⁵ Pal Gobind Shaha, (1900) 4 C. W. N. 304.

⁶ (1880) 1 Weir 464.

⁷ Anna Meek, (1924) 2 Rang. 476.

⁸ O'Brien, (1896) 19 All. 111.

⁹ Samiruddin Sarfar v. Nibaran Chandra Ghose, (1901) 31 Cal. 929. See Gulwari Lal, (1902) 24 All. 254.

the said property, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 408 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words) on the said charge.

409. Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property,¹ or with any dominion over property in his capacity of a public servant² or in the way of his business as a banker,³ merchant,⁴ factor,⁵ broker,⁶ attorney⁷ or agent,⁸ commits criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section classes together public servants, bankers, merchants, factors, brokers, attorneys and agents. As a rule the duties of such persons are of a highly confidential character, involving great powers of control over the property entrusted to them; and a breach of trust by such persons may often induce serious public and private calamity. "In order to bring a case within s. 409 it is... necessary to show that property was entrusted to a public servant and that he accepted the property entrusted, being in his public capacity required or authorized to accept it. Otherwise in accepting the property he acts as a mere volunteer, and is not entrusted with it in his capacity of a public servant. It is not... sufficient to show merely that a person delivered the property to him because he was a public servant. The motive which induced the person to deliver the property cannot alone determine the quality of the trust created. The mistaken belief of the person delivering the property or of the person accepting it, or of both, that the latter was authorized to receive it in his public capacity cannot alter the facts and supply the deficient and requisite authority so as to convert simple breach of trust into breach of trust by a public servant."¹

1. 'Property.'—Moneys paid to a Post Master for money-orders are public moneys; as soon as they are paid they cease to be the property of the remitters, and a misappropriation of such moneys will fall under this section.²

2. 'In his capacity of a public servant.'—It is not necessary that the property should be that of Government, but that it should have been entrusted to a public servant in that capacity.³ The section does not limit the mode in which a trust arises, whether by specific order or by reason of its being part of the proper duty of a public functionary.⁴ A naib nazir is a public servant within the meaning of this section.⁵

As to the meaning of 'public servant' see s. 21, supra.

3. 'Banker' is one who receives money to be drawn out again as the owner has occasion for it, the customer being lender, and the banker borrower, with the superadded obligation of honouring the customer's cheques up to the amount of the money received and still in the banker's hands.⁶ The word 'banker' includes a cashier or shroff.⁷

¹ Per Plowden, J., in Bhag Singh, (1876) P. R. No. 24 of 1876; Banee Madhub Ghose, (1887) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 1.

² Juala Prasad, (1884) 7 All. 174, r. 8.

³ Ram Soonder Poddar, (1878) 2 C. L. R.

515.

⁴ Ram Dhan Dey, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 77.

⁵ Mahmood Hossein, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 295.

⁶ Wharton, 13th Edn. p. 94.

⁷ Hira Lal, (1907) P. R. No. 19 of 1908.

4. 'Merchant'.—A merchant is one who traffics to remote countries; also, any one dealing in the purchase and sale of goods.¹ But everyone that buys and sells is not, at this day under the denomination of a merchant; only those who traffic in the way of commerce, by importation or exportation, or carry on business by way of emption, vendition, barter, permutation or exchange, and which make it their living to buy and sell, by a continued assiduity, or frequent negotiation, in the mystery of merchandising, are esteemed merchants. Bankers, and such as deal by exchange, are properly called merchants.²

5. 'Factor' is a substitute in mercantile affairs; an agent employed to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to him by or for his principal, for compensation commonly called factorage or commission.³

6. 'Broker' is an agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade, commerce and navigation, by explaining the intentions of both parties, and negotiating in such a manner as to put those who employ him in a condition to treat together personally. More commonly he is an agent employed by one party only to make a binding contract with another.⁴

A factor is "entrusted with the possession as well as the disposal of property," a broker is "employed to contract about it, without being put in possession."⁵

7. 'Attorney' is one who is appointed by another to do something in his absence, and who has authority to act in the place and turn of him by whom he is delegated.⁶

8. 'Agent'.—An agent is a person employed to do any act for another; to represent another, in dealings with a third person.⁷ The word 'agent' will apply only to persons whose occupation is similar to those enumerated in this section.⁸

CASES.

Guilty—Public servant.—Where a constable dishonestly misappropriated to his own use the pay of his thana police entrusted to him⁹; and where the Head Clerk of an office entrusted the management of stamps, with the knowledge and sanction of his superiors, to one of his assistants, and the latter stole stamps,¹⁰ it was held that this offence had been committed. Where the accused, a cattle pound-keeper, having levied Rs. 5 for five buffaloes in his charge, gave a receipt for Rs. 4 only to the owner of the cattle, and entered only Rs. 4 in his accounts, but subsequently altered the accounts and entered the proper amount, namely, Rs. 5, it was held that the conviction should be under this section and s. 511.¹¹ A traveller, with a considerable property, partly in cash and partly in gold coins, put up at a serai, and believing himself to be dying, sent for a police-officer for protection of his property. The accused went to the serai and received charge of the property. It was held that the accused was entrusted with the property in his capacity of a public servant as he was empowered by s. 95, Criminal Procedure Code, to receive the property to prevent the commission of an offence, i.e., theft by other persons taking advantage of the illness or death of the traveller.¹² A clerk in a record room made over a document forming part of a record in his custody to a person who was entitled to the document, but would otherwise have had to present an application on stamped paper in order to secure its return in a legal manner. It was held that the clerk was, under the above circumstances,

¹ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 556.

² Jacob's Law Dictionary, as enlarged by Tomlins, Vol. II, Edn. of 1809.

³ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 347.

⁴ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 129.

⁵ Smith's Mercantile Law, (12th Edn.), p. 159, quoted in Ex parte Dixon, (1876)

⁶ Ch. D. 133, 137, and in Stevens v. Buller, (1883) 25 Ch. D. 31, 34.

⁷ Wharton, 13th Edn., p. 81.

⁸ The Indian Contract Act, (IX of 1872), s. 182.

⁹ Kant, [1901] 1 K. B. 472; Portugal, (1885)

16 Q. B. D. 487.

¹⁰ Suddar Meeah, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 44.

¹¹ Ram Dhan Dey, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 77.

¹² Bhula, (1893) Cr. R. No. 2 of 1893, Unrep. Cr. C. 632.

¹³ Bhag Singh, (1876) P. R. No. 24 of 1876.

rightly convicted under this section.¹ The accused, a petty officer in the Salt Department, was empowered to sell salt at reduced prices to fish-curers. He was directed to enter the sales to such persons by departmental orders in the Government books. He really bought some salt for himself at the reduced rates, entering the sales in the Government books as if made to fish-curers and thereby appropriated to himself the difference between the reduced price and the proper price. It was held that the accused was guilty under this section and not under s. 177, as he was not 'legally bound' to obey the departmental rule.² A Postmaster whose duty it was to pay over to the holders of certain cash certificates the money due thereon at a certain rate, in fact paid the holders at a lower rate and appropriated the difference himself. It was held that by so doing he had committed an offence under this section.³ Where a public servant was entrusted with money to purchase some materials for building a house and he by some private arrangement obtained the same free of cost, it was held that a trust having been reposed in the petitioner as a public servant it was his duty to account truly for all the monies received and that as he had obtained the materials free of cost, it was his duty to have refunded the unspent balance to Government and as he did not do so he was guilty of criminal breach of trust.⁴

Director.—Where the directors of a bank paid the dividends out of the deposits, when there were no profits, thereby causing gain to persons to which they were not entitled, and wrongful loss to depositors, they were held guilty under this section.⁵ The mere passing of an incorrect balance sheet is held not to amount to an offence under this section.⁶ The accused, the managing director of a bank, wishing the bank to make a better show than the real facts of its working would warrant, in order to maintain the confidence of the share-holders and the public and so to make possible a project for increasing largely the bank's capital, on 17th December, 1912, got his son to present a pro-note for Rs. 3,000 as a pro tanto addition to the profits for 1912, by reducing on paper to that extent his remuneration account from Rs. 4,050, which he had actually drawn, to Rs. 1,050, and thus deceiving the share-holders as to the real profits, induced them to declare a dividend of six per cent. instead of some three per cent. which would otherwise have been the most possible. Later, in January 1913, i.e. after the close of the financial year, the whole thing was readjusted and matters returned to the status quo ante 17th December, 1912. It was held that the accused was guilty of an offence under this section inasmuch as by his act he caused wrongful immediate gain to himself and the other share-holders to the extent of the enhanced dividend and so acted dishonestly.⁷ A debtor of a bank executed in its favour certain hundies for Rs. 30,000 payable after six months. The bank being in need of ready money, the accused, the managing director, asked the Co-operative Bank to discount the hundies. But the bank refused to do so unless the director cleared his own account with it. In order to secure ready money the accused brought forward his own son, who put in an application for a loan from the bank for the exact amount of the accused's debt to the Co-operative Bank. The accused sanctioned the loan as agent on the security of his own money in the hands of the bank and then cleared his debit balance with the Co-operative Bank. It was held that the prosecution had failed to establish the charge of criminal misappropriation inasmuch as the accused, in his anxiety to secure ready money for his bank, chose a method which could not be said to have injured it.⁸

Trustee.—Where a trustee or a manager of a temple misappropriated temple jewels, he was held guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust under

¹ Ganga Prasad, (1904) 27 All. 260.

² Balappa, (1894) 1 Weir 467.

³ Sita Ram, (1910) 42 All. 204.

⁴ Saiyid Mohiuddin (1925) 4 Pat. 488.

⁵ Moss, (1893) 16 All. 88.

⁶ Seddon v. Loane, (1910) 9 M. L. T. 20.

⁷ Daulat Rai, (1915) P. R. No. 23 of 1915, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 25 of 1915, P. L. R. No. 164 of 1915.

⁸ Ibid.

ss. 405, 408, this section, and not of offences under ss. 380, 381 and 457. The trustee or manager of a temple appointed by a devasthanam committee under Act XX of 1863 is not in the position of a clerk or servant removable at the pleasure of the committee, and his possession of the temple and its properties is not possession of the committee. The property of the temple is not vested in the devasthanam committee, nor do they represent it. The deity is the owner of the property and the trustee is the agent of the deity subject to the committee's control. Therefore, if such trustee or manager misappropriates temple jewels, he is not guilty of theft but of the offence of criminal breach of trust by an agent punishable under this section.¹

Not guilty—Public servant.—A certain consignment of rice lay unclaimed at the docks and was advertised for sale by auction by the Port Commissioners. But the rice was found to be in a rotten condition and was ordered to be destroyed by the Health Department of the Corporation of Calcutta. It was entrusted for the purpose of destruction to the accused, who were Inspectors in that Department; but they sold the same to a third party and retained the proceeds of such sale. It was held that they had committed no offence under the Code, though they might have been guilty of infringing a departmental rule.² Where the accused in his capacity of Revenue Patel received from the Government treasury small sums of money on account of certain temple allowances, and did not at once pay over the same to the persons entitled to receive them, as he was bound to do, but it appeared that such persons were willing to trust him, and had actually passed receipts which the accused forwarded to the Revenue authorities, it was held that the accused fulfilled the trust reposed in him by Government and that his mere retention of money for a time, in the absence of any evidence of dishonesty, did not amount to criminal breach of trust.³ Where a village shroff, whose duty it was to assist in collecting the public revenue, received grains from ryots and gave receipts as if for money received by virtue of a private arrangement, it was held that he was not guilty of this offence as he was not authorized to receive the public revenue in kind and the party who delivered the grain did not thereby discharge himself from liability for the revenue.⁴ The accused, a karnam of a Government village, received moneys from certain ryots of the village as revenue due on unassessed lands, part of which was cultivated by the ryots without leave, and as cost of boundary stones required for the said lands, and misappropriated the moneys so received to his own use. It was held that the accused was not guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust by a public servant under this section or of cheating under s. 417.⁵ The accused, the nazir of the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate, was convicted of having criminally misappropriated Rs. 52-6-3 out of the Government money in his charge. It appeared that he intended to restore this money to Government. It was also found that the accounts in the books were kept all right and there appeared to have been a practice of longstanding in the office among officials employed to receive advances of moneys out of the cash with the accused according to their requirements, generally out of mutual regard, and then to repay them when the salaries were drawn from the Treasury and that the accused had made advances when deficiency was found in the cash. The accused made good the deficiency when he was ordered by the Cantonment Magistrate to refund it. It was held that the accused was not guilty of this offence, as there was no dishonest misappropriation or conversion or use within the meaning of s. 405.⁶

Where an Assistant Station Master whose duty it was to issue tickets to the passengers and to charge fares as fixed by the railway made an over-charge over some of the tickets and did not credit the excess so realized to the railway, it was

¹ Muthusami Pillai, (1895) 1 Weir 433.

² Wilkinson, (1898) 2 C. W. N. 216.

³ Ganpat Tapidas, (1885) 10 Bom. 256.

⁴ (1869) 4 M. H. C. App. 32.

⁵ Rengaswami Ayyangar, (1888) 1 Weir 466.

⁶ Imam Din, (1902) P. L. R. No. 39 of 1902.

held that he was not guilty of criminal breach of trust as he was not a trustee within the meaning of s. 405.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was either a public servant or a banker, or a merchant, or a factor, or a broker, or an attorney, or an agent.

(2) That he was in such capacity entrusted with the property in question or with the dominion over it.

(3) That he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of it.²

Distinct proof of criminal misappropriation is necessary.³ But it does not lie on the prosecution to prove the actual mode of misappropriation. Where it is proved by the prosecution that the money was not returned by accused which he was bound to do, it lies on the accused to prove his defence.⁴

All the necessary elements constituting the offence must be strictly proved, and when the charge is that something was substituted in place of another, there must be clear evidence that the thing alleged to have been extracted was actually there when it came under the dominion of the accused.⁵

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—See s. 408.

In a charge of criminal misappropriation there were three counts. Each count specified the sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused on a particular day; but in two out of the three cases the total sum consisted of three separate items in each instance. It was held that a charge so framed did not offend against s. 234, Criminal Procedure Code.⁶ An accused person was tried for criminal breach of trust in respect of three distinct sums, and one charge was drawn up specifying all the three sums and the persons from whom he collected them. He was not charged with three offences, but with one offence under this section, and was convicted of one offence and sentenced to one term of imprisonment. It was held that the charge as framed was not contrary to law, it being in accordance with ss. 222, sub-s. (2), and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁷ Where the accused was charged with three offences under s. 477-A and three offences under this section, and tried and convicted, it was held that the trial was void by reason of misjoinder of charges.⁸

Of the Receiving of Stolen Property.

410. Property, the possession whereof has been transferred by theft, or by extortion, or by robbery, and stolen property, property which has been criminally misappropriated or in respect of which criminal breach of trust has been committed, is designated as "stolen property," whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India.¹ But, if such property subsequently comes into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof,² it then ceases to be stolen property.

¹ Kudrat Nuth, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 125.

² Vide s. 406, sup.

³ Brinladkar Prasad, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

21.

⁴ Kadir Balash, (1910) 8 A. L. J. Pl. 83.

⁵ Singleton, (1924) 29 C. W. N. 260.

⁶ Ishfaq Ahmad, (1904) 27 All. 60.

⁷ Sat Narain Tewari, (1905) 32 Cal. 164.
See Kashinath Bajaji Sali, (1910) 12 Bom. L. R. 226.

⁸ Raman Behary Das, (1913) 14 C. W. N. 1152; Munshi, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1312.

411. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property,¹ knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

Section 410 explains what comes under the words 'stolen property.' Things which have been stolen, extorted, or robbed, or which have been obtained by criminal misappropriation or conversion given to these words s. 378; of 'extortion,' s. 382; of 'criminal breach of trust,' s. 405.

Under s. 410 it is immaterial whether the transfer is made or misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed within or without British India.

English law.—The description of 'stolen property' in s. 410 is not so wide as that of the similar provision of the Larceny Act,³ which enacts that whosoever obtains, secretes, or converts any property, whether real or personal, or valuable security, or other property whatsoever, obtaining, embezzling or otherwise disposing of the same, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, or disposed of, shall be guilty of felony, etc. This provision includes property obtained by cheating, whereas the definition of stolen property as given in s. 410 does not include it.

1. 'Whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India'.—These words were inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9. They have enlarged the scope of the term 'stolen property,' and the act by which property has been stolen no longer need be an act punishable under the Code. The amendment was made in consequence of *Moorga Chetty's case*² which decided that bills of exchange stolen in Mauritius were not 'stolen property' so as to make the receiver at Bombay liable under s. 411. The receipt or retention must take place within British India, unless the person receiving or retaining out of British India is a British subject.³

Where there is a dishonest retention in British India of property stolen elsewhere, it is no defence by the accused, being a foreign subject, that the property was stolen by himself, he not being liable to be tried, convicted, or punished by the British Court for the theft.⁴

Where a Nepalese subject, having stolen cattle in Nepal, brought them into British territory, it was held that he could not be convicted of theft but that he might be convicted of an offence under s. 410.⁵ Similarly, where the accused, a subject of a Native State, committed a theft at Rajkot and brought the property to Thana, it was held that he could not be tried for theft, but he might be tried under s. 411 for retaining stolen property.⁶ Two persons, B, who was not a British subject, and R, who was, were committed to the Court of Session at Jhansi, it being alleged against them that they had committed a robbery in an adjoining Native State and had brought the stolen property into British territory. It was held that though neither could be tried by the Sessions Judge of Jhansi for the robbery, B because he was not a British subject, and R because the certificate

¹ 24 & 25 Vic., c. 96, s. 91.

² (1881) 5 Bom. 338, F.R.; Adirigadu, (1876) 1 Mad. 171, is also now obsolete.

³ See s. 158 Criminal Procedure Code.

⁴ Jafar Ali, (1893) P. R. No. 30 of 1894.

⁵ Sunler Gope, (1880) 6 Cal. 307.

⁶ Abdul Latif talab Abdul Rahiman, (1885) 10 Bom. 186.

held that he was not guilty of criminal breach of trust as he was not a trustee within the meaning of s. 405.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was either a public servant or a banker, or a merchant, or a factor, or a broker, or an attorney, or an agent.

(2) That he was in such capacity entrusted with the property in question or with the dominion over it.

(3) That he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of it.²

Distinct proof of criminal misappropriation is necessary.³ But it does not lie on the prosecution to prove the actual mode of misappropriation. Where it is proved by the prosecution that the money was not returned by accused which he was bound to do, it lies on the accused to prove his defence.⁴

All the necessary elements constituting the offence must be strictly proved, and when the charge is that something was substituted in place of another, there must be clear evidence that the thing alleged to have been extracted was actually there when it came under the dominion of the accused.⁵

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—See s. 408.

In a charge of criminal misappropriation there were three counts. Each count specified the sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused on a particular day; but in two out of the three cases the total sum consisted of three separate items in each instance. It was held that a charge so framed did not offend against s. 234, Criminal Procedure Code.⁶ An accused person was tried for criminal breach of trust in respect of three distinct sums, and one charge was drawn up specifying all the three sums and the persons from whom he collected them. He was not charged with three offences, but with one offence under this section, and was convicted of one offence and sentenced to one term of imprisonment. It was held that the charge as framed was not contrary to law, it being in accordance with ss. 222, sub-s. (2), and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁷ Where the accused was charged with three offences under s. 477-A and three offences under this section, and tried and convicted, it was held that the trial was void by reason of misjoinder of charges.⁸

Of the Receiving of Stolen Property.

410. Property, the possession whereof has been transferred by theft, or by extortion, or by robbery, and property which has been criminally misappropriated or in respect of which criminal breach of trust has been committed, is designated as “stolen property,” whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India.¹ But, if such property subsequently comes into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof,² it then ceases to be stolen property.

¹ Kudrat Nath, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 123.

² Idem s. 406, sup.

³ Brinabhai Putnasli, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 21.

⁴ Kadir Bakhsh, (1910) 8 A. L. J. R. 88.

⁵ Singleton, (1924) 29 C. W. N. 260.

⁶ Ishraq Ahmad, (1904) 27 All. 69.

⁷ Sat Narain Tewari, (1905) 32 Cal. 1085.
See Kashinath Bagaji Sali, (1910) 12 Bom. L. R. 226.

⁸ Raman Bhary Das, (1913) 18 C. W. N. 1152, Menant, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1313.

411. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property,¹ knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

Section 110 explains what comes under the words 'stolen property.' Things which have been stolen, extorted, or robbed, or which have been obtained by criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust come under the extended signification given to these words. As to the definition of 'possession,' see s. 27, of 'theft,' s. 378; of 'extortion,' s. 383; of 'robbery,' s. 390; of 'criminally misappropriated,' s. 403; of 'criminal breach of trust,' s. 405.

Under s. 410 it is immaterial whether the transfer is made or misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed within or without British India.

English law.—The description of 'stolen property' in s. 110 is not so wide as that of the similar provision of the Larceny Act,³ which enacts that whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling or otherwise disposing whereof shall amount to felony, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, or disposed of, shall be guilty of felony, etc. This provision includes property obtained by cheating, whereas the definition of stolen property as given in s. 410 does not include it.

1. 'Whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India'.—These words were inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9. They have enlarged the scope of the term 'stolen property,' and the act by which property has been stolen no longer need be an act punishable under the Code. The amendment was made in consequence of *Moorga Chetty's case*² which decided that bills of exchange stolen in Mauritius were not 'stolen property' so as to make the receiver at Bombay liable under s. 411.

The receipt or retention must take place within British India, unless the person receiving or retaining out of British India is a British subject.³

Where there is a dishonest retention in British India of property stolen elsewhere, it is no defence by the accused, being a foreign subject, that the property was stolen by himself, he not being liable to be tried, convicted, or punished by the British Court for the theft.⁴

Where a Nepalese subject, having stolen cattle in Nepal, brought them into British territory, it was held that he could not be convicted of theft but that he might be convicted of an offence under s. 410.⁵ Similarly, where the accused, a subject of a Native State, committed a theft at Rajkot and brought the property to Thana, it was held that he could not be tried for theft, but he might be tried under s. 411 for retaining stolen property.⁶ Two persons, B, who was not a British subject, and R, who was, were committed to the Court of Session at Jhansi, it being alleged against them that they had committed a robbery in an adjoining Native State and had brought the stolen property into British territory. It was held that though neither could be tried by the Sessions Judge of Jhansi for the robbery, B because he was not a British subject, and R because the certificate

¹ 24 & 25 Vic., c. 96, s. 91.

² (1881) 5 Bom. 338, F.R.; Admiralty, (1876) 1 Mad. 171, is also now obsolete.

³ See s. 182 Criminal Procedure Code.

10 E

held that he was not guilty of criminal breach of trust as he was not a trustee within the meaning of s. 405.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused was either a public servant or a banker, or a merchant, or a factor, or a broker, or an attorney, or an agent.

(2) That he was in such capacity entrusted with the property in question or with the dominion over it.

(3) That he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of it.²

Distinct proof of criminal misappropriation is necessary.³ But it does not lie on the prosecution to prove the actual mode of misappropriation. Where it is proved by the prosecution that the money was not returned by accused which he was bound to do, it lies on the accused to prove his defence.⁴

All the necessary elements constituting the offence must be strictly proved, and when the charge is that something was substituted in place of another, there must be clear evidence that the thing alleged to have been extracted was actually there when it came under the dominion of the accused.⁵

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—See s. 403.

In a charge of criminal misappropriation there were three counts. Each count specified the sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused on a particular day; but in two out of the three cases the total sum consisted of three separate items in each instance. It was held that a charge so framed did not offend against s. 234, Criminal Procedure Code.⁶ An accused person was tried for criminal breach of trust in respect of three distinct sums, and one charge was drawn up specifying all the three sums and the persons from whom he collected them. He was not charged with three offences, but with one offence under this section, and was convicted of one offence and sentenced to one term of imprisonment. It was held that the charge as framed was not contrary to law, it being in accordance with ss. 222, sub-s. (2), and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁷ Where the accused was charged with three offences under s. 477-A and three offences under this section, and tried and convicted, it was held that the trial was void by reason of misjoinder of charges.⁸

Of the Receiving of Stolen Property.

410. Property, the possession whereof has been transferred Stolen property. by theft, or by extortion, or by robbery, and property which has been criminally misappropriated or in respect of which criminal breach of trust has been committed, is designated as "stolen property," whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India.¹ But, if such property subsequently comes into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof,² it then ceases to be stolen property.

¹ Kudrat Nath, (1922) 6 L. L. J. 125.

² Id s. 406, sup.

³ Brinbadhur Putnask, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.)

⁴ Kadir Balhsh, (1910) 8 A. L. J. R. 88.

⁵ Singleton, (1924) 29 C. W. N. 260.

⁶ Ishtaq Ahmad, (1904) 27 All. 69.

⁷ Sat Narain Tewari, (1905) 32 Cal. 1085.

See Kashinath Bagaji Sali, (1910) 12 Bom. L. R. 226.

⁸ Raman Behary Das, (1913) 18 C. W. N. 1152, Manant, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1313.

411. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property,¹ knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

Section 410 explains what comes under the words 'stolen property.' Things which have been stolen, extorted, or robbed, or which have been obtained by criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust come under the extended signification given to these words. As to the definition of 'possession,' see s. 27; of 'theft,' s. 378; of 'extortion,' s. 383; of 'robbery,' s. 390; of 'criminally misappropriated,' s. 403; of 'criminal breach of trust,' s. 405.

Under s. 410 it is immaterial whether the transfer is made or misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed within or without British India.

English law.—The description of 'stolen property' in s. 410 is not so wide as that of the similar provision of the Larceny Act,³ which enacts that whosoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling or otherwise disposing whereof shall amount to felony, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, or disposed of, shall be guilty of felony, etc. This provision includes property obtained by cheating, whereas the definition of stolen property as given in s. 410 does not include it.

1. 'Whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India'.—These words were inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9. They have enlarged the scope of the term 'stolen property,' and the act by which property has been stolen no longer need

The receipt or retention must take place within British India, unless the person receiving or retaining out of British India is a British subject.⁴

Where there is a dishonest retention in British India of property stolen elsewhere, it is no defence by the accused, being a foreign subject, that the property was stolen by himself, he not being liable to be tried, convicted, or punished by the British Court for the theft.⁵

Where a Nepalese subject, having stolen cattle in Nepal, brought them into British territory, it was held that he could not be convicted of theft but that he might be convicted of an offence under s. 410.⁶ Similarly, where the accused, a subject of a Native State, committed a theft at Rajkot and brought the property to Thana, it was held that he could not be tried for theft, but he might be tried under s. 411 for retaining stolen property.⁷ Two persons, B, who was not a British subject, and R, who was, were committed to the Court of Session at Jhansi, it being alleged against them that they had committed a robbery in an adjoining Native State and had brought the stolen property into British territory. It was held that though neither could be tried by the Sessions Judge of Jhansi for the robbery, B because he was not a British subject, and R because the certificate

¹ 24 & 25 Vic., c. 96, s. 91.

² (1841) 5 Bom 338, F.B.; Adiragada, (1876) 1 Mad. 171, is also now obsolete.

³ See s. 325 Criminal Procedure Code.

⁴ Jafar Ali, (1893) F. R. No. 30 of 1894.

⁵ Sunder Gope, (1880) 6 Cal. 307.

⁶ Abdul Latif alias Abdul Rahman, (1885) 10 Bom. 186.

at the time of receipt.¹ But in order to support a conviction of dishonestly retaining stolen property, it ought to be shown that the accused, being in innocent possession of the property, acquired the knowledge that it was stolen, and thereafter retained it dishonestly.² A person who is proved to have dishonestly misappropriated property cannot be convicted of retaining it.³

As to the meaning of 'dishonestly,' see s. 24, supra.

There must be dishonest receiving or retaining. The removal of a birth register from the possession of an official without his consent for producing it in Court to prove the date of birth of a certain person is held to be not an offence under this section or any other.⁴

Manual possession not necessary for receiving.—It is not necessary that the accused should have had manual possession of the goods; but directing a servant to dispose of them, as by pawning or otherwise, will be sufficient to support the charge. Where stolen property was brought by the thief into A's shop; A, with guilty knowledge, called her servant and directed her to take the stolen goods to the pawn office and "pawn them for the girl" (the thief), and the servant did so accordingly and brought back the money, which she handed to the thief in her mistress's presence, it was held that this amounted to a receiving by A of the stolen property, though she had never the manual possession of either the goods or the money.⁵ Where the consignee presented a railway receipt for certain stolen goods to the station-master, paid the freight and received formal delivery of the package from the latter, it was held that the goods had come to be not merely in the potential possession of the consignee but actually within his power and unrestricted control, though he had not removed them from the station where they were then lying, nor made any attempt to do so, and that he had received them within the meaning of this section.⁶

If exclusive possession remain in the thief, there cannot be a conviction for receiving. A and B, two thieves, were seen to come at midnight out of a house belonging to C's father, under the following circumstances. A carried a sack containing stolen goods; B accompanied him; C preceded them, carrying a lighted candle. All three go into an adjoining stable belonging to C, and then shut the door. Policemen enter the stable and find the sack lying on the floor tied at the mouth, and the three men standing round it as if they were bargaining; but no particular words were heard. It was held that on this evidence C could not be convicted of receiving stolen goods; inasmuch as although there was evidence of a criminal intent to receive, and of a knowledge that the goods were stolen, yet the exclusive possession of them still remained in the thieves, and therefore C had no possession, either actual or constructive.⁷

Though manual possession is not necessary yet proof of an actual taking into some kind of possession is necessary. A stole fowls, and sent them by coach to Birmingham, in a box, not addressed to anyone; but A made a verbal statement when he sent them, that a person would call for them at Birmingham. B inquired for the box; it was shewn to her, and she claimed it but it was not delivered to her. It was held that B could not be properly convicted as a receiver.⁸

Any profit to the receiver not necessary.—It makes no difference whether a receiver receives for the purpose of profit or advantage, or whether he does it to assist the thief.⁹

¹ (1869) 4 M. H. C. App. 42.

² Khona, (1879) P. R. No. 31 of 1879.

³ Shree T'hi, (1906) 3 L. B. R. 254.

⁴ China, (1914) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 19 of 1914.

⁵ Miller, (1853) 6 Cox 353; Thomas Smith, (1855) 24 L. J. (M. C.) 135.

⁶ Shewdhar Sukul, (1913) 40 Cal. 990.

⁷ John Wiley, (1850) 4 Cox 412. See Muhamad Ali Shah, (1909) 19 M. L. J. 301, 4 M. L. T. 415.

⁸ Catherine Hill, (1849) 18 L. J. (M. C.) 109.

⁹ Davie, (1833) 6 C. & P. 177.

False claim is not receipt.—The circumstance that a person knew that the property was not his own and yet claimed it before the Magistrate in his deposition in a case, was held to be not sufficient for his conviction.¹

Res nullius cannot be the subject of receiving.—Where a bull was let loose, as part of a religious ceremony, and was the property of no one, it was held that it could not be the subject of an offence under this section, as the original owner had surrendered all his rights as its proprietor and that it was, therefore, nullius in terra.²

Receiver is guilty though the principal is not.—Where a child committed theft and was discharged under s. 83, this fact was held to be no bar to the conviction of the person who received the stolen property from the child under this section.³

Joint possession.—A person having a joint possession with the thief may be convicted as a receiver.⁴

Where property is found in a house in the possession of more than one person, mere discovery of any stolen property in that house is not in itself sufficient to prove that the possession was of any of those persons.⁵

Joint family possession.—Where stolen property is found in a house occupied by several persons, it is not enough to shew that the property was found in the house, to convict a member of the family who might have had nothing to do with bringing or keeping it there.⁶ The manager of a joint Hindu family is prima facie stolen property. If knowledge of the presence in the house of the stolen property is established against the managing member, he must, as the house-master, be presumed to have been in possession of it.¹⁰

In a house occupied by a joint family including several male and female members certain stolen property was found in a locked box, the key of which was in the possession of the wife of one of the men who, however, was not in the house. The husband was convicted under this section. It was held that it cannot be presumed that in every case of this kind the possession of the wife is per se the possession of the husband, and as there was nothing to connect the husband with the possession beyond the mere fact that he was the husband of the woman who had the key of the box, the conclusion that he was in possession of the property was not justified.¹¹

Husband and wife.—English law.—Upon a joint charge against husband and wife of receiving stolen goods the wife cannot properly be convicted if the husband

¹ De Silva, (1873) 5 N. W. P. 120. See

373 ⁴ Thomas Smith, (1855) 24 L. J. (M. C.) 135.

⁵ Muhammad Ali Shet, (1908) 19 M. L. J.

301, 4 M. L. T. 415

⁶ Bashir Ahmad Khan, (1919) 22 O. C. 256,

2 U. P. L. R. 12.

⁷ Musai Kamat, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 431.

¹⁰ Budh Lal, (1907) 29 All. 598; Sangam Lal, sup., p. 131.

¹¹ Khashi Ram, (1922) 20 A. L. J. R. 162; Qaim Din, (1925) 7 L. L. J. 223, 26 P. L. R. 522.

is.¹ If the wife has voluntarily committed theft, the husband can be convicted of receiving stolen property from the wife.² But if the wife has received stolen goods without the control or knowledge of and apart from her husband, the husband cannot be held guilty of receiving even though he afterwards adopts his wife's receipt.³ Bare acquiescence in the receipt of stolen property is not the adoption of receipt, so as to constitute receiving.⁴ A wife, in the absence of her husband, and without his knowledge, received stolen goods, and paid money on account of them. The thief and the husband afterwards met. The latter then learnt that the goods were stolen, he had agreed on the price which he was to pay for them, and paid the balance to the thief. It was held that the husband might be convicted of receiving the goods knowing them to be stolen.⁵

A husband and wife were jointly indicted for receiving stolen goods. There was evidence that the wife had received part of the stolen property from one of the thieves; there was no evidence that the husband was present at the time, and there was no evidence that the wife was acting under his compulsion. It was held that the wife was properly convicted of receiving stolen goods.⁶

A wife, though she may have committed adultery, cannot steal her husband's goods; and therefore the adulterer, receiving from her the goods which she has taken from her husband, cannot be guilty of receiving stolen goods. The receiver, however, may be indicted for common law misdemeanour.⁷

'Stolen property.'—Property into or for which the stolen property has been converted or exchanged is not stolen property.⁸ Hence, money obtained upon forged money-orders⁹; or an ingot obtained by melting stolen jewellery¹⁰ is not stolen property.

2. 'Knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property.'—The offence made punishable is not the receiving of stolen property from any particular person, but the receiving of such property knowing it to be stolen. Mere suspicion is not enough.¹¹ A person is not guilty of this offence although at the time of receiving the property he erroneously believes it to be stolen¹²; or where the articles are not of an unusual character but are such as easily pass from hand to hand.¹³

"A person must be held to have 'reason to believe' property to be stolen within the meaning of s. 411... when the circumstances are such that a reasonable man would be led by a chain of probable reasoning to the conclusion or inference that the property he was asked to deal with was stolen property, although the circumstances may fall short of carrying absolute conviction to his mind on the point."¹⁴ See also s. 26, supra, as to the meaning of 'reason to believe.'

It is immaterial whether the receiver knows or not who stole them. The section does not apply to the actual thief. The class of persons against whom it is directed is a class to whom these alternative words apply, "knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property."¹⁵

Servant receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen is guilty.—Where A, knowing that goods were stolen, directed B, his servant, to receive them into his premises, and B, in pursuance of that direction, afterwards received them in A's absence, B knowing that they had been stolen, they were jointly indicted for receiving them.¹⁶

¹ Eliza Archer, (1826) 1 Mood. 143.

² M'Atthey, (1862) 9 Cox 251.

³ William Dring, (1857) Dears. & B. 328.

⁴ James Orris, (1898) 1 Cr. App. R. 199.

⁵ Woodward, (1862) 31 L. J. (M. C.) 91.

⁶ Mary Baines, (1900) 19 Cox 524.

⁷ Kenny, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 307; Streeter, (1900) 2 Q. B. 601.

⁸ Subba Chand, (1881) P. R. No. 39 of 1881.

⁹ Monmohun Roy, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.) 33.

¹⁰ Subba Chand, sup.

¹¹ Kannappa Naicker, [1913] M. W. N. 696.

¹² Issup, (1858) Cr. R. No. 41 of 1858, Unrep. Cr. C. 389.

¹³ Ranaji, (1892) Cr. R. No. 13 of 1892, Unrep. Cr. C. 524.

¹⁴ Per Battigan, J., in Gulbad Shah, (1889) P. R. No. 37 of 1888.

¹⁵ Jokri, (1901) 23 All. 266.

¹⁶ Parr, (1841) 2 Mood. & Rob. 346.

Amendment.—After the expression 'in respect of which' there were the words 'the offence of.' But the word 'the' was repealed by Act XII of 1891; and the words 'offence of,' by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9, as a result of the decision in Moorga Chetty's case.¹

The words 'whether the transfer, etc., British India' were, as heretofore said, inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove—

(1) That the property in question is stolen property.²

The goods received must be the identical goods which were stolen, and not something for which they had been sold or exchanged.³ The finding must be that the accused received the very property stolen, not property like it.⁴ If it is manifestly impossible to recognize stolen property no conviction could be made.⁵

house cereal with those found.⁶

(2) That the accused received or retained such property.

There must be some proof that some person other than the accused had possession of the property before the accused got possession of it.⁷

Where property sufficiently identified to be the property of one person is found to be in the possession of another person without leave or license or any legal permission of the owner, it is for the party in whose possession the property is found duly to account for its possession, and, unless he can do so, a jury might fairly infer in such circumstances that it was with a guilty knowledge that the prisoner took that which he knew to be not his own.⁸ But possession of property which has been stolen from the owner is generally at best only evidence of theft when the date of the theft is so recent as to make it reasonable to presume, in the absence of explanation, that the person in whose possession the property is found must have obtained the possession by stealing.⁹ Mere recent possession of stolen property is not alone sufficient, as such possession is in general evidence of stealing and not of receiving.¹⁰ The possession of stolen goods by the accused must be possession soon after the theft or the stolen goods must have been 'recently' stolen.¹¹ Possession of stolen goods a few months after theft raises no presumption that the possessor knew or had reason to believe the goods to be stolen.¹² If the possession is not a recent possession the accused ought not to be called upon to explain how his possession was acquired. The question of what is, or what is not, recent possession is to be considered with reference to the nature of the article stolen.¹³ Whether a presumption of theft or of receipt of stolen property should be drawn would depend on the circumstances, the length of time that has elapsed after the theft, how much of stolen property is found in the possession of the person in question, the circumstances which led to the recovery and other facts connected

¹ (1881) 5 Bom. 338, v. n.

² Buldeo Pershad, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 187; Jahan Chandra Chandra, (1893) 21 Cal. 328; Burke, (1884) 6 All. 224; Mataya, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 416.

³ Nubla Chand, (1881) P. R. No. 39 of 1881.

⁴ Dava Chela, (1886) Cr. R. No. of 1868, Unrep. Cr. C. 227.

⁵ Lal, (1912) P. L. R. No. 194 of 1912, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 35 of 1912.

⁶ Shauik Sharafat, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 727.

⁷ Jahan Mucki, (1888) 15 Cal. 511; Shirvan, (1872) Unrep. Cr. C. 94. See Nga Kyewet, (1900) 1 L. R. R. 39, where this rule, which is based on English precedents, is not followed.

⁸ Shuruffooddeen, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 26;

Kamjoo Karmakar, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 10;

Hari Ramji, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R. 27.

⁹ Dammashye, (1878) 11 W. R. 27.

¹⁰ Shuruffooddeen, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 26;

Kamjoo Karmakar, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 10;

Hari Ramji, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R. 27.

¹¹ Dammashye, (1878) 11 W. R. 27.

¹² Shuruffooddeen, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 26;

Kamjoo Karmakar, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 10;

Hari Ramji, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R. 27.

¹³ Shuruffooddeen, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 26;

Kamjoo Karmakar, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 10;

Hari Ramji, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R. 27.

¹⁴ Shuruffooddeen, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 26;

Kamjoo Karmakar, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 10;

Hari Ramji, (1906) 9 Bom. L. R. 27.

with the discovery of the property.¹ It is a presumption of fact, and not an implication of law, from evidence of recent possession of stolen property unaccounted for, whether the offence of stealing, or of receiving, has been committed. Where the accused was found in the recent possession of some stolen sheep, of which he could give no satisfactory account, and it might reasonably be inferred from the circumstances that he did not steal them himself, it was held there was evidence for the jury that he received them knowing them to have been stolen.² Where a stolen horse was found in the possession of the accused six months after it was lost, and there was no other evidence against the accused, the accused was not called upon for his defence as the possession was not sufficiently recent.³ Where ordinary keys of the value of Rs. 2-8-0 were found in the possession of a man of substance more than three months after the theft, it was held that having regard to the length of time there was no presumption that the accused knew or had reason to believe the property to be stolen. Possession of stolen goods must be possession soon after the theft or the stolen goods must have been recently stolen.⁴ Where the accused was found in possession of stolen property two months after the theft was committed, and gave no account of how he became possessed of it, but denied that he was ever in possession of any of the articles stolen, it was held that the accused should be convicted under this section and not under s. 379.⁵ Where valuable jewellery which was stolen or otherwise lost to the owner is found under circumstances of grave suspicion in the possession of the accused about two years after the theft or loss, and the accused refuses to disclose the name of the person from whom he received the same or to give the particulars as to the original of his possession, the Court is entitled to draw an inference of guilty knowledge on the part of the accused. And if there is no evidence as to when he first acquired such possession this section applies.⁶ Where the accused, the father-in-law of one S, who was the cousin of the thief, was found in possession of the stolen property three days after the theft and he disposed of it in a somewhat suspicious manner, it was held that the circumstances, though they formed grounds for grave suspicions against the accused, did not furnish conclusive evidence against him for his conviction under this section.⁷

Recognition of things not before the eyes of deposing witnesses is not evidence against a person accused of having been in possession of those things.⁸

(3) That he did so dishonestly.⁹ Where a person is found in possession of stolen property dishonest retention on his part must be proved. The mere fact that his conduct is suspicious is not sufficient to repose a conviction upon.¹⁰

In considering whether the possession of stolen goods raises a presumption of dishonest receipt of stolen property, the attention of the jury should be drawn to the necessity of satisfying themselves that the possession is clearly traced to the accused.¹¹

(4) That he knew or had reason to believe that the property was stolen property.¹²

¹ Corle Kandungadu, [1912] M. W. N. 97.

² Langmead, (1864) 9 Cox 464; McMahon, (1875) 13 Cox 275.

³ Cooper, (1852) 3 C. & K. 318. See to the same effect, Ram Chandra Saha v. Hajj Meah Hajj Abdullah, (1913) 17 C. W. N. 1129, where the Court refused even to issue process against a shroff in whose possession a Government currency-note of the value of Rs. 1,000 was traced seven months after its loss. See also Fellai Ocha Thetan, [1912] M. W. N. 362, 11 M. L. T. 186; Mangaya Shah, (1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 41 of 1915, P. L. R. No. 62 of 1915.

⁴ Joennullah Bepari, (1918) 22 C. W. N.

597.

⁵ Madappa Tetan, (1888) 1 Weir 471.

⁶ Ram Pershad, (1924) 2 Rang 80.

⁷ Asvini Kumar Roy, (1905) 10 C. W. N. 219.

⁸ Mussamut Joonnee, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 16.

⁹ Burke, (1884) 0 All. 224.

¹⁰ Ghansham Das, (1925) 26 P. L. R. 165.

¹¹ Malhari, (1882) 6 Bom. 731.

¹² Doyal Shilgalar, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 87; Meer Yar Ali, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 70; Dus-sorut Dass, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 63; Rajo Huri, (1873) 19 W. R. (Cr.) 37.

As to the proof of the receiver's guilty knowledge, from the caution necessary in this sort of traffic, it must often happen that no express disclosure is made to him and yet that he knows the property to have been stolen as well as if he had actually witnessed the theft. In this, as in other cases, it is sufficient if circumstances are proved, which, to persons of ordinary understanding in the situation of the accused person, must have led to the conclusion that the property was stolen or otherwise dishonestly acquired. Thus, if it is shewn, that the accused received large quantities of money, ornaments, bundles of clothes of various kinds or moveables of any sort from persons destitute of property and without any apparent lawful means of acquiring it, and especially if it is proved that the property was brought at untimely hours and under circumstances of evident concealment, it may well be concluded that it was received with a full understanding of the guilty mode by which it has been acquired. And this will be still further confirmed, if it appears that the property was purchased for a sum far below its real value, or was concealed in places not usually employed for keeping such property, or if the marks on it are effaced, or if false or inconsistent stories are told as to the mode of its acquisition. Another circumstance from which such guilty knowledge may be inferred is that the property has been received from a notorious thief or one from whom stolen property has on previous occasions been received.¹ Where a question of value of the property stolen is to arise there must be direct evidence of value.²

Where the circumstances do not raise the presumption that a person received the property knowing it to be stolen, the accused cannot be convicted of this offence merely because he is in possession of the property and does not account for his possession.³ The Court must be satisfied that the property was stolen by some other person to the knowledge of the accused and there should be some evidence to shew that such was the case.⁴ The stealing by the other person must be proved, otherwise the receiver must be acquitted.⁵

The mere fact that a person points out a place where stolen property is concealed, if the place is not his own, is not sufficient to entitle the Court to find that the person who pointed out had received it, or retained it, knowing it to be stolen. There must be some evidence which suggests that the accused himself concealed the article in the place where it was found.⁶

A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. It is proved that he was in possession of a particular stolen article. The fact that at the same time he was in possession of many other stolen articles is relevant, as tending to shew that he knew each and all of the articles, of which he was in possession, to be stolen.⁷ The fact of stolen property being found concealed in a man's house would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he knew the property to be stolen property, but it would not be sufficient to shew that it had been acquired by dacoity,⁸ or some such other offence.

On an indictment against A for stealing, and B for receiving stolen goods, evidence was given that on various former occasions portions of the commodity stolen had been missed, and the accused had, after such occasions, been found selling such commodity; and that on the last occasion it was part of what was stolen. It was held that this was sufficient to fix the receiver with a guilty knowledge.⁹

¹ M. & M. 373.

² Mahboob, (1920) 2 U. P. L. R. 113

³ Burke, (1884) 6 All. 224; Bharos, (1923)

21 A. L. J. R. 836, Yasin Khan, (1923) 19

N. L. R. 176.

⁴ Pandey, (1924) C. C. P. 300

(Cr.) No. 1 of 1906; Pir Balshah, (1911) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 29 of 1912; Mehru, (1913) P. L. R. No. 315 of 1913, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 32 of 1913; Barkat Ali, (1916) P. R. No. 1 of 1917.

⁵ Illustration (a) to s. 14, Indian Evidence Act.

⁶ Malkhari, (1882) 6 Bom. 731.

⁷ William Nicholls, (1858) 1 F. & F. 51.

Upon the trial of a prisoner for feloniously receiving stolen property, a list of the stolen articles which the prisoner, who was a marine store-dealer, had bought, was received in evidence in order to shew that he had bought at an undervalue. The circumstances under which the list was written were as follows: A Police Constable asked the prisoner to consider when he had bought the stolen property, to which the prisoner replied that his wife should make out a list of it, and on the next day the prisoner's wife in her husband's hearing said, "this is a list of what we bought and what we gave for them." On the question whether the list was properly admitted in evidence, it was held that it was clearly admissible in evidence.¹

A principal felon is a competent witness against an accessory for receiving stolen property.² An admission of his guilt, made by the thief while in custody, in the presence of the receiver, is evidence against the receiver.³ But it is unsafe to convict a party as receiver on the evidence of the thief, unless it is confirmed.⁴ The mere fact that stolen goods were found on the prisoner's premises is not sufficient to confirm the evidence of the thief.⁵

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily if the property is not worth more than Rs. 50.

A Magistrate cannot assume jurisdiction to try an offence under this section, in a summary form, unless he satisfies himself that the property in respect of which he is trying the accused is less than Rs. 50 in value, and he must record the fact in the form prescribed in s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Where there is no such reference in the record of the case, the conviction is bad.⁶

Venue.—A charge of receiving or retaining stolen goods may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the goods were stolen, or by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained.⁷

Property belonging to different owners.—Where a person was found in possession of stolen property, identified as belonging to different owners, but it did appear that he had received such property at different times, it was held that such person could not properly be tried and convicted under this section separately in respect of the property identified by each owner.⁸

Separate trials in respect of different items of stolen property.—In the house belonging to two brothers, three items of stolen property were discovered, namely, a quantity of unused postage stamps, some carpets and some buckets and pads. There was no evidence to shew that the stamps and carpets had been received by the brothers on different dates. On a charge of dishonestly retaining the carpets, one brother was acquitted and the other convicted. Proceedings against them were also instituted in respect of dishonest retention of the stamps. The accused pleaded that as the stamps had been discovered at their house on the same date and at the same place as the carpets only one offence in respect of these two items of property had been committed and that as they had already been tried in respect of the carpets they could not be tried in respect of the stamps. It was held that they could not be so tried.⁹

Where the property stolen formed the contents of a single parcel, a single offence in respect of all the articles contained in the parcel and not separate offences in respect of the different articles should be treated as the basis of the conviction.¹⁰

¹ Malloy, (1884) 3 Q. B. D. 33.

² William Haslam, (1786) 1 Leach 418.

³ Moulton Cox, (1858) 1 F. & F. 90.

⁴ Robinson, (1864) 4 F. & F. 43.

⁵ Pratt, (1865) 4 F. & F. 315.

⁶ Brij Nandan Panday, (1922) 6 P. L. T.

⁷ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 180, III. (4).

⁸ Makhan, (1893) 15 All. 317; Sheo Charan, (1923) 45 All. 485; Ganesh Sahu, (1923) Cal. 594; Maitu, O. S. C. 167.

⁹ Bishun Singh, (1924) 3 Pat. 603.

¹⁰ Ram Pershad, (1924) 2 Rang. 20.

Joinder of charges.—Where a person was tried for receiving stolen property in conjunction with others who were tried for committing theft, it was held that the joinder of charges was illegal, the transactions not being the same.¹

Joint trial.—Different persons, charged with separately retaining different articles of stolen property, though proceeds of the same theft, cannot be tried together, as the offences charged cannot be said to have been committed in the same transaction.²

Where part of stolen property was found in the possession of one person and another part in the possession of another, and it was proved that both had been acting in concert and had joint control over the property, it was held that their joint trial was not illegal.³

A person committing theft or breach of trust is not liable as a receiver.—A person cannot be convicted under this section in respect of property for which he himself has been convicted.⁴ The theft and taking and retention of stolen goods form one and the same offence, and cannot be punished separately.⁵ When the chief offence charged and proved by the evidence is theft, the fact of the stolen property being found in the possession of the offender should be considered as a portion of the evidence by which the chief offence is proved; and the verdict of 'not guilty' should be entered upon the charge of dishonestly receiving or retaining such property.⁶

Direction to jury.—It is no misdirection for a Judge to tell the jury that, if the accused could not prove how he became possessed of certain articles, it was their duty to convict him, for the presumption in such a case was legally valid that he knew that the property had been unlawfully acquired.⁷ The Sessions Judge should direct the jury to find (1) whether the property was stolen, (2) whether it was dishonestly retained, and (3) whether the accused knew or had reason to believe the same to be stolen property.⁸

Charge.—The charge should state that the articles found in possession of the accused were the property of a certain person, who was the owner thereof.⁹ It should also set forth that the accused knew or had reason to believe that the property he received was stolen property, for without this knowledge or belief, the offence is not complete.¹⁰

The charge should be as follows —

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows —

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly received (or retained) stolen property, to wit—, belonging to one AB, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words) on the said charge

¹ Bishnu Banwar, (1896) 1 C. W. N. 35, Oh! Bhusan Adhikari, (1918) 46 Cal. 741; Singhara, (1903) P. L. R. No. 149 of 1903.

² Abdul Majid, (1906) 33 Cal. 1256, Oh! Bhusan Adhikari, sup.; Jethalal Harkchand, (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 527, 29 Bom. 449.

³ Jadunandan Prasad, (1916) 2 P. L. W. 316; Musai Kamat, (1920) 1 P. L. T. 431.

⁴ Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

⁵ Supra, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312; Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

⁶ Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

⁷ Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

⁸ Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

⁹ Shunkur, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 312.

¹⁰ (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr. L.) 11.

Punishment.—In general a sentence of fine in the case of a receiver of stolen property is an improper and a futile sentence, inasmuch as the fine is a mere temporary diminution of the receiver's illegitimate profits.¹

412. Whoever dishonestly¹ receives or retains² any stolen property³ the possession⁴ whereof he knows or has reason to believe⁵ to have been transferred by the commission of dacoity,⁶ or dishonestly receives from a person, whom he knows or has reason to believe to belong or to have belonged to a gang of dacoits, property which he knows or has reason to believe to have been stolen, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

The object of this section is to stamp out the offence of dacoity which was very common when the Code was enacted.

This section refers to persons other than the actual dacoits. It implies receipt from another person or an act by one not himself the dacoit.² The receiver is punishable under it as severely as those who commit dacoity.

1. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 24, supra.

2. 'Receives or retains.'—See s. 411, supra. Such receipt or retention must have taken place in British India to give jurisdiction to Courts. Certain persons, who were not proved to be British subjects, were found in possession, in a Native State, of property, the subject of a dacoity committed in British India. They were not proved to have taken part in the dacoity, and there was no evidence that they had received or retained any stolen property in British India. They were convicted of offences punishable under this section. It was held that no offence was proved to have been committed within the jurisdiction of a British Court.³

3. 'Stolen property.'—See s. 410, supra.

4. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

5. 'Reason to believe.'—See s. 26, supra.

6. 'Dacoity.'—See s. 391, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question was stolen property.⁴

(2) That the possession of such property was transferred by the commission of dacoity.

(3) property.

(4)
(5) That he knew or had reason to believe the circumstances stated in (2).⁶

Or prove (1) that the property in question was stolen property.

(2) That the accused received it.

(3) That he received it from a person who belonged to or had belonged to a gang of dacoits.

¹ Per Batchelor, J., in Isarising, Cr. Reference No. 97 of 1915, decided on 16th November 1915.

² Bakiru, (1886) Unrep. Cr. C. 312, Cr. R. No. 65 of 1886.

³ Kirpal Singh, (1887) 9 All. 523; Mukhamad Hussain, (1920) 2 L. L. J. 348.

⁴ Vide s. 410, supra.

⁵ Vide s. 24, supra.

⁶ Jogeshur Bagdee, (1807) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 73, [109]; Bishoo Manjee, (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr.) 16; Samiruddin, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 25; Daji Mahadhu, (1895) Cr. R. No. 19 of 1895, Unrep. Cr. C. 766.

(4) That he did as in (3) dishonestly.

(5) That he knew or had reason to believe that the person from whom he received the property belonged to or had belonged to a gang of dacoits.

(6) That he knew or had reason to believe that the property was stolen property.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Where the accused is apprehended soon after a dacoity with part of the plunder in his possession, there is a good ground for charging him with the dacoity as with having received or retained with guilty knowledge, and he ought to be charged in the alternative form.¹ But when stolen property is found in the possession of dacoits the offence of 'knowingly having it in possession' is to be considered included in the original one of dacoity, unless there are circumstances clearly separating the crime from the other, e.g., length of time or distance.² Separate convictions and sentences under ss. 395 and 412 with respect to the same property are, therefore, obviously improper.³

Sentence.—A sentence of transportation under this section and 59 cannot exceed ten years.⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly received [or retained] stolen property, to wit—, belonging to one AB, knowing or having reason to believe that the possession of the same had been transferred by the commission of dacoity; and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 412 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

413. Whoever habitually receives or deals in property which he knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section punishes severely the common receiver or professional dealer in stolen property. One who casually receives stolen property is punished under the two preceding sections according to the taint attaching to the property.

In order to support a conviction of being an habitual receiver of stolen property, it must be shown that the property was received on different occasions and on different dates. A person cannot be said to be an habitual receiver of stolen goods who may receive the proceeds of a number of different robberies from a number of different thieves on the same day.⁵ Because the very essence of the offence is the habitual, that is to say, constant receipt of or dealing in goods which the prisoner knew or had reason to believe to be stolen

¹ Motie Jolaha, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 66, Cassey Mul, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

² Abdul Hossein, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 48; Shahnubut Sheikh, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 42.

³ Bakir, (1886) Cr. R. No. 65 of 1886,

Unrep. Cr. C. 312.

⁴ Mohanundo Bhundy, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 16.

⁵ Baburam Kansari, (1891) 19 Cal. 190.

Punishment.—In general a sentence of fine in the case of a receiver of stolen property is an improper and a futile sentence, inasmuch as the fine is a mere temporary diminution of the receiver's illegitimate profits.¹

412. Whoever dishonestly² receives or retains³ any stolen property⁴ the possession⁵ whereof he knows or has reason to believe⁶ to have been transferred by the commission of dacoity,⁶ or dishonestly receives from a person, whom he knows or has reason to believe to belong or to have belonged to a gang of dacoits, property which he knows or has reason to believe to have been stolen, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

The object of this section is to stamp out the offence of dacoity which was very common when the Code was enacted.

This section refers to persons other than the actual dacoits. It implies receipt from another person or an act by one not himself the dacoit.² The receiver is punishable under it as severely as those who commit dacoity.

1. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 24, supra.

2. 'Receives or retains.'—See s. 411, supra. Such receipt or retention must have taken place in British India to give jurisdiction to Courts. Certain persons, who were not proved to be British subjects, were found in possession, in a Native State, of property, the subject of a dacoity committed in British India. They were not proved to have taken part in the dacoity, and there was no evidence that they had received or retained any stolen property in British India. They were convicted of offences punishable under this section. It was held that no offence was proved to have been committed within the jurisdiction of a British Court.³

3. 'Stolen property.'—See s. 410, supra.

4. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

5. 'Reason to believe.'—See s. 26, supra.

6. 'Dacoity.'—See s. 391, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question was stolen property.⁴

(2) That the possession of such property was transferred by the commission of dacoity.

(3) That the accused received or retained such stolen property.

(4) That he did as in (3) dishonestly.⁵

(5) That he knew or had reason to believe the circumstances stated in (2).⁶

Or prove (1) that the property in question was stolen property.

(2) That the accused received it.

(3) That he received it from a person who belonged to or had belonged to a gang of dacoits.

¹ Per Batchelor, J., in Isarising, Cr. Reference No. 97 of 1915, decided on 16th November 1915.

² Bakiru, (1886) Unrep. Cr. C. 312, Cr. R. No. 65 of 1886.

³ Kirpal Singh, (1887) 9 All. 523; Muhammad Hussain, (1920) 2 L. L. J. 348.

⁴ Ide s. 410, sup.

⁵ Ide s. 24, sup.

⁶ Jogeshur Bagde, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 73, [109]; Bishoo Manjee, (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr.) 16; Samiruddin, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 25; Daji Mahadhu, (1895) Cr. R. No. 19 of 1895, Unrep. Cr. C. 756.

(4) That he did as in (3) dishonestly.

(5) That he knew or had reason to believe that the person from whom he received the property belonged to or had belonged to a gang of dacoits.

(6) That he knew or had reason to believe that the property was stolen property.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Where the accused is apprehended soon after a dacoity with part of the plunder in his possession, there is a good ground for charging him with the dacoity as with having received or retained with guilty knowledge, and he ought to be charged in the alternative form.¹ But when stolen property is found in the possession of dacoits the offence of 'knowingly having it in possession' is to be considered included in the original one of dacoity, unless there are circumstances clearly separating the crime from the other, e.g., length of time or distance.² Separate convictions and sentences under ss. 395 and 412 with respect to the same property are, therefore, obviously improper.³

Sentence.—A sentence of transportation under this section and 59 cannot exceed ten years.⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly received [or retained] stolen property, to wit—, belonging to one AB, knowing or having reason to believe that the possession of the same had been transferred by the commission of dacoity; and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 412 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

413. Whoever habitually receives or deals in property which he knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section punishes severely the common receiver or professional dealer in stolen property. One who casually receives stolen property is punished under the two preceding sections according to the taint attaching to the property.

In order to support a conviction of being an habitual receiver of stolen property, it must be shown that the property was received on different occasions and on different dates. A person cannot be said to be an habitual receiver of stolen goods who may receive the proceeds of a number of different robberies from a number of different thieves on the same day.⁵ Because the very essence of the offence is the habitual, that is to say, constant receipt of or dealing in goods which the prisoner knew or had reason to believe to be stolen.

¹ Motee Jolaha, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 66; Cassy Mul, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

Unrep. Cr. C. 312.

⁴ Mohanundo Bhundary, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 16.

² Abool Hossein, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 48; Shahabut Sheikh, (1870) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 42.

⁵ Baburam Kansari, (1891) 19 Cal. 190.

³ Bahwan, (1886) Cr. R. No. 65 of 1886.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question is stolen property.

(2) That the accused received it or dealt in it.

(3) That he did so habitually.

(4) That he did so knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen property.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Trial for an offence under ss. 411 and 413.—A prisoner cannot be tried at the same trial for receiving or retaining (s. 411), and habitually receiving or dealing (s. 413) in stolen property. The proper course is to try the accused first for the offence under s. 411, and, if he is convicted, to try him under s. 413, putting in evidence the previous conviction under s. 411, and proving the finding of the rest of the property in respect of which no separate charge under s. 411 could be made or tried by reason of the provisions of s. 453 of the Criminal Procedure Code.¹

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, were a habitual receiver or dealer in property, which you knew (or had reason to believe) to be stolen property and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 413 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

414. Whoever voluntarily assists in concealing or disposing of or making away with property¹ which he knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Assisting in concealment of stolen property.

COMMENT.

This section punishes those acts of receiving or retaining stolen property which do not come under the purview of ss. 411, 412 and 413.

Scope.—This section is intended to apply to cases where there has not been such a possession as would support an indictment against the party as a receiver, under s. 411. "When a person is shown to stand in such a relation to stolen property as falls short of possession by him of such property, his manner of dealing with the property" disposing of or making away with Bombay High Court in a case he s' no actual receipt of the prop. and has held that a person receiving or disposing of them,⁴ iling or dis-

Ingredients.—This section requires two things—

1. Voluntary assistance in concealing or disposing of or making away with property.

2. Knowledge or reason to believe that such property is stolen property.

1. 'Voluntarily assists in concealing or disposing of... property.'—The words 'disposing of' must be interpreted in the light of the words they are associated with viz., 'concealing' and 'making away with,' and cannot be taken to include restoring

¹ Uttom Koondoo, (1882) 8 Cal. 634.

² Per Floueden, J., in Khona, (1879) P. R. No. 31 of 1879.

³ Aliu Kala, (1891) Unrep. Cr. C. 533, Cr. R. No. 28 of 1891; (1868) 4 M. H. C. App. 13; Subha Chand, (1881) P. R. No. 39 of 1881.

⁴ Abdul Gani, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1374.

to the owners. Where the petitioner was convicted of having voluntarily assisted in concealing stolen railway pins in a certain person's house and field, with a view to having such innocent person punished as an offender, it was held that the Magistrate punishing the accused for the two separate offences of concealing stolen property under s. 193 and receiving stolen property under s. 412, was in a stage of a judicial proceeding.

section.¹ Where the accused was found to have restored to the owners jewellery believed to have been stolen by his son, and then to save his son from punishment denied all knowledge of the matter, and on this ground was convicted under this section, it was held that the accused had committed no offence.²

As to the meaning of 'voluntarily', see s. 39, supra.

2. 'Knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property.'—The person voluntarily assisting in concealing or disposing of or making away with property must have a definite knowledge that such property was stolen property.

"The word 'believe'... is a very much stronger word than 'suspect,' and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property." "It was not sufficient (in such a case) to show that the accused was careless or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient inquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired."³ See also s. 26, supra, as to the meaning of 'reason to believe.'

It is not necessary to establish that the property was the subject-matter of any particular theft; but it must be shown that it was the subject-matter of some theft or other. The essence of this section is the concealment of stolen property which the accused knew or had reason to believe to be stolen property. If, therefore, an accused thinking that an article, which is in his possession, is stolen property, tries to conceal that property, when as a matter of fact it is not stolen property at all but property honestly come by, he does not commit an offence under this section. The fact that the property dealt with is stolen property may in some instances be inferred indirectly from circumstantial evidence as from the way in which it is dealt with by the party dealing with it, but the circumstances must be such as would justify the conclusion that the property is actually stolen property.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question is stolen property.⁵

(2) That the accused assisted in concealing, or disposing of, or making away with, such property.

This section does not impose on the prosecution the requirement that it should in all cases trace the owners of the property stolen. All that is needed is to show that the accused voluntarily assisted in concealing or disposing of property which he had reason to believe to be stolen property.⁶

(3) That he did as in (2) voluntarily.

(4) That he knew or had reason to believe that the property was stolen property.⁷

When persons are charged with assisting in concealing or disposing of stolen property, it is not necessary to prove that the property was stolen property at the time it was concealed or disposed of, but it is necessary to prove that it was stolen property at the time it was received by the accused.

taken into consideration.⁸ An accused person's merely pointing out the place where some of the stolen property is recovered and his making an admission before the police of having concealed it there, which admission is not admissible in

¹ Rameshar Rai, (1877) 1 All. 379.

² Vide s. 410.

³ See Vide Rameshar Rai, (1877) 1 All. 379. aji, (1880)
annappa

⁴ Budhan Khan Inayat Khan, (1912) 14 Bom. L.R. 893, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 189, Abdul Gani, (1925) 27 Bom. L.R. 1373.

⁵ Rameshar Rai, sup.

⁶ Samachari, (1923) 45 M. L. J. 728

⁷ Harishankar Fakirbhat, (1865) 2 B.H.Q. 120.

evidence, are not sufficient for convicting him under this section in the absence of any other independent proof connecting him with the commission of the crime.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily if property is not worth more than Rs. 50.

The same person cannot be properly convicted for theft and for attempting to conceal the stolen property² or for theft and for dishonestly disposing of the same property.³

Charge.—I (name and office of the Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, voluntarily assisted in concealing (or disposing of, or making away with) property, to wit—, which you knew (or had reason to believe) to be stolen property, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 414 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Sentence.—Where an accused is convicted of an offence under ss. 411 and 414, it is not permissible to pass on him separate and consecutive sentences under each head of the charges, but in such a case only one sentence must be passed on him for both offences.⁴ The charges under these sections should ordinarily be made alternatively, and not cumulatively.⁵

Of Cheating.

415. Whoever, by deceiving any person,¹ fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property,² or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property,³ is said to “cheat.”

Explanation.—A dishonest concealment of facts is a deception within the meaning of this section.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, by falsely pretending to be in the Civil Service, intentionally deceives Z, and thus dishonestly induces Z to let him have on credit goods for which he does not mean to pay. A cheats.

(b) A, by putting a counterfeit mark on an article, intentionally deceives Z into a belief that this article was made by a certain celebrated manufacturer, and thus dishonestly induces Z to buy and pay for the article. A cheats.

(c) A, by exhibiting to Z a false sample of an article, intentionally deceives Z into believing that the article corresponds with the sample, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to buy and pay for the article. A cheats.

(d) A, by tendering in payment for an article a bill on a house with which A keeps no money, and by which A expects that the bill will be dishonoured, intentionally deceives Z, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to deliver the article, intending not to pay for it. A cheats.

¹ Kula Singh, (1908) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 21 of 1909.

² Zinda, (1896) P. R. No. 15 of 1896.

³ Nga Po Kyau, (1885) S. J. L. B. 331.

⁴ Sakharam, (1880) Cr. R. No. 8 of 1880, Unrep. Cr. C. 149; Ala Kala, (1891) Cr. R. No. 28 of 1891, Unrep. Cr. C. 553.

⁵ Yeshwant, (1903) 10 Bom. L. R. J. 125.

(e) A, by pledging as diamonds articles which he knows are not diamonds, intentionally deceives Z, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend money. A cheats.

(f) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to repay any money that Z may lend to him and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend him money, A not intending to repay it. A cheats.

(g) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to deliver to Z a certain quantity of indigo plant which he does not intend to deliver, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to advance money upon the faith of such delivery, A cheats; but if A, at the time of obtaining the money, intends to deliver the indigo plant, and afterwards breaks his contract and does not deliver it, he does not cheat, but is liable only to a civil action for breach of contract.

(h) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A has performed A's part of a contract made with Z, which he has not performed, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to pay money. A cheats.

(i) A sells and conveys an estate to B. A, knowing that in consequence of such sale he has no right to the property, sells or mortgages the same to Z, without disclosing the fact of the previous sale and conveyance to B, and receives the purchase or mortgage money from Z. A cheats.

COMMENT.

In all the foregoing offences relating to property the offender merely got possession of the thing in question, but in the case of cheating he obtains possession plus property in it.

The authors of the Code say: "We propose to make it cheating to obtain property by deception in all cases where the property is fraudulently obtained; that is to say, in all cases where the intention of the person who has by deceit obtained the property was to cause a distribution of property which the law pronounces to be a wrongful distribution, and in no other case whatever. However immoral a deception may be, we do not consider it as an offence against the rights of property if its object is only to cause a distribution of property which the law recognizes as rightful..."

"We propose to punish as guilty of cheating a man who, by false representations, obtains a loan of money, not meaning to repay it; a man who, by false representations, obtains an advance of money, not meaning to perform the service or to deliver the article for which the advance is given; a man who, by falsely pretending to have performed work for which he was hired, obtains pay to which he is not entitled.

"In all these cases there is deception. In all, the deceiver's object is fraudulent. He intends in all these cases to acquire or retain wrongful possession of that to which some other person has a better claim, and which that other person is entitled to recover by law. In all these cases, therefore, the object has been wrongful gain, attended with wrongful loss. In all, therefore, there has, according to our definition, been cheating."¹

"In the definition of cheating... there are set forth two separate classes of acts which the person deceived may be induced to do. In the first place he may be induced to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property. In order to constitute the offence of cheating the person who induces another to do this class of acts must fraudulently or dishonestly induce the person deceived to do that kind of act. The second class of acts set forth in the section is the doing or omitting to do anything which the person deceived would not do or omit to do if he were not so deceived. In order to constitute the offence of cheating with regard to this class of acts the person who induces another to do them must intentionally induce him to do them. In the first class of cases the inducing must be fraudulent or dishonest. In the second class of acts the inducing must be intentional."¹

¹ Note N, pp. 164, 165.

English law.—Whosoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of misdemeanour.² There are two vital points in which the English law differs from the Code :—

(1) A promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself a cheating.³ Under the Code this will amount to cheating : see ill. (f) and (g).

(2) The object of the accused must be to obtain any chattel, money, or valuable security. The definition of cheating as given in this section is much wider and includes damage or harm done to a person in body, mind, reputation, or property.

Scope.—The definition of cheating contains two parts. First comes the main part "whoever, by deceiving any person..." words which obviously apply to the whole section. Then comes the first part "fraudulently, or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property." Then comes part 2, which is an alternative to sub-part 1, viz., "or intentionally induces...mind, reputation or property." Then comes the closing words "is said to cheat." The words "and which act or omission...reputation or property" form a portion of part 2 and are not applicable to part 1 at all.⁴ The definition of the offence of cheating embraces some cases in which no transfer of property is occasioned by the deception and some in which such a transfer occurs ; for these cases generally a general provision is made in s. 417 of the Code. For the cases in which property is transferred a more specific provision is made by s. 420.⁵ But in an earlier case it has been laid down that an offence of cheating accompanied by a delivery of property may be punished under either of the sections : but where the case appears to be of a serious nature steps must be taken to send it to the Court of Session for trial under s. 420.⁶

The offence of cheating is not committed if a third party, on whom no deception has been practised, sustains pecuniary loss in consequence of the accused's act.⁷

Cheating and Extortion.—The offence of cheating must, like that of extortion, be committed by the wrongful obtaining of a consent. The difference is, that the extortioner obtains the consent by intimidation, and the cheat by deception.⁸

Cheating and Criminal Breach of Trust and Criminal Misappropriation.—Cheating differs from the last two offences in the fact that the cheat takes possession of the property by deception. There is wrongful gain or loss in both cases and in both cases there is an inducement to deliver property.

Ingredients.—This section requires—

1. Deception of any person.

2. (a) Fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person

(i) to deliver any property to any person ; or

(ii) to consent that any person shall retain any property, or

(b) intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

¹ Per Greidt, J., in Kishors Lal Chatterji, (1905) D. C. W. N. 764, 767.

² Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vic., c. 96), s. 88.

³ 62 & 63 Vic., c. 22, s. 3

⁴ Ishar Das, (1908) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 18

of 1903.

⁵ Baraji, (1875) Unrep. Cr. C. 90, Cr. R., 23rd September 1875.

⁶ Bipu, (1864) Unrep. Cr. C. 2.

⁷ Sundar Singh, (1904) P. R. No. 25 of 1904.

⁸ Note N, p. 163

1. "Deceiving any person."—It means causing to believe what is false; or misleading as to a matter of fact, or leading into error.¹ The person deceived need not be a definite person to whom the false representation is made. To constitute cheating there must be a deception which must precede and induce under the first part of the section, the delivery or retention of property, or act or omission referred to in the second part. Such deception may be by words or conduct. As to what is sufficient to constitute deception must be decided in each case on its own facts.²

Wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, he commits this offence. A wilful misrepresentation of a definite fact with intent to defraud, cognizable by the senses—as where a seller represents the quantity of coals to be fourteen cwt. whereas it is in fact only eight cwt., but so packed as to look more; or where the seller, by manœuvring, contrives to pass off tasters of cheese as if extracted from the cheese offered for sale, whereas it is not—is cheating.³

Where a charge of cheating rests upon a representation which is impugned as false and which relates not to an existing fact but to a certain future event, it must be shown that the representation was false to the accused's knowledge at the time when it was made. It is but little to the purpose to show that in fact the representation has turned out to be untrue.⁴

It is not necessary that the false pretence should be made in express words, it can be inferred from all the circumstances attending the obtaining of the property.⁵ Fraudulent intent is absolutely essential. An illegal demand if not fraudulent does not amount to cheating. The accused, who was the landlord of the complainant, sent for the latter, and on the latter appearing demanded payment of rent. The complainant left for home to fetch the money requesting the accused and his clerk to have in the meantime his dues worked out and have a receipt written. He returned soon with Rs 90 and paid the same to the accused, who drove him away refusing to give a receipt or return the money unless and until Rs. 25 more were paid to make up the sum, the said amount having been deducted towards certain subscription. It was held that no criminal offence was committed.⁶

Where a person knows that the statements made by another are false, but still acts upon them with a view to entrap that person, it will not amount to cheating. Where, therefore, money was obtained by the accused by the false pretence that he had cut sixty-three fans of chaff when in fact he had only cut forty-five, and the prosecutor had previously seen the accused remove a sack full of chaff from the

... of the recovery of the value of the notes. The Currency Office, having, upon enquiry, discovered that the amount of the notes had been paid to the holder of the other halves, and that the notes had been withdrawn from circulation and cancelled, sent M the usual form of claim to be filled up and returned to it. It appeared from the evidence that the Currency Office never

¹ Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary; William Woolley, (1850) 4 Cox 193.

² Ramanath Kalapahar, (1905) 2 C. L. J. 524.

³ Thomas Goss, (1860) 8 Cox 262.

⁴ Ebrahimji Mulla Jeevanji, (1912) 15 Bom. L. R. 297, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 48.

⁵ Maria Giles, (1865) 10 Cox 44; Khoda Bux v. Baleyia Mundari, (1905) 32 Cal. 941; Ram Chand v. Jai Dial, (1912) P. L. R. No.

114 of 1912, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 10 of 1912; on remand, (1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 18 of 1915.

⁶ Kumeda Charan Ghose, (1911) 15 C. L. J. 515. See also Birraj Maricari, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 294, Deodhar Mahto, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 211.

⁷ Mills, (1857) 26 L. J. (M. C.) 79, 7 Cox 263.

⁸ Hensler, (1870) 11 Cox 570, Umesh Chunder Mitter, (1888) 16 Cal. 310.

inducing must be fraudulent or dishonest. In the second class of acts the inducing must be intentional."¹

English law.—Whosoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of misdemeanour.² There are two vital points in which the English law differs from the Code :—

(1) A promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself a cheating.³ Under the Code this will amount to cheating: see ills. (f) and (g).

(2) The object of the accused must be to obtain any chattel, money, or valuable security. The definition of cheating as given in this section is much wider and includes damage or harm done to a person in body, mind, reputation, or property.

Scope.—The definition of cheating contains two parts. First comes the main part "whoever, by deceiving any person..." words which obviously apply to the whole section. Then comes the first part "fraudulently, or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property." Then comes part 2, which is an alternative to sub-part 1, viz., "or intentionally induces...mind, reputation or property." Then comes the closing words "is said to cheat." The words "and which act or omission...reputation or property" form a portion of part 2 and are not applicable to part 1 at all.⁴ The definition of the offence of cheating embraces some cases in which no transfer of property is occasioned by the deception and some in which such a transfer occurs; for these cases generally a general provision is made in s. 417 of the Code. For the cases in which property is transferred a more specific provision is made by s. 420.⁵ But in an earlier case it has been laid down that an offence of cheating accompanied by a delivery of property may be punished under either of the sections: but where the case appears to be of a serious nature steps must be taken to send it to the Court of Session for trial under s. 420.⁶

The offence of cheating is not committed if a third party, on whom no deception has been practised, sustains pecuniary loss in consequence of the accused's act.⁷

Cheating and Extortion.—The offence of cheating must, like that of extortion, be committed by the wrongful obtaining of a consent. The difference is, that the extortioner obtains the consent by intimidation, and the cheat by deception.⁸

Cheating and Criminal Breach of Trust and Criminal Misappropriation.—Cheating differs from the last two offences in the fact that the cheat takes possession of the property by deception. There is wrongful gain or loss in both cases and in both cases there is an inducement to deliver property.

Ingredients.—This section requires—

1. Deception of any person.

2. (a) Fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person

(i) to deliver any property to any person; or

(ii) to consent that any person shall retain any property, or

(b) intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

¹ Per Geidt, J., in Kishori Lal Chatterji, (1905) 9 C. W. N. 764, 767.

² Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vic., c. 96), s. 88.

³ 62 & 63 Vic., c. 22, s. 3

⁴ Ishar Das, (1908) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 18

of 1908.

⁵ Bavaji, (1875) Unrep. Cr. C. 96, Cr. R. 23rd September 1875.

⁶ Bapu, (1884) Unrep. Cr. C. 2.

⁷ Sundar Singh, (1901) P. R. No. 25 of 1901.

⁸ Note N, p. 163.

1. "Deceiving any person."—It means causing to believe what is false; or misleading as to a matter of fact, or leading into error.¹ The person deceived need not be a definite person to whom the false representation is made. To constitute cheating there must be a deception which must precede and induce under the first part of the section, the delivery or retention of property, or act or omission referred to in the second part. Such deception may be by words or conduct. As to what is sufficient to constitute deception must be decided in each case on its own facts.²

Wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, he commits this offence. A wilful misrepresentation of a definite fact with intent to defraud, cognizable by the senses—as where a seller represents the quantity of coals to be fourteen cwt. whereas it is in fact only eight cwt., but so packed as to look more; or where the seller, by manœuvring, contrives to pass off tasters of cheese as if extracted from the cheese offered for sale, a representation which is impugned fact but to a certain future event, it must be shown that the representation was false to the accused's knowledge at the time when it was made. It is but little to the purpose to show that in fact the representation has turned out to be untrue.⁴

It is not necessary that the false pretence should be made in express words, if it can be inferred from all the circumstances attending the obtaining of the property.⁵ Fraudulent intent is absolutely essential. An illegal demand if not fraudulent does not amount to cheating. The accused, who was the landlord of the complainant, sent for the latter, and on the latter appearing demanded payment of rent. The complainant left for home to fetch the money requesting the accused and his clerk to have in the meantime his dues worked out and have a receipt written. He returned soon with Rs 90 and paid the same to the accused, who drove him away refusing to give a receipt or return the money unless and until Rs 25 more were paid to make up the sum, the said amount having been deducted towards certain subscription. It was held that no criminal offence was committed.⁶

Where a person knows that the statements made by another are false, but still acts upon them with a view to entrap that person, it will not amount to cheating. Where, therefore, money was obtained by the accused by the false pretence that he had cut sixty-three fans of chaff when in fact he had only cut forty-five, and the prosecutor had previously seen the accused remove eighteen fans from an adjoining place, and add them to the heap which he pretended he had cut, but notwithstanding this knowledge he paid the accused the amount he demanded, it was held that this offence was not committed.⁷ But a man may be guilty of an attempt to cheat although the person he attempts to cheat is forewarned and is therefore not cheated.⁸ M wrote a letter to the Currency Office at Calcutta, enclosing the halves of two Government currency notes, stating that the other halves were lost, and enquiring what steps should be taken.

value of the notes. The Currency Office, when he amount of the notes had been ascertained, and when the notes had been withdrawn from circulation and cancelled, sent M the usual form of claim to be filled up and returned to it. It appeared from the evidence that the Currency Office never

¹ Dr Murray's New English Dictionary; William Hooley, (1850) 4 Cox 197.

² Ramanath Kalapahar, (1905) 2 C. L. J. 524.

³ Thomas Cross, (1860) 8 Cox 262.

⁴ Pichayji Mulla Jearany, (1912) 15 Bom. L. R. 297, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 48.

⁵ Maria Giles, (1865) 10 Cox 44; Kloda Eux v. Balaya Mondari, (1905) 22 Cal. 941; Ram Chand v. Jai Dial, (1912) P. L. R. No.

114 of 1912, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 10 of 1912; on remand, (1915) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 18 of 1915.

⁶ Kumeda Charan Ghose, (1911) 15 C. L. J. 515. See also Birajay Marwari, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 294; Deedhars Makhia, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 211.

⁷ Mills, (1857) 26 L. J. (M. C.) 79, 7 Cox 263.

⁸ Hester, (1870) 11 Cox 570; Umesh Chander Mitter, (1885) 16 Cal. 310.

contemplated paying M in respect of the notes. The form was filled up and signed by M and returned by him to the Currency Office. It was held that although there was no intention on the part of the Currency Office to pay the amount of the notes, M was guilty of an attempt to cheat.¹ The accused described himself as the Principal of the 'British Health Institute,' and issued advertisements stating that arrangements had been made for testing urine, if desired, at a nominal fee of 1s. 6d. Two individuals, who suspected the genuineness of the advertisement, forwarded to the appellant a solution of water with colouring ingredients mixed with soap, and asked for an analysis of their "water." Letters were received from the accused advising a course of treatment to cost not less than one guinea in each case. It was held that the accused was guilty of attempting to obtain money by false pretences although the persons to whom the false pretence was made knew it to be false.²

It is immaterial whether the prosecutor has means of detecting the fraud or not.—A person who offered a £1 bank-note as a note for £5 and got it changed upon that representation was held guilty of obtaining money by false pretences, although the prosecutor might, by the exercise of reasonable caution, have detected the imposition.³ The question in every case is, whether, in truth, the false statement did impose upon the prosecutor or not.⁴

2-a. 'Fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property... or to consent that any person shall retain any property'.—The words 'fraudulently' and 'dishonestly' do not govern the whole of the definition of cheating. The section is divided into two parts. Under the first part the person deceived must have been fraudulently or dishonestly induced to deliver any property to any other person, or to consent that the said other person should retain any property. The second part provides for the case of a person who by deceiving another intentionally induces the person so deceived to do an act which causes or is likely to cause damage or harm, although the deceiver has not acted fraudulently or dishonestly.⁵ The evidence must establish the existence of a fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of the commission of the act in respect of which the cheating is alleged.⁶ To describe consequences of an act to be more serious than, in fact, they were likely to be, may be to deceive, but is not cheating if done without any fraudulent or dishonest intention. Thus to induce a son to pay his father's debts, by acting merely on his fear of consequences to his father, is not cheating.⁷ A owed B a debt, of which B could not get payment. C, a servant of B, went to A's wife and obtained two sacks of malt of her, saying that B had bought them of A. C knew this to be false, and took the malt to B, his master, to enable him to pay himself the debt. It was held that if C did not intend to defraud A but merely to put it into his master's power to compel A to pay him a just debt, C ought not to be convicted of obtaining the malt by false pretences.⁸

A person who sent an insured cover, purporting to contain Government currency notes, but which, on receipt by the addressee, was found to contain only a letter advising the despatch of notes, and pieces of waste paper, was held not guilty of cheating. The Court observed: "All that the person deceived has been induced to do is that he has signed a receipt acknowledging the delivery of a cover. He has not acknowledged by that the receipt of any sum of money alleged to be contained in the cover. That being so, the charge of cheating has not been brought home to the accused."⁹ In response to a serious demand by complainant for re-payment of a loan which accused had

¹ Umesh Chunder Miller, (1888) 18 Cal. 310.

² Light, (1915) 24 Cox 718.

³ Jessop, (1858) 7 Cox 399.

⁴ Woolley, (1850) 4 Cox 103.

⁵ Mohabat, (1889) P. R. No. 20 of 1889.

⁶ Viraswami, (1881) 1 Weir 478 Dick.

(1914) 12 A. L. J. R. 1258.

⁷ Raj Coomar Banerjee, (1864) W. R. (Gap. No.) Cr. 25.

⁸ Henry Williams, (1836) 7 C. & P. 354.

⁹ Raman Behari Roy, (1923) 50 Cal. 819.

taken from him sometime back, accused addressed an insured cover to complainant. On opening this cover the complainant discovered that instead of Government Currency Notes, it contained a number of Khilafat Bonds. Thereupon he reported the matter to the Post Office. In the course of an inquiry accused stated that he had sent Government Currency Notes and not the Khilafat Bonds. It was held that no offence under this section was committed. The Court observed: "The mere fact that a cover insured for a certain amount is sent raises no presumption in law that that cover contains the necessary amount of Government Currency Notes. It is, therefore, not easily conceivable what is the thing which the complainant would have done or omitted to do if the fraud contemplated by the accused had succeeded. The only thing that can be said is that the accused imagined that he would have had some sort of a proof that the debt had been paid off... Then the offence would be an attempt to fabricate false evidence within the meaning of s. 192 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused, however, has not been charged with any such offence." ¹ Where a person receives money due to him from another which that other person pays, with the intention not to credit the money to the real debt due, but to deceive him into paying money due on a real debt and keeps the money under the pretence of crediting it to a debt which the other person did not owe upon a bond which he did not execute, the person is guilty of cheating. ² A charge of cheating can be sustained even though the promise which induced the delivery of property was a promise to do a criminal act, or an act forbidden by law, and one which could not form a cause of action in a civil Court. ³

s. 24. 'dishonestly' honestly, 'the word'; different from 'dishonestly'. ⁴

'Any property.'—It is no objection to an indictment for this offence that the thing obtained was not in existence at the time of cheating, provided the thing when made is delivered under the influence thereof. ⁵

A health certificate is property within the meaning of this section. ⁶ So is a certificate of having passed an examination, ⁷ or a ticket entitling its holder to enter an examination room, ⁸ or a railway ticket. ⁹

'To consent that any person shall retain any property.'—It is equally a cheat whether a deception causes a person fraudulently or dishonestly to acquire property by delivery, or to retain property already in his possession. If a man to whom property is lent or who is entrusted for a time with the charge of it deceives the owner and thereby induces him for some purpose of wrongful gain to the borrower or wrongful loss to the owner to allow the property to be retained in the borrower's possession, this amounts to cheating. ¹⁰

Cases.—Inducing the person deceived to deliver property.—Where a person hired certain property for use at a wedding, paying a portion of the hire, and giving a written promise to pay the balance of the hire, and to restore the property after the wedding, he being well aware that there was to be no wedding, and intending, when he got the property, to apply for its attachment in a civil suit in respect of an alleged claim ¹¹; where the accused received a Government promissory note, promising to return certain jewels pledged to them but not intending to do so, and

¹ Tula Ram, (1923) 21 A. L. J. R. 865; Saitho Lal, (1916) 1 P. L. J. 391, commented on.

² Ramanath Kalapahar, (1905) 2 C. L. J. 524. Mookerjee, J., expressed a contrary opinion.

³ Meera, (1917) 10 B. L. T. 255.

⁴ Per Henderson, J., in Baburam Rai, (1905) 32 Cal. 775, 779.

⁵ Harshad Chandra, (1907) 1 P. L. J. 505; Harshad Chandra, (1907) 1 P. L. J. 505; Harshad Chandra, (1907) 1 P. L. J. 505.

⁶ Appasami, (1889) 12 Mad. 151.

⁷ Horase Chapman, (1910) 4 Cr. App. R. 276.

⁸ M. & M. 382.

⁹ Kadir Bux, (1871) 3 N. W. P. 16.

they subsequently claimed to return the note for another debt alleged to be due to them by the sender¹; and where a person obtained delivery of a valuable security under the inducement of a promise not intended to be kept and with fraudulent intention,² this offence was held to have been committed.

The accused was alleged by the prosecution to have advertised that a work on English idioms by Robert S. Wilson, M.A., was ready, stating that the price was Rs. 2-4-0 and that intending purchasers might remit it by money order to Robert S. Wilson, Council House Street, Calcutta, to have then requested the Postal Authorities at Calcutta, by a letter signed Robert S. Wilson, to have the money orders re-directed to him as above at Rajam; to have similarly requested the Post Master at Rajam to pay the money orders to his clerk Sheshgiri Rau; and to have subsequently received the value of money orders made out in favour of Robert S. Wilson, from the Post Master of Rajam, signing receipts as Sheshgiri Rau. Robert S. Wilson and Sheshgiri Rau were alleged to be fictitious persons, and it was alleged that the accused had no book on English idioms ready to be despatched to purchasers. It was held that the above allegations supported the charges of cheating and forgery.³

Complainant's firm had advanced money to the accused on the understanding that the accused would purchase rice from the outlying shops and ship and deliver the same at the firm's place of business, where it would be sold, the profits on the sale going to the accused and the accused, being liable to pay to the complainant's firm the capital advanced with interest, and a commission of one anna per maund of rice sold. The accused failed to deliver the rice within the stipulated time and was charged with cheating. The representations made by the accused to the complainant's firm when getting the advance were not entirely false, and it appeared that the accused had to some extent endeavoured to carry out the terms of the agreement, though he was also found to have converted a small portion of the money to his own use in paying off his own debts. It was held that the case was really one of breach of contract. The mere fact that the accused converted a small portion of the money to his own use was not in itself sufficient to prove that his intention, when he received the money from the complainant's firm, was dishonest or that he obtained it by a fraudulent misrepresentation of facts. The important question to be considered was whether the accused, when he took over the money from the complainant's firm, had any intention of performing the contract.⁴

The accused obtained an advance for which he gave a promissory note, stating that he had two boat-loads of paddy in the adjoining creek and that he would bring the paddy to the complainant for sale, he then absconded. It was held that the conviction under this section was good; that the facts warranted the inference that the accused, at the time of obtaining the advance, had no intention of performing his promise.⁵ The accused, who was the complainants' paddy-broker and regular paddy-supplier, took from them advances for the purchase of paddy and gave promissory-notes for the advances in question. From time to time he had supplied paddy the total quantity of which, however, had not been sufficient to satisfy all the advances. He last obtained an advance of Rs. 4,000 when there was already due to the complainants a large sum on the previous advances, but only supplied a further small lot of paddy valued at Rs. 800, and was in consequence prosecuted in respect of this last advance. It was held that the facts did not warrant the inference that the accused, at the time of obtaining the advance, had no intention of performing his promise and that, in the absence of proof of any representation at the time on the part of the accused, which he knew or, had reason to believe, to be false, there was no offence of cheating committed.⁶

¹ Sheodurshan Dass, (1871) 3 N. W. P. 17.

² (1880) 1 Weir 478

³ Pera Raju, (1889) 13 Mad. 27.

⁴ Ijjatulla Ka, (1906) 10 C. W. N. 1005.

⁵ Po Yon v. Mohr Brothers & Co., Ltd. (1911) 6 L. R. R. 38.

⁶ Maing Po Lu, (1923) 1 Rang 307.

The accused, a judgment-debtor, applied for permission to raise the amount of the decree by a private transfer of his house, which had already been sold in execution of the decree. The application was refused. The accused mortgaged the house to the complainant, representing that he was empowered to mortgage the house in order to pay off the decretal amount due to the decree-holder. He got the mortgagee to pay the amount due to the decree-holder and received the balance himself. He did not enter appearance in Court and the sale was confirmed. The mortgagee, failing to get refund of the money paid to the accused, charged him with cheating. It was held that he was guilty of cheating.¹

The accused was in charge of a mare belonging to C who had given it to him for sale. One L made an offer for the mare and insisted on the offer being communicated to the owner. The accused showed L a telegram which the latter understood to have come from C refusing the offer. He thereupon raised the offer and purchased the mare. Subsequently he instituted these proceedings against the accused on the ground that deception was practised on him, but, when he was examined, stated that he would have paid the same price had he known that the mare belonged to the accused. It was held that no wrongful loss was caused to L by reason of the fact that he was induced to bid up to what he considered to be the full value of the mare; and that by merely placing before L the telegram which purported to have been received from C, the accused could not be said to have acted fraudulently.²

A and B went to C and B asked for a loan on the security of a ring seemingly, but not really, of gold. A assured C that B was an honest man, and thereby induced C to advance the money. B was convicted of cheating. It was held in revision that B's conviction was wrong as A's assurance was the effective inducement for C's advancing the money irrespective of the question whether B's dishonesty was or was not proved.³ The accused drew a hundi and borrowed money on it, without assuring himself that the drawee, with whom he had no previous dealings and who was not supplied with funds, would honour the same. The money so borrowed was spent by him on his own purposes. The hundi, when presented for payment, was dishonoured by the drawee. The accused, though apprised of the dishonouring, took no steps either to have the hundi honoured or to repay the money borrowed on the hundi, but made himself scarce. It was held that the accused was guilty of cheating.⁴

English cases.—Where a postman falsely pretended that 2s. was payable on a postal letter entrusted to him for delivery, whereas 1s. only was payable, this offence was held to have been committed.⁵ It was the duty of the accused, who was an officer of a society, to return the names of members entitled to sick pay. He wrongfully entered on the list a member's name, which he gave to the secretary, and in due course received an order from the treasurer to pay the member the sum named. When the accused received the money he applied it in payment of a debt due from the member to himself. It was held that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the money was obtained by the accused by a false pretence made by him to the treasurer.⁶ Where a person put the name of a painter upon the copy of one of his pictures, in order that it may be passed off as the original, it was held that he had committed this offence and not forgery.⁷ Under the Code this will amount to forgery.

2-b. 'Intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything . . . and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.'—By this clause intentional deceptions are

¹ Ram Chand v. Jai Dial, (1912) P. L. R. No. 114 of 1912, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 10 of 1912.

² Dick, (1914) 12 A. L. J. R. 1258.

³ Mata Prasad, (1920) 18 A. L. J. R. 371.

⁴ Uttamlal Narottamdas, (1920) 23 Bom

L. R. 340, 6 Bom. Cr. C. 37.

⁵ Matthieu Byrne, (1866) 10 Cox 369.

⁶ Taylor, (1901) 65 J. P. 457.

⁷ Closs, (1857) 7 Cox 191.

made punishable as cheats if they cause or are likely to cause any damage or harm, whether to property or to reputation. It is sufficient to constitute cheating within this clause if the deception is intended to cause any damage or harm whatsoever to the person deceived... The deception must be intended not only to induce the person deceived to do or omit to do something, but also to cause damage to that person. False statements are often made incautiously or carelessly or without sufficient information or inquiry and without any intention to deceive or injure. It may be observed of all incorrect or deceptive statements that they are not deception within this section, unless the person making them intends to induce the person to whom they are made to act upon the strength of such statements; even they are not deceptions within the definition unless the person who does or omits, etc., is induced to act by such statements and not by other independent motives; and lastly they will amount to the offence of cheating only when they are intended to cause damage or harm to that person.¹

The word 'intentionally' only applies to the act or omission which the person deceived is induced to do or omit to do, and it is not necessary in order to sustain a charge under this branch of the definition that the accused person should also have intended to cause harm or damage as the result of such act or omission. It is sufficient if he intentionally induces the person deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit to do if he were not deceived and the act or omission causes damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.² The intention need not be fraudulent or dishonest. In the latter part of the section the words 'fraudulently' or 'dishonestly' do not find a place.³

Cases.—Inducing the person deceived to do something.—Where a prostitute communicated syphilis to a man who had sexual intercourse with her on the strength of her misrepresentation that she was free from disease⁴; where the accused passed off girls of a low caste as girls of a higher caste and thus obtained money from persons who married them⁵; and where the accused applied to a Tahsildar for a quantity of land on coile tenure free of tax for five years and falsely represented that the land was waste land⁶; this offence was held to have been committed.

The accused, a cooly recruiter, induced the complainant to come to a cooly depot, and promising him domestic service entered his name in the books of the depot and wrote a letter to a cooly contractor in Calcutta offering the complainant as a cooly; on the same day the accused persuaded the complainant to go to a railway station to fetch a parcel and the accused bought a railway ticket for Calcutta for the complainant and tried to get him to enter the train, but the complainant refused to go. The object of the accused was to get the complainant to go to Calcutta that he might be sent from there to Assam as a tea garden cooly. It was held that the act of the accused amounted to an attempt to cheat.⁷

The accused, a fireman, applied for employment to the Superintendent of Burma Railways. He forwarded with his application a copy of a certificate purporting to have been granted to him by another railway authority to the effect that the accused had been employed as an engine-driver on that railway for a considerable period and was of good conduct, when in fact no such certificate had ever been issued to him, ... Where it was held that he ... his names a registered opium consumer got a license to purchase opium ... and another license in the other of his names, and thereby obtained more opium

¹ M. & M. 383.

² Nand Lal, (1888) P. R. No. 36 of 1888.

³ Baburam Rai, (1905) 32 Cal. 775, 781.

⁴ Rakma, (1886) 11 Bom. 50.

⁵ Komul Dass, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 7; Pud- domonie Bointobee, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 98;

Dabee Sing, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 55; Sheoram,

(1882) 2 A. W. N. 237.

⁶ (1868) 4 M. H. C. App. 12.

⁷ Kishori Lal Chatterji, (1905) 9 C. W. N.

764.

⁸ Fazal Din, (1906) P. R. No. 1 of 1907.

than he would have done otherwise, it was held that he had committed the offence of cheating.¹

The accused proposed to the father of a girl for the hand of his daughter and obtained his consent and was admitted into his house. Subsequently information was received by the father that the accused was a married man; this the accused admitted to be true. Shortly after the daughter who was major left the father's protection of her own accord and went to the accused. On the complaint of the parents the accused was convicted of cheating. It was held that the facts did not bring the case within s. 417, read with this section.²

English cases.—The accused ordered goods of the prosecutors, and said he wished to pay ready money for them. He gave cheques on a bank for the price, and took away the goods. He had shortly before opened an account at the bank but had drawn out the amount deposited except a few shillings. It was held that he was guilty of cheating.³ Where the accused conspired to obtain a passport from the Foreign Office by false representation in the name of M for his use in Russia intending that it should be used by some other person, it was held that they were guilty of cheating and criminal conspiracy.⁴ The accused ordered a meal in a restaurant: he made no verbal representation at the time as to payment, nor was any question asked him with regard to it. After the meal he said that he was unable to pay, and that he had only one half-penny in his possession. It was held that he pretences,
but he within the meanin, red by the definition of cheating.

'Causes or is likely to cause.'—These words are very wide. Thus, under illustrations (f) and (g) deception as to a future event is criminal this is not the case under English law. The expression 'or is likely to cause' may apply to such cases as the following A by deception is induced to make an entry in his shop books that certain goods have been paid for, when in fact they have not; to give credit in account for a greater amount than has actually been paid; or to sign a receipt for a sum which has not been received. In these cases the thing which A is induced for such admissions
's claim if they were death in a Court of Justice.⁶

'Damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.'—"The illustrations throw no light on what is meant by damage or harm in body, mind or reputation and so far as such damage is concerned the offence is not very appropriately placed in the Chapter of the Code relating to offences against property. An essential ingredient of the offence is the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused in the said respects or in property. Generally speaking, a criminal offence consists in an act done by the accused with a specific criminal intent, or state of mind, constituting the mens rea. Difficulties connected with the notion of causation; common enough in other branches of the law, such as tort, seldom arise. It is true that negligence is sometimes punishable as an offence because it causes or is likely to cause hurt or injury to another (cf. ss. 279 and 280 and 284. 287 of the Code). But cheating in the second form has this addition to be caused by the person deceived to himself. This no doubt explains why the word 'injury,' defined in s. 44 of the Code as 'any harm whatever illegally caused to any person in body, mind, reputation, or property' "was not employed

¹ Milton v. Sherman, (1918) 22 C. W. N. 1001.

Cosnett, (1901) 20 Cox 6. See ill. (d) to s. 415.

² Brailsford, [1905] 2 K. B. 730.

³ William Jones, [1898] 1 Q. B. 119.

⁴ M. & M. 384.

⁵ M. & M. 384.

⁶ M. & M. 384.

⁷ M. & M. 384.

⁸ M. & M. 384.

⁹ M. & M. 384.

able damage to the railway company's reputation, as the damage would be too remote.²

Certain recruits were rejected by a Recruiting Officer at Lahore as unfit. The accused took them to Lyallpur and offered them to a Lambardar on condition that he would pay Rs. 50 for each recruit. It was arranged that this money would only be paid if the recruits were accepted by the Recruiting Officer. The Lambardar asked the accused whether the recruits had already been rejected and they replied in the negative. The Lambardar on presenting the recruits to the Lyallpur Recruiting Officer was told by that Officer's orderly that they had already been rejected in Lahore. It was admitted that the Lambardar was not liable to any punishment departmentally as merely presenting rejected recruits was not an offence unless it was done knowingly. It was held that no offence under ss. 420 and 511 had been established as the money was not to be paid to the accused by the Lambardar unless the recruits were accepted. It was further held that the first and second ingredients of the offence of cheating existed, but not the third, seeing that the Lambardar's action in presenting the recruits not knowing that they had been previously rejected was not likely to cause him any harm or injury at all. There was only a possibility that he might suffer annoyance in case his explanation was not at once accepted, while the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused to the person deceived in mind, body, reputation or property, within the meaning of this section must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom.³

Explanation.—Concealment of any facts which deceive a person must be dishonest, an improper concealment or suppression of a material fact, which the party concealing is legally bound to disclose, and of which the other party has a legal right to insist that he shall be informed, is fraudulent. Where the cheating consists in concealment, it must be shown that suppressio veri was a violation of a legal duty or it was an illegal omission in fact.⁴ Where the accused, who was indebted to the complainant, despatched to the latter an envelope insured for Rs. 530 containing two pieces of paper intended to use the receipt for the same as evidence of payment of the debt, the complainant refers to the actual deception used and not to the concealment of a deception by someone else.⁵

Puffing.—The authors of the Code say: "If all the misrepresentations and exaggerations in which men indulge for the purpose of gaining at the expense of others were made crimes, not a day would pass in which many thousands of buyers and sellers would not incur the penalties of the law. It happens hourly that an article which is worth ten rupees is affirmed by the seller to be cheap at twelve rupees, and by the buyer to be dear at eight rupees. The seller comes down to eleven rupees, and declares that to be his last word; the buyer rises to nine, and says that he will go no higher; the seller falsely pretends that the article is unusually good of its kind, the buyer that it is unusually bad of its kind; the seller that the price is likely soon to rise, the buyer that it is likely soon to fall. Here we have deception practised for the sake of gain, yet no judicious legislator would punish these deceptions....The moralist may regret this; but the legislator

¹ Bhedwar v. Rao Shahat C. S. R. Rao, (1923) 27 C. W. N. 919, 39 C. L. J. 273.

² Legal Remembrancer v. Manmatha Bhushan Chatterjee, (1923) 51 Cal. 250.

³ Muhammad Shah, (1918) P. R. No. 34 of 1918.

⁴ Bishan Das, (1905) 27 All. 561. See Dori Lal, (1919) 17 A. L. J. R. 500, 1 U. P. L. R. 65; Sada Ram, (1920) 18 A. L. J. R. 409.

⁵ Arora, (1912) P. L. R. No. 299 of 1913.

⁶ Nga Po Maung, (1895) 1 U. B. R. (1892, 1896) 253.

sees that the result of the attempts of the buyer and seller to gain an unfair advantage over each other is that, in the vast majority of cases, articles are sold for the prices which it is desirable that they should fetch, and therefore he does not think it necessary to interfere. It is enough for him to know that all this great mass of falsehood practically produces the same effect which would be produced by truth; and that any law directed against such falsehood would in all probability be a dead letter, and would, if carried into rigorous execution, do more mischief in a month than all the lies which are told in the making of bargains throughout all the bazaars of India produce in a century."¹

Where the allegation against the accused was that he advertised in the papers that he was willing to sell an almost new jazz set, and the complainant answered the advertisement and after some correspondence sent the price settled to the accused, and on receipt of the goods the complainant found that they were not of the quality he expected according to the advertisement and certain articles mentioned in the list were not sent, and the accused was summoned to answer a charge of cheating; it was held that the allegations were insufficient to justify the prosecution of the accused for a criminal offence, and the proceedings against the accused were quashed. The giving of untrue praise of articles by a seller does not amount to a criminal offence.²

English cases.—A simple misrepresentation of the quality of goods is not a false pretence.³ In order to obtain an advance of money on a large quantity of plated spoons, the defendants represented to a pawn-broker that they were of the best quality, that they were equal to Elkington's A, that the foundation was the best material, and that they had as much silver upon them as Elkington's A. The jury found that these representations were wilfully false and that by means of them an advance of money was made. It was held that the representation being a mere exaggeration or puffing of the quality of the goods in the course of a bargain, it was not a false pretence.⁴ This case was governed by the maxim simplex commendatio non obligat. Any exaggeration or deception in the ordinary course of dealings between the buyer and the seller during the progress of a bargain cannot be the subject of a criminal prosecution. But when the thing sold is of an entirely different description from what it is represented to be and the statements made are not in form an expression of opinion or mere praise, the offence of cheating will be committed. Where, therefore, the prisoner induced the prosecutor to purchase a chain from him by fraudulently representing that it was 15-carat gold, when, in fact, it was only of a trifle better than 6-carat, knowing at the time that he was falsely representing the quality of the chain as 15-carat gold, it was held that the statement that the chain was 15-carat gold, not being mere exaggerated praise, nor relating to a mere matter of opinion, but a statement as to a specific fact within the knowledge of the prisoner, was a false pretence.⁵

The accused induced the prosecutor to buy certain plated goods plate, at an auction for £7 on the representation that they were the best silver lined with gold, and worth £20. The foundation of the goods was Britannia metal, instead of nickel, as in the best goods, covered with a transparent film of silver, and they were worth only about 30 s. It was held that there was no false pretence.⁶ The Court said "It is most important not to bring within the criminal law the ordinary enhancing of value and quality by the seller of goods. There is always a conflict of knowledge and skill between a buyer and seller, the one wishing to buy as advantageously, and the other to sell as advantageously as he possibly can, and it would be very dangerous to extend the criminal law to such cases. At present the line is fixed, and there must be a false representation of an existing fact, operating on

¹ Note N, p. 163.

² Da Costa v. Deefholts, (1924) 20 C. W. N.

362. Bryan, (1857) 7 Cox 312.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ John Ardley, (1871) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 301; Roebuck, (1856) 25 L. J. (M. C.) 101.

⁶ Levine and Wood, (1867) 10 Cox 374.

the mind of the buyer, and deceiving him in such a manner that he cannot protect himself against it."

Statutory application.—The Bombay City Police Act (Bomb. Act IV of 1902), s. 126; the Madras City Police Act (Mad. Act III of 1889), s. 61.

CASES.

Vendor and purchaser.—The selling of milk and water in about equal proportion as pure milk would support a finding of cheating.¹ Where a person was purposely sent to buy milk knowing it was watered, in order to prosecute the seller, it was held that as there was no deception a conviction for cheating would not stand.² But according to Government of Bengal v. Umesh Chunder Mitter,³ the seller would probably be guilty of an attempt to cheat. Where the accused sold nutty sweetmeats, it was held that he could not be held guilty of this offence as the purchaser might have tasted the sweetmeats before buying them.⁴ Where the accused sold liquor, measuring it with a glass which was not a prescribed measure, and of which they fraudulently misrepresented the capacity, it was held that they ought to have been tried for this offence and not for one under s. 265.⁵ Where a licensed opium vendor sold opium at rates higher than those fixed by the Government, it was held that he had committed this offence.⁶ Where the vendor of immovable property omitted to mention that there was an incumbrance on the property, it was held that he could not be convicted of cheating unless it was shown either that he was asked by the vendee whether the property was incumbered and said it was not, or that he sold the property on the representation that it was unincumbered.⁷

The vendee defendant in a suit for pre-emption compromised the suit, the plaintiff agreeing to pay a certain sum in cash and to discharge certain incumbrances on the property in suit. It was subsequently discovered that the vendee had, after his purchase but before the suit, mortgaged the property, which was the subject of the suit for pre-emption. It was held that the vendee could not, on account merely of his omission to disclose the existence of this subsequent mortgage, be held guilty of cheating.⁸ D sold certain trees to S which stood on land in respect of which D held a mortgage. D brought the land to sale under the mortgage and purchased it before the sale of the trees by him to S; but in the interim the mortgagor had given the trees in suit to other persons as compensation for certain trees which the mortgagor had wrongfully cut down. S was resisted in cutting the trees and found that the trees belonged to certain other persons. S complained to D but D put him off and eventually drove him away with abuse and would not return the money. It was held that D was guilty of dishonestly concealing the facts within the meaning of the explanation to this section.⁹

The accused contracted to supply to the complainants 260 bales of fully good machine ginned cotton. In fulfilment of this contract, he delivered as many bales largely composed of cotton-seed, raw cotton and rubbish, carefully packed into the middle, while all round the sides was placed good ginned cotton. The percentage of the admixture was from 6 to 15 per cent. as against the normal admixture of $\frac{1}{2}$ or 1 per cent. The accused was shown to have business relations with a factory which owned ginning machines which were capable of making the admixture, and was found to be present there whilst the machines were ginning such adulterated cotton. It was held that the accused was guilty of cheating.¹⁰

¹ Nann, (1880) Unrep. Cr. C. 145.

² Kalee Modock, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

³ (1888) 18 Cal. 310.

⁴ Tumisoodeen v. Kangales Gwala, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

⁵ Nurodin, (1888) Cr. R. No. 26 of 1888, Unrep. Cr. C. 336.

⁶ Pawlung Ramchandra, (1902) 4 Bom.

L. R. 823.

⁷ Bishan Das, (1905) 27 All. 361.

⁸ Gentian Lal v. Abdul Aziz Khan, (1901)

27 All. 302.

⁹ Dori Lal, (1919) 17 A. L. J. R. 500, 1 U. P.

L. R. 58.

¹⁰ Kanji Shitaji, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R.

137, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 78.

Misstatement as to nature of goods.—The accused, a travelling hawker, represented to the prosecutor's wife that he was a tea-dealer, and induced her to buy certain packages which he stated to contain good tea, but three-fourths of the contents of which was not tea at all, but a mixture of substances unfit to drink and deleterious to health. It was held that he was guilty of false pretence.¹

Where the offence charged consisted of selling or pawning as genuine gold mohurs of the reign of Shahajahan silver rupees of that reign which had been gilt or in some way covered over with gold, it was held that this offence had been committed.²

Where property is delivered, fraudulent or dishonest intention on the part of the accused is necessary: where any act is done, through deception, that act should have caused damage or harm.—Where the accused gave a false name and address in order to shield prosecution for an offence³; where the accused falsely told his master's brother that his master was ill in a certain village and so induced him to go to that village⁴; and where the accused presented a stolen note to a shop-keeper for encashment, and in reply to the inquiry of the shop-keeper after he had cashed the note gave his name falsely⁵ this offence was not held to have been committed. Where the accused secretly entered an exhibition building without having purchased a ticket, and was there apprehended, it was held that such act did not amount to cheating because he had not made a false representation to anyone.⁶ If the accused had said to the door-keeper that he had a ticket, and had thus obtained access to the building that would have been cheating. Where a person, who purchased rice from a famine-relief officer, at a certain rate, on condition that he should sell it at a pound less, was convicted of cheating because he did not sell it at the rate agreed on, it was held that as there was no wrongful gain or loss to anyone, no offence was committed.⁷ For, the rice having been sold to him, and he having paid for it, it was not unlawful for him to sell it again at such price as he thought fit. The fact that a trader in a statement of his account included, amongst other articles delivered, an article, which the complainant alleged she had returned, was held not to amount to cheating unless it was proved that he had intentionally done so with an intention to defraud and had obtained a payment of the whole bill or of the bill in part including the price of that article.⁸ Where a person attempted to obtain his recruitment in the police intend-tempt-person

accused in body, mind, reputation or property.⁹ where the accused promised to withdraw his charge against the complainant's brother-in-law and others without intending to do so, and thereby deceived the complainant and induced him to withdraw his charge against the accused, it was held that the act of the complainant so induced by the accused's deceit could not be said to be one likely to cause damage or harm to him in body, mind, reputation or property within the meaning of this section and that the accused was not, therefore, guilty of cheating.¹⁰ Where a person was charged with obtaining a duplicate of the Registrar of the University of Madras by and trying to obtain a duplicate of the person, it was held that as there was no

¹ Foster, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 301.

² Khushali, (1906) 29 All. 141.

³ Ladka, (1893) Cr. R. No. 10 of 1893, Unrep. Cr. C. 635.

⁴ Punjia, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 423.

⁵ Shaila Basit, (1883) 1 Weir 479.

⁶ Meherwanji Bejwanji, (1869) 6 B. C. H.

(Cr. C.) 6.

⁷ Lal Mahomed, (1874) 22 W. R. (Cr.) 82.

⁸ Bay Nath Ram Marwari v. Burgess, (1900) 5 C. W. N. 255.

⁹ Dwarka Prasad, (1883) 6 All. 97.

¹⁰ Durgiah, (1892) 1 Weir 477.

proof of harm or damage to the Registrar or to the University and no wrongful gain to the accused or loss to the University the charge of cheating must fail. Where the accused, a public servant, purchased at an auction a quantity of waste paper, bidding for it under an assumed name, it was held that in the absence of any rule forbidding employees in the office to bid at such sales, the conviction of the accused under this section could not be sustained.² The petitioners were charged before the District Magistrate with cheating in that they waylaid certain intending customers of the complainant and falsely represented themselves as belonging to the complainant's shop, took them to their own shop on the pretence that it was the shop of the complainant and sold sweets to them. It appeared that the customers sustained no pecuniary loss in consequence of the accused's acts who apparently had not tried to make anything out of their victims and had only charged the market rate for the sweets. The Magistrate convicted the accused of cheating, holding that the deception must have injuriously affected the business of the complainant. It was held that the conviction was bad.³

The accused, a shopkeeper, having sold goods worth Rs. 2-13-0 to a customer, received in payment two currency notes one of Rs. 2-8-0 and the other of Re. 1. Instead of returning eleven annas, as he ought to have done, he paid only 0-9-3 to the customer, saying that the notes were not worth their face value. On these facts, the accused was convicted of cheating. It was held in revision that the offence of cheating was not committed, for there was no deceit, inasmuch as the customer was not induced to hand over the notes by any representation on the part of the accused that he would get change calculated on the face value of the notes but the notes were handed over in the ordinary course of the sale and purchase and what really happened was that a dispute then arose as to the correct amount of the change due to the customer.⁴

With a view to escape the payment of just dues of their creditors, the accused, who were retail traders, fraudulently induced the creditors, just before the closing of the civil Courts for vacation, to grant them some time to pay up. Their object in gaining time was to remove the goods from their shop. The civil Courts having closed within the time thus granted, the creditors were prevented from seeking any remedy in the civil Courts. It was held that as time was obtained fraudulently the accused were guilty of cheating.⁵

False entries.—Where the accused was requested to make an entry in a book of accounts, belonging to the complainant, to the effect that he was indebted to the complainant in a certain sum found due on a settlement of accounts, instead of making this entry entered in a language not known to the complainant that this sum had been paid to the complainant, it was held that he had committed an offence of attempt to cheat, and not one under s. 465.⁶ Where the lessee of a forest presented false accounts to a Forest Officer in order to defraud the Government, it was held that he might be convicted of attempting to cheat.⁷

Fraud by railway passengers.—Where a passenger travelled in a carriage of higher class than that for which he had paid fare⁸; and where a passenger gave some part of his luggage to a co-passenger to evade the charge for overweight⁹ this offence was not committed. Where a man endeavoured to evade payment of a railway fare by the production of an old pass altered as to date and number of persons, it was held that he was rightly convicted of an attempt to ¹ Srinivasan, (1902) 23 Mad. 726. This case lays down bad law. It is opposed to Iyyanami, (1889) 12 Mad. 151; Sodhi Bhusan, (1893) 15 All. 210 and Abbas Ali, (1896) 23 Cal. 612, r. b. and has been disapproved in Kotamaraju Venkatrayudu, (1905) 28 Mad. 60.

² Kutub Ali, (1901) 23 A. W. N. 231.

³ Saudar Singh, (1901) P. R. No. 25 of 1901.

⁴ Harari Rayhanath, (1912) 21 Bom. L. R.

763, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 98.

⁵ Rameshwar v. Gobind Prasad, (1925) 23

A. L. J. R. 433.

⁶ Kunja Nayar, (1888) 12 Mad. 111.

⁷ Ramajirav Jeebajirav, (1875) 12 B. H. C.

(Cr. C.) 1.

⁸ Dnyanhai Parjaram, (1861) 1 H. R. G. 140.

⁹ Paras Ram, (1907) P. R. No. 25 of 1907.

cheat.¹ Where a railway employee obtains a free pass for his wife and mother and hands it over to a woman who is neither his wife nor his mother and she uses it, he is guilty of the offence of cheating punishable under s. 420 and not under s. 112 of the Railways Act.²

Abetment.—The forwarding of fictitious consignment notes was held to be abetment.³ The accused by falsely representing F, a notorious and practised gambler well skilled in all the tricks of gambling, to be a rich merchant, induced the prosecutor to gamble with him, on the representation that the merchant would fall an easy prey if the prosecutor gambled with him, and he (the prosecutor) was thus induced to part with all his property. It was held that those facts were sufficient to sustain a conviction for abetment of cheating.⁴

416. A person is said to “cheat by personation” if he cheats by pretending to be some other person, or by knowingly substituting one person for another, or representing that he or any other person is a person other than he or such other person really is.

Explanation.—The offence is committed whether the individual personated is a real or imaginary person.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A cheats by pretending to be a certain rich banker of the same name. A cheats by personation.

(b) A cheats by pretending to be B, a person who is deceased. A cheats by personation.

COMMENT.

Ingredients.—This section requires any one of the following essentials:—

1. Pretention by a person to be some other person
2. Knowingly substituting one person for another.
3. Representation that the person representing or any other person is a person other than he or such other person really is

“To ‘personate’ means to pretend to be a particular person”.⁵ “As soon as a man by word, act, or sign holds himself forth as a person entitled to vote with the object of passing himself off as that person, and exercising the right which that person has, he has personated him.”⁶ If a person at Oxford, who is not a member of the University, go to a shop for the purpose of fraud, wearing a commoner’s cap and gown, and obtain goods, this appearing in cap and gown is a sufficient thing, although nothing passed in words.⁷

Explanation.—The person personated may be a real or an imaginary person.

CASES.

False personation at an examination.—Where A falsely represented himself to be B at a University Examination, got a hall-ticket under B’s name, and wrote papers in B’s name, it was held that A had committed the offence of cheating by personation and forgery.⁸

Personation before a public servant.—A female vendor started for D, in company with three persons, to get her deed of sale registered. She fell ill on the way, and

¹ Gunpat, (1868) P. R. No. 6 of 1868.

² Ram Dayal, (1925) 2 O.W.N. 510.

³ Raghunath, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 470.

⁴ Jakawa, (1904) P. R. No. 4 of 1905.

⁵ Per Crompton, J., in Hague, (1864)

⁶ B. & S. 715, 720, 33 L. J. (31 C.) 81.

⁷ Per Blackburn, J., in ibid, p. 721.

⁸ Barnard, (1837) 7 C. & P. 784.

⁹ Appasami, (1882) 12 Mad. 151. See Ganesh Khanderao, (1889) 13 Bom. 606.

her three companions went to the Registrar's office. One of them, a woman, there personated the vendor, and got registry of the deed. She was convicted under this section and the other two of abetting the offence. It was held that as there was no apparent intention on the part of the accused to injure or defraud any one, the convictions should have been under the Registration Act and not under the Code.¹ Similarly, where a servant purchased a stamp paper of his master, giving his master's name as if it had been his own, it was held that a conviction under the section was bad, inasmuch as although there might have been personation, there was no cheating as there had been no fraudulent intent.²

Where the accused was found to have knowingly represented one J to be B, the mother of a sepoy K, who had been killed in action, and thereby induced the military authorities to grant a pension to J to which she was not entitled, it was held that he had committed this offence.³

Where the accused travelled by rail without a ticket and on arriving at the place of destination presented a forged railway pass made out in the name of the "Servant of Mr. Brown, Assistant Auditor"—a description which did not apply and never had applied to him, it was held that as it was not proved whether he had shown the pass to a Ticket Examiner before the completion of his journey, he was guilty of an attempt to cheat under this section.⁴ A and L induced the muharrir at a fair to write out a certificate of sale of a mare giving S as the name of the seller and L as the purchaser. A posed as S and affixed thereto his thumb-mark. It was held that as the muharrir was deceived, A and L were guilty of an offence under this section whatever reason they had for deceiving him and inducing him to write a false certificate.⁵

Where a person falsely personated another and induced a Health Officer to deliver to him a health certificate, it was held that he was guilty of this offence.⁶

Personation by a witness.—A witness falsely deposing in another's name should be charged with giving false evidence, under s. 193, and not with cheating by personation.⁷

False representation as to caste.—Where the accused represented to the prosecutor that a girl was . . . consideration of the . . . the Sudra caste, it was

But the former Chief Court of the Punjab decided that a person could not be convicted of an offence under this section for disposing of a girl representing her to be of a different caste from that to which she belonged.⁸ It held that to describe a Brahmin woman as a Kirari,¹⁰ or a sweeper woman whose husband was alive as a jat widow¹¹ was not an offence under this section but one under s. 420.

Misrepresentation as to position in life.—The first illustration indicates that a misrepresentation by false description of one's position in life falls under this section. Where, therefore, a document purported to have been signed by G. L., a putwaree, and it was said that it was signed by G. L., but at a time when G. L. was not a putwaree, it was held that this offence was committed.¹² Similarly,

¹ Looty Bewa, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 24.

² Mohin Chunder Sil, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 42. See Komul Dass, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

³ Looty Bewa, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 24.

⁴ Looty Bewa, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 24.

⁵ Ahmada, (1913) P. R. No. 9 of 1914.

⁶ Packinathan, (1919) 11 L. W. 368.

⁷ Prema Bhika, (1863) 1 B. H. C. 89.

⁸ Mohin Chunder Sil, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 42. See Komul Dass, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

⁹ Joy Kurn Singh v. Man Patuck, (1874) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 41.

¹⁰ Joy Kurn Singh v. Man Patuck, (1874) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 41.

where a person represented a girl to be the daughter of a certain woman of good family, when she was within his knowledge the daughter of another woman, it was held that he was guilty of this offence.¹

False statements as to name and performances.—Entries for two handicaps were sent to the secretary of an athletic meeting, in the name of Sims, containing a statement as to the recent performances of Sims, which were very moderate, and in consequence Sims was given long starts. The entries were not written by either Sims or the accused. At the meeting the accused, who was a good runner, personated Sims, who was absent, and came first in both the races. After the first race the handicapper asked the accused whether he was really Sims, whether the performances given in the entry form were really his, and whether he had never won a race, as stated in the entry. He answered these questions falsely in the affirmative. It was held that the accused was rightly convicted of attempting to obtain property by false pretences.² Under the Code this offence will fall under this section.

417. Whoever cheats shall be punished with imprisonment Punishment for of either description for a term which may extend cheating. to one year, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

This section punishes simple cases of cheating. When there is delivery of any property or destruction of any valuable security s. 420 is the proper section to apply. The offence under this section is non-cognizable, the one under s. 420 is cognizable.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the person deceived delivered to someone, or consented that some person shall retain certain property.

(2) That the person deceived was induced by the accused to do as above.

(3) That such person acted upon such inducement in consequence of his having been deceived by the accused.

(4) That the accused acted fraudulently or dishonestly when so inducing that person.

Or prove (1) that the person deceived did, or omitted to do, something which he was not bound to do or omit to do.

(2) and (3) as above.

(4) That the accused so induced that person intentionally.

(5) That such act or omission caused, or was likely to cause, damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

There must be some evidence of fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of the omission of the act in respect of which the cheating is alleged.³ Subsequent conduct of the accused would be evidence to show the previous dishonest intention.³ The test to be applied in considering whether, on the trial of an indictment charging obtaining money, goods, or credit by false pretences, evidence of acts of the defendant subsequent to those which are the subject of the indictment is admissible, is whether the evidence is relevant. A connection must be shown to exist between the acts which are the subject of the indictment and the acts sought to be proved. The fact that the subsequent acts show that the defendant has committed an offence distinct from that which is charged in the indictment is not sufficient to make evidence

¹ Dhunput Ojhab, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 51.

² Button, [1900] 2 Q. B. 597.

³ Hargovandas, (1872) 9 B. H. C. 448;
Farul, (1886) Cr. R. No. 66 of 1887, Unrep.

Cr. C. 312; Venkatachala Pillai, (1888) 1 Weir 476; Viraswami, (1881) 1 Weir 478.

⁴ Heeramun Hulwye, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

of the subsequent acts admissible if a connection is shown to exist between the transactions.¹ The accused was tried for obtaining eggs by false pretences; it was proved that he had falsely represented by advertisements in newspapers that he was carrying on a bona fide dairyman's business. Evidence was admitted that subsequent to the transaction in question he had obtained eggs from other persons by means of similar advertisements. It was held that such evidence was admissible.² The defendant was indicted for obtaining a cheque by falsely pretending that another cheque, which he then gave to the prosecutor, was good and valid order for the payment of money. The prosecutor deposed that he gave his cheque to the defendant on the faith of the defendant's statement that a cheque, which the defendant then gave to the prosecutor, was a good cheque. The cheque given by the defendant was dishonoured. The defendant stated that when he gave the cheque he expected a payment which would have enabled him to meet it. The defendant was acquitted. He was then tried on a second indictment, charging him with obtaining from other persons three sums of money on three cheques which were dishonoured. To prove guilty knowledge the prosecutor in the first case was called, and gave the same evidence as in the first case. It was held that his evidence was admissible for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge.³

At the trial of an accused person on an indictment charging him with obtaining a pony and cart by false pretences on June 4, 1909, evidence was admitted that, on May 14, 1909, and on July 3, 1909, the accused had obtained provender from other persons by false pretences different from those alleged in the indictment. The accused was convicted. It was held that the evidence was wrongly admitted, as it did not show a systematic course of fraud, but merely that the accused was of a general fraudulent disposition, and therefore it did not tend to prove the falsity of the representations alleged in the indictment; that although there was sufficient evidence of the false pretences alleged to justify the conviction, the evidence as to the other cases might have influenced the jury, and the conviction must, therefore, be set aside.⁴

Evidence with regard to a previous act of fraud alleged to have been committed by an ac-in law.

Evidence Act, the case being one in which the mens rea of the offence depends upon proof of actual facts and not upon the state of the accused's mind.⁵ On a charge against the accused of cheating by falsely representing that he was the dean of an estate and could procure for the complainant an appointment to the vacant post of manager to the estate, and thereby obtaining a sum of money as a pretended security deposit, evidence of instances of similar but unconnected transactions with other persons, before and after the date of the offence charged, was admissible under ss. 14 and 15 of the Evidence Act, not to establish the factum of the offence but to prove that the transaction in issue was one of a systematic series of frauds, and that the intention of the accused on the particular occasion in question was dishonest and fraudulent.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

A criminal finding of a civil fact upon the very same facts has succeeded in satisfying a civil Court upon an application of the case of the justice of his claim. Parties should not be encouraged to resort to the criminal

¹ Smith, (1905) 20 Cox 804.

² Rhodes, (1899) 1 Q. B. 77.

³ Ollis, [1900] 2 Q. B. 758.

⁴ Fisher, [1910] 1 K. B. 149.

⁵ Gokul Khatri, (1924) 29 C.W.N. 483.

⁶ Debedra Prasad, (1906) 36 Cal. 573, 9 C. L. J. 605.

Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can more appropriately be decided by a civil Court.¹

Attempt to cheat.—In a prosecution on a charge of attempting to cheat a certain person, that person need not be the complainant.²

Charge.—In the case of cheating the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed. Whether the words of the charge are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the accusation which he has got to meet depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. The omission to state the manner of the cheating is regarded as material or not according as the accused has or has not in fact been misled by the omission and the omission has or has not occasioned a failure of justice.³

The charge should run thus :

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows.—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, (set out the manner in which the cheating was committed), and thereby committed cheating, an offence punishable under s. 417 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Where an accused person attempts to cheat a whole body of villagers and speaks to them in a body and not to each individual villager for the purpose, he may be tried on one charge for each attempt to get money from him.⁴ There should be as many charges as there are persons cheated.⁵

418. Whoever cheats with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause wrongful loss to a person whose interest in the transaction to which the cheating relates, he was bound either by law, or by a legal contract, to protect, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Cheating with knowledge that wrongful loss may ensue to person whose interest offender is bound to protect.

COMMENT.

This section applies to cases of cheating by a guardian, a trustee, a solicitor, an agent, a manager of a Hindu family, a kurnavan or turnard in Malabar or by directors or managers of a bank in fraud of the shareholders. It is the abuse of trust that is visited with severe punishment.

False balance-sheets.—If the directors, manager and accountant, dishonestly, that is, to obtain wrongful gain for themselves or to cause wrongful loss to others, put before the shareholders balance-sheets which they know to be materially false and misleading and likely to mislead the public as to the condition of the bank, and conceal the same, they are liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

The nature of false statements, the ease or difficulty with which their truth or falsity can be ascertained, and the guilty knowledge of each director cannot be presumed from the fact that he authorises the issue of a balance-sheet containing false entries. The nature of false statements, the ease or difficulty with which their truth or falsity

¹ Bishan Das, (1909) P. R. No. 33 of 1910.

² Malader Lal v. Dhonraj Maurya, (1908) 12 C. W. N. 750.

³ Kedarnath Chakravarti, (1924) 41 C. L. J. 172.

⁴ Johan Subarna, (1905) 2 C. L. J. 618.

⁵ Kailash Chandra Pal, (1918) 46 Cal. 712.

⁶ Moos, (1893) 16 All. 88. See Clifford, (1913) 7 L. B. R. 143.

can be ascertained, the course of business of the company, and the position, experience and attainment of each individual director, are some of the circumstances that should be considered.¹

PRACTICE.

- Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused cheated some person (see s. 417).
 (2) That he was under a legal obligation to protect the interest of that person.
 (3) That the cheating had relation thereto.
 (4) That the accused knew he was likely to cause wrongful loss to such person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, cheated XY by doing an act, to wit—, with the knowledge that you were thereby likely to cause wrongful loss to the said XY whose interest in the transaction to which the cheating related you were bound either by law (or a legal contract) to protect, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 418 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

419. Whoever cheats by personation shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for cheating by personation.

COMMENT.

This section provides punishment for the offence described in s. 416.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused cheated the complainant.

(2) That he did so by pretending to be some other person; or by knowingly substituting one person for another; or by representing that he, or some other person, is a person other than the person he really is.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at —, pretending to be (specify the person personated) [or knowingly substituted A for B] or represented that you or A were (so and so), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 419 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

420. Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly¹ induces the person deceived to deliver any property² to any person, or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security,³ or anything which is signed or sealed, and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property.

¹ Seddon v. Loane, (1910) 9 M. L. T. 20.

COMMENT.

Simple cheating is punishable under s. 417. But where there is delivery or destruction of any property or alteration or destruction of any valuable security resulting from the act of the person deceiving, the proper section to apply is this section and not s. 417. Section 417 covers cases of cheating in which though there is fraud yet there is no intention of causing wrongful loss, or wrongful gain. The word 'fraudulently' is not used in s. 420.

1. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 21 supra. The word "dishonestly" implies a deliberate intention to cause wrongful gain, or wrongful loss, and when this is coupled with cheating the offence is punishable under this section.¹ A young boy was married to a girl who was much older. The girl having grown up to womanhood, the mother and the elder brother of the boy suggested to the father of the girl to return certain ornaments which had been given to the bride at the time of marriage and thus put an end to the marriage. The father called a panchayat of leading men, and in accordance with their advice the ornaments demanded were made over and a formal receipt written and signed by the parties. Subsequently, the bride's father charged the boy's mother and brother for cheating. It was held that the charge of cheating could not be entertained as it was found that there was no dishonest inducement.² Two contracts were entered into between the complainant and the accused, one for the sale by the complainant of a certain number of shares of a particular kind and the other for the purchase by the complainant of certain shares of another kind. Subsequently, when the position between the parties was that the contract regarding the purchase by the complainant was either cancelled or so disputed that it could not be enforced except by litigation the accused induced the complainant to part with his shares promising to give him back cash for it but instead of doing it he offered to credit the value thereof against the sum due to him under the other contract and subsequently tendered the amount less the loss sustained by him for the non-fulfilment of the other contract; it was held that the action of the accused was dishonest and fraudulent within the meaning of this section.³

2. 'Deliver any property.'—Property in this section refers only to moveable property.⁴ 'Moveable property' is defined in s. 22, supra. It includes money.⁵ A certificate of having passed an examination is 'property' within the meaning of this section.⁶ So is a promissory note. The accused who had left certain promissory notes with the complainant as security for a loan, dishonestly induced him to return the promissory notes pretending that they were required to collect money from the debtors with the aid of which the complainant would be paid, but instead of doing so disposed of them and did not pay the complainant. It was held that the act of the accused in dishonestly inducing the complainant to return the same to him constituted cheating.⁷ When property is delivered by means of cheating the offence falls under the first clause.⁸

Delivery of money.—The accused falsely representing himself to be the manager of an estate induced one G to borrow some money and pay it to him as advance of security money to be deposited for a post promised by him to G. He then put off G from time to time and at length when he was found out, he promised to return the money. It was held that the offence of cheating was completed as soon as the

¹ Ba Shein, (1920) 13 B. L. T. 239.

² Jumman, (1923) 21 A. L. J. R. 321.

³ Ancin Kumar Chatterji, (1921) 25 G. W. N. 618.

⁴ Abdul Akal, (1882) 2 A. W. N. 6.

⁵ Birendra Lal Bhaduri, (1904) 32 Cal. 22.

⁶ Local Government v. Gangaram, (1921) 18 N. L. R. 52.

⁷ Venkatagurunatha Sastri, (1923) 45 M. L. J. 133, 17 L. W. 580.

⁸ Sadanand Doss, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 29.
Baraji, (1875) Untep. Cr. C. 96.

accused obtained the money by a promise which he knew he could not fulfil. The fact that long afterwards the accused paid back under pressure a part of the money, did not in any way affect his criminality. The test of criminality is what was in his mind at the time when the money was given to him and whether he at that time intended to repay the same.¹ G. by falsely representing to L. that G. had been instructed by a competent authority to recruit unskilled labour for service in Africa and that G. would, on payment of a certain sum of money as a fee for registering L's name, be able to engage L. for service in that country, induced L. to pay G. the said fee, it was held that G. had committed this offence.² Where an accused person had taken a ransom for the restoration of stolen property, and failed to return that property to the person who had paid him the ransom, it was held that he ought to be convicted of the more serious offence of cheating under this section.³ The accused drew a hundi and borrowed money on it, without assuring himself that the drawee, with whom he had no previous dealings and who was not supplied with funds, would honour the same. The money so borrowed was spent by him on his own purposes. The hundi, when presented for payment, was dishonoured by the drawee. The accused, though apprized of the dishonouring, took no steps either to have the hundi honoured or to repay the money borrowed on the hundi; but made himself scarce. It was held that he was guilty of cheating under this section.⁴ Accused adulterated saccharine with bicarbonate of soda and put the mixture into tins which he gave to a broker to sell. The broker sold the mixture as genuine saccharine and received money for it, which he made over to the accused. It was held that the accused was guilty of cheating and abetting that offence.⁵

Suppression of facts.—Mere suppression of some facts at the time of borrowing money does not amount to cheating where there is no evidence of either active deception or dishonest or fraudulent action. So where a person mortgaged to this defect to his creditor.⁶

Delivery of money under an immoral contract.—The accused agreed to let her daughter on hire to the complainant for concubinage for one year in consideration of Rs. 70, out of which she received Rs. 35 in advance. Later, she refused to carry out the contract or to return the advance. She was convicted of cheating. It was held, reversing the conviction, that a party to an immoral contract should not be allowed to prosecute on a criminal charge when he could not get performance of the contract in a civil Court.⁷

Delivery of goods.—A person whose duty it was to ascertain and report the current rates in the market, by arrangement with persons in the market, reported rates higher than those really current, and in consequence of which higher rates were paid to sellers than they were entitled to, it was held that he had committed this offence.⁸ Where the accused induced the complainant to deliver to him a bicycle under false representations that he was a commission agent and that the machine

¹ Debedra Prasad, (1909) 36 Cal. 573, 9 C. L. J. 695.

² Girdhari Lal, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 26 of 1910.

³ Ngo Shan, (1922) 1 B. L. J. 179.

⁴ Uttam Lal Narottamdas, (1920) 23 Bom. L. R. 340, 6 Bom. Cr. C. 37.

⁵ Bholasingh Amarsingh, (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 211, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 139.

⁶ Hari Kishan, (1920) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 40 of 1910.

⁷ Jani Hira, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 602, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 144.

⁸ Parveshar Jai, (1886) 8 All. 201.

was required for an up-country purchaser, but after taking its delivery he negotiated its sale to a customer in Bombay, it was held that the offence of cheating and dishonestly inducing the delivery of property was complete as soon as this bicycle was handed over.¹ Where A went to an opium shop with B's ticket and explicitly or by implication represented himself to be B, thereby induced the shop-keeper to deliver to him a certain quantity of opium, it was held that A had committed the offence of cheating by personation; and as opium was actually delivered in consequence of the cheating, he should be convicted under this section.² The accused, by making a false representation that he was an employee of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, obtained rupees ten as subscription from the Health Officer of that Corporation towards the funds of a charitable society. The money was duly made over by the accused to the charity, but he was subsequently charged with the offence of cheating and was convicted under this section. It was held that the conviction and sentence should be set aside, there being no such deception in this case as to cause "wrongful loss" or "wrongful gain."³

Obtaining of a certificate.—A railway company offered some concession rates to student travellers, and a certificate was presented by somebody—not the accused—containing the names of students who had not applied for the certificate which the accused did not know and the endorsement of the railway official 'may be issued' was made thereon, and the accused thereafter presented the same for the necessary pass to be issued. The company issued the pass and arrested the accused. It was held that the accused being himself entitled to travel at the reduced rate was not guilty of any fraudulent intent, no fraudulent intention could be assumed on the part of the accused to use the pass for persons not entitled to travel at the reduced rates and that as the company had not been defrauded the accused could not be convicted.⁴ A person who obtains a certificate from a Deputy Inspector of Schools by stating untruly that he passed the examination in a certain year, when another person of the same name did, acts fraudulently within the meaning of s. 415, and is guilty of an offence punishable under this section.⁵

3. 'Valuable security.'—See s 30, supra. A 'decree' does not come within the definition of a "valuable security", it merely declares the existence of legal rights or the extinguishment, extension, transfer or restriction of legal rights, etc.; the rights are there, etc., and all that the decree does is that it formally expresses the adjudication by the Court on the rights of the parties. Therefore a 'decree' is not a "valuable security". Even if a 'decree' did satisfy the definition of a "valuable security," there is no delivery of any property when the Court passes a decree, because the original decree remains in Court, and the term "valuable security" can only apply to a decree which may be supplied by a copy of the decree. The complainant was taken to a village on the pretence that a buffalo would be bought for him and that the money necessary for this purpose would be advanced to him. He was then given a large amount of liquor to drink and when in the state of intoxication a document purporting to be a bond was executed and his signature was obtained. This document was a deed of divorce of his wife who was then taken away by some of the accused. It was held that the offence committed came within the purview of this section and not s. 417.⁶

An acknowledgment of receipt of an insured parcel is not a "valuable security." It is merely evidence that a parcel of some sort was delivered to the addressee and it cannot operate as a discharge of any liability. Where the accused, in order to

¹ Banaji Framji Munshi, (1900) 2 Bom. L. R. 621.

² Nga Po Lu, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 356.

³ Ashutosh Mallik, (1905) 33 Cal. 50.

⁴ James Fletcher, (1910) 1 M. W. N. 510.

⁵ Local Government v. Gangaram, (1921) 18 N. L. R. 52.

⁶ Charu Chandra Ghose, (1923) 39 C. L. J. 122, 132, 28 C. W. N. 414.

⁷ Bhikhar Singh, (1920) 3 L. L. J. 263.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused removed, concealed, or delivered the property; or that he transferred it or caused it to be transferred to some one.

(2) That such transfer was without adequate consideration.

(3) That the accused thereby intended to prevent, or knew he was thereby likely to prevent, the distribution of that property according to law among his creditors, or creditors of another person.

(4) That he acted as above dishonestly or fraudulently.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Jurisdiction.—The Magistrate's jurisdiction to entertain a complaint under this section is not taken away by the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, III of 1909,¹ or the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 69.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly (or fraudulently) removed (or concealed, or delivered to a certain person, to wit—, without prevent or of the said
; and that dian Penal

Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

422. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently prevents any debt or demand due to himself or to any other person from being made available according to law for payment of his debts or the debts of such other person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Dishonestly or fraudulently preventing debt being available for creditors.

COMMENT.

This section, like the preceding one, is intended to prevent the defrauding of creditors by masking property. Any proceedings to prevent the attachment and sale of debts due to the accused will fall under it. The offence consists in the dishonest or fraudulent evasion of one's own liability.

CASES.

Where A entered into an agreement with B not to compromise a case with C, because he had assigned the benefit of the suit to B as a security for the due payment of an instalment of money and A notwithstanding did afterwards compromise the suit with C, it was held that A could not be convicted under this section unless the compromise was made dishonestly or fraudulently towards B.³ The petitioners' estate was under mortgage and in the management of certain persons under certain conditions as to payment of moneys realised by them. In execution of a decree obtained by the managers in a suit brought by them in the name of the petitioners, a certain under-tenure was sold for Rs. 3,000. The judgment-debtor arranged with the petitioners that on payment of Rs. 1,000 the sale should be set aside and he accordingly paid that sum into Court, and an application was

¹ Mulshankar Harinand Bhat, (1910) 12 Bom. L. R. 750.

L. W. 283.

² Segu Baliah v. N. Ramaswami, (1917) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 46.

³ Nobin Chunder Mudduck, (1874) 22

made by the accused to draw out the money upon which no order was made. They were, thereupon, convicted, at commit an offence under this section money paid into Court might have gagors, but such conduct would not necessarily be regarded as dishonest or fraudulent so as to render the accused liable to punishment; their attempt to get the money being more to put an end to the management than to prevent money from being available for the payment of their debt under the mortgage.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the debt or demand was due to the accused, or some other person.

(2) That the accused prevented such debt or demand from being made legally available for his debts, or for debts of another person.

(3) That he did as above dishonestly or fraudulently.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

423. Whoever dishonestly¹ or fraudulently² signs, executes or becomes a party to any deed or instrument³ which purports to transfer or subject to any charge any property, or any interest therein, and which contains any false statement relating to the consideration for such transfer⁴ or charge, or relating to the person or persons for whose use or benefit it is really intended to operate, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

This section deals with fraudulent and fictitious conveyances and trust. If the consideration for the sale of immoveable property is, with the consent of the purchaser, exaggerated in a deed of sale in order to defeat the claim of the pre-emptor, the purchaser will be guilty of this offence.² In such cases it is necessary to prove the existence of a right of pre-emption in respect of the subject-matter of such sale, as it is not an offence if the property sold is not subject to such a right.³

Under this section the dishonest execution of a benami deed will be punishable. The institution of a civil suit is not a condition precedent to a maintenance of a charge in a criminal Court for this offence.⁴

1. 'Dishonestly.'—See s 24, supra.

2. 'Fraudulently.'—See s 25, supra. This word does not connote deprivation of property. It is not essential that the person deceived or to be deceived should be the same as the person injured or intended to be injured.⁵

3. 'Any deed or instrument.'—A kabuliat is not a document contemplated under this section. Although a kabuliat, when accepted, operates as a lease for some purposes, it is not a document which purports to transfer or subject to any charge any property or any interest therein.⁶

¹ Hara Kumary Choudhary v. R. Sani, (1900) 28 Cal. 314.

² Gardila Mal, (1901) P. R. No. 10 of 1902; Lachman Das, (1907) P. R. No. 16 of 1907;

Mahabir Singh, (1902) 25 All. 31.

³ Chakraborty, (1907) P. R. No. 16 of 1906.

⁴ Umaro Singh, (1883) 3 A. W. N. 209.

⁵ Loyal Remembrancer v. Ahs. Lal Mandal, (1921) 45 Cal. 911.

⁶ Mohammad Kajari Ali v. Jorabdi Nasar, (1919) 46 Cal. 256.

4. 'False statement relating to the consideration for such transfer.'—The law does not make punishable every false statement in an instrument of transfer. The false statement in order to become criminal must relate to the consideration or to the person to be benefited by it. The word 'consideration' cannot mean the property transferred. A statement that the vendee purchased the whole land while the vendor could only sell part of it, is not one coming under this section.¹ Where an accused person had unsuccessfully sought to obtain a woman in marriage and thereafter made and registered an agreement in her favour falsely reciting that he had married her, and purporting to convey to her a plot of land in lieu of her dower, it was held, that he had an intention to cause injury to her and her husband, and to support his own false claim to that status, and that he was guilty under this section.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused signed, executed, or became a party to the deed, or instrument in question.

(2) That the purport of such document was to transfer, or to subject to a charge, the property or any interest in question.

(3) That such document contained a false statement relating to the consideration, or relating to the person for whose use or benefit it was really intended to operate.

(4) That the accused did as above dishonestly or fraudulently.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

424. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently conceals or removes any property of himself or any other person, or dishonestly or fraudulently assists in the concealment or removal thereof, or dishonestly releases any demand or claim to which he is entitled, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Dishonest or fraudulent removal or concealment of property.

COMMENT:

This section provides for cases not coming within the purview of ss. 421 and 422. It contemplates such a concealment or removal of property from the place in which it is deposited, as can be considered dishonest or fraudulent, whether the fraud is intended to be practised on creditors or partners.³

CASES.

Removal by a partner.—Where one of the several partners removed the partnership books at night, and when questioned denied having done so, this offence was held to have been committed.⁴

Removal during attachment is an offence.—Where a judgment-debtor, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force, this offence was held to have been committed.⁵

Removal under an illegal order is no offence.—A removal of crops in violation of an order which the person making it has no authority to make, does not constitute

¹ Mania Goundan, (1911) 37 Mad. 47.

² Legal Remembrancer v. Ahi Lal Mandol, (1921) 48 Cal. 911.

³ Cour Benode Dutt, (1873) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Obayya, (1898) 22 Mad. 151; Dora Karan, (1899) 1 Bom. L. R. 515; Ayyappa Goundan, (1887) 1 Weir 485; Mokam Ayyappa, (1893) 8 M. L. J. 254.

this offence.¹ Removal of crops to avoid an illegal distraint is not an offence under this section.²

Removal of crops by tenants.—Where ryots holding land on varam tenure removed crops for the purpose of protecting them from injury or damage owing to delay or refusal on the part of the Zemindar to perform his part in harvesting or division, it was held that such a removal was not dishonest. But where it was proved that the crops had been removed dishonestly or fraudulently, it was held that this offence was committed, even though the Zemindar, under the terms of the tenancy, acquired no property in the share due to him until the ryots had delivered it to him.³ Similarly, where the accused who was a ryot under the Madras Estates Land Act and who was bound to share the produce of his land with the landholder in a certain proportion, dishonestly concealed or removed the produce, thus preventing the landholder from taking his due share, it was held that the accused was guilty under this section apart from the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act.⁴

Removal during bona fide dispute.—Where the accused was convicted under this section, for dishonestly removing certain property from a shop upon which were the padlocks of two widows and it appeared that he removed the property at the instance of the widow who claimed to be entitled to the whole of it. It was held that if eventually it be decided that the other widow was not entitled to a share in the property, it would follow that the accused's action in removing the property from the locked shop was not a dishonest one within the meaning of this section.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused concealed or removed the property; or that he assisted in doing so.

(2) That he did as above dishonestly, or fraudulently.

Or prove (1) that the accused was entitled to the demand or claim in question.

(2) That he released the same

(3) That he did so dishonestly, or with intent to defraud.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

The legality or formality of the mode of attachment allowed by a civil Court is not a matter for a Deputy Magistrate's consideration.⁶ Civil rights are not to be disposed of in criminal Courts.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly (or fraudulently) concealed (or removed) a certain property, to wit—, belonging to yourself (or to—) [or dishonestly or fraudulently assisted in the concealment or removal thereof; or dishonestly released a certain demand, to wit—] and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 424 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Mischief.

425. Whoever, with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person,¹ causes the destruction

Mischief.

¹ Barua Magata, (1882) 1 Weir 483; Ananda Muttusami Aiyar, (1883) 1 Weir 484.

² Gopalasamy, (1902) 25 Mad. 729.

³ Subudh Rantho v. Balarama Pudi, (1902) 26 Mad. 481.

⁴ Sivanupandya Thevar, (1914) 38 Mad. 793; Kuldeep Pendey, (1916) 1 P. L. J. 353;

Lolu Gope, (1917) 1 P. L. W. 691.

⁵ Khushi Ram, (1920) 3 L. L. J. 99, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 6 of 1921.

⁶ Braro Kishore Dutt, (1867) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 17.

⁷ (1868) 1 Weir 483.

4. 'False statement relating to the consideration for such transfer.'—The law does not make punishable every false statement in an instrument of transfer. The false statement in order to become criminal must relate to the consideration or to the person to be benefited by it. The word 'consideration' cannot mean the property transferred. A statement that the vendee purchased the whole land while the vendor could only sell part of it, is not one coming under this section.¹ Where an accused person had unsuccessfully sought to obtain a woman in marriage and thereafter made and registered an agreement in her favour falsely reciting that he had married her, and purporting to convey to her a plot of land in lieu of her dower, it was held, that he had an intention to cause injury to her and her husband, and to support his own false claim to that status, and that he was guilty under this section.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused signed, executed, or became a party to the deed, or instrument in question.

(2) That the purport of such document was to transfer, or to subject to a charge, the property or any interest in question.

(3) That such document contained a false statement relating to the consideration, or relating to the person for whose use or benefit it was really intended to operate.

(4) That the accused did as above dishonestly or fraudulently.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

424. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently conceals or removes any property of himself or any other person, or dishonestly or fraudulently assists in the concealment or removal thereof, or dishonestly releases any demand or claim to which he is entitled, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Dishonest or fraudulent removal or concealment of property.

COMMENT:

This section provides for cases not coming within the purview of ss. 421 and 422. It contemplates such a concealment or removal of property from the place in which it is deposited, as can be considered dishonest or fraudulent, whether the fraud is intended to be practised on creditors or partners.³

CASES.

Removal by a partner.—Where one of the several partners removed the partnership books at night, and when questioned denied having done so, this offence was held to have been committed.⁴

Removal during attachment is an offence.—Where a judgment-debtor, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force, this offence was held to have been committed.⁵

Removal under an illegal order is no offence.—A removal of crops in violation of an order which the person making it has no authority to make, does not constitute

¹ Mania Goundan, (1911) 37 Mad. 47.

² Legal Remembrancer v. Ahi Lal Mandal, (1921) 48 Cal. 911.

³ Gour Benode Dutt, (1873) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Obayya, (1898) 22 Mad. 151; Daya Karsan, (1899) 1 Bom. L. R. 515; Appaya Goundan, (1883) 1 Weir 485; Molam Abayya, (1895) 8 M. L. J. 259.

this offence.¹ Removal of crops to avoid an illegal distraint is not an offence under this section.²

Removal of crops by tenants.—Where ryots holding land on varam tenure removed crops for the purpose of protecting them from injury or damage owing to delay or refusal on the part of the Zemindar to perform his part in harvesting or division, it was held that such a removal was not dishonest. But where it was proved that the crops had been removed dishonestly or fraudulently, it was held that this offence was committed, even though the Zemindar, under the terms of the tenancy, acquired no property in the share due to him until the ryots had delivered it to him.³ Similarly, where the accused who was a ryot under the Madras Estates Land Act and who was bound to share the produce of his land with the landholder in a certain proportion, dishonestly concealed or removed the produce, thus preventing the landholder from taking his due share, it was held that the accused was guilty under this section apart from the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act.⁴

Removal during bona fide dispute.—Where the accused was convicted under this section, for dishonestly removing certain property from a shop upon which were the padlocks of two widows and it appeared that he removed the property at the instance of the widow who claimed to be entitled to the whole of it. It was held that if eventually it be decided that the other widow was not entitled to a share in the property, it would follow that the accused's action in removing the property from the locked shop was not a dishonest one within the meaning of this section.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused concealed or removed the property ; or that he assisted in doing so.

(2) That he did as above dishonestly, or fraudulently.

Or prove (1) that the accused was entitled to the demand or claim in question.

(2) That he released the same

(3) That he did so dishonestly, or with intent to defraud.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

The legality or formality of the mode of attachment allowed by a civil Court is not a matter for a Deputy Magistrate's consideration.⁶ Civil rights are not to be disposed of in criminal Courts.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly (or fraudulently) concealed (or removed) a certain property, to wit—, belonging to yourself (or to—) [or dishonestly or fraudulently assisted in the concealment or removal thereof ; or dishonestly released a certain demand, to wit—] and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s 424 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Mischief.

425. Whoever, with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person,¹ causes the destruction

Mischief.

¹ Borers Mapala, (1882) 1 Weir 483.

² Ananda Muthusami Aiyar, (1883) 1 Weir 484.

³ Gopalasamy, (1902) 25 Mad. 729.

⁴ Subbali Rantho v. Balarama Pudi, (1902) 26 Mad. 481.

⁵ Sirupandya Theras, (1914) 38 Mad. 793; Kuldip Pendey, (1916) 1 P. L. J. 353.

⁶ Lala Gope, (1917) 1 P. L. W. 691.

⁷ Kanali Ram, (1920) 3 L. L. J. 99, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 6 of 1921.

⁸ Brajo Kishore Dutt, (1867) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 17.

⁹ (1868) 1 Weir 453.

of any property or any such change in any property² or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously,³ commits "mischief."

Explanation 1.—It is not essential to the offence of mischief that the offender should intend to cause loss or damage to the owner of the property injured or destroyed. It is sufficient if he intends to cause, or knows that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to any person by injuring any property, whether it belongs to that person or not.

Explanation 2.—Mischief may be committed by an act affecting property belonging to the person who commits the act, or to that person and others jointly.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A voluntarily burns a valuable security belonging to Z intending to cause wrongful loss to Z. A has committed mischief.

(b) A introduces water into an ice-house belonging to Z, and thus causes the ice to melt, intending wrongful loss to Z. A has committed mischief.

(c) A voluntarily throws into a river a ring belonging to Z, with the intention of thereby causing wrongful loss to Z. A has committed mischief.

(d) A, knowing that his effects are about to be taken in execution in order to satisfy a debt due from him to Z destroys those effects, with the intention of thereby preventing Z from obtaining satisfaction of the debt, and of thus causing damage to Z. A has committed mischief.

(e) A, having insured a ship, voluntarily causes the same to be cast away, with the intention of causing damage to the underwriters. A has committed mischief.

(f) A causes a ship to be cast away intending thereby to cause damage to Z, who has lent money on bottomry on the ship. A has committed mischief.

(g) A, having joint property with Z in a horse, shoots the horse, intending thereby to cause wrongful loss to Z. A has committed mischief.

(h) A, knowing that his effects are about to be taken in execution in order to satisfy a debt due from him to Z destroys those effects, with the intention of thereby preventing Z from obtaining satisfaction of the debt, and of thus causing damage to Z. A has committed mischief.

426. Whoever commits mischief shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

The section deals only with a physical injury from a physical cause.¹

Ingredients.—This section necessitates three things² :—

1. Intention or knowledge of likelihood to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person.
2. Causing the destruction of some property or any change in it or in its situation.
3. Such destruction or change must destroy or diminish its value or utility or affect it injuriously.

¹ Moti Lal, (1901) 24 All. 155, 156.

² (1853) 4 M. H. C. App. 15; (1874) 7

M. H. C. App. 39; Nga Tha Zan, (1901) 8 Burma L. R. 80.

⁹ Athi Ayyar, (1920) 14 L. W. 728.

the earthen pots and put out of order a water-wheel of the well from which the complainant watered the crop raised by him on the land in dispute. It was held that the damage caused by D amounted to mischief. Batty, J., said: "The applicant's pleader, I understand, is unable to contend that if a trespasser left his watch in the room of another person, that would justify that other person in smashing the watch or throwing it down a well."¹

Accident.—Where the accused who were employed in floating timber through a bridge, struck the arch of the bridge with some of the logs, it was held that this offence was not committed.²

No mischief if no wrongful loss or damage is caused to the public or to any person or if the act amounts only to an invasion of a civil right.—Where the accused cut down crops planted by the complainant on land to which he had no right whatever³; where the accused was found catching fish in a public river, the right of fishing in which was let out by Government to another but no fencing was put up to shut up the fish in any manner⁴; where the accused of a person⁵; where a person innocently removed a b... front of his house which impaired his ingress and egress to or from his house⁶; where an agent of a landlord accompanied by a bailiff broke open the door of a room, in his chawl, in the possession of his tenant, in execution of a distress warrant issued against the tenant for non-payment of rent⁷; where the owner of an animal buried its carcass to prevent the mahars (low class people) of a village from taking off its skin⁸; where a person, in a bona fide belief that the construction of a wall on his land was a civil trespass, destroyed the construction⁹; where members of a... in Municipal limits to be cut for public Committee as a body¹⁰; where persons took cattle to a pound whereby their owners were subjected to a fine¹¹; where the reversioner of a mortgagor sold some of the bricks of the mortgaged house, which had tumbled down¹²; where a person dug out tombs of the forefathers¹³; and where the accused, members of way, pulled down a wall obstructing the complainant¹⁴, it was held in all these

The fact that for years a deity was allowed to be brought once a year underneath a tree standing on the land of the accused for public worship, was not sufficient to divest the owner of the land and of the tree standing thereon of his ownership and not to amount to a dedication of the tree to the deity or the public, and the accused, who cut the tree, was therefore not guilty of mischief.¹⁵

Where the accused, a servant of one R, acting solely in the interest of his master, removed or damaged some bamboos which belonged to the estate of his master which was under the management of the Court of Wards, it was held that the act of the accused did not amount to this offence inasmuch as by his act no wrongful loss was caused to anybody, not even to the Court of Wards. The Court said: "It is a well-known rule of law that a man may commit mischief by

¹ Dinkar Chintaman Patkar, (1904) 7 Bom. L. R. 86, 87.

² 10 Cr. App. 40

³ 128.

⁴ me, (1888)

⁵ Dinobandhu

⁶ r. J. 17.

⁷ 573.

⁸ 10 of 1895.

⁹ Unrep. Cr. L. 140.

¹⁰ Kailashree Curstedj, (1898) Unrep. Cr. C. 948.

¹¹ Gowinda Panja, (1884) 8 Bom. 295.

¹² Shankar Lal, (1887) 7 A. W. N. 101; 10 Cr. App. 209.

¹³ 9 of 1878.

¹⁴ 158.

¹⁵ Tanout

¹⁶ r. 463;

¹⁷ (1889) 1

¹⁸ Weir 496.

¹⁹ Dharmalinga Mysali, (1914) 39 Mad. 67.

²⁰ Venkatapurmanandam, (1902) 1 Weir 496.

damaging his own property, provided he does so in order to cause wrongful loss to somebody else, or knowing it to be likely to cause wrongful loss to somebody else. But it can hardly be said that a man who damages his own estate, although he has at present only a qualified interest, damages the trustees in possession, whose only object is to preserve the estate for the benefit of the owner."¹

2. 'Causes the destruction of any property or any such change in any property.'—It is the essence of this offence that the perpetrator must cause the destruction of property or such change in it as destroys or diminishes its value or utility. To cut a crop that is grown to be cut is not to destroy it, or affect it injuriously.² But walking across a field of long grass is causing damage to the grass³, making a breach in the wall of a canal is an act which causes such a change in the property as destroys or diminishes its value or affects it injuriously and therefore amounts to mischief.⁴ The section contemplates a physical injury from a physical cause. Certain Hindus present at a caste dinner had sat down to partake of the food which had been served to them, when certain other members of the caste came, and, after telling those who were seated to move to another place which they refused to do, threw down a shoe amongst the men who were seated. The persons who threw the shoe were convicted of mischief inasmuch as their action had polluted the food, and had, from a Hindu religious point of view, rendered it unfit to be eaten. It was held that they were not guilty of mischief.⁵

The accused threw large pieces of brick at the back of the complainant's house, complainant being at the time on the ground in front of the house and there being no one in the house. It was held that the accused was guilty of mischief because roofs and walls of dwelling houses were not put up to be pelted at with brick-bats and their owners had a right to be protected from even hurts and marks being made in and on them without their consent.⁶

'Property' means some tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed, but does not include an easement. The accused with intent to cause wrongful loss or damage to the complainant caused the destruction of certain stairs. The Magistrate found that the accused was the owner of the stairs but that the complainant had the right to use them, and convicted the accused. It was held, quashing the conviction, that the stairs were not property and could not be considered

... title from a village branch postmaster was requested to sign an acknowledgment for the article received by him, but instead of returning the same duly signed he tore it up and threw it on the ground, it was held that the accused was guilty of mischief. The Court said: "The act of tearing is an act of mischief, and the postal receipt is the property of the post office, which has some value, however small. The tearing of such a receipt causes damage to the post office, that is wrongful loss to it, and there can be no question that the accused is liable under s. 426 for his act."⁶ The destruction of a document evidencing an agreement void for immorality constitutes this offence as it can be used as evidence for other collateral purposes.⁷

'Change' means physical change in composition or form. A change in value is not sufficient to constitute mischief.

3. 'Destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously.'—It is highly essential that the property regarding which the offence is alleged to have been committed must have been destroyed or its value or utility must have been

¹ Ma Ngein Gale v. Nga Sein, (1909) 5 L. B. R. 100, F. R.

² Keru, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 387.

³ Sulha Singh, (1905) P. R. No. 24 of 1905.

⁴ Vyapuri, (1882) 5 Mād. 401.

the earthen pots and put out of order a water-wheel of the well from which the complainant watered the crop raised by him on the land in dispute. It was held that the damage caused by D amounted to mischief. Batty, J., said: "The applicant's pleader, I understand, is unable to contend that if a trespasser left his watch in the room of another person, that would justify that other person in smashing the watch or throwing it down a well."¹

Accident.—Where the accused who were employed in floating timber through a bridge, struck the arch of the bridge with some of the logs, it was held that this offence was not committed.²

No mischief if no wrongful loss or damage is caused to the public or to any person. If the act amounts only to an invasion of a civil right.—Where the accused cut them by a priest, it was held that they had committed no offence.¹ The accused who were servants of S were convicted by a Magistrate under this section and s. 143 for having cut a channel from a jhil which was in the possession of B and by so doing let water and fish from the jhil. The Magistrate had found that the land adjoining the jhil across which the channel had been cut had been in the possession of S. On appeal, it was contended that the accused had a perfect right to make the cutting in their master's land. It was held that though they had that right, it did not follow that they ' . . . ' and through the bank of the jhil, which, . . . the water, were in the possession of B, . . . on that ground.² A game-keeper was prosecuted for unlawfully and maliciously killing a dog which was at the time near an aviary in which pheasants, the property of the appellant's master, were confined for breeding purposes. It was held that he was not liable if he acted under the bona fide belief that what he was doing was necessary for the protection of his master's property.³

Negligence is not mischief.—Where the accused set fire to a heap of rubbish in his own field, and a gust of wind came and carried the flame to an adjacent offence of mischief.⁴ Where the accused whilst driving his bullock cart pulled the bullock in the wrong direction and thereby dashed the pole of his yoke against the footboard of the complainant's carriage and caused damage, it was held that the accused was not guilty of mischief.⁵

Master not liable for the negligence of his servant.—An owner who lived elsewhere could not, in the absence of express malice, be held criminally liable for the negligence of his contractor in digging the foundations of a house then being built without proper precautions.⁶

Cattle.—In the case of mischief done by straying of cattle, mere neglect or carelessness on the part of the owner of cattle to keep them from straying into fields is not sufficient.⁷ To warrant a conviction it must be proved that he actually and wilfully caused the cattle to enter, knowing that by so doing he was likely to cause damage,⁸ or at least that he was present and able to restrain the animal from causing damage and did not restrain it from so doing.⁹ The prosecution is bound to show that there was an intention to cause wrongful loss or damage.

But owners of cattle, who, knowing their animals to be not properly provided with fodder and accustomed to stray in search of food, intentionally omit to secure their cattle or neglect to take reasonable precautions for their care and custody, may be guilty of this offence. The omission or neglect however, must be such as to have an active effect conducing to the result, as a link in a chain of facts from which an intention to bring about the result may be inferred.¹⁰ Where the accused

¹ Vaigula Fernandez Vas, (1891) 1 Weir 459.

² Shashi Bhushan Bose v Gobind Chandra Roy, (1903) 7 C. W. N. 663.

³ Miles v Hutchings, [1903] 2 K. B. 714.

⁴ Per Russell, Ag. C. J., and Heston, J., (Aston, J., dissenting), in Nandeyappanunda, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 831.

⁵ Thornett Madathil Pater, (1886) 1 Weir R. 493.

⁶ Sriek Chandra Sircar, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 313.

⁷ Narew, (1882) Unrep. Cr. C. 185, Ranga.

(1883) Unrep. Cr. C. 189; Cr. R. 19th April 1883. Hyderabad, (1884) Unrep. Cr. C. 190, (1871) 6 H. M. C. App. 36.

⁸ Arao Sircar, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 29; Forbes v. Girish Chandra Bhattacharyya, (1878) 6 Beng. L. R. App. 3, 14 W. R. (Cr.) 31; Bai Doya, (1883) 7 Bom. 126; Shank Ray, (1884) 9 Bom. 173; Mehdi Hasan, (1907) 29 All. 585.

⁹ Narew, (1882) Unrep. Cr. C. 357; Falku, (1887) Unrep. Cr. C. 318, Cr. R. No. 5 of 1887.

¹⁰ Thornett Madathil Pater, sup.

diminished. In the latter case it is not said to what extent the value or utility must have been diminished. But there must be some appreciable diminution; otherwise s. 95 will apply. It is not essential that the property interfered with should belong to the person injuriously affected. See Explanation 1. Illustrations (c) and (f) exemplify this explanation.

D, as lessee of Government, held rights of fishery in a particular stretch of river. C, by diverting the water of that river, converted the bed of the river for a considerable distance into dry land, or land with a very shallow covering of water upon it, and by so doing he was enabled to destroy, and did destroy, very large quantities of fish, both mature and immature. It was held that when C deliberately changed the course and condition of the river in the manner described to the detriment of D, he was guilty of the offence of mischief.¹

A person who destroys property which at the time belongs to himself with the intention of causing, or knowing that it is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to anybody else, is guilty of this offence.² Illustrations (d) and (g) shew that a man may commit mischief on his own property. See Explanation 2. In order, however, to his doing so, it is necessary that he intends to cause wrongful loss to some person, as in the cases stated in the illustrations. If a person destroyed a duplicate specimen (his own property) of some rare coin, painting, or other object to enhance the value of the remaining one, such an act would not be done with the intention of thereby causing wrongful loss to any person.³

Bona fides.—"If a person deals injuriously with property in the bona fide belief that it is his own he cannot be convicted of the offence of mischief, because his act was not committed with intent to cause wrongful loss or damage to any person. But the mere assertion of a claim of right is not in itself a sufficient answer to such charges. It is the duty of the criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender, and if it arrives at the conclusion that he was not acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, then it cannot refuse to convict the offender, assuming of course that the other facts are established which constitute the offence."⁴ Where, therefore, a person cut trees on land which he claimed, but of which possession, after an execution sale, had been legally made over to another person without any objection or formal intervention on his part, it was held that he had committed mischief.⁵ But where the accused cut the branches of a tree regarding which there was a dispute it was held that he was not guilty.⁶

Where, in the bona fide assertion of a right, a wall was pulled down, it was held that the act did not amount to the offence of mischief and the dispute between the parties was one for settlement by a civil Court.⁷ Where, in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right to bury a deceased person, the members of a congregation broke open the gate of a graveyard which they believed was wrongfully closed against

¹ Chanda, (1905) 28 All 204

² Dharina Dass Ghose v. Nussuruddin, (1886) 12 Cal 660

³ M & M 392

⁴ Per Turner, J., in Budh Singh, (1879) 2 All 101, 103, Keru, (1888) Unrep. Cr. C. 387, Nanda, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 465; Nathu Singh, (1903) P. R. No 6 of 1903; Madhu Sudan Das v. Sasti Prosad Nandy, (1903) 7 C.W.N. 859; Balar Halsana v. Dinobundhu Bhowas, (1869) 8 Beng. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 17; Shakur Mahomed v. Khunder Mohun Sha, (1874) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 38; (1881) 1 Weir 488; Daniel Grove, (1882) 1 Weir 488; Viagula Fernandez & as, (1891) 1 Weir 489; Jagannathan, (1893) 1 Weir 490; James, (1837) 8 C. & P. 131, Joshua Matthews, (1876) 14 Cox 5; Manikka Veera Raghava Chariar, (1910) 8 M. L. T. 246; Konda Chetty, (1910) 8 M. L. T. 383; Ganu Pandey, (1921) 2 P. L. T. 394.

⁵ Sonas Sardar v. Bujhar Sardar, (1876) 25 W.R. (Cr.) 46. See also Dharma Dass Ghose v. Nussuruddin, sup.

⁶ Sardar Singh, (1917) 4 P. L. W. 291; Sham Lal Lohar, (1918) 5 P. L. W. 114; Sarat Chandra Sen v. Yakub Talwadar, (1923) 28 C. W. N. 730.

⁷ Jagannathan, sup.; Balkrishna Narkar Velthakar, (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 978, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 221.

them by a priest, it was held that they had committed no offence.¹ The accused who were servants of S were convicted by a Magistrate under this section and s. 143 for having cut a channel from a jhil which was in the possession of B and by so doing let water and fish from the jhil. The Magistrate had found that the land adjoining the jhil across which the channel had been cut had been in the possession of S. On appeal, it was contended that the accused had a perfect right to make the cutting in their master's land. It was held that though they had that right, it did not follow that they had a right to extend the cutting beyond and through the bank of the jhil, which, with the jhil itself and the land underneath the water, were in the possession of B, and the conviction could not be set aside on that ground.² A game-keeper was prosecuted for unlawfully and maliciously killing a dog which was at the time near an aviary in which pheasants, the property of the appellant's master, were confined for breeding purposes. It was held that he was not liable if he acted under the bona fide belief that what he was doing was necessary for the protection of his master's property.³

Negligence is not mischief.—Where the accused set fire to a heap of rubbish in his own field, and a gust of wind came and carried the flame to an adjacent forest, and that the "neglect or carelessness" was not sufficient to constitute the offence of mischief.⁴ Where the accused whilst driving his bullock cart pulled the bullock in the wrong direction and thereby dashed the pole of his yoke against the footboard of the complainant's carriage and caused damage, it was held that the accused was not guilty of mischief.⁵

Master not liable for the negligence of his servant.—An owner who lived elsewhere could not, in the absence of express malice, be held criminally liable for the negligence of his contractor in digging the foundations of a house then being built without proper precautions.⁶

Cattle.—In the case of mischief done by straying of cattle, mere neglect or carelessness on the part of the owner of cattle to keep them from straying into fields is not sufficient.⁷ To warrant a conviction it must be proved that he actually and wilfully caused the cattle to enter, knowing that by so doing he was likely to cause damage,⁸ or at least that he was present and able to restrain the animal from causing damage and did not restrain it from so doing.⁹ The prosecution is bound to show that there was an intention to cause wrongful loss or damage.

But owners of cattle, who, knowing their animals to be not properly provided with fodder and accustomed to stray in search of food, intentionally omit to secure their cattle or neglect to take reasonable precautions for their care and custody, may be guilty of this offence. The omission or neglect, however, must be such as to have an active effect conducing to the result, as a link in a chain of facts from which an intention to bring about the result may be inferred.¹⁰ Where the accused

¹ Viagula Fernandez Vas, (1891) 1 Weir 489.

² Shoshi Bhushan Bose v. Gobind Chandra Roy, (1903) 7 C. W. N. 663.

³ Miles v. Hutchings, [1903] 2 K. B. 714.

⁴ Per Russell, Ag. C. J., and Heaton, J., (Aston, J., dissenting), in Nandeyappagowda, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 851.

⁵ Thornotti Madathil Poker, (1886) 1 Weir R. 495.

⁶ Shish Chandra Sircar, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 343.

⁷ Nareu, (1882) Unrep. Cr. C. 185; Rangu,

(1883) Unrep. Cr. C. 189, Cr. R. 19th April 1883, Hyderabad, (1884) Unrep. Cr. C. 199, (1871) 6 H. M. C. App. 36.

⁸ Araz Sircar, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 29, Forbes v. Gish Chandra, supra.

(1887) Unrep. Cr. C. 318, Cr. R. No. 5 of 1887,

¹⁰ Thornotti Madathil Poker, supra.

grazed their cattle on waste lands on which the Government had by notification prohibited the public from grazing cattle, when provision was made for the public grazing their cattle elsewhere, this offence was held to have been committed.¹ Where, in the absence of the accused, his cattle entered into the Government garden, it was held that he was not guilty of mischief. The act to be criminal should be done with dishonest intention.²

Statutory application.—The Madras Pier Act (Madras Act V of 1863), s. 7

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused the destruction of some property, or some change in such property or in the situation thereof.

(2) That the above act destroyed or diminished the value or utility of such property, or affected it injuriously.

(3) That the accused did as in (1) intending or knowing that he was likely to cause loss or damage to the public or to any person.³

(4) That the causing of such damage or injury was wrongful.

Onus.—It is for the prosecution to prove that the accused caused damage with a wrongful intent—with a knowledge that he was not justified in doing it, and that the party under whose orders he was acting had no real title.⁴

Where, in a case regarding mischief to land, the defence raises a bona fide plea of right to the land, the Magistrate should determine whether the accused acted with any such intent as made his act criminal, viz., any such intent as is mentioned in this section.⁵

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable, when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

Warning to Magistrate.—The authority vested in the criminal Court of punishing persons for acts of mischief is one which must be exercised with great caution, and it must be very clear, before conviction, that the accused has brought himself within the true meaning of s. 425, otherwise this provision of the law will be frequently resorted to as a trenchant mode of deciding disputed civil questions of right.⁶

Conviction for mischief and theft.—It is not illegal to convict the accused of mischief as well as of theft. Where, therefore, the prisoners had cleared a piece of Government land, cutting down and appropriating the trees thereon without permission, it was held that it was not illegal to convict them of mischief and theft, as the mischief preceded the theft which could not have been committed according to Explan. 1 of s. 378 until the trees had been detached from the ground.⁷ But where the accused stole a sheep and killed it, it was held that he could not be charged with and convicted of mischief as well as of theft.⁸

Summary trial.—A person may be tried summarily for criminal trespass and mischief unless there is a bona fide claim of right depriving the Magistrate of jurisdiction.⁹

¹ Gurram Siddagada, (1886) 1 Weir 492.

² See Nga Lun, (1903) 2 L. B. R. 158.

³ Ghazi, (1904) P. R. No. 23 of 1904. See Joti Babu, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 549.

⁴ Denoo Bundhoo Biswas, (1889) 12 W. R. (Cr.) 1; Kashi Nath Ghose v. Dinobundhoo Mytee, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) 62 (72); (1881) 1 Weir 488.

⁵ Jesur Chunder Mundle v. Rohin Sheikh, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.) 45.

⁶ Mahadshet, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 432.

⁷ Ram Gobin Singh, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.)

⁸ Narayan Krishna, (1866) 2 B. H. C. 392.

⁹ Madar Sahab, (1902) 1 Weir 497; Nps Paik Hmwe, (1894) 1 U. B. R. (1892-1896) 241; Nga Aung So, (1900) J. J. L. B. 633; Genya, (1877) Unrep. Cr. C. 129; Banla Ratanji, (1903) 5 Bom. L. R. 460. See Krishna, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 430, in which double conviction was considered to be legal.

¹⁰ Gamirullah Sarlar v. Abdul Sheikh, (1884) 10 Cal. 408, disapproving Shaker Mahomed v. Chunder Mohun Saa, (1874) 21 W. R. (Cr.) 38.

Punishment.—In laying down the punishment for different degrees of the offence of mischief, the gradation observed refers to the amount of loss sustained, a mode of distinction not admitted in estimating the degrees of criminality in other offences against property.¹ The penal provisions relating to mischief have been framed on the same principle which pervades the Code of first providing a certain amount of punishment for all offences of a particular denomination and then proceeding to provide heavier punishment for aggravated offences of that kind.² Section 426 provides punishment for the offence of mischief generally. But if in any particular case there is any circumstance which brings it within any of the subsequent penal clauses whereby heavier punishment is provided and if that circumstance can be proved, that subsequent clause is then the appropriate one for the punishment of the offence committed. And when one set of aggravating circumstances properly attaches to an act making it an offence, another set should not be applied to the same act, unless there be in the mind of the offender a wholly separate intention.

427. Whoever commits mischief and thereby causes loss or damage to the amount of fifty rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Mischief causing damage to the amount of fifty rupees.

COMMENT.

This section provides for enhanced sentence where the loss or damage caused is upwards of fifty rupees.

In estimating the amount of the loss or damage caused, the actual loss or damage only should be taken into consideration and not the damage which, in consequence of such loss may be occasioned to the sufferer.³ But the damage done to several things may be added together, provided the things are damaged at one and the same time, or so nearly at the same time as to form one continuous transaction.⁴

Statutory application.—See the Madras Pier Act (Mad. Act V of 1863), s. 7.

CASES.

Where some persons belonging to a certain village pulled up and removed fishing stakes lawfully fixed in the sea, within three miles of the shore, by the villagers of another village, and the removal of the stakes, though without any intention to appropriate them, occasioned "damage," it was held that they had committed mischief.⁵

Cattle belonging to the accused, who were Rabaris, having trespassed on the complainant's farm and done damage to the crops there, the accused were tried for the offence of mischief under this section and also for an offence under s. 26 of the Cattle Trespass Act. It appeared that on previous occasions too cattle of each of the accused were impounded a number of times for similar acts. It was held that they were guilty of mischief.⁶

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further:—

(5) That the loss or damage caused amounted to Rs. 50 or more.

There ought to be evidence to show that the defendant caused mischief.⁷

¹ 1st Rep. s. 608.

² M. & M. 302.

³ Ibid, 393.

⁴ Shepherd, (1868) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 118.

⁵ Kadry Rama, (1871) 8 B. H. C. (Cr. C.)

63.

⁶ Punja Godad, (1916) 21 Bom. L. R. 247; 5 Bom. Cr. C. 1.

⁷ (1870) 5 M. H. C. App. 39.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable, when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed mischief, causing loss or damage to the amount of—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 427 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

428. Whoever commits mischief by killing, poisoning, maiming¹ or rendering useless any animal² or animals of the value of ten rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Mischief by killing or maiming animal of the value of ten rupees.

COMMENT.

This section is intended to prevent cruelty to animals and consequent loss to the owner.

1. 'Maiming.'—The term "maiming" refers to those injuries which cause the privation of the use of a limb, or a member of the body.¹ 'Maiming' implies a permanent injury.² Wounding is not necessarily maiming. Wounding is causing an injury to the person by which the skin is broken.³ To constitute a wound it is necessary that there should be a separation of the whole skin; and a separation of the cuticle or upper skin only is not sufficient.⁴ The external surface of the body must be divided.⁵ Maiming must mean some permanent injury because it occurs in this section and s. 429 between 'killing' and 'rendering useless.' This last expression again differs from 'diminishing utility,' the expression used in the definition of 'mischief.'⁶ Meres, C. J., in a case⁷ said: "It is true that in its primitive meaning the verb 'to maim' involves the notion of mutilation of some part of the body useful for fighting... I do not think the framers of the Code intended this restricted meaning only of this expression. It seems difficult to understand how many of the domestic animals could be 'maimed' within this meaning of the term. I think the expression would fairly include the amputation of any member, or the injury, of an animal by which its speed, or endurance, or use, was permanently diminished." Maiming then means some permanent injury to one of the members of the body. It involves the notion of the privation of the use of some limb or member involving a permanent injury and not a mere disfigurement.⁸ Where the ribs of a pony were broken so as permanently to diminish its usefulness and value, it was held to be 'maimed.'⁹ Similarly, where the ears of a horse¹⁰ and an ass¹¹ were cut off, it was held that the accused was guilty of maiming. But where one-half of one ear of a mare was cut off whereby the animal's sense of hearing was not impaired, it was held this did not amount to maiming

¹ Fatehdin, (1881) P. R. No. 33 of 1881.

² Richard Jeans, (1844) 1 C. & K. 539.
Narayan Singh, (1905) U. B. R. (P. C.) 25,
22 Burma L. R. 116.

³ Morvarty v. Brooks, (1834) 6 C. & P. 684.

⁴ Owen v. Loughlin, (1838) 8 C. & P. 635.

⁵ Beckett, (1836) 1 Mood. & Bob. 526.

⁶ Bahawal, (1891) P. R. No. 7 of 1891.

⁷ Nga San Yun, (1885) S. J. L. B. 404.

⁸ Anna Laxman, (1916) 18 Bom. L. R. 289.

⁹ Bom. Cr. C. 194.

¹⁰ Nga San Yun, sup

¹¹ Marigouda v. Srinivasa Rangachar, (1911)
35 Mad. 594.

¹² Rangarajami Goundan, (1917) 22 M. L. T.
68.

within the meaning of this section.¹ Where the accused caused the death of a mare through injuries inflicted by his inserting the handle of a fork into her vagina and pushing it into her body, it was held that the accused was liable for killing, maiming or wounding the mare.²

It is not necessary to prove that any instrument was used to inflict the wound.³ Pouring acid into the eye of a mare, and thereby blinding her, amounts to maiming.⁴ But, if a person inflicts wound on an animal whereby it is disabled for some days only, his offence falls under s. 426.⁵

2. 'Animal.'—See s. 47, supra. The animal destroyed must be the subject of property. The escape of an animal that is originally in the condition of feræ naturæ but is subsequently reduced into possession does not terminate the owner's right to it, and any person shooting such an animal is guilty of mischief.⁶

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the property injured consisted of an animal or animals.

(6) That the value thereof at the time of injury was Rs. 10 or more.

(7) That the injury in question was caused by killing, poisoning, maiming, or rendering useless such animals.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed mischief by killing (or poisoning, etc.) an animal, to wit—, of the value of—, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s 428 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d), and 12 (2).

429. Whoever commits mischief by killing, poisoning, maiming¹ or rendering useless, any elephant, camel, horse, mule, buffalo, bull, cow or ox,² whatever may be the value thereof, or any other animal of the value of fifty rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

This section provides enhanced punishment owing to the greater value of the animals mentioned therein. Intention is the gist of the offence. The accused threw a stone at a young buffalo and thereby caused its death, and it appeared that her intention was to drive it out of her backyard. It was held that the accused was not guilty of mischief.

1. 'Maiming.'—See s. 428, supra.

2. 'Bull, cow or ox.'—According to the Madras High Court a 'calf' does not come within the term 'bull, cow or ox,'⁸ but the Calcutta High Court has

¹ Anna Laxman, (1916) 18 Bom. L. R. 289, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 194

² Welch, (1875) 1 Q. B. D. 23.

³ Bullock, (1868) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 115.

⁴ Owen Owens, (1828) 1 Mood. Cr. C. 205.

held that the words 'bull' and 'cow' in this section include the young of those animals. The section specifies the more valuable of the domestic animals, without any regard to age; but in respect of other kinds of animals not so specified, the section will not apply unless the particular animal in question is shown to be of the value of fifty rupees or upwards.¹

Upon an indictment on the statute of 2 & 3 Edw. VI., which mentioned the words "horses, geldings, and mares," it is held that foals and fillies are included in those words, and that evidence of stealing a mare fully supports an indictment for stealing a mare.²

Bulls set at large according to a religious usage.—Such bulls are not the subject of ownership by any person, as the original owner surrenders all his rights as its proprietor and gives it its freedom to go whithersoever it chooses. They are, therefore, nullius in terra, and as such cannot be the subject of mischief.³ But if there is not total abandonment of control and property, the animal would not cease to be the private property of the owner. Before finding that the animal ceased to be the private property of anyone it is necessary to see whether the ceremony at which it was released was followed by an abandonment of all control and property over it.⁴ There is also a material distinction in principle between the case of an animal, property in which is wholly renounced or abandoned and allowed in accordance with superstitious or religious usage to roam at large free from control, and an animal so abandoned and at large after dedication to a temple.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the property injured consisted of an elephant, camel, horse, mule, buffalo, bull, cow, or ox; or that such property consisted of any animal of the value of Rs. 50 or more.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the— day of—, at—, committed mischief by killing (poisoning, maiming or rendering useless) (specify the animal. Where the animal is not of the kind mentioned in the section specify its value also), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 429 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

430. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act which causes, or which he knows to be likely to cause, a diminution of the supply of water¹ for agricultural purposes, or for food or drink for human beings or for animals which are property, or for cleanliness or for carrying on any manufacture, Mischief by injury to works of irrigation or by wrongfully diverting water.

¹ Hari Mandle v. Jafar, (1895) 22 Cal. 457.

² Roacoe.

³ Romeesh Chunder Sannyal v. Hsu Mondal,

(1890) 17 Cal. 852.

⁴ Ghanta Veeranna, (1888) 1 Weir 500.

⁵ Nulla, (1887) 11 Mad. 145, 1 Weir 438.

shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

This section deals with diminution of water supply. Section 278 applies if the water is fouled so as to be unfit for use.

1. 'Diminution of the supply of water.'—Under this section the physical requisites of the act are the doing of any act which causes, or to the doer's knowledge is likely to cause, a diminution of supply. He also fulfils the mental requisites when he does this with intent to cause wrongful loss, and the intention is properly held to be such when he takes it without any sort of right, and it matters not that he claims to set up such a right if the facts are so clear that the claim is manifestly only an additional wrong. It is for judicial tact to distinguish where the case is sufficiently doubtful to prevent the inference of a wrong intent.¹

The section applies equally to irrigation channels as to other sources of irrigation, such as tanks and ponds.²

The placing, across a channel, of an embankment³ or the cutting of an embankment,⁴ may lead to a diminution of supply. If a supply channel is obstructed or filled up by a dam put up or by raising a dam already existing, there is a change made in the channel which diminishes its value or utility and which, if it was done with intention to cause or with knowledge that it was likely to cause wrongful loss to any person, would constitute 'mischief.' If the act so done causes a diminution of supply of water an offence under this section is committed.⁵ The mere deprivation of water supply to the complainant by a cut in the bund is not an offence under this section. It is the destroyed property that must have lost its utility or value to bring the offence under it.

Bona fides.—This section will not apply to proceedings taken by anybody in good faith in the exercise of his rights of property. Where, therefore, a Zemindar stopped a water-channel running over his own land on the complainant's refusing to pay him the rent he demanded, it was held that he was not guilty under this section.⁶ Where the accused cut open a bund and diverted water to his fields in anticipation of usual permission to do so, it was held that he had committed no offence under this section.⁷ Where there was no doubt that the accused knew that by their act they were causing a diminution of the water supply and where they had not substantiated a right to take the water nor shown that the other side had no right; it was held that a bona fide claim to take the water could not be entertained.⁸

CASES.

Diminution of the supply of water is necessary.—Where it appeared that the complainant was the exclusive owner of a water-course, and that the accused had no sort of right to assert any claim to it, the causing of a diminution of the supply of water by the accused, even though in assertion of a right, was held to be only an additional wrong, and to constitute this offence.⁹ Where the accused closed a water-course by which water had been supplied to the complainant's land, he was held not to have committed this offence, as no damage was alleged to have been

¹ Ramakrishna Chetti v. Palaniyandi Kudambar, (1876) 1 Mad. 262, F.R.

² Syyu Chinna Mangaiya, (1886) 1 Weir 310.

³ Nalla Narayanasami, (1884) 1 Weir 504.

⁴ Sankh Arif, (1908) 35 Cal. 437.

⁵ Dendabandu v. Purnasraya, [1923] M. W. N. 534.

⁶ Mohar Singh v. Laloo, (1906) 3 A. L.

J. R. 142a. See Arumayam Chetti, (1883) 5 Mad. Jur. 528; Athinarayanam Pillai v. Subbar, (1898) 1 Weir 503; Matukdhari Singh, (1915) 20 C. W. N. 128.

⁷ Kullappa Navlen v. Palani Annal, [1920] M. W. N. 131, 27 M. L. T. 214.

⁸ Badeo Singh, (1924) 2 P. L. R. 194.

⁹ Jayaramiah Bhikaji, (1885) 10 Bom. 153.

caused by the stoppage of water to any crop in the land.¹ Where the accused banded up a portion of the channel, running in his own land, and carrying water to the complainant's land to which he was not found to be entitled either by way of contract or by easement, it was held that no actual wrongful loss had been proved and that therefore the accused's action in banding up the channel did not constitute any offence.²

Where the accused took water for agricultural purposes to which he was not entitled, and thereby diminished the supply of others who were entitled, it was held that he was guilty under this section.³

Diminution of water by the cutting of an embankment.—Where the accused cut a dam erected by the complainant, not to take a supply of water but to save their own crops, and it was not proved that the act of the accused caused a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes or that the accused knew that it was likely to cause such diminution in future, it was held that the accused could not be convicted of this offence.⁴

The complainant put up an embankment on Government land without previous permission to store water for the use of his land. The accused cut the embankment and were charged with mischief but were acquitted on the ground that the complainant's act was illegal. It did not appear that the accused interfered to protect their own interests. It was held that the acquittal was wrong.⁵

The accused cut the embankment of an irrigation tank and kept the embankment open for more than twenty-four hours and pleaded in excuse of their act the authorization of the Public Works authorities given to them to take the water for twenty-four hours. It was held that, assuming the original act of cutting the embankment was lawful in consequence of the authorization given by the Public Works authorities to the accused to take the water for twenty-four hours, by keeping the breach open for six hours longer, they were guilty of an illegal omission which was under s. 32 of the Code equivalent to an illegal act, and that they were guilty under this section, as their act was clearly likely to cause a diminution of water-supply for agricultural purposes; and that it was not necessary to prove actual damage.⁶ But in a Punjab case it was held that the person by merely irrigating his land from a Government canal-cut for a period exceeding that allotted to him, did not commit any offence under this section.⁷

The accused entered into the lands of the complainant and cut three bunds which had been erected in a channel that ran through the land, with the result that water in that channel ran down another channel off the complainant's land, and was utilized by the accused for sale to ryots holding the lands lower down. The complainant was entitled to the whole of the water in the channel in question. It was held that this section applied not only where the water was wantonly wasted but also where the accused himself utilized it, or sold it to others provided the person entitled was deprived of its use.⁸

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief in question caused, or was likely to cause, diminution

(6) That such supply of water was for purposes of agriculture ; or for food or drink for human beings ; or for animals which are property ; or for cleanliness ; or for carrying on any manufacture.

(7) That such mischief was done with a knowledge that it would, or was likely to, cause such diminution of the supply of water.¹

The prosecution must prove that there has been unlawful and intentional interference on the part of the accused with the admitted or proved rights of the complainant.²

It is not necessary to prove actual loss.³

Where there was nothing to show that the complainant had any legal right to the water intercepted by the accused, it was held that the complainant's loss was not wrongful and the offence of mischief was not established.⁴

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

A Magistrate can make an enquiry by personal inspection of the disputed place.⁵

Where there was a genuine dispute between the two parties in regard to a channel and one party was charged with mischief for closing the channel, it was held that the matter was not one for trial in a criminal Court and that the act of closing the channel was not an offence.⁶

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.,) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed mischief by doing—which act caused (or which you knew to be likely to cause) a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes (or for food, etc.,) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 430 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

431. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act¹ which Mischief by injury to public road, any public road,² bridge, navigable river, or bridge, river or navigable channel, natural or artificial, impassable or less safe for travelling or conveying property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

To support a conviction under this section there must be evidence of intention to cause mischief, and of knowledge that injury is likely to result from the act of the accused.⁷ Such intention or knowledge is not necessary for offences under ss. 279, 280 and 283.

1. 'Act.'—See s. 52, supra.

2. 'Road.'—A path through a jungle is not a road.⁸

¹ Nga Myat Aung, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 122.

² Banwari Karmakar v. Gosto Behary Karmakar, (1920) 32 C. L. J. 476.

³ (1881) 1 Weir 503.

⁴ Tun Aung, (1907) 4 L. B. R. 149.

⁵ Muruga Pillai, (1883) 1 Weir 508.

⁶ Athinaryanasamy Pillai v. Subbier, (1898) 1 Weir 505.

⁷ Malayan Kalan, (1883) 1 Weir 510.

⁸ Nga Shwe Laukie, (1889) P. J. L. B. 629.

CASES.

The facts found were (1) that two pieces of timber came floating down the river in flood and coming in contact with a bridge destroyed two of its pillars; (2) that the accused cut the smaller piece at a point on the bank of the river some eight miles above the bridge, and left it lying on the bank. It was held that the conviction could not be sustained.¹ Where the accused dug a trench on waste land bordering upon the public road in order to protect his land from drainage water and thereby incidentally caused damage to the public road, it was held that this was not sufficient to constitute the offence of mischief.² Mere placing of bricks on a road was held not to come within this section.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief in question consists of an act rendering or likely to render impassable or less safe, a public road, bridge, navigable river or channel, natural or artificial, for the purpose of travelling or conveying property.

(6) That such mischief was done with a knowledge that it would, or was likely to, cause such injury.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

432. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act¹ which causes or which he knows to be likely to cause an inundation or an obstruction to any public drainage attended with injury or damage, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Mischief by causing inundation or obstruction to public drainage attended with damage.

COMMENT.

This section provides for a more severe punishment where the mischief is committed by causing inundation to public drainage as it affects the health of the community.

1. 'Act.'—See s. 52, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief consisted of an inundation or obstruction to drainage.

(6) That such inundation or obstruction was, or was likely to be, attended with injury or damage.

(7) That such drainage was public.

(8) That the mischief was done with a knowledge that it would, or was likely to, cause such injury.⁴

It is not sufficient
The accused were convicted river knowing it to be sequence inundated.

¹ Malayan Kalan, (1883) 1 Weir 510.

² Kairthadi Anantha Bhattar, (1888) 1 Weir 511.

³ Jugal Narain Singh, (1908) 12 C. W. N.

cxvii (122).

⁴ Fran Nath Shaha, (1876) 25 W. R. (Cr.)

69.

⁵ (1868) 4 M. H. C. App. 15.

act done was the erecting of a dam which did not cause ' the destruction ' of any property the offence of mischief was not committed.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

433. Whoever commits mischief by destroying or moving any light-house or other light used as a sea-mark, or any sea-mark, or buoy or other thing placed as a guide for navigators, or by any act which renders any such light-house, sea-mark, buoy or other such thing as aforesaid less useful as a guide for navigators, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Mischief by destroying, moving or rendering less useful a light-house or sea-mark.

COMMENT.

This section is an extension of the principle laid down in s. 281. Sea-marks are very important in navigation and any tampering with them may lead to disastrous results.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief consisted of an act causing the destruction, or moving of, or rendering less useful, a light-house, sea-mark, etc

(6) That such light-house, sea-mark, etc., was at the time of mischief used as a guide for navigation

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

434. Whoever commits mischief by destroying or moving¹ any land-mark fixed by the authority of a public servant,² or by any act which renders such land-mark less useful as such, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Mischief by destroying or moving, etc., a land-mark fixed by public authority.

COMMENT.

This section deals with the destruction or removal of land-marks. The preceding section dealt with sea-marks. But as destruction of sea-marks is likely to lead to disastrous consequences the punishment provided in s. 433 is much higher than the punishment provided under this section.

1. 'Moving.'—See s. 378, Explanation 3, supra.

2. 'Fixed by the authority of a public servant.'—The Madras High Court has held that in construing the words ' authority of a public servant ' the same considerations would apply to an offence under this section as to an offence under ss. 183 and 186.³ A Magistrate making an order, under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has no authority to cause the property which is the subject of a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace to be demarcated by boundary pillars, and, consequently,

¹ (1868) 4 M. H. C. App. 15

305, 311, [1916] 2 M. W. N. 183.

² Madras Express, South (1916) 31 M. L. J.

if he does so, a person destroying or removing such boundary pillars is not liable to conviction under this section.¹ Where a surveyor empowered by a notification under the Survey and Boundaries Marks Act to survey certain lands, in good faith and under colour of his office, entered upon the lands of the accused and fixed demarcation stones on them and the accused obstructed the surveyor in measuring the lands and removed the demarcation stones. It was held that the accused were guilty under this section though it might be proved that the lands on which the surveyor carried on his operations were not actually included in the notification.²

Innocent removal.—Where a person innocently removed a barricade placed by a Municipality on a piece of land in front of his house, which impaired his ingress and egress to, or from, his house, it was held that he had committed no offence.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (1) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief consisted of an act causing the destruction, or moving of, or rendering less useful, a land-mark.

(6) That such land-mark was fixed by the authority of a public servant.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

435. Whoever commits mischief by fire or any explosive

Mischief by fire or explosive substance with intent to cause damage to amount of one hundred or (in case of agricultural produce) ten rupees.

substance,¹ intending to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, damage to any property to the amount of one hundred rupees or upwards, or (where the property is agricultural produce) ten rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Where the mischief is committed by means of fire or any explosive substance the conviction must be under this section. If the evidence falls short of this, but is sufficient to show that mischief to the amount of 50 rupees has been caused, whether by fire or by any means whatsoever, the offender may be convicted under s. 427. In the case of agricultural produce the value fixed under the section is Rs. 10, in the case of other property it is Rs. 100.

1. 'Explosive substance.'—This expression, according to the Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908), s. 2, includes any materials for making any explosive substance, also any apparatus, machine, implement, or material used, or intended to be used, or adopted for causing, or aiding in causing, any explosion in or with any explosive substance: also any part of any such apparatus, machine, or implement.

Amendment.—The words "or (where the property is agricultural produce) ten rupees or upwards" were inserted by Act VIII of 1882, s. 1. The amendment was introduced to protect agricultural produce.

¹ Rameshar, (1904) 27 All. 300.

² Madhava Bhonjo Santos, (1915) 31 M. L. J.

305, [1916] 2 M. W. N. 183.

³ Abdul Aziz, (1895) Unrep. Cr. C. 745.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief was caused by fire or some explosive substance.

(6) That the damage caused thereby amounted to Rs. 100 or more; or if the property in question is agricultural produce, to Rs. 10 or more.

(7) That the accused intended or knew that he was likely thereby to cause such damage.

More negligence or carelessness would be of no avail. Where the accused set fire to a heap of rubbish in his field which was close to a protected forest and the wind carried the flames to a forest and destroyed a part of it, it was held that he was not guilty of mischief.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—In drawing up a charge it is necessary to enter in the charge the fact that the mischief was caused intentionally or knowingly that destruction of building would follow.² Further, the building should be described “as one ordinarily used as a place of worship, or as a human dwelling, or as a place for custody of property.”³

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). See the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

436. Whoever commits mischief by fire or any explosive substance,¹ intending to cause,² or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, the destruction of any building³ which is ordinarily used as a place of worship or as a human dwelling or as a place for the custody of property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Mischief by fire or explosive substance with intent to destroy house, etc

COMMENT.

This section punishes mischief by fire or explosive substance. Owing to the serious nature of the means employed the punishment is severe.

1. ‘Explosive substance.’—See s. 435, supra.

2. ‘Intending to cause.’—The offence is not intentionally committing mischief by fire, and thereby causing the destruction of building, etc., but committing mischief by fire, with the intention of causing the destruction of a building, etc. The intention is a most important element in such a charge.⁴

3. ‘Building’ is not necessarily a finished structure.⁵ An unfinished house, of which the walls were built and finished, the roof unfinished, a considerable part of the flooring laid, and the internal walls and ceilings prepared ready for plastering, was held to be a building.⁶

The Law Commissioners observe: “The grass or mat huts of the lowest classes are placed on a level with the substantial, secure, and valuable dwellings of the better classes. . . It is obviously proper that in the case of mischief by fire a distinction should be made between the huts . . . and substantial houses, but there is sufficient room for such a distinction between the maximum of fourteen years

¹ Nandeyappagowda, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 851.

² (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr. L.) 7.

³ Durbarro Polie, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 30.

⁴ (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr. L.) 18.

⁵ Manning, (1871) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 338.

⁶ William Edgell, (1867) 11 Cox 132.

and the minimum of one year, and between rigorous and simple imprisonment,...and we think it best that the distinction should be left to the discretion of the Judge."¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the property injured consisted of a building.

(6) That such building was ordinarily used as a place of worship, or as a human dwelling, or as a place for the custody of property.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

In a charge under this section the amount of mischief done is not altogether to be the measure of the penalty to be inflicted. A person who mischievously sets fire to a human dwelling may put in jeopardy the lives and the property, not only of those dwelling therein, but of others dwelling in adjoining houses, of persons assisting to put out the fire, and so on. Severe penalties of this section are, therefore, justified.²

Charge.—In a case of mischief by fire with intent to cause the destruction of a dwelling-house, the charge should lay the intent as an intent to cause the destruction not of a house simply, but of a house used as a human dwelling.³

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d), and 12 (2).

437. Whoever commits mischief to any decked vessel¹ or Mischief with intent to destroy or make unsafe a decked vessel or one of twenty tons burden.

any vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards, intending to destroy or render unsafe, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby destroy or render unsafe, that vessel, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section would operate in the case of decked vessels or any vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards. Only vessels of large dimensions have decks. Fishing boats, ferry boats, canoes, etc., will not come under it. Thus, small crafts of all kinds are excluded. The intention of the legislature is to punish mischief committed on vessels which are likely to carry passengers.

1. 'Vessel.'—See s. 48, supra. Where a sailor on board a ship entered a part of the vessel where spirits were kept, for the purpose of stealing rum, and, while tapping a cask of rum, a lighted match, held by him, came in contact with the spirits which were flowing from the cask tapped by him, and a conflagration ensued, which destroyed the vessel, it was held that a conviction for the arson of the vessel could not be upheld.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the mischief was committed in respect of a decked vessel, or a vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards.

(6) That the accused when committing mischief intended, or knew that he was likely, to render unsafe that vessel.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

¹ 1st Rep., ss. 614, 615.

² (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr. L.) 14.

³ Darbarro Police, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 80.

⁴ Faulkner, (1877) 13 Cox 550.

438. Whoever commits, or attempts¹ to commit, by fire or any explosive substance,² such mischief as is described in the last preceding section, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for the mischief described in section 437 committed by fire or explosive substance.

COMMENT.

This section provides for much more severe punishment than the last section when the mischief is committed by fire or explosive substance to a decked vessel or a vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards.

1. 'Attempts.'—See s. 511, infra
2. 'Explosive substance.'—See s. 435, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That the accused committed or attempted to commit mischief by fire, or any explosive substance.

(6) That the mischief was committed in respect of a decked vessel, or a vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards.

(7) That the accused, when committing, or attempting to commit, mischief intended, or knew that he was likely, to destroy or render unsafe such vessel.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

439. Whoever intentionally runs any vessel¹ aground or ashore, intending to commit theft² of any property contained therein or to dishonestly misappropriate³ any such property, or with intent that such theft or misappropriation of property may be committed, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for intentionally running vessel aground or ashore with intent to commit theft, etc.

COMMENT.

This section punishes an act which is akin to piracy. Under the section it is quite sufficient if a vessel is run aground or ashore with the intention to commit theft of any property contained therein; whether actual theft is committed or not is immaterial. As to what amounts to piracy, see p. 29.

1. 'Vessel.'—See s. 48, supra.
2. 'Theft.'—See s. 378, supra
3. 'Dishonest misappropriation.'—See ss. 403 and 24, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the property in question was contained in a vessel.

(2) That the accused ran such vessel aground or ashore.

(3) That he did so intentionally.

(4) That he intended thereby (a) to commit theft of the property so contained therein; or (b) to dishonestly misappropriate the same; or (c) that such theft or misappropriation thereof might be committed.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

440. Whoever commits mischief, having made preparation for causing to any person death,¹ or hurt,² or wrongful restraint,³ or fear of death, or of hurt, or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Mischief committed after preparation made for causing death or hurt.

COMMENT.

The aggravating circumstance which is visited with severe punishment under this section is preparation for causing to any person death, hurt, or wrongful restraint if any opposition is offered while committing mischief.

1. 'Death.'—See s. 16, supra.

2. 'Hurt.'—See s. 319, supra.

3. 'Wrongful restraint.'—See s. 339, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 426; and further—

(5) That when such mischief was committed, the accused had made preparation for causing death, hurt, or wrongful restraint, or fear thereof.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (1901), ss. 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2). As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act (1898), s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

Of Criminal Trespass.

441. Whoever enters into or upon property in the possession of another¹ with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property,² or, having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there³ with intent thereby to intimidate, insult or annoy any such person, or with intent to commit an offence,³ is said to commit "criminal trespass."

1. Another person.

COMMENT.

The authors of the Code say: "We have given the name of trespass to every usurpation, however slight, of dominion over property. We do not propose to make trespass, as such, an offence except when it is committed in order to the commission of some offence injurious to some person interested in the property on which the trespass is committed, or for the purpose of causing annoyance to such a person. Even then we propose to visit it with a light punishment, unless it be attended with aggravating circumstances.

"These aggravating circumstances are of two sorts. Criminal trespass may be aggravated by the way in which it is committed. It may also be aggravated by the end for which it is committed."

¹ Note N, p. 163

Scope.—Straight, J., in a case said: "The unusually vague and elastic language used in section 441, which, if not closely scrutinized and strictly interpreted, might lead to its application to sets of facts or circumstances, for which it was never intended by the legislative authorities who framed it. For it is easy enough to conceive multitudinous cases, some approaching the verge of absurdity, that would fall within the letter, not the spirit, of the section, and which no one would for a moment consider fit subject even for civil proceedings, much less for a prosecution in a criminal Court. To lay down any rule, as to the extent to which its operation should be limited, is scarcely possible, but it is plain that its scope must be confined within those bounds that common sense and sound reason dictate."¹

Ingredients.—The section has three essentials.—

1. Entry into or upon property in the possession of another.
2. If such entry is lawful then unlawfully remaining upon such property.
3. Such entry or unlawful remaining must be with intent
 - (i) to commit an offence; or
 - (ii) to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession of the property.

1. 'Whoever enters into or upon property in the possession of another.'— "There must be an unauthorized entry into or upon property,—unauthorized, that is to say, either directly against the will of the person in possession, or constructively against his will, in the sense that he who enters has an unlawful intention, which, were it known to such person, would make him object, forbid or prevent the entry that in ignorance of such intention he sanctions and permits."²

A man may be guilty of criminal trespass on the land of another without ever personally setting foot on the land, if, for example, he causes others to build on the land against the wishes and in spite of the protest of the owner of the land.³

The use of criminal force is not necessary.⁴

'Whoever' enters in the manner indicated in the section commits this offence. The accused must have committed the trespass in person. Merely sending a servant to plough up land is not an entry by the master.⁵

'Property' in this section means immovable corporeal property, and not incorporeal property. A right of fishery is not property of such a nature as that a man who unlawfully infringes that right can be said to enter upon property in the possession of another, within the meaning of the section.⁶ Similarly, a person plying a boat for hire at a distance of three miles from a public ferry cannot be said, with reference to such ferry, to commit criminal trespass.⁷

'Possession.'—The possession must be actual possession of some person other than the alleged trespasser.⁸ If one person forcibly enters upon property in the possession of another, and there does an act with intent to annoy the person so in possession, he is guilty of criminal trespass without reference to the question in whom the title to the land may ultimately be found.⁹ The question of title is not to be raised on a plea of possession. But "a mere trespasser cannot, by the very act of trespass, immediately and without acquiescence, give himself what the law understands by possession against the person whom he ejects, and drive him to produce his title, if he can, without delay, reinstate himself in his former possession."¹⁰ The offence may be committed in respect of property in a person's

¹ Gobind Prasad, (1879) 2 All. 465, 466;

² Shridhar Parau, (1872) 9 Beng. L. R. App.

³ Chooramoni Sant, (1870) 14 W. R. (Cr.) 23.

⁴ Per Straight, J., in Gobind Prasad, sup

⁵ p. 466.

⁶ Ghani, (1917) 39 All. 722, 15 A. L. J. R.

⁷ 793.

⁸ Pottiradu v. Veerayya, (1902) 12 M. L. J.

⁹ 447.

¹⁰ Shree Kun, (1906) 3 L. B. R. 278; Mg

Shree Kyi, (1922) 1 B. L. J. 276.

¹¹ Charu Nayiah, (1877) 2 Cal. 354.

¹² Muthra v. Jowahir, (1877) 1 All. 527.

¹³ Fowjdar, (1878) P. R. No. 28 of 1878;

¹⁴ Kunji Lal, (1913) 12 A. L. J. R. 151.

¹⁵ Ram Dyal Mundle, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.)

28.

¹⁶ Per Denman, C. J., in Broune v. Daw- son, (1840) 12 Ad. & E. 624, 629.

possession even though such possession may not have originated in right.¹ A person entering upon the property in the possession of another, when the latter is absent therefrom, is not guilty of criminal trespass when he enters upon it not with the intent to commit an offence.²

It would seem that a person entitled to a right of way or other incorporeal right is not a person in possession of property within the definition of this offence, and there can be no criminal trespass 'into or upon' such property.

Joint possession.—A joint owner of land who enters upon the land with the intention or knowledge of doing a wrongful act commits criminal trespass.³ A prosecution for criminal trespass on the part of one co-owner against another co-owner will not lie unless there has been an ouster from possession or some destruction or waste of the common property.⁴ Where one co-sharer built upon a piece of a common land against the will of the other co-sharer, whose consent had been previously asked and refused, it was held that this circumstance alone was not sufficient to render the co-sharer so building guilty of criminal trespass.⁵ One member of a joint family commits no trespass by entering into the house which forms the joint property, but he is guilty of that offence when he enters into the room ordinarily occupied by another member of the family.⁶ A joint-owner of property is entitled to have joint possession restored to him in a civil Court; but he is not justified in taking the law into his own hands to recover possession. If he does so he is liable for criminal trespass.⁷ The entry of a stranger into a family dwelling house, with the permission and license of one of the members, is not criminal trespass.⁸

Entry to commit an offence.—Where a person entered on another's property to cut down trees in that property, it was held that he had committed this offence.⁹

Where a person does not personally set foot on the land of another but gets people to build on it in spite of the protests of that other, he is guilty of criminal trespass.¹⁰

Where the accused cultivated village waste-land, which he had been ordered not to cultivate, it was held that this offence was committed as the accused had entered upon the land with intent to commit an offence under s. 188.¹¹ Where the accused enclosed and cultivated a portion of a burial-ground, it was held that he had committed this offence. The Court said: "The person (corporate) in possession of the burial-ground is the portion of the public entitled to use the burial-ground...and it is scarcely possible to conceive any act more calculated to cause annoyance, especially to superstitious people attaching sanctity to the relics of mortality, than the act of ploughing up a burial-ground."¹²

No criminal trespass is committed if the entry is not to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person.—Where the accused secretly entered an exhibition building without a ticket but without any of the intents specified in this section¹³; where a prisoner went into the cavalry lines, without the permission of the commanding officer, with a cavalryman of the regiment with intent to

¹ Surwan Singh, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 11.

² Chinna Thoyi, (1895) 1 Weir 518; Nurain Das, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 334; Balkrishna Narhar Velhankar, (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 978, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 221; Moti Lal, (1925) 23 A. L. J. R. 679.

³ Rank'Prasad, (1911) 8 A. L. J. R. 927.

⁴ Khaja Mahomed Hamid Khan, (1881) 3 Mad. 178, 1 Weir 286.

⁵ ...

⁶ ...

⁷ ...

⁸ ...

⁹ ...

¹⁰ ...

¹¹ ...

¹² ...

¹³ ...

L. R. App. 80.

⁹ Jeenut Bebee, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 46.

¹⁰ Ghasi, (1917) 39 All. 722, 15 A. L. J. R. 793.

¹¹ (1870) 5 M. H. C. App. 17. See Nagoji Ramchandra, (1898) 1 Weir 143.

¹² (1871) 6 M. H. C. App. 25, 26. But see 6 M. H. C. App. 26 in which a person who included in his own land a portion of a public foot-path was held to have not committed this offence. See also Falirgarda, (1898) Cr. R. No. 49 of 1889, Unrep. Cr. C. 333.

¹³ Mehervanji Bejanji, (1869) 6 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 6.

commit adultery¹; where a person drove his cart across an open green, in contravention of an order issued by Municipal Commissioners, who had no power to issue the order²; where an excommunicated Hindu wife entered the house of her husband to claim maintenance³; where a person effected an entry into a Local Fund market with intent to evade payment of market dues⁴; where A, having shot a deer near B's land, followed it into B's land for the purpose of killing it, although he was warned off the land beforehand⁵; where a man for several years cultivated land under a lease from the Forest Department, and during his occupation built a dwelling house and made other improvements, but refused to relinquish the land after notice of ejectment was served upon him until he was paid compensation⁶; where an owner entered his own lands permissively used or occupied by, but not in the possession of, another⁷; where a person fished in a tank to which the public generally had access⁸; where a person entered into premises purchased by him at a Sheriff's sale for the purpose of acquiring possession⁹; where a Zemindar, under the pretext that one of his tenants had left the village and abandoned his holding, took possession of the tenant's holding wrongfully¹⁰; and where the accused drove a cart over Government waste land in respect of which the Municipality had put up notices prohibiting cart traffic¹¹, this offence was not held to have been committed.

The accused granted a lease of pepper on certain hills described to be the property of his turcad. The lease granted comprised within the boundaries mentioned therein not only land belonging to the turcad of the accused but also other land stated to be the property of Government. The lessee conveyed his rights to others and, under colour of the lease, the sub-lessee bona fide entered upon the land and took the pepper. The accused was convicted of abetment of criminal trespass and of theft. It was held that the execution of the document could not be said to aid either the entry or the taking and that in the absence of evidence that the accused either suggested the entry or the taking, he was not guilty.¹²

Where a servant of a proprietor, who had voluntarily surrendered his estate to the Court of Wards, cut or removed bamboos, etc., growing thereon for the benefit of his master, it was held that no offence was committed.¹³ A school was built by public subscription and put in charge of a teacher. He went away having locked the building. The accused who were some of the managers of the school took possession of the building and started certain classes in it. They were convicted of criminal trespass. It was held that the conviction was improper as the building was not in the possession of the complainant and the accused had no intention of annoying him.¹⁴

2. 'With intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property.'—The word "intent" is not to be taken as identical with "wish" or "desire." The intention constitutes the entry criminal. Merely to trespass is not ordinarily such an offence, but when the trespass is in order to the commission of an offence, or when it is to intimidate, to insult, or to annoy, it is punished. Thus, the essence of the offence is the intent in committing the trespass. It must be proved that some criminal intent was present in the mind of the accused, and it does not at all follow that, because an act is unlawful, and is one that the civil law will restrain, or for which it will compensate the injured party

¹ Kushee, (1887) Cr. R. No. 18 of 1887, Unrep. Cr. C. 328.

² (1870) 5 M. H. C. App. 38.

³ Marmulla, (1881) 4 Mad. 213, (1881) 1 Weir 523.

⁴ Vanthappa Nayakan, (1882) 5 Mad. 382.

⁵ Chunder Narain v. Farquharson, (1879) 4 Cal. 837.

⁶ Faujdar, (1878) P. R. No. 28 of 1878.

⁷ Daniel Groves, (1882) 1 Weir 521.

⁸ (1879) 1 Weir 520.

⁹ Charoo Chunder Mutty Lal, (1899) 4 C. W. N. 47.

¹⁰ Jangi Singh, (1903) 26 All. 191; Bazid, (1904) 27 All. 298.

¹¹ Nga U Thit, (1909) U. B. R. (P. C.) 25.

¹² Parapratan Bavothi Hadgi, (1890) 1 Weir 48.

¹³ Parneswar Singh, (1910) 38 Cal. 180.

¹⁴ Narain Das, (1918) 17 A. L. J. R. 334.

in damages, it is necessarily criminal.¹ There must, in all cases, be found an intent to cause intimidation, insult or annoyance. A conviction could not follow merely because one could pronounce with certainty that the accused must have known that his act would, as one of its inevitable incidents, cause annoyance.² Criminal trespass depends on the intention of the offender and not upon the nature of the act and when the man's intention is to save his family and property from imminent destruction it cannot be said that because he commits civil trespass on his neighbour's land and cuts a portion of an embankment belonging to his neighbour which he ordinarily would not be justified in doing, he is guilty of any criminal offence.³ It is one thing to entertain a certain intention and another to have the knowledge that one's act may possibly lead to a certain result. The section is so worded as to show that the act must be done with intent and does not, as other sections do (e.g., s. 425), embrace the case of an act done with knowledge of the likelihood of a given consequence. Although a trespasser knows that his act, if discovered, will be likely to cause annoyance, it does not follow that he does the act with that intent.⁴

Trespass is an offence only if it is committed with one of the intents specified in the section and proof that a trespass committed with some other object was known to the accused to be likely or certain to cause insult or annoyance is insufficient to sustain a conviction.⁵ The accused's son, a young boy, having stolen some jewels belonging to his father, told him that he had given them to the Head-Master of his school, the complainant, who kept them in a box in his house. Thereupon the second accused with his friends, the other four accused in the case, went into the complainant's house, and in spite of the latter's protest and remonstrances insisted on searching, and did in fact search, the house. But nothing was found. The complainant, naturally felt insulted and annoyed at the high-handed conduct of the accused and lodged a complaint against the accused. It was held that the accused were not guilty of criminal trespass.⁶

In a Full Bench case the former Chief Court of the Punjab held that where a person claiming a title to property, whether his title be good or bad, entered without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, he must be inferred to have had an intent to annoy the person in possession even though he had no primary desire to annoy and his only object was to obtain possession for himself.⁷

If the entry is to commit an offence, criminal trespass is committed.⁸ In a Madras case it is laid down that it is sufficient if the evidence leaves no reasonable doubt that the accused intended to commit some offence. It is not necessary for the Magistrate to find what specific offence he wanted to commit.⁹

As regards the first part of this section, dealing with the intention to commit an offence, it does not appear to be necessary that the offence should be directed ¹ Per Rattigan, J., in Albulla, (1872) P. R. No. 29 of 1882; Ganpat, (1859) Cr. R. No. 43 of 1858, Unrep. Cr. C. 399; Rohana, (1923) 5 Lab. 20.

² Mohal, (1925) 23 A. L. J. R. 679.

³ Madan Mandal, (1913) 41 Cal. 662.

⁴ Kayapalayam, (1890) 19 Mad. 219, 241, approving Siracala Gararaya, (1835) Weir (2d Edn.) 329, disapproving Veda Garikal, (1862) Weir (2d Edn.) 328. See to the same effect Velataramanuja Rella, (1909) 6 M. L. T. 262; Po Ksa, (1902) 1 L. R. R. 335.

⁵ Pullappa v. Bhorena Row, (1917) 41 Mad. 157, per Justice Srinivasan v. Panchamala Karappa, (1911) 35 Mad. 194, overruled.

⁶ Pullappa v. Bhorena Row, sup

⁷ Ram Saran, (1905) P. R. No. 12 of 1906, per Justice Clark, C. J., and Justice Rattigan, J., dissenting from this view and held that it was not enough for the prosecution to prove or for the Court to find that the accused knew that his entry would probably annoy the person in possession, but it is absolutely essential to affirmatively establish and find that the accused acted with an intention to annoy, mere knowledge that annoyance is likely to result is not sufficient.

⁸ Jenat Babee, (1904) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 46.

⁹ See Sambas, (1941) 1 Weir 576, followed in Karasa Seralaya, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 71, 21 M. L. J. 741.

against the person in possession. It is sufficient that the property entered upon should be in the possession of another.¹

As to the word 'offence,' see s. 40, supra.

The intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy may be against a person in constructive as well as against a person in actual possession of immovable property.² During the pendency of a civil suit, certain persons, on behalf of the plaintiff, went on the premises belonging to the defendant for the purpose of making a survey and for getting materials for a hostile application against the defendant. They went (some of them armed) and, without the permission of the defendant, and in his absence, and when the defendant's servants objected to their action, persisted in their trespass and endeavoured to prevent opposition by making false statements as to the authority under which they were acting. It was held that their actions amounted to criminal trespass as their object in taking swords with them was to intimidate.³

Annoy.—"The word 'annoy', must be taken to mean annoyance that would generally and reasonably affect an ordinary person, not what would specially and exclusively annoy a particular individual."⁴ "'Annoyance' is a wider term than nuisance, and if you find a thing which reasonably troubles the mind and pleasure, not of a fanciful person or of a skilled person who knows the truth, but of the ordinary sensible inhabitant of a house."⁵ Mere knowledge of the possibility of annoyance resulting from an act of trespass is not sufficient to bring the case within the definition of trespass, but the word 'intent' cannot be read as if it were identical with 'wish' or 'desire'. There may be no wish to annoy, but if annoyance is the natural consequence of the act, and if it is known to the person who does the act that such is the natural consequence, then there is an intent to annoy.⁶ Most acts in the common course of natural events and human conduct lead to a series of results, and if these results are foreseen by the person doing the acts they cannot be said to be caused unintentionally. The ultimate object may be something different, but the person intends all the intermediate results which he knows will happen in the natural course of events, even though he may regret that they should happen. When it is uncertain whether a particular result will follow, there may be no intent to cause that result even though it may be known that the result is likely. But it seems impossible to contend, when an act is done with a knowledge amounting to practical certainty that a result will follow, that it is not intended to cause that result.⁷ Where an accused person has forcibly or clandestinely entered a house which he knew to have been definitely closed and barred against him by the owner thereof, in that case the Court may find that the intention to insult or annoy, under such circumstances, was so clearly inherent in the acts of the accused as to form an essential part of the purpose with which entry into the house was effected. If there is an invitation (to enter a house) combined with an intention (on the part of the accused) to preserve strict secrecy, then it is difficult to say that there is any intention to annoy a third person, but if that third person has expressly prohibited the accused then his act becomes a direct defiance

¹ Chinkwara, (1901) 1 U. B. R. (1897) 1901) 352, 353.

² Mawng Kado, (1893) 1 U. B. R. (1892-1896) 261.

³ Gopal Pandey v. R. H. Boddam, (1889) 16 Cal. 715.

⁴ Per Straight, J., in Gobind Prasad, (1879) 2 All. 465, 467.

⁵ Per Bowen, L. J., in Tod-Heatly v. Benham, (1888) 40 Ch. D. 80, 98.

⁶ Luzman Raghunath, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 280, 26 Bom. 558. This case is not reconcilable with Chunder Narain v. Farquharson, (1879) 4 Cal. 837; Rayapadayachi, (1896) 10 Mad. 210, and has been dissented from in Pullappa v. Baccema Row, (1917) 41 Mad. 156, v.n., but it has been referred to with approval in Chhot Lal, (1917) 40 All. 221. It may be observed that intent and knowledge are distinguishable in the Indian Penal Code. In definitions of some of the offences both the words occur: in others only intent enters as an ingredient. The doctrine presuming intention from knowledge cannot be safely applied to the Indian Penal Code.

⁷ Luzman Raghunath, sup., dissented from in Pullappa's case, sup.

to an express order and an intention to annoy the author of the order may be inferred from it. A person was found inside the house of another at night and he pleaded in defence, first that he had entered the house at the request of one of the inmates and, secondly, that he had no intention of annoying or insulting the complainant. It was found that he had taken the precaution of keeping his presence in the house entirely secret from the owner thereof, and it was not found that he was forbidden to enter the house by the owner. It was held that the conviction of the accused without enquiry into the truth or otherwise of the defence set up was bad in law.¹ A house was occupied only by the owner and his concubine who had an intimacy with the accused. The accused entered the house at her invitation in the absence of the owner and took measures to conceal himself as soon as the owner arrived who, however, arrested him. It was held that the accused was not guilty of an offence under this section.²

Where the accused entered on the land of another to stop him from ploughing in order to make him render an account³; where the complainant leased a portion of his lands to certain tenants for the purpose of making bricks and the accused entered on such land with an intention to annoy the complainant⁴; where the accused acting on behalf of or under the colour of the right of their master to whom possession had been awarded by a civil Court, entered upon land in the physical possession of tenants or others prima facie entitled to retain possession until ousted by due course of law⁵; where a person unauthorizedly entered the compound of the complainant's house in order to effect an entry into a neighbour's house to execute a warrant of attachment⁶; where a person, after having been ejected by due process of law from certain agricultural land, wilfully persisted in trespassing upon such land⁷; where the complainant, the purchaser of the rights of a mortgagee in possession and his predecessor-in-title, had been peacefully in possession of certain agricultural land for some years, and a relation of the mortgagor forcibly ousted the complainant on the plea that he was under the Hindu law entitled to share in the land and the mortgagor had no title to make a mortgage thereof with possession,⁸ it was held that this offence was committed.

The accused was convicted under s. 509 for causing the roof of a house belonging to him, which the complainant occupied as his tenant, to be removed while the complainant's wife, a purdanashin woman, was in it, without giving any notice beforehand, and thereby causing her to be exposed to public view. It was held that the removal of the roof in the circumstances amounted to criminal trespass as it was clear that the accused intended to annoy the complainant, and house-trespass (s. 448) was thus established.⁹ Where the accused entered into the complainant's house with the intention of having illicit intercourse with his widowed sister, it was held that he was guilty of this offence inasmuch as the particular object could not be obtained except by causing great annoyance to the owner of the house. In such cases secondary intention is sufficient, and a man may well be said to intend the inevitable consequences of his act.¹⁰ On facts almost similar, the Allahabad High Court held that the accused was not guilty of any offence.¹¹ The decision of Sundar Lal, J., in this case is of doubtful authority. To say that a brother would not be annoyed if his widowed sister's paramour entered into his

¹ Chhote Lal, (1917) 40 All. 221; Asa Ram, (1923) 1 L. C. 340.

² Rupa, (1919) 22 O. C. 121.

³ Weir (3rd Edn.) 204.

⁴ Munindan Pillai, (1882) 1 W. Ir. 517.

⁵ Srinivasayangar, (1884) Weir (3rd Edn.) 320.

⁶ Bhow, (1877) Unrep. Cr. C. 122; Luzman Raghunath, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 280, 26 Bom. 558; Lakshmi Das, (1919) 4 L. L. J. 532.

⁷ Tiku Ram, (1902) 22 A. W. N. 6.

⁸ Nandan, (1902) 22 A. W. N. 42.

⁹ Dheramal, (1901) 3 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 350.

¹⁰ Jivan Singh, (1908) P. R. No. 17 of 1908. See Kangla, (1900) 23 All. 82, Brif Basu, (1896) 19 All. 74; Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram, (1894) 22 Cal. 391; Ram Saran, (1906) P. R. No. 12 of 1906; Chatter Singh, (1919) 3 U. B. R. (1917-1920) 191.

¹¹ Gaye Bhar, (1918) 28 All. 517.

house at dead of night with intent to have illicit intercourse is against human nature.

'Any person in possession.'—These words do not mean only "a complainant in possession" there being no authority for taking the offence of mischief and trespass out of the general rule which allows any person to complain of a criminal act.¹ C, a rate-payer, who had filed a petition against an assessment which in his absence had been dismissed, entered a room, where a committee of the Municipal Commissioners were seated hearing and deciding petitions in assessment matters, ostensibly with the object of presenting a petition for the revision of his assessment. The Chairman ordered him to leave the room, and on his refusal to do so, he was turned out. Outside the room in the verandah he addressed the crowd complaining that no justice was to be obtained from the Committee. It was held that C had committed no offence.² A headman was holding a regular trial in his private dwelling, and the accused attended to watch the proceedings on behalf of his nephew, who was the accused. The accused was ordered to withdraw by the headman, but he remained there to witness the proceedings. He was subsequently pushed out and then prosecuted for committing house-trespass. It was held that he had not said or done anything from which an intent to intimidate, insult, or annoy, might be inferred, and he was therefore not guilty.³

An intention to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of a house does not mean to insult or annoy any person in constructive but in actual possession of the premises.⁴ The section contemplates actual possession, not mere juridical possession. Where there is a person in actual physical possession of property, he is the only person whose feelings have to be considered under this section.⁵ An owner has no right to re-enter land which he has let to a tenant, and may be convicted of an offence for so doing under s. 447 unless it can be shewn that the tenancy has been determined in accordance with law.⁶ Where the accused occupied and locked up an empty house belonging to the complainant with the intention to assert his title and gain and hold possession of the house as against the complainant, it was held that as the complainant was not in possession of the house either by himself or through any other person when the trespass was committed, he could not be said to be in 'possession' within the meaning of this section; and that intimidation, insult or annoyance are results which more naturally follow when premises were occupied than when vacant.⁷

3. 'Having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there.'—If the entry has been lawfully and legitimately obtained, there must be an unlawful 'remaining,' either directly or constructively, against the will of the person in possession.

An unlawful act is not necessarily an offence (s. 40), and an intention to commit such act does not render the accompanying trespass criminal.⁸ Thus, an the point upon See Jambulinga Chetty, (1924) 47 M. L. J. 437, [1924] M. W. N. 546, which lays down that entry on a vacant piece of land for putting up a water-pandal with the consent of the person who could assert his title to the property under a registered deed is sufficient as against the person in actual possession under an unregistered sale-deed.

⁶ Maung San Myin, (1922) 2 B. L. J. 37.
⁷ Moti Lal v. Emperor, (1925) 23 A. L. J. R. 679.

⁸ Alladitta, (1882) P. R. No. 29 of 1882.

123, commented on in Prayag Singh v. Morgan, sup., Nga Po Tok, (1918) 3 U. B. R. (1917-20) 111; contra, Nga Tok Kyi, (1916) 10 B. L. T. 77.

² Nga Po 1a, (1922) 2 B. L. J. 17. See Audayappa Mudaliar, (1923) 18 L. W. 181.

³ Ishur Chunder Kurmukar v. Seetul Das Mitter, (1872) 17 W. R. (Cr.) 47.

⁴ Tok Gyi, (1916) 8 L. B. R. 425; Bhagwan Din, (1918) 16 A. L. J. R. 501, leaves unlawful infringement of a right of exclusive fishing in a part of a public river is not an offence which can be brought within the definition of criminal trespass.¹

The accused placed bricks on complainant's land with his permission but subsequently refused to remove them. For this he was convicted of criminal trespass. It was held that the possession being lawful in its inception the subsequent refusal did not amount to criminal trespass and the matter was one for decision by a civil Court.²

Bona fide claim.—"If a person enters on land in the possession of another in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, but without any intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy the person in possession, or to commit an offence, then although he may have no right to the land he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass, because the entry was not made with any such intent as constitutes the offence... But the mere assertion of a claim of right is not in itself a sufficient answer to such charges. It is the duty of the criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender, and if it arrives at the conclusion that he was not acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, then it cannot refuse to convict the offender, assuming of course that the other facts are established which constitute the offence."³ The existence of a bona fide claim of right is not irrefutable evidence of the absence of a criminal intent.⁴ But where the accused acts on a belief of his own right, he cannot be held guilty of criminal trespass.⁵ It should distinctly be found whether the entry of the accused upon the land was in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right or with one of the intents requisite to constitute a trespass criminal within the meaning of this section. If the accused entertained the belief in good faith that he was entitled to the possession of the land, his entry and continuance on it would constitute a trespass on the land for which he would, if he failed to prove his title, be answerable in a civil suit, but would not be liable to a criminal charge. If, on the other hand, the circumstances are such that he could not have entertained such a belief in good faith, it would be a fair inference that he intended the annoyance which his action must have caused to the complainants, and the conviction would be proper.⁶

Re-entry into or remaining upon land from which a person has been ejected by civil process, or of which possession has been given to another, for the purpose of asserting rights he may have solely or jointly with other persons, is not criminal trespass unless the intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy is conclusively proved.⁷ But where A was in peaceful possession of land which he claimed to hold in mortgage from B, and C entered on the land and ploughed it ousting A, on the ground that he had bought the land from B, it was held that A was not liable to be ousted from the land save in due course of law, and C rendered himself liable to a conviction of criminal trespass.⁸ Similarly, a forcible entry upon land, which had been sold in execution of a money-decree and of which actual possession had been given to the purchaser under s. 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code, without resistance or opposition, and over which the purchaser had thereafter

¹ Charu Nayiah, (1877) 2 Cal. 354.

² Nand Singh, (1925) 20 P. L. R. 247.

³ Per Turner, J., in Budh Singh, (1879) 2 All. 101, 103; Gokul Chund v. Seth Roshun Lal, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 82; Shitidkur Parvi, (1872) 9 Benj. L. R. App. 19; Po Ke, (1904) 2 L. B. R. 319, 10 Burma L. R. 358; Maung Kado, (1895) 1 U. B. R. (1892-1896) 261; Ramchandra v. Ratho, (1908) 5 N. L. R. 69.

⁴ Arunachala Achari, (1881) 1 Weir 520. See Jhumuk Nonnah v. Shodasab Roy, (1881) 7 Cal. 26; Chhakoo Mandal, (1906) 11 C. W. N. 467.

⁵ Jurakhn Singh, (1907) 7 C. L. J. 239; Rejaddin Molla, (1914) 18 C. W. N. 1245; Alshoy Singh v. Rameswar Bagdi, (1916) 43 Cal. 1143; Bhagwan Din, (1918) 16 A. L. J. R. 501.

⁶ Devarasetti Gangaiya, (1884) 1 Weir 516; Po Ke, sup.; Maung Shwe Kw, (1923) 2 B. L. J. 55.

⁷ Gobind Prasad, (1879) 2 All. 465; Shah Muhammad v. Ganesh Dass (1904) P. R. No. 13 of 1905; Nawal Chand, (1883) 3 A. W. N. 188.

⁸ Mys Zan, (1902) 1 L. B. R. 358.

exercised acts of possession, by sub-tenants claiming under a lease of an antecedent date from the judgment-debtor, was held to be criminal trespass.¹ Thus, superior title in the accused will not by itself convert the complainant into a mere trespasser, so as to justify him in ejecting the complainant, if the latter be in possession otherwise than as a mere trespasser.²

Statutory application.—See Orissa Tenancy Act (Beh. & O. Act II of 1913), s. 240; the Agra Tenancy Act (U. P. Act II of 1901), s. 149; the Bombay City Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1902,) s. 111.

442. Whoever commits criminal trespass by entering into¹ or remaining in any building,² tent or vessel³ used as a human dwelling, or any building used as a place for worship, or as a place for the custody of property, is said to commit "house-trespass."

Explanation.—The introduction of any part of the criminal trespasser's body is entering sufficient to constitute house-trespass.

COMMENT.

Circumstances which aggravate the offence of criminal trespass are of two sorts. First, those which aggravate the offence when it is committed. It is desirable to guard against unlawful intrusion as the habitations in which men reside, and the buildings in which they keep their goods. The offence of trespassing on these places we designate as house-trespass, and we treat it as an aggravated form of criminal trespass."³

1. 'Entering into.'—The introduction of any part of the trespasser's body is entering sufficient to constitute house-trespass.⁴

2. 'Building.'—What is a 'building' must always be a question of degree and circumstances: its ordinary and usual meaning is, a block of brick or stone-work covered in by a roof.⁵ The mere surrounding of an open space of ground by a wall or fence of any kind cannot be deemed to convert the open space itself into a building, and trespass thereon does not amount to house-trespass.⁶ A courtyard partly surrounded on the front by a mud wall with no roof over it nor any door or gateway is not a building or house within the purview of this section.⁷ According to the Code any construction that is used as a human dwelling will be included in the term 'building.'

The building should be the property of another person. If an owner in charge of a house professes to be an accomplice and invites another to his house to commit an offence, a conviction for house-trespass is bad in law.⁸

The following are held to be buildings:—An entrance hall surrounded by a wall in which there were two doorways but no doors, and used for the custody of property,⁹ a courtyard, consisting of a walled enclosure with four chambers, opening into it, and an outer door or gate leading into a side street,¹⁰ a cattle yard originally walled on four sides, but one wall of which having fallen into disrepair,

¹ Kailash Ghose v. Jugal Lohar, (1903) 1 C. L. J. 104; Gill, (1904) P. L. R. No. 138 of 1904.

² Ponnusami Pillai, (1899) 1 Weir 522; Rabi Lockan v. Purna Chandra Dey, (1906) 11 C. W. N. 171; Chhaloo Mandal, (1906) 11 C. W. N. 467.

³ Note N, p. 168.

⁴ Vide Explanation.

⁵ Per Esher, M. R., in Moor v. Williams,

[1892] 1 Q. B. 264. See Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, 2nd Edn., Vol. I, p. 225.

⁶ Palani Goundan, (1896) 1 Weir 523.

⁷ Sunder (1919) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 11 of 1919, P. L. R. No. 56 of 1919.

⁸ Kamaraju, (1887) 1 Weir 534.

⁹ Dod, (1878) P. R. No. 10 of 1879.

¹⁰ Shera, (1879) P. R. No. 35 of 1879; Ismail, (1925) 6 Lah. 463.

the new addition to the wall. The accused were thereupon prosecuted for the offence of house-trespass and mischief under ss. 451 and 426. It was held that inasmuch as there was a bona fide claim of right by the accused to the wall in dispute and as the accused had entered the complainant's house and pulled down the addition in his absence, the offences charged were not made out against the accused.¹

Where in execution of a decree of Court certain property was attached and taken out of the house in which it was, it was held that the decree-holder was not guilty of house-trespass.² A house was occupied only by the owner and his concubine, who had an intimacy with the accused. The accused entered the house at her invitation in the absence of the owner and took measures to conceal himself as soon as the owner arrived who, however, arrested him. It was held that the accused was not guilty of house-trespass.³

An officer exceeding his powers.—A police-officer is not justified by the mere fact that a person is of a suspicious character in entering his house at midnight to see whether he is in the house. Such an act is clearly a house-trespass, as it is calculated to annoy the members of the family of the suspected person and also to insult the latter person.⁴ To constitute an offence of house-trespass it is not enough that there should be an entry into a house without complying with all the formalities required by law. It further requires an intention either to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession. Therefore, where a Sub-Inspector of Police searched a house for cocaine and omitted to record his reasons as required by s. 53 of the Excise Act for not first obtaining a search warrant from a Magistrate it was held that he could not be convicted under s. 448.⁵

Statutory application.—See the Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. Act I of 1908), s. 212 (3).

443. Whoever commits house-trespass having taken precautions to conceal such house-trespass¹ from some person who has a right to exclude or eject the trespasser from the building, tent or vessel² which is the subject of the trespass, is said to commit "lurking house-trespass."

Lurking house-trespass.

COMMENT.

The authors of the Code say: "House-trespass, again, may be aggravated by being committed in a surreptitious or in a violent manner. The former aggravated form of house-trespass we designate as lurking house-trespass; the latter we designate as house-breaking. Again, house-trespass, in every form, may be aggravated by the time at which it is committed. Trespass of this sort has, for obvious reasons, always been considered as a more serious offence when committed by night than when committed by day. Thus we have four aggravated forms of that sort of criminal trespass which we designate as house-trespass, lurking house-trespass, house-breaking, lurking house-trespass by night, and house-breaking by night.

"These are aggravations arising from the way in which the criminal trespass is committed. But criminal trespass may also be aggravated by the end for which it is committed. It may be committed for a frolic. It may be committed in order to (commit) a murder. It may also often happen that a criminal trespass, which is venial, as respects the mode, may be of the greatest enormity as respects the ends; and that a criminal trespass committed in the most reprehensible mode, may be committed for an end of no great atrocity. Thus A may commit house-breaking

¹ Balrakhna Narhar Velhandar, (1924) 26 Bom. L. R. 978, 7 Bom. Cr. C. 221.

² Bhilam Singh, (1917) 15 A. L. J. R. 808.

³ Eupa, (1919) 22 O. C. 121.

⁴ Dorasami Pillai, (1903) 1 Weir 529.

⁵ Ali Abbas v. Subba Singh, (1925) 2 O. W. N. 463.

by night for the purpose of playing some idle trick on the inmates of a dwelling. It may commit simple criminal trespass by merely entering another's field for the purpose of murder or gang-robbery. Here A commits trespass in the worst way. It commits trespass with the worst object. In our provisions, we have endeavoured to combine the aggravating circumstances in such a way that each may have its due effect in settling the punishment."¹

1. 'Having taken precautions to conceal such house-trespass.—In order to constitute lurking house-trespass the offender must take some active means to conceal his presence.'²

Entry upon the roof of a building may be criminal trespass. But it cannot sustain a conviction for lurking house-trespass³; or for house-breaking.⁴

2. 'Vessel.'—See s. 48, supra.

444. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass after sunset and before sunrise, is said to commit "lurking house-trespass by night."

COMMENT.

Under this section the time of the entry aggravates the offence.

445. A person is said to commit "house-breaking" who commits house-trespass if he effects his entrance into the house or any part of it in any of the six ways hereinafter described; or if, being in the house or any part of it for the purpose of committing an offence,¹ or, having committed an offence therein, he quits the house or any part of it in any of such six ways, that is to say:—

First.—If he enters or quits through a passage made by himself, or by any abettor of the house-trespass, in order to the committing of the house-trespass.

Secondly.²—If he enters or quits through any passage not intended by any person, other than himself or an abettor of the offence, for human entrance; or through any passage to which he has obtained access by scaling or climbing over any wall or building.

Thirdly.—If he enters or quits through any passage which he or any abettor of the house-trespass has opened,³ in order to the committing of the house-trespass by any means by which that passage was not intended by the occupier of the house to be opened.

Fourthly.—If he enters or quits by opening any lock in order to the committing of the house-trespass, or in order to the quitting of the house after a house-trespass.

Fifthly.—If he effects his entrance or departure by using criminal force or committing an assault, or by threatening any person with assault,

¹ Note N, p. 103.

² Budha, (1916) P. R. No. 21 of 1916.

³ Alla Bakhsh, (1886) P. R. No. 9 of 1887;

Mullua, (1900) 20 A. W. N. 151.

⁴ Fazlo, (1890) P. R. No. 9 of 1890.

Sixthly.—If he enters or quits by any passage which he knows to have been fastened against such entrance or departure, and to have been unfastened by himself or by an abettor of the house-trespass.

Explanation.—Any out-house, or building occupied with a house and between which and such house there is an immediate internal communication, is part of the house within the meaning of this section.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house, and putting his hand through the fastened door.

(b) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house between decks. This is house-breaking.

(c) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house through a window. This is house-breaking.

(d) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house through the door, having opened a door which was fastened. This is house-breaking.

(e) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house, having lifted a latch which was fastened.

(f) A commits house-trespass by entering Z's house, having opened the door with that key. This is house-breaking.

(g) Z is standing in his doorway. A commits house-trespass by entering the doorway.

(h) Z, the door-keeper of Y, is standing in the doorway. A commits house-trespass by entering the house, having deterred Z from opposing him by threatening to beat him. This is house-breaking.

COMMENT.

The section prescribes six ways in which the offence of house-breaking may be committed. Clauses 1 to 3 deal with entry which is effected by means of a passage which is not ordinary. Clauses 3 to 6 deal with entry which is effected by force.

English law.—According to English law to constitute house-breaking there must be always an actual breaking of some part of the house, in effecting which more or less of actual force is employed, or a breaking by construction of law, where an entrance is obtained by threats, fraud, or conspiracy. Under the Code the mere entry through a window not intended for human entrance will amount to house-breaking (vide ill (c)). According to English law if a thief enters through an aperture in a cellar window to admit light, it is not house-breaking.¹

1. 'For the purpose of committing an offence.'—It is not necessary to specify any particular offence.² Intention of committing any offence is sufficient.

2. Clause 2.—This clause deals with those cases where a new passage has been created by a thief. When a hole is made by burglars in the wall of a house but their way is blocked by the presence of beams on the other side of the wall the offence committed is one of attempt to commit house-breaking and not actual house-breaking, and illustration (a) to this section does not apply.

3. Clause 3.—'Has opened.'—A door or window is not open if it is shut, though unfastened. Pulling down the sash of a window is a breaking.³ Raising a window which is shut down close but not fastened, though it has a hasp which might have been fastened, is a breaking.¹ Where a window opens upon hinges, and is fastened by a wedge, so that pushing against it will open it; forcing it open by pushing against it is sufficient to constitute a breaking.²

¹ Lewis, (1837) 2 C. & P. 628.

² See Jharu Shekh, (1912) 16 C. W. N. 696.

³ Haines, (1821) R. & R. 451.

The following acts are held to be breaking under the English law and will amount to house-breaking under the Code. Entry effected by taking out a glass from a door³; or breaking a pane of glass⁴; lifting up a heavy flap of a cellar to come out⁵; obtaining admission by getting down a chimney⁶; removing the fastening of a window by the hand introduced through a broken pane of the window, and thereby opening the window and entering.⁷

The accused suggested to a servant of the prosecutrix a plan for the commission of a robbery by the accused at the shop of the prosecutrix. The servant, pretending to agree to the accused's suggestion, lent the keys of the shop to the accused, who made duplicate keys, with one of which, on a day arranged with the servant, the accused unlocked a padlock attached to the outer door and entered the shop, where he was arrested. The prosecutrix had been informed by the servant of the accused's plan and knew that he intended to enter the shop on the day in question. The accused was convicted on an indictment which charged him with having broken and entered the shop with intent to steal therein. It was held that the conviction was right, notwithstanding that the prosecutrix knew that the accused had been supplied with the means of breaking and entering by her servant.⁸

Statutory application.—The Madras Pier Act (Mad. Act V of 1863), s. 12.

446. Whoever commits house-breaking after sunset and before sunrise, is said to commit "house-breaking by night."

COMMENT.

Section 445 contains an elaborate definition of house-breaking. The addition in this section of the element of time turns the offence into 'house-breaking by night,' the equivalent of the crime of 'burglary' in English law. The analysis of this offence naturally suggests a division of its ingredients into—(1) the breaking; (2) the entry; (3) the place; (4) the time; and (5) the intent.

English law.—Whoever commits any felony with intent to steal, or to commit any felony therein, and at night, shall be deemed guilty of burglary.⁹

447. Whoever commits criminal trespass shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the complainant had possession of the property in question.¹⁰ Whether a party is in possession of immoveable property or not is a question of fact to be ascertained by taking evidence in the usual way. The

¹ Hyams, (1836) 7 C. & P. 441.

² Samuel Hall, (1818) R. & R. 355.

³ Smith, (1820) R. & R. 417.

⁴ Perkes, (1824) 1 C. & P. 300; Tucker, (1844) 1 Cox 73.

⁵ Russell, (1833) 1 Mood. Cr. C. 377.

⁶ Brice, (1821) R. & R. 450.

⁷ William Robinson, (1831) 1 Mood. Cr. C. 327.

⁸ Chandler, [1913] 1 K. B. 125.

⁹ 24 & 25 Vic., c. 96, s. 51.

¹⁰ Kalinauth Nag Chowdhry, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 1; Parmeshwar Lall, (1921) 3 P. L. T. 347.

mere fact that a decree has been given against one party by a civil Court does not determine the question of possession, as that party may still be in possession of the property in dispute until effect is given to the decree in due course of law.¹

(2) That the accused entered into or upon the property; or after having lawfully entered unlawfully remained there.

(3) That he so entered or remained there with the intention (a) to commit an offence; or (b) to intimidate, insult, or annoy the person in possession.²

The Magistrate must find what the intent with which the accused committed the trespass was. He is not to leave it to inference what the intent with which he committed the trespass was.³

"Though the prosecution must prove the existence of some one or more of the intentions mentioned in s. 441, the proof need not be direct, that is, by the fact that the accused entered into or upon the property, or after having lawfully entered unlawfully remained there, he admitted to them, or that he acted in a manner which would lead to the inference that he acted like any other person in the same circumstances, the existence of intention is a fact) by the evidence of conduct and of surrounding circumstances."⁴ any person who enters into or upon the property of another, or after having lawfully entered unlawfully remained there, with the intention of committing an offence, or of intimidating, insulting, or annoying the person in possession, is guilty of criminal trespass, without reference to the question in whom the title to the land may ultimately be found.⁵ The accused, after having been convicted of criminal trespass committed by entering on certain land, were again prosecuted for a further trespass by remaining on the land in spite of the previous conviction. It was held that the accused were not liable to be again convicted.⁷

448. Whoever commits house-trespass shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

COMMENT.

Section 442 defines the offence of 'house-trespass', this section provides punishment for it.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed criminal trespass.⁸

(2) That such criminal trespass was committed by entering into, or remaining in, a building, tent, or vessel.

(3) That such building, tent, or vessel, was used as a human dwelling or as a place for worship, or as a place for the custody of property.

To support a conviction under this section, some one or other of the intents mentioned in s. 441 must be expressly found and must not be left to inference.⁹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

¹ Mr. Tal v. Mishan Ma, (1891) 1 P. B. R. (1892) 1890) 202.

² Lugger, (1868) Unrep. Cr. C. 10, Srinardhar Parner v. Indrabhawan Chakrabarty, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 25, Shri Nath Banerjee, (1875) 24 W. R. (Cr.) 38, Pargah Singh, (1881) 6 Cal. 379.

³ Durgaya, (1882) 1 Weir 521. See Durgaya, (1884) 1 Weir 516. See rojan v. Suralatallak Khas, (1912) 16

C. W. N. 1097, Amarnath Chinnu Krishna Reddy v. Harri Podd, (1912) M. W. N. 335.

⁴ Per Banerjee and Pale, JJ., in Bilwa. Land Eim v. Gnananuram, (1894) 22 Cal. 391, 400.

⁵ Sarwan Singh, (1890) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 11, Pam Dool Mandre, (1897) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 28.

⁶ Ma Hia Ya, (1898) 4 L. R. R. 276.

⁷ Vidya 441, sup.

⁸ Durgaya, sup.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed house-trespass by entering into [or remaining in] the building [or tent, or vessel] of AB used as a human dwelling [or as a place of worship, or for the custody of property] with intent (specify the motive for entering into or remaining in), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation (III of 1901), ss. 6, 11 (3) (d) and 12 (2).

449. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with death, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

House-trespass in order to commit offence punishable with death.

COMMENT.

This section provides punishment for house-trespass committed with intent to commit an offence punishable with death.

It is not made necessary under this section that the offender should do any further act than house-trespass towards the commission of the 'offence punishable with death.' But to justify a conviction there should be a clear proof of the design to commit a murder or other like offence. In the absence of proof of some further act done, in addition to the criminal trespass, in the prosecution of the

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Provo (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.²

(2) That the same was committed in order to commit an offence punishable with death.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed house-trespass by entering into [or remaining in] the building of AB, used as a human dwelling in order to the commission of an offence punishable with death, to wit—, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 449 of the Indian Penal Code, the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

450. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with transportation for life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

House-trespass in order to commit offence punishable with transportation for life.

¹ M & M. 404.

² Vide s. 442, sup.

COMMENT.

This section is similar to the last section. It deals with house-trespass committed with intent to commit an offence punishable with transportation for life.

As to offences punishable with transportation for life, see page 71.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.¹

(2) That the same was committed in order to commit an offence punishable with transportation for life.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—Sec s. 449, sup.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 118, sup.

451. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with imprisonment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offence intended to be committed is theft, the term of the imprisonment may be extended to seven years.

COMMENT.

This section is similar to ss. 449 and 450. It provides punishment for house-trespass committed with intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment. In order to constitute an offence under this section the prosecution must first establish that an offence of simple house-trespass has been committed and then satisfy the Court, in the particular case before it, that the house-trespass was committed with the object of committing a further offence punishable with imprisonment.²

It is not necessary that the Court should be in a position to say which specific offence the accused intended to commit. It is sufficient if the evidence leaves no room for reasonable doubt that the accused intended to commit an offence.³

CASES.

Where the accused was convicted of house-breaking, his object being to have sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife, it was held that the conviction was valid.⁴ Similarly, where the accused was caught at night in the courtyard of the complainant's premises under circumstances which showed that he had come there to commit theft of cattle, it was held that he was guilty under this section.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.⁶

(2) That the same was committed in order to commit theft, or an offence punishable with imprisonment.

When the prospective offence is that of adultery, it is necessary to show that there has been no consent or connivance on the part of the husband of the woman, the intent to commit adultery with whom is charged against the accused.⁷ Where it has been shown that the husband was absent in the legitimate pursuit of his occupation, it may safely be presumed that such husband neither consented to

¹ Ides s. 442, sup.

² Mansur Husain, (1919) 17 A. L. J. R. 800.

³ Smban, (1881) 1 Weir 533.

⁴ (1875) 8 M. H. C. App. 6, 1 Weir 532;

Khanoom Ram, (1920) 3 U. P. L. R. (L.) 18;

Anant Ram, (1920) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 8 of 1921.

⁵ Budha, (1916) P. R. No. 21 of 1916.

⁶ Ides s. 442.

⁷ Brj Basi, (1896) 19 All. 74.

nor connived at any adultery or immorality on the part of his wife. It seems obvious that he would be wholly ignorant of what was going on in his house and that, therefore, he could neither consent to nor connive at the same.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class, if theft was committed. If any other offence punishable with imprisonment was committed, then bailable, compoundable, when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending and triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

House-trespass for committing adultery.—A Magistrate is right in refusing to convict when the husband declines to complain.² But the omission of the husband to prosecute for adultery does not absolve the prisoner from criminal liability under s. 457.³

Charge.—The charge must charge the accused with committing house-trespass with intent to commit some specific offence punishable with imprisonment.⁴

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed house-trespass by entering into (or remaining in) the building of AB used as a human dwelling (or for the custody of property), in order to commit the offence of—(or theft), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 451 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

452. Whoever commits house-trespass, having made preparation

House-trespass
after preparation for hurt, assault or wrongful restraint.

for causing hurt¹ to any person, or for assaulting² any person, or for wrongfully restraining³ any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt, or of assault, or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Section 451 prescribes penalty for house-trespass committed with intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment. In this way it envelops the provisions of this section. But the object of the legislature in enacting this section is to provide severer punishment where house-trespass is committed in order to cause hurt, or to assault, or to wrongfully restrain any person.

1. 'Hurt.'—See s. 319, supra. Where the accused entered the complainant's house for the purpose of beating his (accused's) wife, who had taken refuge in it, it was held that the beating not being justifiable, that is, lawful, the entry amounted to criminal trespass, and a conviction under this section was good.⁵

2. 'Assault.'—See s. 351, supra.

3. 'Wrongful restraint.'—See s. 339, supra. Where a man went with a forged warrant of arrest into a house, and took away one of the inmates against

¹ Khanon Ram, (1920) 3 U. P. L. R. (L.) 18; Kala Ram, (1924) 1 L. C. 69.

² (1869) 6 M. H. C. App. 5.

³ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 689.

⁴ Meher Dowalia, (1871) 16 W. R. (Cr.) [63] 53.

⁵ Katalam Narasingadu, (1882) Weir (3rd Edn.), 329.

his will under the authority of such warrant, he was held guilty of house-trespass, by putting such person in fear of wrongful restraint under this section.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.²

(2) That the same was committed after making preparation for causing hurt or for assaulting, or for wrongfully restraining, some person; or for putting some person in fear of hurt, assault, or wrongful restraint.

The fact that the accused trespassed into the shop for the purpose of assaulting the complainant, is not sufficient to support a conviction under this section, though it is for a conviction under s. 448.³

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed house-trespass by entering into [or remaining in] the building of AB, used as a human dwelling, having made preparation for causing hurt, etc., to AB; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 452 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

453. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.

COMMENT.

This section provides penalty for the offences defined in ss. 443 and 444.

In all "house-breaking" there must be "house-trespass" and in all "house-trespass" there must be "criminal-trespass." Unless therefore the intent necessary to prove the offence of criminal trespass is present, the offence of house-breaking or house-trespass cannot be committed.

'Offence,' in this section, means a thing punishable under the Code or any special or local law (s. 40)

English law.—According to English law to constitute house-breaking there must be an actual or constructive breaking of some part of the house.

The word "break" means—

(a) The breaking of any part, internal or external, of the building itself, or the opening by any means whatever (including lifting, in the case of things kept in their places by their own weight) of any door, window, shutter, cellar, flap, or other thing intended to cover openings to the house, or to give passage from one part of it to another, and getting down the chimney;

(b) obtaining an entrance into the house by any threat or artifice used for that purpose, or by collusion with any person in the house.⁴

The word 'enter' means the entrance into the house of any part of the offender's body, or of any instrument held in his hand for the purpose of

¹ Nund Mohun Sirkar, (1869) 12 W. R. (Cr.)

² Falir Chandra De, (1921) 38 C. L. J. 161.

33

³ Vide s. 442.

⁴ Stephen's Dig of Cr. L., Art. 341.

intimidating any person in the house or of removing any goods, but does not include the entrance of part of an instrument used to break the house open.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For lurking house-trespass prove (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.²

(2) That the accused took precautions to conceal the same.

That such concealment was from some person who had a right to exclude or eject the accused from the building, tent, or vessel which was the subject of the trespass.

For house-breaking prove (1) that the accused committed house-trespass.³

(2) That the effected his entrance into the house or any part of it in any of the six ways mentioned in s. 445 ; or if he was in the house or any part of it for the purpose of committing an offence, he quitted it in any of those six ways.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass [or house-breaking] by entering into a building belonging to AB and used as a human dwelling, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 453 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

454. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, in order to the committing of any offence punishable with imprisonment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and, if the offence intended to be committed is theft, the term of the imprisonment may be extended to ten years.

Lurking house-trespass or house-breaking in order to commit offence punishable with imprisonment.

COMMENT.

The offence under this section is an aggravated form of the offence described in the last section : the aggravation being the commission of an offence punishable with imprisonment.

The latter portion of this section is framed to include the cases of house-trespassers, and house-breakers by night, who have not only intended to commit, but have actually committed, theft.⁵

The accused was seen leaving the house of one S and was seized on an outcry made by a female inmate of the house. He had on him jewels belonging to the female, which were ordinarily kept in an earthen receptacle in the house. The time was afternoon, before sunset. Upon these facts the District Magistrate convicted the accused of "lurking house-trespass by day for the purpose of committing theft" under this section. It was held that there was no evidence against the accused of house-breaking, nor of the essential element of lurking house-trespass, that the offence committed by the accused was theft in a dwelling-house, and that the conviction must be under s. 380.⁶

¹ Stephen's Dig. of Cri. L., Art. 341.

² Vide s. 448.

³ Vide s. 448.

⁴ Act I of 1903.

⁵ Zor Singh, (1887) 10 All. 146.

⁶ Khuda Bulshah, (1896) P. R. No. 10 of 1886.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.¹

(2) That he did so in order to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment.

Oudh Rule.—In charges under ss. 454 and 457 of the Indian Penal Code, the lurking house-trespass or house-breaking being first established, the intent to commit an offence on the part of the prisoner may be presumed, and it is for him to rebut that presumption by showing that he entered the house for an honest purpose; and if the prisoner be of bad character, or have no ostensible means of livelihood, it may be presumed that the offence when he entered the house with the intention of committing it was theft, unless the circumstances themselves are such as to rebut that presumption or the prisoner prove the contrary.²

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.³

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass, by entering into (or remaining in) a building belonging to AB, and used as a human dwelling, in order to the commission of an offence punishable with imprisonment, to wit—, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 454 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448. As to Burma, see the Burma Laws Act, 1898, s. 4 (3) (b) and Sch. II.

455. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass, or house-breaking, having made preparation for causing hurt to any person, or for assaulting any person, or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt or of assault or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT:

The relationship between this section and s. 453 is the same as that between ss. 452 and 450.

This section is similar to s. 458. The only difference is that this section deals with trespass committed by day: whereas s. 458 deals with trespass committed during night.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.⁴

¹ Vide ss. 443, 445, 453.

² Act I of 1903.

³ Circular No. 82 of 1885, Judl Com., Oudh.

⁴ Vide ss. 443, 445, 453.

(2) That he did so after making preparation for causing hurt, or assaulting, or wrongfully restraining some person, or for putting some person in fear of hurt, assault, or wrongful restraint.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, or Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass (or house-breaking) by entering into (or unlawfully remaining in) the building in the possession of AB and used as a human dwelling (or for the custody of property) having made preparation for causing hurt to the said AB (or for assaulting any person or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt or assault or of wrongful restraint), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 455 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

456. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night.

COMMENT.

able under s. 453; but less the intent necessary to be proved under this section on creditors, broke open his property, for which he was convicted of the offence of criminal trespass.

CASES.

Scaling a wall.—Effecting entrance into a house at night by scaling a wall amounts to house-breaking by night.²

Departure through a doorway.—The accused entered into a house at night and effected his departure with a vessel under his arm from the house after knocking down a person who stood in the doorway. It was held that the conviction for house-breaking by night was good.³

Entry to commit adultery.—Where a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effected an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a married couple in a respectable household and when an attempt was made to prevent him he used force to break through the door, he was guilty of house-breaking by night.

¹ Jotharam Daray, (1878) 2 Mad. 30.

² Emdad Ally, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 65.

³ Solai Kattayan, (1892) 1 Weir 530.

an intent as was provided for by this section.¹ The accused was found inside the house of the complainant at midnight, and his presence was discovered by the wife of the complainant crying out that a thief was taking away her hansli (neck ornament). The evidence of the complainant clearly showed that the accused was not there with the consent or at the invitation or for the pleasure of the complainant. It was held that the accused was properly convicted under this section, it being for him to show that his intention was under the circumstances innocent.²

In a case where it was proved that the accused was found at night inside the complainant's house where he had gone for the purpose of visiting the latter's widowed daughter-in-law, a woman of loose character, with whose knowledge and consent he had in all probability entered the room, it was held that the accused had been wrongly convicted under this section as he had none of the intentions necessary to constitute the offence described in s. 451 and could hardly have had the intention of committing the offence described in s. 509.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For lurking house-trespass by night prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass.⁴

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

For house-breaking at night prove (1) that the accused committed house-breaking.⁵

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

The splitting up of one aggravated offence into separate minor offences is prohibited, e.g., a conviction for lurking house-trespass and theft under this section and s. 380 instead of for lurking house-trespass in order to commit theft under s. 457.⁶

A conviction under this section may be made even though the accused is charged with the commission of an offence under s. 457.⁷

Charge.—A conviction under this section is not bad for want of the specifica-

the accused had; it will be enough if it is shown that the intention must have been one or other of those specified in s. 441, though it may not be certain which it was.⁸ But if the accused pleads that his intention was an innocent one, it is for him to say what it was, as the burden of proving it is on him, the knowledge of that intent being specially within his knowledge.⁹ Where, however, it appears that the accused has been prejudiced by the omission to frame a charge and to specify the intent, the conviction must be set aside and a re-trial ordered.¹⁰

¹ Koilash Chandra Chakrabarty, (1889) 16 Cal. 657; Balmaland Ram v. Ghansamram, (1894) 22 Cal. 391; Premarundo Shaha v. Brindaban Chung, (1895) 22 Cal. 994; Karal Prasad Guru, (1916) 44 Cal. 358; Ram Rang, (1902) P. R. No. 18 of 1905; Mohammad Nasiruddin, (1925) 4 Pat. 459.

² Ishri, (1906) 29 All. 46; Mulla, (1915) offence though the husband alone can prosecute. See Bandhu, (1894) Unrep. Cr. C. 689, which also lays down that the omission of the husband to prosecute for adultery does not prevent the accused from being convicted.

³ Ishri, (1906) 29 All. 46; Mulla, (1915)

⁴ See s. 445, sup.

⁵ Ishri, (1906) 29 All. 46; Mulla, (1915)

⁶ Ramcharan Kairi, (1866) Beng. L. R. Sup. Vol. 488, 6 W. R. (Cr.) 39, F. B.

⁷ Karal Prasad, (1916) 20 C. W. N. 107,

⁸ Balmaland Ram v. Ghansamram, sup.

⁹ Ishri, sup.

¹⁰ Jadav Mahton, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 140.

connects with (1895) 1 W. R. 631, which lays down that entry into a house with the object of committing adultery will constitute this

(2) That he did so after making preparation for causing hurt, or assaulting, or wrongfully restraining some person, or for putting some person in fear of hurt, assault, or wrongful restraint.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, or Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass (or house-breaking) by entering into (or unlawfully remaining in) the building in the possession of AB and used as a human dwelling (or for the custody of property) having made preparation for causing hurt to the said AB (or for assaulting any person or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt or assault or of wrongful restraint), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 455 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

456. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night.

COMMENT.

Lurking house-trespass or house-breaking is punishable under s. 453; but when it is committed at night this section is applicable. Unless the intent necessary to prove the offence of criminal trespass is present, the offence under this section cannot be committed. Where the accused persons, execution creditors, broke open the complainant's door before sunrise with intent to distrain his property, for which

CASES.

Scaling a wall.—Effecting entrance into a house at night by scaling a wall amounts to house-breaking by night.¹

Departure through a doorway.—The accused entered into a house at night and effected his departure with a vessel under his arm from the house after knocking down a person who stood in the doorway. It was held that the conviction for house-breaking by night was good.²

Entry to commit adultery.—Where a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effected an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman, a member of a respectable household, and, when an attempt was made to capture him, used great violence in his efforts to make good his escape, it was held that the Court should presume that the entry had been made with such

¹ Jotharam Dancy, (1878) 2 Mad. 30.

² Emdad Aliy, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr) 65.

² Solai Kattayan, (1872) 1 Weir 570.

an intent as was provided for by this section.¹ The accused was found inside the house of the complainant at midnight, and his presence was discovered by the wife of the complainant crying out that a thief was taking away her hansli (neck ornament). The evidence of the complainant clearly showed that the accused was not there with the consent or at the invitation or for the pleasure of the complainant. It was held that the accused was properly convicted under this section, it being for him to show that his intention was under the circumstances innocent.²

In a case where it was proved that the accused was found at night inside the complainant's house where he had gone for the purpose of visiting the latter's widowed daughter-in-law, a woman of loose character, with whose knowledge and consent he had in all probability entered the room, it was held that the accused had been wrongly convicted under this section as he had none of the intentions necessary to constitute the offence described in s. 451 and could hardly have had the intention of committing the offence described in s. 509.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For lurking house-trespass by night prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass.⁴

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

For house-breaking at night prove (1) that the accused committed house-breaking.⁵

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Tribable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Tribable summarily.

The splitting up of one aggravated offence into separate minor offences is prohibited, e.g. a conviction for lurking house-trespass and theft under this section and s. 380, instead of for lurking house-trespass in order to commit theft under s. 457.⁶

A conviction under this section may be made even though the accused is charged with the commission of an offence under s. 457.⁷

Charge.—A conviction under this section is not bad for want of the specification of the intention in the charge, but one under s. 457 cannot be sustained without such specification. In a charge under the former section, though a guilty intention must be proved, it is not necessary to prove which of the several guilty intentions the accused had, it

one or other of those

But if the accused pleads that his intention was an innocent one, it is for him to say what it was, as the burden of proving it is on him, the knowledge of that intent being specially within his knowledge.⁸ Where, however, it appears that the accused has been prejudiced by the omission to frame a charge and to specify the intent, the conviction must be set aside and a re-trial ordered.¹⁰

¹ Koilkash Chandra Chakrabarty, (1889) 16 Cal. 657; Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram, (1894) 22 Cal. 391; Premamundo Shaha v.

offence though the husband alone can prosecute. See Bandhu, (1894) Unrep. Cr. C. 689, which also lays down that the omission of the husband to prosecute for adultery does not ⁴ See s. 443, sup.

⁵ Vide s. 445, sup.

⁶ Ramcharan Kairi, (1866) Beng. L. R. Sup. Vol. 488, 6 W. R. (Cr.) 39, F. B.

⁷ Karali Prasad, (1916) 20 C. W. N. 107,

⁸ Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram, sup.

⁹ Ishri, sup.

¹⁰ Jadav Mahton, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 140.

down that entry into a house with the object of committing adultery will constitute this

(2) That he did so after making preparation for causing hurt, or assaulting, or wrongfully restraining some person, or for putting some person in fear of hurt, assault, or wrongful restraint.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, or Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass (or house-breaking) by entering into (or unlawfully remaining in) the building in the possession of AB and used as a human dwelling (or for the custody of property) having made preparation for causing hurt to the said AB (or for assaulting any person or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt or assault or of wrongful restraint), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 455 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

456. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night.

COMMENT.

Lurking house-trespass or house-breaking is punishable under s. 453; but they were convicted on a charge of lurking house-trespass by night, it was held that as they were not guilty of the offence of criminal trespass they could not be convicted under this section.¹

CASES.

Scaling a wall.—Effecting entrance into a house at night by scaling a wall amounts to house-breaking by night.²

Departure through a doorway.—The accused entered into a house at night and effected his departure with a vessel under his arm from the house after knocking down a person who stood in the doorway. It was held that the conviction for house-breaking by night was good.³

Entry to commit adultery.—Where a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effected an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman a member of a respectable household, and, when an attempt ¹ Jetharam Dary, (1878) 2 Mad. 30.

² Emdal Ally, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 65.

³ Solai Kallayan, (1892) 1 Weir 630.

an intent as was provided for by this section.¹ The accused was found inside the house of the complainant at midnight, and his presence was discovered by the wife of the complainant crying out that a thief was taking away her handi (neck ornament). The evidence of the complainant clearly showed that the accused was not there with the consent or at the invitation or for the pleasure of the complainant. It was held that the accused was properly convicted under this section, it being for him to show that his intention was under the circumstances innocent.²

In a case where it was proved that the accused was found at night inside the complainant's house where he had gone for the purpose of visiting the latter's widowed daughter-in-law, a woman of loose character, with whose knowledge and consent he had in all probability entered the room, it was held that the accused had been wrongly convicted under this section as he had none of the intentions necessary to constitute the offence described in s. 451 and could hardly have had the intention of committing the offence described in s. 509.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For lurking house-trespass by night prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass.⁴

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

For house-breaking at night prove (1) that the accused committed house-breaking.⁵

(2) That the same was committed after sunset and before sunrise.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

The splitting up of one aggravated offence into separate minor offences is prohibited, e.g. a conviction for lurking house-trespass and theft under this section and s. 380 instead of for lurking house-trespass in order to commit theft under s. 457.⁶

A conviction under this section may be made even though the accused is charged with the commission of an offence under s. 457.⁷

Charge.—A conviction under this section is not bad for want of the specifica-

the accused had, it will be enough if it is shown that the intention must have been one or other of those specified in s. 441, though it may not be certain which it was.⁸ But if the accused pleads that his intention was an innocent one, it is for him to say what it was, as the burden of proving it is on him, the knowledge of that intent being specially within his knowledge.⁹ Where, however, it appears that the accused has been prejudiced by the omission to frame a charge and to specify the intent, the conviction must be set aside and a re-trial ordered.¹⁰

¹ Koilaish Chandra Chakrabarty, (1889) 16 Cal. 657; Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram, (1894) 22 Cal. 391; Premasundo Shaha v.

offence though the husband alone can prosecute. See Bandhu, (1894) Unrep. Cr. C. 689, which also lays down that the omission of the husband to prosecute for adultery does not absolve the accused from criminal liability.

² Laje Ram, (1898) P. R. No. 12 of 1898; Mulki Ram, (1910) P. L. R. No. 50 of 1910.

³ Id s. 443, sup.

⁴ Id s. 445, sup.

⁵ Ramcharan Kauri, (1866) Beng. L. R. Sup. Vol. 488, 6 W. R. (Cr.) 39, F. B.

⁶ Karali Prasad, (1916) 20 C. W. N. 107,

⁷ Balmakand Ram v. Ghansamram, sup.

⁸ Ishri, sup.

⁹ Jadav Makton, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 140.

down that entry into a house with the object of committing adultery will constitute this

(2) That he did so after making preparation for causing hurt, or assaulting, or wrongfully restraining some person, or for putting some person in fear of hurt, assault, or wrongful restraint.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, or Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the—day of—, at—, committed lurking house-trespass (or house-breaking) by entering into (or unlawfully remaining in) the building in the possession of AB and used as a human dwelling (or for the custody of property) having made preparation for causing hurt to the said AB (or for assaulting any person or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt or assault or of wrongful restraint), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 455 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

456. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night.

COMMENT.

punishable under s. 453; but

Unless the intent necessary the offence under this section cannot be committed. Where the accused persons, execution creditors, broke open the complainant's door before sunrise with intent to distrain his property, for which

CASES.

Scaling a wall.—Effecting entrance into a house at night by scaling a wall amounts to house-breaking by night.²

Departure through a doorway.—The accused entered into a house at night and effected his departure with a vessel under his arm from the house after knocking down a person who stood in the doorway. It was held that the conviction for house-breaking by night was good.³

Entry to commit adultery.—Where a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effected an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman, a member of a respectable household, and, when an attempt was made to capture him, used great violence in his efforts to make good his escape, it was held that the Court should presume that the entry had been made with such

¹ Jadharam Dasay, (1878) 2 Mad. 30.

² Pundat Ally, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 65.

³ Solai Kattayan, (1892) 1 Weir 520.

absolve the accused from criminal liability under this section.¹ Where, on a charge under this section, it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused did enter the complainant's house in order to have sexual intercourse with a woman whom he knew was the wife of the complainant, and further that he did so without the husband's consent, and the accused was convicted, it was held that the conviction was proper. It was not necessary that the complainant should bring a specific charge of adultery.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass by night,³ or house-breaking by night.⁴

(2) That the same was committed to commit theft, or an offence punishable with imprisonment.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

An attempt to commit an offence under this section is punishable under s. 511 and not under Chapter XII or XVII of the Code.⁵

A charge of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery can be entertained without a complaint by the husband or person having care of the woman.⁶

Separate convictions.—An accused person was convicted of house-breaking by night in order to commit an offence (mischief and assault) and also under ss. 426 and 352 for the offences of mischief and assault and punished separately for each offence. It was held that the sentences were legal.⁷ For further cases, see Comment on s. 71.

Offences committed in the same transaction.—Where offences under this section and s. 380 are committed in one transaction, it is very desirable that formal convictions under both sections be recorded, in order that, if the accused subsequently commits another theft, technical difficulties may not arise.⁸

Charge.—In drawing up a charge the offence intended with a view to which

...ing by night and of house-trespass in respect of the same acts, it was held that the second head of the charge was superfluous, inasmuch as it involved the same intention substantially as the first, which intention ought not to be applied to support two different charges.⁹

The charge should run thus:—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the ...
trespass ...
ing to ...
hour of ...

imprisonment, to wit the offence of—; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

¹ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 302.

² Chatter, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 302.

³ See ss. 441, 450, sup.

⁴ Vide ss. 446, 456, sup.

⁵ Harnam, (1907) P. R. No. 17 of 1907

⁶ Subz Ali, (1876) P. R. No. 2 of 1877; Bandhu, sup.

⁷ Nirichan, (1888) 12 Mad. 36.

⁸ Nga Pan Bee, (1903) 2 B. L. T. 10; see also, Sheobhajan Ahir, (1920) 2 P. L. T. 125.

⁹ Khandu, (1886) Cr. R. No. 50 of 1886, Unrep. Cr. C. 302.

absolve the accused from criminal liability under this section.¹ Where, on a charge under this section, it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused did enter the complainant's house in order to have sexual intercourse with a woman whom he knew was the wife of the complainant, and further that he did so without the husband's consent, and the accused was convicted, it was held that the conviction was proper. It was not necessary that the complainant should bring a specific charge of adultery.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass by night,³ or house-breaking by night.⁴

(2) That the same was committed to commit theft, or an offence punishable with imprisonment.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

An attempt to commit an offence under this section is punishable under s. 511 and not under Chapter XII or XVII of the Code.⁵

A charge of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery can be entertained without a complaint by the husband or person having care of the woman.⁶

Separate convictions.—An accused person was convicted of house-breaking by night in order to commit an offence (mischief and assault) and also under ss. 426 and 352 for the offences of mischief and assault and punished separately for each offence. It was held that the sentences were legal.⁷ For further cases, see Comment on s. 71.

Offences committed in the same transaction.—Where offences under this section and s. 380 are committed in one transaction, it is very desirable that formal convictions under both sections be recorded, in order that, if the accused subsequently commits another theft, technical difficulties may not arise.⁸

Charge.—In drawing up a charge the offence intended with a view to which trespass was committed should be entered in the charge.

Where the accused was convicted of house-breaking by night and of house-trespass in respect of the same acts, it was held that the second head of the charge was superfluous, inasmuch as it involved the same intention substantially as the first, — different charges.⁹

as follows — u (name of the accused

Trespassing to the house of the complainant at night, to wit, on the _____ day of _____, 19____, at _____ hour of _____ imprisonment, to wit the offence of —; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

¹ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894, Unrep. Cr. C. 689.

² Kangla, (1900) 23 All. 82. See Chatter

³ Subz Ali, (1876) P. R. No. 2 of 1877; Bandhu, sup.

⁴ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

⁵ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

⁶ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

⁷ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

⁸ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

⁹ Bandhu, (1894) Cr. R. No. 11 of 1894.

Whipping.—In the case of a conviction of attempting to commit house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, a sentence of whipping was annulled as being illegal.¹

458. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, having made preparation for causing hurt¹ to any person, or for assaulting² any person, or for wrongfully restraining³ any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt, or of assault, or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to fourteen years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night after preparation for hurt, assault or wrongful restraint.

COMMENT

This section is analogous to ss. 452 and 455. It only applies to the house-breaker who actually has himself made preparation for causing hurt to any person, etc., and not to his companions as well who themselves have not made such preparation.²

1. 'Having made preparation for causing hurt.'—See s. 319, supra, as to the definition of 'hurt.'

2. 'Assault.'—See s. 351, supra.

3. 'Wrongful restraint.'—See s. 339, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass by night³ or house-breaking by night.⁴

(2) That he did as above after having made preparation for causing hurt, or for assaulting, or for wrongfully restraining some person, or for putting some one in fear of hurt, assault or wrongful restraint.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, or Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—See s. 457, infra.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

459. Whoever, whilst committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, causes grievous hurt¹ to any person or attempts² to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Grievous hurt caused whilst committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.

COMMENT.

The offence under this section is an aggravated form of the offence described in the last section.

Scope.—This section and s. 460 provide for a compound offence, the governing incident of which is that either a 'lurking house-trespass' or 'house-breaking'

¹ Yella valad Parashia, (1866) 3 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 37.

² Ghulam, (1923) 4 Lah. 399

³ Vide s. 444.

⁴ Vide s. 446.

must have been completed in order to make a person who accompanies that offence either by causing grievous hurt or attempt to cause death or grievous hurt responsible under those sections. The sections must be construed strictly, and they are not applicable where the principal act done by the accused person amounts to no more than a mere attempt to commit lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.¹ The accused one early morning were disturbed by a watchman while engaged in making a hole in the wall of the house of the complainant. Immediately upon being so disturbed they attempted to make their escape, one of the accused firing off a pistol and the other two attempting to prevent their apprehension by using their sticks. The first accused was convicted under this section and the two others under s. 460. The former Chief Court of the Punjab quashed the conviction under these sections and recorded them under ss. 452 and 511.²

1. 'Grievous hurt.'—The grievous hurt must be caused, or the attempt must be made, during the time that the house-breaking is being committed, and not after that offence is completed, and the offender has left the premises.³ For the meaning of the term 'grievous hurt,' see s. 320, supra.

2. 'Attempts.'—See s. 511, infra.

Premeditation to cause hurt, etc., not essential.—If in the commission of the lurking house-trespass or house-breaking a personal injury of the kind here mentioned is caused or attempted to be caused, it is immaterial that it was without premeditation and sudden.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass⁵ or house-breaking.⁶

(2) That he caused grievous hurt, or attempted to cause death or grievous hurt, to some person.

(3) That he did as above whilst engaged in committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, while committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking caused grievous hurt to AB (or attempted to cause the death of AB or grievous hurt to AB) and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 459 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

460. If, at the time of the committing of lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night,¹ any person guilty of such offence shall voluntarily² cause or attempt³ to cause death⁴ or grievous hurt⁵ to any person, every person jointly concerned in committing such lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with

All persons jointly concerned in lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night punishable where death or grievous hurt caused by one of them.

¹ M. & M. 407.

² Ide s. 443, sup.

³ Ide s. 445, sup.

imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section deals with the constructive liability of persons jointly concerned in house-breaking by night in the course of which a theft is committed. It is immaterial who causes the theft, if a person jointly concerned in committing such house-trespass or house-breaking shall be punished in the manner provided in the section.¹

This section when read with ss. 415 and 441 demands that the offence of house-breaking shall have been completed to bring an offender within its terms. The accused must be "guilty of such offence," viz., house-breaking by night. The accused and another person attempted to break into a house by night for the purpose of committing theft, and were interrupted by the inmates, one of whom was killed by one of the accused. There was no evidence to show which of the accused caused the death. It was held that the accused could not be punished with transportation for life as the offence of house-breaking was attempted only and not committed.²

1. 'At the time of the committing of... house-breaking by night.'—This expression "is to some extent vague, but... it must be limited to the time during which the criminal trespass continues which forms an element in house-trespass, which is itself essential to house-breaking and cannot be extended so as to include any prior or subsequent time."³ The accused broke into the house of one T at night with intent to commit theft, armed with deadly weapons, left the house on an alarm being raised and in the courtyard stabbed R who tried to seize them, injuring him so that he died later on. They were pursued and captured. It was held that as the stabbing was done after the house-breaking was complete this section did not apply, but that the accused were guilty of offences under ss. 457, 458 and 326.⁴ The accused was one of a party of four men who broke into the house of the complainant by night and, being discovered, were running away when a neighbour caught hold of the accused whereupon some of his companions inflicted certain injuries upon the neighbour of which he died on the spot. It was held that this section was not applicable as the offence of house-breaking by night had been completed when the neighbour arrived on the scene.⁵

A man who, in the commission of lurking house-trespass by night, voluntarily attempts to cause grievous hurt to the owner of the house who tries to capture him, is punishable under this section and not under ss. 457 and 324.⁶

2. 'Voluntarily.'—See s. 39, supra.

3. 'Attempts.'—See s. 511, infra.

4. 'Death.'—See s. 46, supra.

5. 'Grievous hurt.'—See s. 320, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed lurking house-trespass by night; ⁷ or house-breaking by night.⁸

¹ Chatur, (1911) 8 A. L. J. R. 574.

² Saifudin, (1874) P. R. No. 16 of 1874; Jowala Singh, (1880) P. R. No. 12 of 1880, explained in Umar Din, (1891) P. R. No. 12 of 1891.

³ Per Flawden, J., in Jaffir, (1881) P. R.

No. 2 of 1882.

⁴ Sed Rasul, (1916) P. R. No. 27 of 1916

⁵ Muhammad, (1921) 2 Lab. 342.

⁶ Lukhun Dose, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 52.

⁷ Vide s. 444, supra.

⁸ Vide s. 446, supra.

(2) That he caused, or attempted to cause, death or grievous hurt.¹

(3) That he did as above whilst engaged in committing lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows.—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at —, jointly with certain other person, to wit—, committed lurking house-trespass by night [or house-breaking by night] by entering into the building belonging to AB, and used as a human dwelling, and that one of the said persons, to wit—, at the time of committing such offence voluntarily caused [or attempted to cause] death [or grievous hurt] to—, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 460 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see s. 448.

461. Whoever dishonestly,¹ or with intent to commit mischief,² breaks open or unfastens any closed receptacle³ which contains or which he believes to contain property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Dishonestly breaking open receptacle containing property.

COMMENT.

This and the following section provide for the same offence. As soon as the receptacle is broken open or unfastened the offence is complete.

1. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 24, supra

2. 'Mischief.'—See s. 425, supra.

3. 'Receptacle.'—This may include not only a room, a part of a room or closet, etc., but a box or closed package.²

T, being an inmate of his uncle's house, broke open a chest and took out property from it. He was convicted of an offence under s. 457. It was held that he could not properly be convicted under that section, but should have been convicted under this section and s. 378.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the receptacle was closed or fastened.

(2) That it contained property, or that the accused believed that it contained property.

(3) That the accused broke open or unfastened it.

(4) That he did so dishonestly, or with intent to commit mischief.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows.—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at —, dishonestly [or with intent to commit mischief] broke open [or unfastened] a certain closed receptacle, to wit—, which contained [or which you believed to contain] certain property, to wit—;

¹ See Nur Dad and Fatta, (1919) 1 L. L. J. 252.

² M. & M. 408.

³ Tasdukh Hossein, (1874) 6 N. W. P. 301.

and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 461 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

462. Whoever, being entrusted with any closed receptacle which contains or which he believes to contain property, without having authority to open the same dishonestly, or with intent to commit mischief, breaks open or unfastens that receptacle, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for same offence when committed by person entrusted with custody.

COMMENT.

This section deals with the same offence as is punishable under the preceding section. The punishment under it is higher as there is a breach of trust on the part of the person to whom the receptacle is entrusted.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (4) as for s. 461 ; and further :—

(5) That the accused was entrusted with such receptacle.

(6) That he was so entrusted with it, in a closed or unfastened state.

(7) That he had no authority to open the same.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, being entrusted with a certain closed receptacle, to wit —, which contained [or which you believed to contain] certain property, to wit —, on or about the — day of —, at —, dishonestly [or with intent to commit mischief] broke open [or unfastened] the said receptacle, without having authority to open the same ; and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 462 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO DOCUMENTS AND TO TRADE OR PROPERTY MARKS.

463. Whoever makes any false document or part of a document,¹ with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person,^{2a} or to support any claim or title^{2b}, or to cause any person to part with property,^{2c} or to enter into any express or implied contract,^{2d} or with intent to commit fraud^{2e} or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery.

Making a false document.

464. A person is said to make a false document—

First.—Who dishonestly or fraudulently makes, signs, seals or executes a document or part of a document, or makes any mark denoting the execution of a document,¹ with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made, signed, sealed or executed by or by the authority of a person by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed,^{2a} or at a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed^{2b}; or

Secondly.—Who, without lawful authority, dishonestly or fraudulently, by cancellation or otherwise, alters a document in any material part thereof, after it has been made or executed either by himself or by any other person, whether such person be living or dead at the time of such alteration; or

Thirdly.—Who dishonestly or fraudulently causes any person to sign, seal, execute or alter a document, knowing that such person by reason of unsoundness of mind or intoxication cannot, or that by reason of deception practised upon him, he does not know the contents of the document or the nature of the alteration.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A has a letter of credit upon B for Rs. 10,000, written by Z. A, in order to defraud B, adds a cipher to the 10,000, and makes the sum 1,00,000, intending that it may be believed by B that Z so wrote the letter. A has committed forgery.

(b) A, without Z's authority, affixes Z's seal to a document purporting to be a conveyance of an estate from Z to A, with the intention of selling the estate to B, and thereby of obtaining from B the purchase money. A has committed forgery.

(c) A picks up a cheque on a banker signed by B, payable to bearer, but without any sum having been inserted in the cheque. A fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of ten thousand rupees. A commits forgery.

(d) A leaves with B, his agent, a cheque on a banker, signed by A, without inserting the sum payable, and authorizes B to fill up the cheque by inserting a sum not exceeding ten thousand rupees for the purpose of making certain payments. B fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of twenty thousand rupees. B commits forgery.

(c) A draws a bill of exchange on himself in the name of B without B's authority, intending to discount it as a genuine bill with a banker and intending to take up the bill on its maturity. Here, as A draws the bill with intent to deceive the banker by leading him to suppose that he had the security of B, and thereby to discount the bill, A is guilty of forgery.

(f) Z's will contains these words—"I direct that all my remaining property be equally divided between A, B and C." A dishonestly scratches out B's name, intending that it may be believed that the whole was left to himself and C. A has committed forgery.

(g) A endorses a Government promissory note and makes it payable to Z or his order by writing on the bill the words "Pay to Z or his order" and signing the endorsement. B dishonestly erases the words, "Pay to Z or his order" and thereby converts the special endorsement into a blank endorsement. B commits forgery.

(h) A sells and conveys an estate to Z. A afterwards, in order to defraud Z of his estate, executes a conveyance of the same estate to B, dated six months earlier than the date of the conveyance to Z, intending it to be believed that he had conveyed the estate to B before he conveyed it to Z. A has committed forgery.

(i) Z dictates his will to A. A intentionally writes down a different legatee from the legatee named by Z, and, by representing to Z that he has prepared the will according to his instructions, induces Z to sign the will. A has committed forgery.

(j) A writes a letter and signs it with B's name without B's authority, certifying that A is a man of good character and in distressed circumstances from unforeseen misfortune, intending by means of such letter to obtain alms from Z and other persons. Here, as A made a false document in order to induce Z to part with property. A has committed forgery.

(k) A without B's authority writes a letter and signs it in B's name certifying to A's character, intending thereby to obtain employment under Z. A has committed forgery, inasmuch as he intended to deceive Z by the forged certificate, and thereby to induce Z to enter into an express or implied contract for service.

*Explanation 1st.—*A man's signature of his own name may amount to forgery.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A signs his own name to a bill of exchange, intending that it may be believed that the bill was drawn by another person of the same name. A has committed forgery.

(b) A writes the word "accepted" on a piece of paper and signs it with Z's name, in order that B may afterwards write on the paper a bill of exchange drawn by B upon Z, and negotiate the bill as though it had been accepted by Z. A is guilty of forgery.

(c) A picks up a bill of exchange drawn by another person of the same name. A endorses the bill in his own name, intending to cause it to be believed that it was endorsed by the person to whose order it was payable: here A has committed forgery.

(d) A purchases an estate sold under execution of a decree against B. B, after the seizure of the estate in collusion with A, leases the estate to A for a nominal rent and for a long period, and afterwards, in order to defraud A, and to secure the estate to himself, he grants before the seizure. B, though he executes the lease in his own name, commits forgery by antedating it.

(e) A, a trader, in anticipation of insolvency, lodges effects with B for A's benefit, and with intent to defraud his creditors; and in order to give a colour to the transaction, writes a receipt for the effects, which B receives, and a bill of exchange is made before A's death. This is the first head of the definition.

Explanation 2.—The making of a false document in the name of a fictitious person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by a real person, or in the name of a deceased person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by the person in his lifetime, may amount to forgery.

ILLUSTRATION.

A draws a bill of exchange upon a fictitious person, and fraudulently accepts the bill in the name of such fictitious person with intent to negotiate it. A commits forgery.

465. Whoever commits forgery shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

meaning of the Code.

The definition of forgery in the Code is not as simple and clear as it is in common law. Forgery in England is not defined by statute. It is defined in common law as the fraudulent making (or alteration) of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right.¹

Section 463.—Scope.—Section 463 “contemplates two classes of intents, and it is clear... that it is not an essential quality of the fraud mentioned in the section that it should result in or aim at the deprivation of property. If this be so, it cannot be a crime (s. 464), which is but a part of criminality an intent different from that contemplated in s. 463.”²

Ingredients.—The elements of forgery are—

1. The making of a false document or part of it.
2. Such making should be with intent to
 - (a) cause damage or injury to (i) the public, or (ii) any person; or
 - (b) support any claim or title; or
 - (c) cause any person to part with property; or
 - (d) enter into any express or implied contract; or
 - (e) commit fraud or that fraud may be committed.

1. ‘Whoever makes any false document or part of a document.’—To constitute the offence of forgery the simple making of a ‘false document’ is sufficient. What amounts to the making of a ‘false document’ is explained in s. 464. The person who makes a ‘false document’ commits forgery. A person who is not the writer of a forged document cannot be charged with committing the substantive offence of forgery. If he has caused such a ‘false document’ to be made he will be guilty of abetment.¹ It is not necessary that the document should be published or made in the name of a really existing person.² But "it is essential that the false document, when made, must either appear on its face to be, or be in fact, one, which, if true, would possess some legal validity, or in other words must be legally capable of effecting the fraud intended."³ A writing, which is not legal evidence of the matter expressed, may yet be a 'document' if the parties framing it believed it to be, and intended it to be, evidence of such matter.⁴ Thus, forging a deed will amount to this offence, although a statute requires the deed in a particular form, or to comply with certain requisites, and the forged deed is not in the form, or does not comply with those requisites.⁵

¹ Blackstone, Vol. IV, p. 247.

² Abbas Ali, (1897) 23 Cal. 512, 521, F.R., overruling Haradhan's case, (1892) 19 Cal. 380

The assertion of a false claim in a document will not constitute the document a false one, when it is executed by the party who purports to execute it and there is no intention of raising a belief that it was executed by some other person, real or fictitious. A, who was not the son, natural or adopted, of the deceased B, executed a deed of mortgage of certain properties of B in favour of C. In the body of the document A was described as the son of B, though no such description appeared in the signature. A was known to C for a long time, and A had no intention of causing it to be believed that the document was executed by any other person than himself. It was held that A was not guilty of making a 'false document.'⁶

"Forgery supposes the possibility of a genuine document, and that the false document is not as good as the genuine document, and that the one is not as efficacious for all purposes as the other."⁷ Every forgery is a counterfeit.⁸ But every concoction of a document is not forgery. Supposing A says to B he has got a promissory note from B, and threatens to sue him if he does not pay the money due upon it. B finds that the document in possession of A purports to be a copy of a promissory note by B. If B had never given a promissory note, A cannot be convicted of forgery or of uttering a forged document, but of cheating he may be.

If the false document is incomplete in such a material way as no one will be deceived there will be no conviction for forgery. Where the accused drew a bill upon the treasurer of the Navy payable to blank or order, and signed it in the name of a navy surgeon, it was held that forging an instrument payable to blank or order was not sufficient, there must be a payee.⁹ The instrument should be complete. But if a forged document is not wholly void for want of certain form the maker of it will be guilty of forgery.¹⁰

2a. 'Intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person.'—When a false document is made, with 'intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person,' it is not necessary to prove that in making the document the accused knew that the document might injure, but it must be proved that it was his intention that it should injure another.¹¹

As to the meaning of the word 'injury,' see s. 44, supra; of 'public,' s. 12;

¹ See Section 48.

instituted, is a reasonable one.¹²

¹ Haidar Ali, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 351.

² Vide Explanation 1.

³ 2 Bishop 603; Collet's Comments on the Indian Penal Code, quoted in Jayala Ram, (1894) P. R. No. 12 of 1895.

⁴ Sheefat Ali, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 61, 2 Beng. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 12.

⁵ Thomas Lyon, (1813) R. & R. 255; James Mackintosh, (1800) 2 Leach 883.

⁶ Adailalammai v. Raman, (1908) 32 Mad. 90.

⁷ Per Bramwell, B., in John Smith, (1858) 8 Cox 32, 37.

⁸ Per Byles, J., in ibid.

⁹ Richards, (1811) R. & R. 193; Daniel Randall, (1811) R. & R. 195; Richard Posteman, (1821) R. & R. 455; Butterwick, (1839) 2 M. & Rob. 190.

¹⁰ Thomas Lyon, supra.

¹¹ Feda Hossein, (1881) 10 C. L. R. 184.

¹² Ahmed Ali, (1925) 42 C. L. J. 216.

2b. 'Support any claim or title.'—Even if a man has a legal claim or title to property, he will be guilty of forgery if he counterfeits documents in order to supply, transfer, or otherwise dispose of the property, or to support any claim to property. It is not necessary that the document should be given to a woman as the wife of the claimant's child, or a claim to be admitted to attendance at a law class in a college, or to be admitted to a university or other examination, or a claim to the possession of immoveable or any other kind of property."²

2c. 'To cause any person to part with property.'—"It is not... necessary to constitute a forgery under s. 463 that the 'property' with which it is intended that the false document shall cause a person to part, should be in existence at the time when the false document was made. For example, if A gave an order to B to buy the material for making and to make a silver tea service for him, and C, before the tea service was made or the materials for making it had been bought, were to make a false letter purporting, but falsely, to be signed by A, authorising B to deliver to D the tea service when made, C would have committed forgery within the meaning of s. 463 by making that false document with intent to cause B to part with property, namely, the tea service, when made."³ A written certificate has been held to be 'property' within the meaning of this section.⁴

2d. 'To enter into any express or implied contract.'—The false document under this clause must be to enable the person making it to enter into any express or implied contract. Creation of contractual rights by false documents is covered by this clause.

2e. 'Intent to commit fraud.'—"The offence (of forgery) is complete if a document, false in fact, is made with intent to commit a fraud, although it may not have been made with any one of the other intents specified in s. 463."⁵

"By fraud, I understand an intention to deceive; whether it be from any expectation of advantage to the party himself, or from ill-will towards the other is immaterial."⁶ It has been held in a Bombay case that the term 'fraud' is used in this section in its ordinary and popular acceptation.⁷ Stephen⁸ says: "Whenever the words 'fraud' or 'intent to defraud' or 'fraudulently' occur in the definition of a crime, two elements at least are essential to the commission of the crime—namely, first, deceit or an intention to deceive, or in some cases mere secrecy; and, secondly, either actual injury or possible injury or an intent to expose some person either to actual injury or to a risk of possible injury by means of that deceit or secrecy. This intent, I may add, is very seldom the only or the principal intention entertained by the fraudulent person, whose principal object in nearly every case is his own advantage. The injurious deception is usually intended only as a means to an end... A practically conclusive test as to the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purposes is this. Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which he could not have had if the truth had been known? If so, it is hardly possible that that advantage

¹ Munim Kaseer, (1882) 9 Cal. 53.

² Per Edg. C. J., in Sooki Bhushan, (1893) 15 All. 210, 217; Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, (1903) 29 Mad. 10, 49, r. n. Akandusingh, (1896) 22 Bom. 764.

³ Per Edg. C. J., in Sooki Bhushan, sup., p. 218.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Per Sir Arnold White, C. J., in Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, sup., p. 93.

⁶ Per Blanc, J., in Haycraft v. Cressy, (1801) 2 East 92, 108; followed with approval in Fakal Narayan, (1886) 13 Bom. 515, 517, which is followed in Lodhi Mohan Sarker, (1894) 22 Cal. 313.

⁷ Balakrishna Vaman, (1913) 15 Bom. L. R. 708, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 115.

⁸ History of Criminal Law, Vol. II, p. 121. This extract is quoted with approval in several Indian cases.

not have had an equivalent in loss, or risk of loss, to some one else; "Where, therefore, there is an intention to deceive there is fraud, and if a document the majority of the Judges of the of opinion that an intention to secure a benefit or advantage by means of the deceit constitutes an intention to defraud. Sir Arnold, C. J., while observing that it was not necessary to decide this point, said "that either an intention to secure a benefit or advantage on the one hand, or cause loss or detriment on the other, by means of deceit, is an intent to do fraud." He also observed: "Intending to defraud means, of course, something more than deceiving. A tells B a lie and B believes him. B is deceived but it does not follow that A intended to defraud B. But, as it seems to me, if A tells B a lie intending that B should do something which A conceives to be to his own benefit or advantage, and which, if done, would be to the loss or detriment of B, A intends to defraud B." The object for which the deceit is practised has to be considered. The advantage intended to be secured or the harm intended to be caused need not have relation to property or be such as is implied in the term 'dishonestly' but it must be something to which the party perpetrating the deceit is not entitled either legally or equitably. Where the accused altered a document without the authority of the executant after its execution, and it was proved that the alteration was made to prevent other people from setting up a claim to property which was admittedly in the possession of the accused, the object cannot be said to be dishonest and the man is not guilty of forgery.³

The expression "intend to defraud" implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words, "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived; that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him, but not necessarily deprivation of property. The addition of a name to the list of attesting witnesses of an instrument which need not in law be attested is held not to amount to making a false document.⁴

It is a necessary part of this offence that any damage or injury should be actually suffered or that any fraud should be perpetrated. From the intention that the false document should deceive others into a belief that it is genuine it may generally be inferred that there was an intention to damage or injure.⁵

Deprivation of property, actual or intended, does not constitute an essential element of an intention to defraud.⁶ An intent to defraud may be inferred from the wilful use of a forged instrument to support a genuine claim.⁷

Intent to defraud any particular person not necessary.—A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction; and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged.⁸ It is not required, in order to constitute in point of law an intent to defraud that the party committing the offence should have had present in his mind an intention to defraud a particular person, if the consequence of the act would necessarily or possibly be to defraud any person; but there must, at all events, be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the

¹ Per Bannerji, J., in Muhammad Saeed Khan, (1893) 21 All 113, 115.

² Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, (1905) 28 Mad 90, 96, F.B. The majority of the Court have expressed their non-concurrence with the case of Srinivasan, (1902) 25 Mad. 726. See Weir 332.

³ Manika Asari, [1915] 11 W N 278.

⁴ Surendra Nath Ghosh, (1910) 12 C. L. J. 277, 280, 14 C. W. N. 1076, Ahmed Ali, (1923) 42 C. L. J. 235.

⁵ M & M 416.

⁶ Abbas Ali, (1897) 25 Cal. 512, F.B., Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, sup.

⁷ Samuel Hopley, (1915) 11 Cr. App. R. 248.

⁸ Dhunum Kaze, (1882) 9 Cal. 53.

forgery.¹ It is not necessary that there should have been some person defrauded. A man may have an intent to defraud and yet there may not be any person who could be defrauded by his act. Suppose a person with a good account at his

Cases.—Intent to defraud.—If a person have the authority of another to write the name of that other to an acceptance, it is no forgery; neither is it if he had no such authority, provided that he had fair ground for considering that he had such authority, and did so consider, and wrote the acceptance, not meaning to defraud or injure any one.² Even if there is no previous authority of the person whose name is put on a bill of exchange, still if that person has been informed of it at the time and he does not repudiate it, it will not amount to forgery.⁴ But if A puts the

to be gery.⁶
write of exchange for a larger amount, with intent to defraud either the acceptor or any other person, this is forgery.⁶ A forged cheque on the W Bank was presented for payment at the S Bank, where the supposed drawer never kept cash. It was held that this was sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud the partners of the S Bank, although there was no probability of their paying the cheque, even if it had been genuine.⁷

In a case of forgery, the fact that the prisoner had given guarantees to his bankers, to whom he paid a forged note, to a larger amount than the note, was held not to negative an intent to defraud.⁸ If a person knew the acceptance of a bill of exchange to be forged, and uttered it as true, and believed that his bankers, to whom he uttered it, would advance money on it, which they would not otherwise, that is ample evidence of an intent to defraud, and evidence upon which a jury ought to act, and a person is not the less guilty of forgery because he may intend ultimately to take up the forged bill, and may suppose that the party whose name is forged will be no loser, and the fact that the bill has been since paid by the accused will make no difference, if the offence has once been complete at the time of the uttering.⁹ The accused was convicted on an indictment at common law for forging and uttering a diploma of the College of Surgeons. The jury found that the accused forged the document with the general intent to induce the belief that it was genuine and that he was a member of the College, and he showed it to certain persons with intent to induce such belief in them; but that he had no intent in forging or in uttering to commit any particular fraud or specific wrong to any individual. It was held that the conviction was wrong as it was not proved that the act was done with intent to defraud.¹⁰

Copy.—The offence of forgery may be committed by a person who fabricates a false document purporting to be a copy of another document for the purpose of the same being used in evidence. The accused, in a suit for possession of land to support his pedigree, put in a deed of dower, and a deed of security purporting to be copies of the original documents filed in a previous suit, but it was found that

¹ Hermann Marcus, (1846) 2 C. & K. 356; Trenfield, (1858) 1 F. & F. 43; Mary Maza-gora, (1815) R. & R. 291.

² Per Maule, J., in Charles Nash, (1852) 2 Den. Cr. C. 493, 21 L. J. (M. C.) 147.

³ Parish, (1837) 8 C. & P. 94.

⁴ Smith, (1862) 3 F. & F. 504.

⁵ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

⁶ John Hart (Minter), (1836) 7 C. & P. 652.

⁷ Crowther, (1832) 5 C. & P. 316.

⁸ Charles James, (1836) 7 C. & P. 553.

⁹ Geach, (1840) 9 C. & P. 499.

¹⁰ Henry Hodgson, (1856) Dears & B. 3.

should not have had an equivalent in loss, or risk of loss, to some one else; and if so, there was fraud." "Where, therefore, there is an intention to deceive and by means of the deceit to obtain an advantage there is fraud, and if a document is fabricated with such intent, it is a forgery."¹ The majority of the Judges of the Madras High Court in a full bench case² seem to be of opinion that an intention to secure a benefit or advantage to the party deceiving by means of the deceit constitutes an intention to defraud. Sir Arnold White, C. J., while observing that it was not necessary to decide this point, said "that either an intention to secure a benefit or advantage on the one hand, or cause loss or detriment on the other, by means of deceit, is an intent to do fraud." He also observed: "Intending to defraud means, of course, something more than deceiving. A tells B a lie and B believes him. B is deceived but it does not follow that A intended to defraud B. But, as it seems to me, if A tells B a lie intending that B should do something which A conceives to be to his own benefit or advantage, and which, if done, would be to the loss or detriment of B, A intends to defraud B." The object for which the deceit is practised has to be considered. The advantage intended to be secured or the harm intended to be caused need not have relation to property or be such as is implied in the term 'dishonestly' but it must be something to which the party perpetrating the deceit is not entitled either legally or equitably. Where the accused altered a document without the authority of the executant after its execution, and it was proved that the alteration was made to prevent other people from setting up a claim to property which was admittedly in the possession of the accused, the object cannot be said to be dishonest and the man is not guilty of forgery.³

The expression "intend to defraud" implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words, "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived; that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him, but not necessarily deprivation of property. The addition of a name to the list of attesting witnesses of an instrument which need not in law be attested is held not to amount to making a false document.⁴

It is a necessary part of this offence that any damage or injury should be actually suffered or that any fraud should be perpetrated. From the intention that the false document should deceive others into a belief that it is genuine it may generally be inferred that there was an intention to damage or injure.⁵

Deprivation of property, actual or intended, does not constitute an essential element of an intention to defraud.⁶ An intent to defraud may be inferred from the wilful use of a forged instrument to support a genuine claim.⁷

Intent to defraud any particular person not necessary.—A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction; and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged.⁸ It is not required, in order to constitute in point of law an intent to defraud that the party committing the offence should have had present in his mind an intention to defraud a particular person, if the consequence of the act would necessarily or possibly be to defraud any person; but there must, at all events, be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the

¹ Per Bannerji, J., in Muhammad Saeed Khan, (1898) 21 All 113, 115.

² Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, (1905) 28 Mad 90, 96, F. R. The majority of the Court have expressed their non-concurrence with the case of Srinivasan, (1902) 25 Mad 726. See Weir 332.

³ Manika Asari, [1915] M. W. N. 278.

⁴ Surendra Nath Ghosh, (1910) 12 C. L. J. 277, 280, 14 C. W. N. 1076; Ahmed Ali, (1925) 42 C. L. J. 215.

⁵ M & M, 416.

⁶ Abbas Ali, (1897) 25 Cal. 512, F. R., Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, sup.

⁷ Samuel Hopley, (1915) 11 Cr. App. R. 248.

⁸ Dhunum Kaze, (1882) 9 Cal. 53.

forgery.¹ It is not necessary that there should have been some person defrauded. A man may have an intent to defraud and yet there may not be any person who could be defrauded by his act. Suppose a person with a good account at his bankers, and a friend with his knowledge forges his name to a cheque either to try his credit, or to imitate his handwriting, there would be no intent to defraud, though there would be parties who might be defrauded; but where another person has no account at his bankers, but a man supposes that he has, and on that supposition forges his name, there would be an intent to defraud in that case, although no person could be defrauded.²

Cases.—Intent to defraud.—If a person have the authority of another to write the name of that other to an acceptance, it is no forgery; neither is it if he had no such authority, provided that he had fair ground for considering that he had such authority, and did so consider, and wrote the acceptance, not meaning to defraud or injure any one.³ Even if there is no previous authority of the person whose name is put on a bill of exchange, still if that person has been informed of it at the time and he does not repudiate it, it will not amount to forgery.⁴ But if A puts the name of B on a bill of exchange as acceptor without B's authority, expecting to be able to meet it when due, or expecting that B will overlook it, this is forgery.⁵ Similarly, if a person having the blank acceptance of another, be authorised to write on a bill of exchange for a certain limited amount, and he writes on it a bill of exchange for a larger amount, with intent to defraud either the acceptor or any other person, this is forgery.⁶ A forged cheque on the W Bank was presented for payment at the S Bank, where the supposed drawer never kept cash. It was held that this was sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud the partners of the S Bank, although there was no probability of their paying the cheque, even if it had been genuine.⁷

In a case of forgery, the fact that the prisoner had given guarantees to his bankers, to whom he paid a forged note, to a larger amount than the note, was held not to negative an intent to defraud.⁸ If a person knew the acceptance of a bill of exchange to be forged, and uttered it as true, and believed that his bankers, to whom he uttered it, would advance money on it, which they would not otherwise, that is ample evidence of an intent to defraud, and evidence upon which a jury ought to act; and a person is not the less guilty of forgery because he may intend ultimately to take up the forged bill, and may suppose that the party whose name is forged will be no loser, and the fact that the bill has been since paid by the accused will make no difference, if the offence has once been complete at the time of the uttering.⁹ The accused was convicted on an indictment at common law for forging and uttering a diploma of the College of Surgeons. The jury found that the accused forged the document with the general intent to induce the belief that it was genuine and that he was a member of the College; and he showed it to certain persons with intent to induce such belief in them; but that he had no intent in forging or in uttering to commit any particular fraud or specific wrong to any individual. It was held that the conviction was wrong as it was not proved that the act was done with intent to defraud.¹⁰

C. v. M. may be committed by a person who fabricates a copy of another document for the purpose of The accused, in a suit for possession of land to of dower, and a deed of security purporting to filed in a previous suit, but it was found that

¹ Hermann Marcus, (1846) 2 C. & K. 356; Trenfield, (1858) 1 F. & F. 43; Mary Magara, (1815) R. & R. 291.

² Per Maule, J., in Charles Nash, (1852) 2 Den. Cr. C. 493, 21 L. J. (M. C.) 147.

³ Parish, (1837) 8 C. & P. 94.

⁴ Smith, (1862) 3 F. & F. 504.

⁵ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

⁶ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

⁷ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

⁸ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

⁹ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

¹⁰ Forbes, (1835) 7 C. & P. 224.

should not have had an equivalent in loss, or risk of loss, to some one else; and if so, there was fraud." "Where, therefore, there is an intention to deceive and by means of the deceit to obtain an advantage there is fraud, and if a document is fabricated with such intent, it is a forgery."¹ The majority of the Judges of the Madras High Court in a full bench case² seem to be of opinion that an intention to secure a benefit or advantage to the party deceiving by means of the deceit constitutes an intention to defraud. Sir Arnold White, C. J., while observing that it was not necessary to decide this point, said "that either an intention to secure a benefit or advantage on the one hand, or cause loss or detriment on the other, by means of deceit, is an intent to do fraud." He also observed: "Intending to defraud means, of course, something more than deceiving. A tells B a lie and B believes him. B is deceived but it does not follow that A intended to defraud B. But, as it seems to me, if A tells B a lie intending that B should do something which A conceives to be to his own benefit or advantage, and which, if done, would be to the loss or detriment of B, A intends to defraud B." The object for which the deceit is practised has to be considered. The advantage intended to be secured or the harm intended to be caused need not have relation to the person deceived, as is implied in the term 'dishonestly' but it must be to the person deceived. A person who is accused altered a document without the authority of the executant after its execution, and it was proved that the alteration was made to prevent other people from setting up a claim to property which was admittedly in the possession of the accused, the object cannot be said to be dishonest and the man is not guilty of forgery.³

The expression "intend to defraud" implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words, "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived; that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him, but not necessarily deprivation of property. The addition of a name to the list of attesting witnesses of an instrument which is a false document should deceive others into a belief that it is genuine it may generally be inferred that there was an intention to damage or injure.⁴

Deprivation of property, actual or intended, does not constitute an essential element of an intention to defraud.⁵ An intent to defraud may be inferred from the wilful use of a forged instrument to support a genuine claim.⁶

Intent to defraud any particular person not necessary.—A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction; and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they should have had present in his mind an intention if the consequence of the act would necessarily or possibly be to defraud any person, but there must, at all events, be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the

¹ Per Bannerji, J., in Muhammad Saeed Khan, (1898) 21 All. 113, 115.

² Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, (1905) 28 Mad. 90, 96, F.B. The majority of the Court have expressed their non-concurrence with the case of Srinivasan, (1902) 25 Mad. 726. See Weir 332.

³ Jhanika Asari, (1915) 11 W. N. 278.

⁴ Abbas Ali, (1891) 20 Cal. 512, F.B. (1925)

⁵ Kotamraju Venkatrayudu, sup.

⁶ Samuel Hopley, (1915) 11 Cr. App. R. 248.

⁷ Dhunum Kasee, (1882) 9 Cal. 53.

'Fraudulently': 'intent to commit fraud, etc.'—"Possibly a distinction may be drawn between doing a thing 'with intent...that fraud may be committed' (s. 463) and doing a thing 'fraudulently' (s. 464). Such a distinction seems to be recognised in s. 239 of the Code. But to my mind no distinction can be drawn between doing a thing 'with intent to commit a fraud' (s. 463) and doing a thing 'fraudulently' (s. 464). Although the words 'with intent to commit a fraud' are not expressly defined, I think they mean the same thing as 'fraudulently,' i.e., to say, 'with intent to defraud.' It follows that if it is established that a person does a thing 'with intent to commit a fraud' he does it with one of the intents specified in s. 463, and he also does it 'fraudulently' within the meaning of s. 464. It also follows, as it seems to me, that the offence is complete if a document, false in fact, is made with intent to commit a fraud, although it may not have been made with any one of the other intents specified in s. 463."¹

'Makes'.—The simple making of a false document constitutes forgery.² "The 'making' of a document, or part of a document, does not mean 'writing'.

the words 'signs' 'seals,' or 'executes' or 'makes any mark' 'denoting the execution, etc.,' seems to me very clearly to denote that this is its true meaning. What constitutes a false document, or part of a document, is not the writing of any number of words which in themselves are innocent, but the affixing the seal or signature of some person to the document, or part of a document, knowing that the seal or signature is not his, and that he gave no authority to affix it. In other words, the falsity consists in the document, or part of a document, being signed or sealed with the name or seal of a person who did not in fact sign or seal it."³ Stokes⁴ in reference to this case says: "Why then were 'make' and 'made' used as well as 'signs,' 'executes,' 'signed,' 'executed'?" In an English case it has also been held that the taking of a positive impression on glass by photography is a making although such impression is evanescent, and cannot be printed or engraved from until it has been converted into a negative.⁵ The Bombay High Court has distinguished this case. Where the accused counterfeited marks on a tree, it was held that this amounted to making a false document.⁶

The meaning given to the word 'making' in English law is very wide.

Making a document untrue in certain particulars for the purpose of deceiving is not sufficient, unless it is shown to have been made fraudulently or dishonestly.⁷ Making a false document does not consist in writing without doing anything towards its execution.⁸

In England it has been held that it is forgery to make a deed fraudulently, with a false date, when the date is a material part of the deed, although the deed is in fact made and executed by and between the persons by and between whom it purports to be made and executed.⁹

'Signs, seals or executes'.—Signing or sealing a document completes its execution. Putting a seal to a genuine signature to a document which is invalid without a seal is a forgery.¹⁰ This offence may be complete though no use whatever has been made or attempted to be made of the document.¹¹

¹ Per Arnold White, C. J., in Kolamraju Venkatasayudu, (1905) 28 Mad. 90, 93, F.R.

² Sheefast Ally, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

³ Beng. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 12.

⁴ Per Garth, C. J., in Rinmat Ali, (1881)

⁵ Cal. 352, 353.

⁶ See Vol. I, p. 263.

⁷ Peter Rinaldi, (1863) L. & C. 330.

⁸ Krishappa Khandappa, (1923) 27 Bom. L. R. 699, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 41.

⁹ Guddappa, (1879) 1 Weir 542.

¹⁰ Lim Hoe, (1894) 1 U. B. R. (1892-1896) 279.

¹¹ William Eason, (1869) L. R. 1 C. Q. R. 200.

¹² Collins, (1844) 1 Cox 57.

¹³ Mad. H. C. Pro.

both the copies contained two more names of witnesses than the original. It was held of ina
me

a copy of a forgery does not constitute forgery unless the maker of the copy was authorised to make the copy.⁴

The accused was convicted of forgery on the ground that he sent an imperfect copy of his diary to the Superintendent of Police. The High Court reversed the conviction on the ground that the two lines not embodied in the copy sent were evidently interpolations in the original diary, subsequently struck through with the pen; and that no forgery could be established unless it was proved that those interpolations were extant in the diary and had not been struck through at the time the copy was made.⁵

Section 464, clause 1.—The first clause says that a person makes a false document if he

1. dishonestly or fraudulently makes, signs, seals or executes a document, or part of a document, or makes any mark denoting the execution of a document; or

2. does as above with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made, signed, sealed or executed

(a) by or by the authority of a person by whom or by whose authority it was not so made, signed or executed, or

(b) at a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed.

1. 'Dishonestly or fraudulently makes, signs, seals or executes a document, etc.'—A person is said to do a thing 'fraudulently' if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise (s. 25). This "word is used in ss. 471 and 464 together with the word 'dishonestly' and presumably in a sense not covered by the latter word. If, however, it be held that fraudulently implies deprivation either actual or intended, then apparently that word would perform no function which would not have been fully discharged by the word dishonestly and its use would be mere surplusage. So far as such a consideration carries any weight, it obviously inclines in favour of the view that the word 'fraudulently' should not be confined to transactions of which deprivation of property forms a part."⁶ "Those decisions... which proceed on the ground that an act is not fraudulent unless it causes or is intended to cause loss or injury to some one would seem to take too narrow a view of the meaning of the word 'fraudulently' as used in the Code."⁷

The making of a document untrue in certain particulars for the mere purpose of deceiving, does not amount to making a false document. It must be shown that it was made with such an intention as is implied in the term 'fraudulently' or in the term 'dishonestly.'⁸

"To execute false valuable securities in order to render inoperative genuine valuable securities, is an act which is... an act done with a fraudulent intent. It does not... cease to be fraudulent merely because the genuine document may by a distinct act of fraud be withheld from the rightful owner. The true description of such a transaction is that fraud is committed in order to counteract fraud, a description which is of no avail to the person by whom the false documents are made."⁹ ruling Haradhan, (1892) 19 Cal. 380, which Cr. C. 627.

Fenkalra-
F.R., contra,
103.

per FLOWERS, J., in FLOWERS v. FLOWERS, (1884) P. R. No. 4 of 1885.

imprinted on trees and intended to be used as evidence that the trees had been passed for removal by the Ranger of a forest, it was held that he was guilty of making a false document.¹

Entries.—The accused made certain entries in his ledger, which consisted of rough loose sheets, showing that certain sums of money had been paid to the prosecutor, which, in fact, had not been repaid. It was held that he was guilty of forgery.² A beat constable who wrote in his note-book the signature of a headman whose village he had not visited was held thereby not to have committed this offence.³ Where the accused was requested to make an entry in a book of account belonging to the complainant to the effect that he was indebted to the complainant in a certain sum found due on a settlement of accounts, instead of making this entry as requested, he entered in a language not known to the complainant that the sum had been paid to the complainant, it was held that he had committed not forgery but an attempt to cheat.⁴ The accused sold for Rs. 40 a bullock to the complainant who paid him one rupee as earnest money and promised to pay the balance at a certain time. An entry to this effect was made in the accused's account book and was thumb-marked by the complainant. Subsequently a clause was added by the accused on the credit side of the account book without the sanction of the complainant which said that if the amount was not paid as agreed upon, the creditor would take one and half times the principal, including interest. It was held that no false document had been made by the accused within the meaning of section 464.⁵

The accused transferred the whole of his property in favour of his wife but before registering the sale-deed mortgaged the property to F. The sale-deed was, however, registered after the mortgagee had made all necessary enquiry at the Registration Office. After the registration of the sale-deed the mortgage deed was also registered. The accused was charged for cheating the mortgagee. It appeared during the trial that the mortgage-deed filed by the complainant bore on it an

as he must be presumed to know the sly could not have been absent from his mind when he forged the endorsement that he was thereby attempting to defraud the mortgagee of his money.⁶

The accused made unauthorised entries in books shewing certain donees of land as proprietors of their holding merely without any share in the shamilat, whereas previously they were shown as full proprietors. The deeds of gift made no mention of the shamilat and it was therefore a moot point whether the gifts covered a share in the shamilat or not and prima facie the new entries made by the accused were correct. It was held that as it could not be said that the accused (who acted apparently bona fide) made the entries with intent to defraud, or dishonestly, he did not make a false document.⁷

Unauthorised signature.—A petition praying that a fishery lease might be transferred from A to B, and purporting to be signed by A and B, was presented to the Deputy Commissioner by A. B was not present but his son was, and admitted having signed his father's name. He was subsequently prosecuted, although no attempt was made to show that he had acted fraudulently and without his

¹ Krishappa Khandappa, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 599, 8 Bom. Cr. G 41.

² (1865) 1 Mad. Jur. 11, 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 46.

³ Nga Aung Ba, (1899) 1 U. B. R. (1897. 1901) 356.

⁴ Kunju Nayar, (1888) 12 Mad. 114; Balwant, (1892) Cr. R. No. 15 of 1892, Unrep.

Cr. C. 595; Jawala Ram, (1895) P. R. No. 12 of 1895.

⁵ Badan Singh, (1922) 3 Lah. 373.

⁶ Abdul Rashid Khan, (1913) 12 A. L. J. R. 104.

⁷ Muhammad Sirdar, (1914) P. R. No. 25 of 1914.

Forgery at common law must be of some writing or document, and, therefore the putting the name of a painter upon the copy of one of his pictures, in order that it may be passed off as the original, is not a forgery at common law, but is cheating.¹ Under the Code this will amount to forgery.

2-a. 'With the intention of causing it to be believed that such document... was made... by the authority of a person by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made..., etc.'—The making a false document should be for one of the two purposes specified in this clause. The document should not have been made, etc., by the authority of the person by whom it is alleged to have been made or if it is made by his authority then it must not be at a time at which it is alleged that it was made, signed, etc.

2b. 'At a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed.'—These words are to be read distributively and are not governed by the preceding words 'by or by the authority, etc.'² Antedating a document constitutes forgery.³ It is forgery to make a deed fraudulently with a false date when the date is a material part of the deed, although the deed is in fact made and executed by and between the persons by and between whom it purports to be made and executed.⁴

Cases.—Clause 1.—False document should have been actually made.—Where a person gave orders for the printing of certain receipt forms similar to those used by a certain company, and corrected the proofs of the same, it being his intention to use the receipt forms in order to commit a fraud, it was held that he could not be convicted of forgery until one of the printed forms had been converted by him into into a document, all that was now consisted in the last preparation for the commission of an offence.⁵ But this case has not been followed by the Allahabad High Court in R. v. MacCrea.⁶

The mere fact that a document bearing a certain date was written on paper bearing an embossed stamp with a figure denoting a later date was held not sufficient to establish a charge of forgery in the absence of evidence that the paper was used for the purpose of inducing and convicting. It appeared that the brother of the accused, G. R. Martindale, had an account with the Bank and the signature on the cheque was only Martindale. The evidence was that he made an alteration in the date on the cheque in the presence of the shop-keeper and the poddar as though he were the drawer but made no representation about G. R. Martindale. It was held that inasmuch as the accused had no intention of inducing in the minds of the shop-keeper and the poddar the belief that the cheque had been signed by his brother and had no such intention in regard to the Bank, the cheque in question was not a false document and consequently the charge of forgery failed; that in the circumstances of the case there was dishonest concealment of facts on the part of the accused and he was guilty of cheating.⁷ Where the accused counterfeited letters or marks

No. 36 of 200. ¹ William Rilson, (1869) L. R. 1 Q. C. R.

(Cr.) 23;

But see

(1903) 8

² Riasat Ali, (1881) 7 Cal. 352.

³ (1893) 15 All. 173.

⁴ Sesha Charlu, (1891) 1 Weir 510.

⁵ Martindale, (1924) 29 C. W. N. 447.

imprinted on trees and intended to be used as evidence that the trees had been passed for removal by the Ranger of a forest, it was held that he was guilty of making a false document.¹

Entries.—The accused made certain entries in his ledger, which consisted of rough loose sheets, showing that certain sums of money had been paid to the prosecutor, which, in fact, had not been repaid. It was held that he was guilty of forgery.² A beat constable who wrote in his note-book the signature of a headman whose village he had not visited was held thereby not to have committed this offence.³ Where the accused was requested to make an entry in a book of account belonging to the complainant to the effect that he was indebted to the complainant in a certain sum found due on a settlement of accounts, instead of making this entry as requested, he entered in a language not known to the complainant that the sum had been paid to the complainant, it was held that he had committed not forgery but an attempt to cheat.⁴ The accused sold for Rs. 40 a bullock to the complainant who paid him one rupee as earnest money and promised to pay the balance at a certain time. An entry to this effect was made in the accused's account book and was thumb-marked by the complainant. Subsequently a clause was added by the accused on the credit side of the account book without the sanction of the complainant which said that if the amount was not paid as agreed upon, the creditor would take one and half times the principal, including interest. It was held that no false document had been made by the accused within the meaning of section 464.⁵

The accused transferred the whole of his property in favour of his wife but before registering the sale-deed mortgaged the property to F. The sale-deed was, however, registered after the mortgagee had made all necessary enquiry at the Registration Office. After the registration of the sale-deed the mortgage deed was also registered. The accused was charged for cheating the mortgagee. It appeared during the trial that the mortgage-deed filed by the complainant bore on it an endorsement of the return of the consideration although there was no such endorsement on it when it was filed in Court. The accused was thereupon further charged for fabricating false evidence and forgery. It was held that the accused was guilty of fabricating false evidence and cheating, as he must be presumed to know the probable result of his action and it obviously could not have been absent from his mind when he forged the endorsement that he was thereby attempting to defraud the mortgagee of his money.⁶

The accused made unauthorised entries in books shewing certain donees of land as proprietors of their holding merely without any share in the shamilat, whereas previously they were shown as full proprietors. The deeds of gift made no mention of the shamilat and it was therefore a moot point whether the gifts covered a share in the shamilat or not and prima facie the new entries made by the accused were correct. It was held that as it could not be said that the accused (who acted apparently bona fide) made the entries with intent to defraud, or dishonestly, he did not make a false document.⁷

Unauthorised signature.—A petition praying that a fishery lease might be transferred from A to B, and purporting to be signed by A and B, was presented to the Deputy Commissioner by A. B was not present but his son was, and admitted having signed his father's name. He was subsequently prosecuted, although no attempt was made to show that he had acted fraudulently and without his

¹ Kristappa Khandappa, (1925) 27 Bom L. R. 599, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 41.

² (1865) 1 Mad. Jur. 11, 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 46.

³ Nga Aung Ba, (1899) 1 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 356.

⁴ Kunj Nayar, (1888) 12 Mad. 114; Balwant, (1892) Cr. R. No. 15 of 1892, Unrep.

Cr. C. 595; Jawala Ram, (1895) P. R. No. 12 of 1895.

⁵ Badan Singh, (1922) 3 Lab. 373.

⁶ Abdul Rashid Khan, (1913) 12 A. L. J. R. 104.

⁷ Muhammad Sirdar, (1914) P. R. No. 25 of 1914.

father's authority, and was convicted of fabricating false evidence. It was held that the conviction was bad because the writing of B's name by his son did not constitute a false entry and there was no intention that it should appear in evidence in any proceeding.¹ A, who was not the son, natural or adopted, of the deceased B, executed a deed of mortgage of certain properties of B in favour of C. In the body of the document A was described as the son of B, though no such description appeared in the signature. A was known to C for a long time, and A had no intention of causing it to be believed that the document was executed by any other person than himself. It was held that A was not guilty of making 'a false document' within the meaning of s. 464. The assertion of a false claim in a document will not constitute the document a false one, when it is executed by the party who purports to execute it and there is no intention of causing a belief that it was executed by some other person, real or fictitious.²

Personation at an examination.—A falsely represented himself to be B at a University examination, got a hall ticket in B's name, and headed and signed answer papers to questions with B's name. It was held that A had committed the offence of forgery and cheating by personation.³

Vakalatnamah.—The signing of a vakalatnamah in the name of co-decreed-holders v. . . . Vakil with instructions to file a . . . paying that the case may be struck off the file, is held to be a forgery.⁴

Signing a petition in the name of another.—Where A signed B's name to a petition presented by C to a Mamlatdar, requesting his summary assistance, under Bombay Regulation XVII of 1827, for recovery of rents from B's tenants, it was held that even if A had no authority from B to sign his name, and even if A wished to deceive the Mamlatdar into the belief that it was B himself who had signed the petition, still, if there had been no intention to defraud anybody, or if no wrongful gain or wrongful loss could have been caused to A or B, A's act did not constitute forgery. Avoidance of litigation is no wrongful loss to Government.⁵

Fabricating a letter or certificate of recommendation for a post.—The accused, who was a copyist in the Sub-divisional Office at B, applied for a clerkship then vacant in that office. An endorsement on his application, recommending him for the post and purporting to have been made by the Sub-divisional Officer of B, was found to have been falsely made by the accused. The application was accompanied by a letter, also fabricated by the accused, purporting to be from the Collector to the Sub-divisional Officer at B, informing the latter officer that he, the Collector, had selected the accused for the vacant post. The Sub-divisional Officer, having some suspicions as to the genuineness of this letter, wrote a demi-official letter to the Collector to ascertain whether he had really written it; and this being posted in the local post office the accused fabricated a third document, purporting to be a letter from the Sub-divisional Officer to the postmaster asking him to stop the despatch of the demi-official letter with regard . . .

said that he falsely made it either dishonestly or fraudulently within the meaning of s. 464.⁶ The accused applied to the Superintendent of Police at Poona for employment in the Police force. In support of his application he presented two

¹ Po Shen, (1906) 4 L. B. R. 45.

² Adakkalammal v. Raman, (1908) 32 Mad 90.

³ Appasami, (1889) 12 Mad. 151.

⁴ Gyanee Ram, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 78.

⁵ Bhawanishankar, (1874) 11 B. H. C. 3.

⁶ Abdul Hamid, (1886) 13 Cal. 349 A to cheat.

Decision is doubted in Rash Behari 11, (1894)
n, (1906)
lar facts
— attempt

certificates which he knew to be false. One of these certificates was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the other was altered by several additions made subsequently to the issue of the certificate. It was held that the accused was guilty of offences under ss. 463 and 471.¹ Where a private candidate for the Matriculation examination of the University of Madras, for the purpose of being admitted to the examination, forwarded to the Registrar of the University, as required by the bye-laws, a certificate that he was of good character and that he had completed his twentieth year which purported to be signed by the Head Master of a recognized school but was in fact not signed by him, but was signed by the candidate in his own writing, it was held that the certificate was a forged document within the meaning of ss. 467 and 464.² A submitted to the proper authority an application for an appointment in the Land Records Department. This application contained false statements and to it was attached a forged certificate. It was held that A had attempted to obtain wrongful gain and that he had acted 'dishonestly.'³

English case.—The Corporation of the Trinity House were in the habit of examining persons voluntarily submitting to an examination, touching their nautical skill, and granting them certificates to act as masters. In order to enable persons to be examined and procure such certificates, it was necessary to produce to the examiners certificates of service, sobriety, and good conduct at sea, for not less than six years. The accused forged certificates for the purpose of inducing the examiners to pass him. It was held that he had committed forgery.⁴

Fabricating a receipt for a debt written off by a creditor.—The accused, in order that he might obtain the annulment of an order adjudicating him an insolvent, and thereafter that he might be in a position to tender for municipal contracts, produced before the receiver in insolvency a document which purported to be a receipt from a creditor for payment of debt which the creditor had in fact written off as irrecoverable. It was held that in respect of the use of this receipt the accused was guilty under this section read with s. 471.⁵

Giving a false name and address in a certificate of purchase.—A person lawfully entitled to possess arms and ammunitions signing the prescribed certificate of purchase of the same in the name of another with an address not his own, and thereby deceiving the gunsmith and the Government and defeating the object of the certificate, commits forgery. The act of the accused was not 'dishonest' but he acted 'fraudulently.'⁶

Fabricating an order purporting to have issued from a superior to a subordinate officer.—One Piari, the wife of Amir, left her husband's house. Amir put in a petition at the Police station asking that a search might be made for the missing woman, and he also employed a pleader, one Ali Zohad, to assist him in discovering the whereabouts of Piari. Ali Hassan, the son of Ali Zohad, and a clerk employed in the office of the District Superintendent of Police, forged two orders purporting to be orders of the District Superintendent of Police, the first intimating that the woman Piari was with one Sibni, the wife of Ghisu, weaver, and that the Sub-Inspector should be directed to hand her over to the petitioner (Amir), and the second directing the Sub-Inspector of Kydganj to hand the woman over to the petitioner. It was held that in fabricating these two documents Ali Hassan had made the document is custody was found to have been tampered with in this way, that a page, apparently containing unfavourable remarks to the constable, had been taken out, and a new page with

¹ Francis Toshack, (1849) 4 Cox 38.

² Abdul Ghafur, (1920) 43 All. 225.

³ Causley, (1915) 43 Cal. 421.

⁴ Ali Hasan, (1906) 28 All. 358.

⁵ U. B. R. 174.

⁶ Nga Ba Thein, (1922) 4 U. B. R. 174 favourable remarks, purporting to have been written and signed by various superior officers of Police, had been inserted in its place, the intent being to favour the chances of his promotion: it was held that this interpolation amounted to forgery, but that, inasmuch as it was not proved that the constable himself prepared and inserted the false page, he was rightly convicted of abetment only.¹

But a person consenting to act under a mukhtearnamah and attaching his name in token of such consent, does not become a maker of the mukhtearnamah or a forger if it turns out to be forged.²

Second clause.—This clause requires dishonest or fraudulent cancellation or alteration of a document in any material part without lawful authority after it has been made or executed by a person who may be living or dead.

The alteration must be in a material part of the document. Thus the interpolation of the name of a person as an attesting witness to a document not required by law to be attested subsequent to its execution and registration is not an alteration of the document in a material part.³

Where the date in a bond was altered, even though the alteration was not required to bring the claim within limitation⁴, and where a document was deliberately tampered with to support a just claim in Court and to counteract a fraud perpetrated by the opposite party,⁵ this offence was held to have been committed. But where the vendors of a plot of land altered the number of which the land was described in the deed of sale, because such number was not the right number, and used it as evidence in a suit; the alteration of the deed was held not to amount to forgery. The Court said: "The identity of the property which the deed of sale purported to convey could not possibly be affected by the alteration of the figures, and the substitution of one number for the other could not possibly defraud any one or have the effect of causing wrongful loss or wrongful gain to any person. If the object of the alteration were to make it appear that the property intended to be conveyed by the sale-deed was other than that which it actually did purport to convey, the alteration cannot fall under the definition of making a false document."⁶

Summary. Where the date of a document is altered within the limitation period, and the alteration was used to support a false claim by a false bond,⁷ a promissory note, res-did not intend to support a false claim by a false bond.⁸ A promissory note, res-
"on demand" were added by the payee against the maker it of the note as it originally stood, and was therefore immaterial, it did not affect the validity of the instrument.⁹

A Mukhtear who appeared for the plaintiff in an ejectment suit before a Rent Court, in open Court but without the permission of the Court, or even of the officer of the Court in whose custody the record was, took the plaint in the case and altered it so as to represent the plaintiff as claiming ejectment of the defendant from one field more in addition to those mentioned originally in the plaint. It did not appear whether the plaintiff was or was not entitled to eject the defendant from that field, but inasmuch as the alteration was made openly and the prosecution

¹ Muhammad Sa'ed Khan, (1898) 21 All. 113; Ramgopal Dhur, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

² Burjo Barick, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 70.

³ Surendra Nath Ghosh, (1910) 14 C. W. N. 1076, 12 C. L. J. 277.

⁴ Ram Narain, (1881) P. R. No. 14 of 1881.

⁵ Gobinda Mal, (1895) P. R. No. 6 of 1895.

⁶ Fateh, (1892) 5 All. 217, 220.

⁷ Mir Ekram Ali, (1889) 6 Cal. 482.

⁸ Aldous v. Cornwell, (1868) L. R. 3 Q. B. 573.

had not established that it was made fraudulently or dishonestly, it was held that upon those facts the Mukhtear could not properly be convicted of forgery.¹

Third clause—This clause requires that a person must fraudulently or dishonestly cause any person to sign, seal, execute, or alter a document knowing that such person could not by reason of (a) unsoundness of mind, or (b) intoxication, or (c) deception know the contents of the document or the nature of the alteration.

Where the accused obtained a genuine signature upon a false document, by inserting the document in a heap of papers placed for signature before the person signing it, it was held that the accused had not committed an offence under this section, on the ground that no deception was practised on the person signing it to prevent him from knowing the nature of the document.² It must be shown that the accused practised deception, so as to prevent a person from knowing the nature of the document, before the accused can be found guilty. Where the accused, a mohurrir, in a Registry Office, was charged with making false endorsements of registry on the back of certain deeds which endorsements were signed by the Registrar, it was held that, before he could be convicted of forgery, it must be shown that the Registrar, in consequence of deception practised upon him by the accused, did not know the contents of the document he was signing.³

3. Explanation 1.—There may be a sufficient falsity in a man's merely signing his own name, if he do this in order that it may be mistaken for the signature of another person of the same name. If a bill of exchange payable to A or order, set into the hand of another person of the same name as the payee, and such person, knowing that he was not the real person in whose favour it was drawn, indorse it, he is guilty of forgery.⁴

It is a false document if the offender makes it falsely in the name of any other person, although that name happens also to be the offender's own name. A man who makes a promissory note in his own name without any false description or addition and with an honest intention, if he afterwards uses or attempts to use the note, pretending that it is signed by another person of the same name, does not by this false representation make the promissory note 'a false document'. It was a genuine document when he signed it and does not become false by his subsequent and authentic when it is false and deceptive.⁵

4. Explanation 2.—"As to the charge of forgery it is wholly immaterial whether the name forged is that of a fictitious person who never existed or of a real person. It is as much a forgery in the one case as in the other provided the fictitious name is assumed for the purpose of fraud in the particular case under trial... There is, however, no doubt that an intention to defraud is an essential ingredient; but it is sufficient to show that there was an intention to defraud generally. Whether there was an intention to defraud or not is a question of fact to be determined with reference to the special circumstances of each case."⁶

As to how far personating the true man or assuming a fictitious character will affect this offence, the following principles, as laid down in Dunn's case,⁷ are briefly summarised by East.⁸ "First, that if a person give a note or other security as his own note or security, and the credit thereupon be personal to himself

¹ Bisheshar Dayal, (1905) 25 A. W. N. 93.

² Nujeebutoolah, (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr.) 20.

³ Dwarkanath Ghose, (1873) 20 W. R. (Cr.)

49.

⁴ Mead v. Young, (1790) 4 T. R. 28.

⁵ M. & M. 415

⁶ Per Muttusami Ayyar and Parker, J.J., in Pera Raju, (1889) 13 Mad. 27, 31; Sheefait Ally, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 61; 2 Beng. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 12.

⁷ (1765) 1 Leach 57, 59.

⁸ Pleas of the Crown, Vol. II, §61.

without any relation to another, his signing such a note with a fictitious name may indeed be a cheat, but will not amount to forgery; for in that case it is really the instrument of the party whose act it purports to be, and the creditor had no other security in view. It is not necessary that the name should be the name of a person who either really exists, or induce credit, or induce then a false instrument to be the same, the sense of him who lent his money upon it, if the imposter and the party whose name is made use of were both strangers to him; for then he could not know that such name he assumed, and therefore the other of these propositions was followed in a payment for a pony and cart purchased by him from the prosecutor, drew a cheque in the name of William Martin in the presence of the prosecutor upon a bank at which he, the accused, had no account, and gave it to the prosecutor as his own cheque drawn in his own name.¹ But if a person authorise another to sign a note in his name, dated at a particular place, and made payable at a banker's; and the person, in whose name it is drawn, represent it to be the name of another person, with intent to defraud, and no such person as the note and the representation import exists, this is forgery.² Signing a bill in an assumed name is a forgery, if the name was assumed to defraud the person to whom such bill is given, though such person would equally have taken the bill had the accused used his real name.³

Cases.—Document in the name of a fictitious person.—The accused was alleged by the prosecution to have advertised that a work on English idioms by Robert S. Wilson, M.A., was ready, stating that the price was Rs. 2-4 and that intending purchasers might remit it by money order to Robert S. Wilson, Council House Street, Calcutta: to have then requested the postal authorities at Calcutta by a letter signed Robert S. Wilson, to have the money orders redirected to him as above at Rajam: to have similarly requested the Postmaster at Rajam to pay the money orders to his clerk, Seshgiri Rau: to have subsequently received the value of money orders made out in favour of Robert S. Wilson from the Postmaster at Rajam signing receipts as Seshgiri Rau: Robert S. Wilson and Seshgiri Rau were alleged to be fictitious persons, and it was also alleged that the accused had no book on English idioms ready to be despatched to purchasers: it was held that the above allegations supported charges of cheating and forgery.⁴ Where certain persons signed a bail bond with names which were not their own, it was held that the persons were not guilty of an offence under this section as they had before signing the bond informed the Magistrate that their names were the names they afterwards intended to use.⁵

or fictitious other than the accused.⁶

Document made to conceal a previous dishonest, or fraudulent, or negligent act.—The Calcutta High Court has laid down that if the intention with which a false document is made is to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act which has been previously committed, or an intention to commit fraud; and if the signing of a false document with that intention is a forgery.⁶ It has also held

¹ Martin, (1879) 5 Q. B. D. 34.

² Parkes & Brown, (1790) 2 Leach 775, 2 East P. C. 963, 965.

³ John Francis, (1811) R. & R. 209; Robert Peacock, (1814) R. & R. 278; Samuel Whaley, (1805) R. & R. 90; Thomas Boulton, (1813) R. & R. 260.

⁴ P. & D., (1820) 13 Mad. 27.

⁵ 8 M. L. T.

⁶ Cal. 313.

that the making of false entries in a book or register by any person in order to conceal a previous fraudulent or dishonest act falls within the purview of s. 477-A inasmuch as the intention is to defraud.¹ In a subsequent case, however, the same Court held that the alteration of accounts so as to show the receipt of a sum of money criminally misappropriated and in order to remove evidence of such misappropriation was not an offence either under s. 465 or s. 477-A, there having been no intent to commit fraud. The cases of Lolit Mohan Sarkar and Rash Behari Das were distinguished on the ground that the entry in this case showed that the accused was liable and it was a statement of the true position of affairs, whereas in those cases the accounts were framed in such a way as to conceal liability and to present an untrue state of affairs.²

The Madras High Court is of the same opinion. It has held that a debtor who forges a release to screen himself from liability to pay the debt is guilty of forgery, because he intended by the forgery to cover a dishonest purpose.³ Where a process-server prepared and filed into Court a false attakshi with forged signatures with a view to defraud a District Munsiff into excusing his delay in returning processes and his absence from duty for a period of seven days, it was held that he was guilty of offences under ss. 468 and 471.⁴

The Bombay High Court had also held, adopting the Calcutta view, that a man who deliberately makes a false document with false signatures in order to shield and conceal an already perpetrated fraud is himself acting with intent to commit fraud. It is a fraud to take deliberate measures in order to prevent persons already defrauded from ascertaining the fraud practised on them and thus to secure the culprit who practised the fraud in the illicit gains which he secured by the fraud. In this case a village Kulkarni misappropriated certain sums which the rayats had paid to him for irrigation cesses. To prevent the rayats from complaining and to protect the fraud, he forged with the help of the accused certain challans showing that the sums had been paid over to the Government Treasury. The accused was paid Rs. 25 for the work. He was, on these facts, charged with the offence of forgery. The Sessions Judge acquitted him on the ground that the forgery was committed to conceal the fraud which had already been fully committed, whereas s. 463 required that forgery should be "with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed." It was held, setting aside the order of acquittal, that the offence of forgery was complete although it was effected to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act previously committed.⁵

A falsification of a record made in order to conceal a previous act of negligence, not amounting to fraud, does not amount to forgery.⁶

But the Allahabad High Court has ruled that falsifications of records made in order to conceal previous acts of fraud,⁷ or negligence,⁸ do not amount to forgery, as no one would be defrauded or injured by them. Following these decisions it has decided that a clerk who, after committing criminal breach of trust, makes false entries in an account book, with the intention of concealing such offence, does not commit forgery.⁹ Similarly, where a public servant, in charge as such of certain documents, having been required to produce them, and being unable to do so, fabricated and produced similar documents, with the intention of screening himself from punishment, it was held that such fabricated documents, having not been made with the intent specified in s. 463, were not forgeries.¹⁰ With respect to a charge under s. 465 the prisoner's immediate and more probable intention,

¹ Rash Behari Das, (1908) 35 Cal. 450, dissenting from Jivanand, (1892) 5 All. 221. Girdhari Lal, (1886) 8 All. 653, and Abdul Hamid, (1886) 13 Cal. 349, 351.

² Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee, (1909) 36 Cal. 485.

³ Sabapati, (1898) 11 Mad. 411.

⁴ Kamat-hinatha Pillai, (1919) 42 Mad.

353.

⁵ Balkrishna Vaman, (1913) 15 Bom. L. R. 708, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 115.

⁶ Shankar, (1880) 4 Bom. 657.

⁷ Jageshwar Pershad, (1873) 6 N. W. P. 56.

⁸ Lal Gumul, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 11.

⁹ Jivanand, sup.

¹⁰ Mazhar Hussain, (1883) 5 All. 553.

without any relation to another; his signing such a note with a fictitious name may indeed be a cheat, but will not amount to forgery; for in that case it is really the instrument of the party whose act it purports to be, and the creditor had no other security in view. But, secondly, that if a note be given in the name of another person either really existing or representing credit, or induce a trust which then a false instrument, and be the same, though the note or security were thus falsely subscribed in the presence of him who lent his money upon it, if the imposter and the party whose name is made use of were both strangers to him; for then he could not know that such imposter was not really the person whose name he assumed, and therefore the other would be equally deceived." The first of these propositions was followed in a case where the accused, Robert Martin, in payment for a pony and cart purchased by him from the prosecutor, drew a cheque in the name of William Martin in the presence of the prosecutor upon a bank at which he, the accused, had no account, and gave it to the prosecutor as his own cheque drawn in his own name.¹ But if a person authorise another to sign a note in his name, dated at a particular place, and made payable at a banker's; and the person, in whose name it is drawn, represent it to be the name of another person, with intent to defraud, and no such person as the note and the representation import exists, this is forgery.² Signing a bill in an assumed name is a forgery, if the name was assumed to defraud the person to whom such bill is given, though such person would equally have taken the bill had the accused used his real name.³

Cases.—Document in the name of a fictitious person.—The accused was alleged by the prosecution to have advertised that a work on English idioms by Robert S. Wilson, M.A., was ready, stating that the price was Rs. 2-4 and that intending purchasers might remit it by money order to Robert S. Wilson, Council House Street, Calcutta: to have then requested the postal authorities at Calcutta by a letter signed Robert S. Wilson, to have the money orders redirected to him as above at Rajam: to have similarly requested the Postmaster at Rajam to pay the money orders to his clerk, Seshgiri Rau: to have subsequently received the value of money orders made out in favour of Robert S. Wilson from the Postmaster at Rajam. Robert S. Wilson and Seshgiri Rau were so alleged that the accused had no book purchasers: it was held that the above allegations of cheating and forgery.⁴ Where certain persons signed a document, and it was held that the persons they had before signing the names they afterwards signed to the bail bond and that, therefore, they could not be held to have intended to cause the Magistrate to believe that the bail bond was signed by any person real or fictitious other than the accused.⁵

Document made to conceal a previous dishonest, or fraudulent, or negligent act.—The Calcutta High Court has laid down that if the intention with which a false document is made is to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act which has been previously committed, that intention cannot be other than an intention to commit fraud; and if the intention is to commit fraud, the making of a false document with that intention will come within the definition of forgery.⁶ It has also held

¹ Martin, (1879) 5 Q. B. D. 34.

² Parkes & Brown, (1796) 2 Leach 775, 2 East P. C. 963, 965.

³ John Francis, (1811) R. & R. 209; Robert Peacock, (1814) R. & R. 278; Samuel Whaley, (1805) R. & R. 80; Thomas Bontien, (1813) R. & R. 260.

⁴ Pera Raju, (1889) 13 Mad. 27.

⁵ Venkarnju Venkatasami, (1910) 8 M. L. T. 124, [1910] M. W. N. 232.

⁶ Lolit Mohan Sarkar, (1894) 22 Cal. 313, 327; Das, (1909) C. B. R. (P. C.) 29.

that the making of false entries in a book or register by any person in order to conceal a previous fraudulent or dishonest act falls within the purview of a 477-A inasmuch as the intention is to defraud.¹ In a subsequent case, however, the same Court held that the alteration of accounts so as to show the receipt of a sum of money criminally misappropriated and in order to remove evidence of such misappropriation was not an offence either under s. 465 or s. 477-A, there having been no intent to commit fraud. The cases of Lolit Mohan Sarkar and Rash Behari Das were distinguished on the ground that the entry in this case showed that the accused was liable and it was a statement of the true position of affairs, whereas in those cases the accounts were framed in such a way as to conceal liability and to present an untrue state of affairs.²

The Madras High Court is of the same opinion. It has held that a debtor who forges a release to screen himself from liability to pay the debt is guilty of forgery, because he intended by the forgery to cover a dishonest purpose.³ Where a process-server prepared and filed into Court a false attakshi with forged signatures with a view to defraud a District Munsiff into excusing his delay in returning processes and his absence from duty for a period of seven days, it was held that he was guilty of offences under ss. 468 and 471.⁴

The Bombay High Court had also held, adopting the Calcutta view, that a man who deliberately makes a false document with false signatures in order to shield and conceal an already perpetrated fraud is himself acting with intent to commit fraud. It is a fraud to take deliberate measures in order to prevent persons paid Rs. 25 for the work. He was, on these facts, charged with the offence of forgery. The Sessions Judge acquitted him on the ground that the forgery was committed to conceal the fraud which had already been fully committed, whereas s. 463 required that forgery should be "with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed." It was held, setting aside the order of acquittal, that the offence of forgery was complete although it was effected to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act previously committed.⁵

A falsification of a record made in order to conceal a previous act of negligence, not amounting to fraud, does not amount to forgery.⁶

But the Allahabad High Court has held that a clerk who forges a document in order to conceal previous acts of fraud, as no one would be defrauded or injured, has decided that a clerk who, after committing criminal breach of trust, makes false entries in an account book, with the intention of concealing such offence, does not commit forgery.⁷ Similarly, where a public servant, in charge as such of certain documents, having been required to produce them, and being unable to do so, fabricated and produced similar documents, with the intention of screening himself from punishment, it was held that such fabricated documents, having not been made with the intent specified in s. 463, were not forgeries.⁸ With respect to a charge under s. 465 the prisoner's immediate and more probable intention,

¹ Rash Behari Das, (1908) 35 Cal. 450, 558.

² Balkrishna Vaman, (1913) 15 Bom. L. R. 703, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 115.

³ Shankar, (1880) 4 Bom. 657.

⁴ Jageshwar Pershad, (1873) 6 N. W. P. 56.

⁵ Lal Gumbal, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 11.

⁶ Jivanand, sup.

⁷ Muzhar Hussain, (1883) 5 AU. 553.

⁸ Sabapati, (1888) 11 Mad. 411.

⁹ Kamatchinatha Pillai, (1919) 42 Mad.

and not his remoter and less probable intention, should be attributed to him. Where the intention is to conceal a fraud which has been previously committed, it is not the kind of intention which that section refers to.¹ Where the accused in order to save himself from the consequences of misappropriations made by him, made false entries in the accounts, it was held that he could not be convicted of forgery.²

The Rangoon High Court has adopted the view of the Madras High Court. Where a Bench Clerk received a sum of money paid in as fine and misappropriated it, and made a false receipt to cover up such misappropriation, it was held that the offence came under the provisions of ss. 167 and 471.³

Joint act.—If several persons combine to forge an instrument, and each executes by himself a distinct part of the forgery, and they are not together when the instrument is completed, they are nevertheless all guilty as principals.⁴ Each is a principal, though he does not know by whom the other parts are executed, and though it is finished by one alone, in the absence of others.⁵ Thus, the makers of the paper and plate respectively for the purpose of forging a note, afterwards filled up by a third person, are principals in the forgery with that person.⁶

Abetment.—A person taking an active part in the preparation of a document, but no part in the forgery of the name of the executant, does not commit forgery, but simply abets the offence.⁷ To prepare in conjunction with others a copy of an intended false document, and to buy a stamped paper for the purpose of writing such false document, and to ask for information as to a fact to be inserted in such false document do not constitute forgery, or an attempt to commit it, but would amount to abetment.⁸

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made, signed, sealed, or executed the document, or any part of it, or made a mark denoting execution.

(2) That he did as in (1) with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document was made, signed, sealed, or executed by, or by the authority of another person; or (2) that it was executed at a particular time.

(3) That such another person did not so execute, or did not authorize such execution, or that such execution was not at that particular time.

(4) That the accused knew that it was not so executed, either by such person, or by the authority of such person, or at that time.⁹

(5) That he did as in (1) and (2) dishonestly or fraudulently, or with intent (a) to cause damage or injury, or (b) to support any claim or title, or (c) to cause a person to part with property, or (d) to cause any person to enter into any express or implied contract, or (e) to commit a fraud, or that a fraud might be committed.

Or prove (1) the making or executing of the document by some one.

(2) That the accused afterwards altered such document by cancellation or otherwise.

(3) That such alteration was in a material part of the document.

(4) That the accused had no lawful authority to make such alteration.

(5) That he did so dishonestly, or fraudulently, or with intent, etc., as in (5) above.

Or prove (1) that the accused caused a person to sign, seal, execute, or alter the document.

(2) That such person when doing as in (1) was ignorant of the contents of the document, or of the nature of the alteration.

¹ Girdhari Lal, (1886) 8 All. 653.

² Shiya-ud-din Ahmad, (1922) 20 A. L. J. R. 682.

³ Nga Ba Sein, (1924) 3 B. L. J. 113.

⁴ John Bingley, (1821) R. & R. 446.

⁵ Robert Kirkwood, (1831) 1 Mood. 304.

⁶ Jonathan Dade, (1831) 1 Mood. 307.

⁷ Kashi Nath Nask, (1897) 25 Cal. 267.

⁸ Padala Venkatasami, (1881) 3 Mad. 4.

⁹ Ramgopal Dhur, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 7.

(3) That such ignorance was due to (a) unsoundness of mind, or (b) intoxication, or (c) a deception practised upon him.

(4) That the accused knew of such ignorance, and the reason thereof.

(5) That he, when causing such person to sign, etc., acted dishonestly or fraudulently, or with intent, etc., as in (5) above.

Where it is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that a deed is forged, it is not sufficient for the prosecution to prove that it is improbable that the deed is genuine, but it must prove for a certainty that the deed is forged.¹

between his handwriting and that of some fragmentary pieces of writing upon which the charge was based, it was held that the prosecution should make an attempt to show that the accused was the only man in the office who could have written the forged document.² It is dangerous to come to a conclusion on the questions of forgery on a mere comparison of the writing in a disputed document with the writings in admitted documents. One of the most useful tests in considering a case of forgery is to see whether a clear dissimilarity of habit can be traced through the documents tendered. If there exists such a dissimilarity, then it is difficult to say that the same person wrote them all. The judicial mind has constantly taken advantage of the characteristic peculiarities of individuals when a question has been raised whether their writings have been forged, such peculiarities being most commonly manifested in the formation of an idea or in the mode of spelling particular words.³

A conviction for forgery can seldom be based solely on non-resemblance of handwriting.⁴

A person is not entitled to give evidence as an expert in handwriting if his only knowledge on the subject is acquired in the course of a case.⁵

Non-admissibility of a civil judgment in a criminal trial.—In a suit by A against the obligors of a bond, the Court held, for the reasons stated in its judgments, that the signatures of the obligors were not genuine, and directed the prosecution of A on a charge of forgery. On the trial of A before a jury, this judgment of the civil Court on by could not be admitted.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Complaint.—No Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in s. 463 when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except on the complaint in writing of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.⁷ If the prosecution is confined to offences connected with a document committed prior to its production in Court, such prosecution is within the law and requires no sanction.⁸ The offences connected with forgery, which are referred to in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, are offences committed by parties to proceedings. That a witness does not fall within this

¹ Bayaji Natha, (1897) Unrep. Cr. C. 917.

² Srikant, (1904) 2 A. L. J. R. 444. See Peskata Row, (1913) 36 Mad. 159.

³ Ekons Lal v. Vincent, (1922) 3 P. L. T. 633.

⁴ Sagarmal Agarwalla, (1924) 40 C. L. J. 135.

⁵ Richard, (1918) 26 Cox 318.

⁶ Gogun Chander Ghose, (1850) 6 Cal. 247.

⁷ Section 195 (1) (c), Criminal Procedure Code. See Noor Mahomed v. Kailashwari, (1902)

⁸ Bom. L. R. 268; Gulabchand, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1039.

⁹ Lalla Prasad, (1912) 10 A. L. J. R. 291.

description is laid down by the Allahabad High Court,¹ but that he does come under it is the opinion of the Bombay High Court.²

A Sub-Registrar is not a Court, and, therefore, his sanction is not necessary for a prosecution for forgery in respect of a forged document presented for registration in his office.³ But the Income-Tax Collector is a Court, and his sanction is necessary.⁴

Autofors acquit.—The prisoner was charged with having forged leaves A and B bearing the same date and subscribed in evidence by him in the same suit. No mention of any charge as to leave B was made in the order of commitment, and the prisoner having been acquitted on an indictment for forging leave A, it was held that the plea of autofors acquit was inadmissible on a subsequent trial of the prisoner for forging leave B.⁵

Joint trial.—The joint trial of the scribe and attesting witnesses of an alleged forged document for giving false evidence in support of that document is illegal, and vitiates the trial.⁶

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, forged a certain document, to wit—(describe it), with intent to cause damage or injury to AB, [or to support a certain claim or title, to wit—; or to cause AB to part with certain property, to wit—, or to enter into a certain contract with AB with regard to (mention the object) or with intent to commit fraud (state the deception)]; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 465, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

466. Whoever forges a document,¹ purporting to be a record or proceeding of or in a Court of Justice,² or a register of birth, baptism, marriage³ or burial, or a register kept by a public servant as such, or a certificate or document purporting to be made by a public servant⁴ in his official capacity, or an authority to institute or defend a suit, or to take any proceedings therein, or to confess judgment, or a power-of-attorney, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

To bring his act under this section or s. 471 the elements of fraud or dishonesty, as explained in the Code, must be present in the mind of the person accused.⁷

Scope.—This section "is not intended to apply to cases where a public officer, or a person acting for a public officer, whose duty it is to make entries in a public book, knowingly makes a false entry, but to cases where a certificate or other document is forged by some unauthorized person with a view to make it appear that it was duly issued by a public officer. As, for instance, where a man forges a marriage certificate duly issued by the officer who ought to have issued it."⁸ But the former Chief Court of the Punjab held that whoever, whether a public servant or a

¹ Mathura Das, (1893) 16 All. 80, 83.

² Devji Bhavani, (1893) 18 Bom. 581; Bhav Vyankatesh, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 607.

³ Tulja, (1887) 12 Bom. 36.

⁴ Punamchand Maneklal, (1914) 16 Bom. L. R. 446, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 109, F. N., overruling Kalidas Rewade, (1906) 8 Bom. L. R. 447.

See also Nataraja Iyer, (1912) 36 Mad. 72.

⁵ Dwarkanath Dutt, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 15.

⁶ Guncant, (1910) 13 N. L. R. 35.

⁷ Heily, (1901) 5 C. W. N. 609.

⁸ Per Garth, C. J., in Juggan Lal, (1880) 7 C. L. R. 356, 381.

private individual, so tampers with a public register, as to commit forgery, is punishable under this section.¹ Intent to defraud is, however, essential.²

1. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra.

2. 'Court of Justice.'—See s. 20, supra.

3. 'Register of...marriage.'—This section applies to the forging of a document purporting to be a Register of marriage, although the Register is a private one and not one kept by the public servant as such, e.g., a Register of Marriages of Mahomedans kept by a Kazi.³

4. 'Document purporting to be made by a public servant.'—A document is a document purporting to be made by a public servant, notwithstanding the illegibility of the seal and signature on it, if it appears on the face of it to have come from a public servant.⁴

'Public servant.'—See s. 21, supra.

Copy.—Where a person who is bound to give a true copy of any document gives a true copy of such document, he cannot be legally convicted of the offence of forgery punishable under this section, merely because the original of which he gives a true copy contains a statement which is false, and is known or believed by him to be such.⁵

CASES

Fraudulent intent must only exist in the mind of the forger.—A person who, at the request of another sent to trap him, fabricates a document purporting to be a notice under the seal and signature of a Deputy Collector, he being informed that the notice was required by such other person for the purpose of being used in a pending suit (there being, however, in reality no such suit in existence) is guilty of forgery, it not being necessary that the intention of fraudulently using the document should exist in the mind of any other person than the person fabricating the document.⁶

Alteration in a certificate.—The alteration of name and age in an educational certificate and the use thereof by the person altering to obtain an official appointment, which the officer appointing would have withheld if he had known of the alterations, constitute, in the absence of satisfactory explanation, offences under ss. 476 and 471.⁷

Alteration in Government correspondence.—A Government tumar (correspondence), in which accused Nos. 2 and 3 were interested, was kept by a Mamlatdar at the house of his clerk. During the absence of the clerk from his house, accused No. 1, another clerk in the Mamlatdar's office, removed the tumar without anybody's consent. In the company of accused Nos. 2 and 3 he went with it to a neighbouring town to show it to the pleader of accused Nos. 2 and 3 in connection with some proceeding. Accused No. 1 left the tumar with the pleader and went away. Later he brought the tumar back and stealthily replaced it from where it was taken. It was afterwards discovered that some papers had disappeared from the tumar, whilst others had either been mutilated or altered. It was held that accused No. 1 was guilty of theft as he had removed the tumar without the consent of its custodian and accused Nos. 2 and 3 were guilty of abetment of theft; and that accused Nos. 2 and 3 were also guilty of offences under this section and s. 193 in respect of the alteration of the document.⁸

¹ Mul Singh, (1895) P. R. No. 13 of 1895.

² Hari Chand, (1903) P. L. R. No. 8 of 1904.

³ Bacha Mia, (1891) 1 Weir 541.

⁴ Proswanno Bose, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 96.

⁵ Marigauda, (1891) Cr. R. No. 42 of 1891.

Unrep. Cr. C. 583.

⁶ Haradhan Mauti, (1887) 14 Cal. 513, x. B.

⁷ Nga Pye, (1904) 2 L. B. R. 316.

⁸ Fallahram Ganpatram, (1925) 27 Bom. L. R. 1391, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 157.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused forged the document.¹

(2) That the document forged is one of the kinds specified in this section.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, forged the document, to wit—, which purported to be a record (or proceeding of a Court of Justice, etc.), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 466 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

467. Whoever forges a document¹ which purports to be a valuable security² or a will,³ or an authority to adopt a son, or which purports to give authority to any person to make or transfer any valuable security, or to receive the principal, interest or dividends thereon, or to receive or deliver any money, moveable property⁴ or valuable security, or any document purporting to be an acquittance or receipt acknowledging the payment of money, or an acquittance or receipt for the delivery of any moveable property or valuable security, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

The offence described in this section is an aggravated form of the offence described in the last.

To support a conviction under this section, the forged document must be one of those mentioned in the text.² It must be shown that the document is a false document within the meaning of s. 464, and that it was forged by the accused with some intent mentioned in s. 463. It is not sufficient that some possible intent may be inferred from the facts but it is necessary that such intent should be established by evidence.³ A mere fraudulent preparation of a deed of sale, with intent to cause injury to certain persons, does not amount to forgery of a valuable security unless that document be a false document.⁴

1. 'Forges a document.'—See s. 29, supra, as to 'document'. The fraudulent alteration of a collectorate chellam is forgery of a document within the meaning of this section.⁵ Forgery of a document, even if the person for whom it is forged has no intention of using it, is an offence under this section.⁶

2. 'Valuable security.'—See s. 39, supra. An unregistered document, though not a valuable security until the registration is completed, still purports to be a valuable security within the meaning of this section.⁷ Similarly, two documents with forged signatures, one of which was intended to be filled up as a promissory

¹ Vide s. 465, supra.

² (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr. L.) 9.

³ Kailas Chandra Das, (1902) 6 C. W. N. 382; not followed in Somasundaram Pillai, (1909) 6 M. L. T. 266, the facts of which are stated under s. 474, infra.

⁴ (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr. L.) 5.

⁵ Hurish Chunder Bose, (1864) W. R. (Gap. No.) Cr. 22.

⁶ Surat Bahadur, (1924) 1 O. W. N. 362.

⁷ Kash Nath Naek, (1897) 25 Cal. 207. Ramasami, (1888) 12 Mad. 148; Govind Ramappa, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 467.

note and the other as a receipt, but the spaces for particulars of the amount, the name of the person in whose favour the documents were executed, the date and place of execution and the rate of interest were not filled in, were held to be valuable securities.¹ But a sanad conferring a title of dignity on a person is not a valuable security.² A blank paper, or a bond barred by limitation, is not a document of the kind described in this section.³ But forgery may be committed of a promissory note on an unstamped paper even though a statute prohibits the stamp to be annexed afterwards⁴ or of a hundi.⁵ It is no objection to the charge of forgery that the instrument is not available by reason of some collateral objection not appearing upon the face of it.⁶ The accused was found in possession of two documents; one was a registered conveyance in respect of certain lands from A to the wife of the accused; the second purported to be a conveyance in respect of the same land from the same vendor to the accused himself, but this was not registered. The accused requested a school-boy to have the registration endorsement from the former copied on to the latter and was thereupon arrested and charged under this section read with s. 116 and under s. 474. At the trial A deposed that he never executed the second conveyance, but as regards the first he said that he had executed it in favour of accused's wife but that the accused was in possession of the lands and had also paid him the consideration money. The High Court held that as it was not shown that the second document was made with any of the intents mentioned in s. 463 or that it was intended to be fraudulently or dishonestly used, a conviction under any of the above sections was not maintainable.⁷ Accused No. 1 was the creditor of a person for Rs. 38. To pay off his debt, the debtor got out the sum from his father by a postal money order drawn in his name. When the money order arrived at the place, accused No. 1 received the money direct from the postman and had the acknowledgment signed by accused No. 2 under the representation that accused No. 2 was the payee. Neither accused informed the debtor of the money order or the receipt of the money. It was held that the accused were guilty of forging a valuable security, e.g., the money order acknowledgment, an offence punishable under this section.⁸

Material alteration of an incomplete document.—An agreement in writing, which purported to be entered into between five persons, was signed by only two of them; it was altered by the addition of some material terms by the accused who was one of the two executants without the consent or knowledge of the other executant and was not signed by the other parties to the agreement. The accused was in possession of the instrument which was altered by him. It was held that the accused was guilty of the offence of forgery of a valuable security under s. 467, or of being in possession of a forged document under s. 474.⁹

3. 'Will.'—See s. 31, supra.

4. 'Moveable property.'—See s. 22, supra. The forging of a document which purports on the face of it to be a copy only, and which, even if a genuine copy, would not authorize the delivery of moveable property, is not punishable under this section.¹⁰

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused committed forgery.¹¹

(2) That the document forged is one of the kinds mentioned in this section.

¹ Jawahir Thakur, (1916) 38 All. 430.

² Jan Mahomed, (1884) 10 Cal. 584.

³ Rughoonundun Puttronnavees, (1871) 15

382.

⁴ Jogidas Babu, (1921) 24 Bom. L. R.

99.

⁵ Ramaswami Ayyar, (1917) 41 Mad. 559.

⁶ Naro Gopal, (1868) 5 B. H. C. (Cr. C.)

56.

¹¹ Vide s. 465, sup.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

But when the valuable security is a promissory note—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint.—The word 'forgery' is used as a general term in s. 463, and that section is referred to in a comprehensive sense in s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code so as to embrace all the species of forgery afterwards provided for as to punishment and this includes a case falling under this section.¹

Punishment.—Where the forged documents are alternative drafts of any document they do not call for separate punishment.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, forged a certain document purporting to be a valuable security, to wit—, [or a will made by—; or an authority to adopt given by—to, or an authority, given to—to make or transfer a certain valuable security, to wit—] with intent—; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 467 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge. The charge must set out the intention of the accused.³

468. Whoever commits forgery, intending that the document¹ forged shall be used for the purpose of cheating,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

Forgery, though a substantive offence, partakes of the nature of an attempt. It is usually an act done in furtherance of some other criminal design. If it can be proved that the purpose of the offender in committing the forgery is to obtain property dishonestly, or, if his guilty purpose comes within the definition of cheating, he is punishable under the present section. The intention of the forger may be fairly inferred in most cases from the contents of the forged documents.⁴

If the cheating is complete, and the subsequent forgery is for the purpose of concealing that offence, this section does not apply.⁵

To establish fraudulent intention under this section it is not essential to prove pecuniary advantage.⁶

1. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra. A hammer for marking sleepers is a document within the meaning of this section.⁷

2. 'Cheating.'—See s. 415, supra.

CASES.

Falsification of account-books with a view to deception.—Where a person's object was to deceive his employer by falsifying account-books which were in his custody, such deception being likely to cause deception to his employer, it was held that he had committed an offence of forgery with intent to cheat under this section, and not one under s. 465.⁸

¹ Tulja, (1887) 12 Bom. 36, 41; Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah, (1909) 14 C. W. N. 479.

² Surat Bahadur, (1924) 1 O. W. N. 362.

³ Haider Ali, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 354.

⁴ M. & M. 418.

⁵ Harmukh Rai, (1876) P.R. No. 15 of 1876.

⁶ Madhavlal Chaganlal, Crim. App. for Rev. No. 193 of 1920 (Unrep. Bom.).

⁷ Joseph, (1924) 3 Rang. 11.

⁸ Banessur Biswas, (1872) 18 W. R. (Cr.) 46.

Making of a false register.—Forgery of a school attendance register, for the purpose of obtaining a Government grant, is punishable under this section.¹

Making a false attakshi.—Where a process-server prepared and filed into Court a false attakshi with forged signatures with a view to defraud a District Munsiff into excusing his delay in returning processes and his absence from duty for a period of seven days, it was held that he was guilty of offences under this section and s. 471.²

Preparation of a false bill.—The accused, a Talati, prepared a full week's bill for distribution of doles in his village, while staying out of the village, on the basis of the bill for the foregoing week, in utter ignorance of what had happened in the village and in order to avoid the trouble of going to their village personally. The bill was sent to the Circle Inspector, who, on comparing it with the original register kept at the village, found that no doles had been distributed for four out of the seven days of the week. It was held that the accused was not guilty of an offence under this section as he had no criminal intention to commit fraud which was requisite to complete the offence of forgery under this section.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the document is a forgery.

(2) That the accused forged the document.⁴

(3) That he did as above intending that the forged document would be used for the purpose of cheating.⁵

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Complaint.—Complaint in writing of the Court, before which the offence is committed, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate, is necessary.⁶ An offence under s. 463 mentioned in clause (c) of s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, covers an offence under this section, the object of mentioning s. 463 in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, being to include all cases of forgery whatever the nature of the fraudulent intention may be.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, forged a certain document, to wit—, intending that it shall be used for the purpose of cheating and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 468 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

469. Whoever commits forgery, intending that the document¹ forged shall harm the reputation² of any party, or knowing that it is likely to be used for that purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

The making of a false document for the purpose of injuring the reputation of any person is punishable under this section. For instance if A. with the intention

¹ Kuppana Pillai, (1885) Weir (3rd Edn.) 336.

² Kamatchinatha Pillai, (1918) 42 Mad. 558.

³ Madhavilal Chaganlal, Crim. App. for Her No. 195 of 1920, per Shah and Crompton, JJ., decided on September 9, 1920. (Unrep. Rom.).

⁴ Ide s. 465, supra.

⁵ Ide s. 417, supra.

⁶ Crim. Pro. Code, s. 195 (1) (c).

⁷ Ramiammal, (1911) 36 Mad. 357.

of harming B's reputation or knowing that what he does is likely to have this effect, writes a letter in imitation of B's handwriting purporting to be addressed to a confederate in some disgraceful or dishonest transaction and shows this letter to other persons, he commits this offence.

1. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra.

2. 'Harm the reputation.'—See s. 199, infra. A person, who forged a draft petition, with the intention of using it as evidence and which contained false statements calculated to injure the reputation of another person, was held guilty of this offence.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the document in question is a forgery.²

(2) That the accused forged it.

(3) That he did so intending that the document forged would harm the reputation of some one, or knew that it was likely to be used for that purpose.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

470. A false document made wholly or in part by forgery Forged document. is designated "a forged document."

471. Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document¹ which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document,² shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document.

COMMENT.

The use of a forged document which is contemplated by this section is such use as causes wrongful gain or wrongful loss. That is to say, the section applies to the case of a person who appears before some other person, or before a Court with a document and endeavours to induce that person or Court to do some act which he or it would not do if it was known to be a forgery.³ Where in a judicial enquiry under s. 202, Criminal Procedure Code, against a person accused of having forged a document, the accused stated before the enquiring Magistrate that the document was genuine, it was held that he could not be said to have used the document so as to make himself amenable to the provisions of this section even though he knew the document to be a forged one.⁴

Ingredients.—Under this section there must be—

1. Fraudulent or dishonest use of a document as genuine.
2. Knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the person using the document that it is a forged one.

1. 'Fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document.'—The use of a document as genuine must be fraudulent or dishonest. "The word 'fraudulently' is used in ss. 471 and 464 together with the word 'dishonestly' and presumably in a sense not covered by the latter word. If, however, it be held that fraudulently implies deprivation either actual or intended, then apparently that word would perform no function which would not have been fully discharged by the word

¹ Sheefat Ally, (1868) 10 W. R. (Cr.) 61.

² Benz, L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 12.

³ Vide s. 463, sup.

⁴ Asimuddi Sheikh, (1907) 11 C. W. N. 838, 5 C. L. J. 454.

⁵ Ibid.

dishonestly and its use would be mere surplusage. So far as such a consideration carries any weight, it obviously inclines in favour of the view that the word 'fraudulently' should not be confined to transactions of which deprivation of property forms a part."¹

If the Court is satisfied that the accused uttered the forged document as a true one, meaning it to be taken as such, and at that time knew it to be forged, the Court ought to find, as a necessary consequence of law, that the accused intended to defraud.²

'Uses.'—To constitute a 'use' within the meaning of s. 471 it is not necessary that the forged document should be used as evidence in a Court. It is sufficient that it is used in order that it may ultimately appear in evidence or used dishonestly or fraudulently.³ It is not necessary that the Court should accept the document produced before it or filed in Court. If a person puts forward a document as supporting his claim in any matter, whether that document is acted upon by the Court, or used in evidence, is immaterial for the purpose of constituting use of the document by the party within the meaning of this section.⁴

The use of a forged document will be fraudulent and dishonest under this section, even though the document itself is unnecessary for the case of the party who uses it, and though, in fact, he has a perfectly good title without it.⁵

The use of the document must be for one of the purposes mentioned in s. 463. Thus an involuntary production of a document in Court in obedience to an order to produce it is no use of it.⁶ In such a case it is immaterial even if the person producing the document has deposed as a witness to its genuineness. The giving of false testimony with a fraudulent intention by itself cannot amount to a fraudulent user of a document with reference to which that evidence is given. A mere statement that a document is genuine does not amount to using it as genuine.⁷ These two cases are dissented from by the Calcutta High Court.⁸ The mere filing of a list of documents, some of which are forged ones, in Court, without tendering the documents in evidence, does not constitute user of it.⁹ The filing of forged documents with a plaint is user of them.¹⁰ The filing of a forged document as the basis of a plaint or as a necessary sequel to the pleas in the plaint constitutes a user of it.¹¹ Similarly, putting in of a document in the course of the hearing is a user.¹² The presentation of a forged document for registration, and obtaining registration is a using of that document.¹³

A presented a document for registration before a Sub-Registrar alleging that S had executed it. S having denied execution, the Sub-Registrar reported the matter to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate ordered a judicial enquiry, and the Deputy Magistrate who was conducting the same called upon A to state whether the document was genuine or forged. A appeared and stated that the document was genuine, but the Deputy Magistrate held otherwise. A was, thereafter, tried and convicted under this section. It was held that A was not guilty as it was impossible to say that he 'used' the document.¹⁴ The accused was charged with having fraudulently or dishonestly used a document which purported to be a receipt granted to him by the manager of a ward's estate for certain papers and which receipt was alleged to be false. Subsequently, some of the papers mentioned in the receipt were on search found in the estate office, while the other papers

¹ Per Maclean, C. J., in Abbas Ali, (1897) 25 Cal. 512, 521, r. 2.

² Hill, (1838) 8 C. & P. 274.

³ Ramappa Hebbar, (1890) 1 Weir 550.

⁴ Bansi Sheikh, (1923) 31 Cal. 469.

⁵ Dhannum Kasee, (1882) 9 Cal. 53; Bansi Sheikh, sup.; Datta Eam, (1885) P. R. No. 16 of 1885.

⁶ Ramammal, (1911) 36 Mad. 357.

⁷ Muthiah Chetty, (1911) 36 Mad. 392.

See also Moharaj Ali, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 94.

⁸ Mohit Kumar, (1925) 52 Cal. 881.

⁹ Ambika Prasad Singh, (1908) 35 Cal. 820.

¹⁰ Idu Jolaha, (1917) 3 P. L. J. 386.

¹¹ Moharaj Ali, (1912) 17 C. W. N. 94.

¹² Rati Jha, (1911) 39 Cal. 463.

¹³ Azimooddeen, (1863) 11 W. R. Cr. 15.

¹⁴ Arimuddi Sheikh, (1907) 11 C. W. N. 838, 5 C. L. J. 454.

had not been searched for. It was held that those facts were not sufficient to show that the user of the document was fraudulent or dishonest or that the accused had committed any offence.¹ The accused, who was the plaintiff in a rent suit, himself filed a kabulayat which was forged and which purported to be filed by the complainant, the defendant in the rent suit. It was held that the act constituted a user within the meaning of this section.²

The accused was told to produce copies of the revenue records in support of his complaint of trespass and he knowingly produced forged copies as genuine. It was held that this was not an involuntary production of a document in Court and that the accused was guilty of an offence under this section.³ A person tendering, during the course of a Police investigation, a forged document to the investigating officer, and thereby causing that officer to do something which he would otherwise not have done, is guilty of having used a forged document within the meaning of this section.⁴

'Document.'—A hammer for marking sleepers is a document within the meaning of this section.⁵

Conditional uttering.—A conditional uttering of a forged instrument is as much a crime as any other uttering. Where a person gave a forged acceptance to the manager of a banking company where he kept an account, saying that he hoped this bill would satisfy the bank as a security for the debt he owed, and the manager replied that that would depend on the result of inquiries respecting the acceptors, it was held that this was a sufficient uttering.⁶

2. 'Knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document.'—The person using the document must have specific knowledge that the document is a forgery. The words 'knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document' are of general application. The mere fact that a pleader's suspicions ought to have been aroused by the sight of a forged document is not prima facie evidence that he knew, or had reason to believe, the document to be forged. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted.⁷

The accused purchased one-ninth share of 437 kanals 12 morlas land, this one-ninth share being set out in the deed as amounting to 48 kanals 12 morlas. Eleven years after, this deed was presented to the Putwari by the accused with a request that he should enter up mutation "according to the terms set out in the deed," the deed being previously tampered with so as to make the one-ninth share appear to be a two-ninths share, but the other recitals and figures in the deed remained untouched. It was not established that the accused had himself made the alteration. The Putwari entered up mutation of 97 kanals 4 morlas, that is, two-ninths share. On the mutation coming before the Tahsildar for sanction, the alteration in the deed came to light. It was held that though the accused had used the deed as a genuine document, it was not shown that he had so used it fraudulently or dishonestly knowing or having reason to believe it to be a forged document; and that the alteration made in the deed did not, in the face of the figures given therein, make it a sale of anything more than 48 kanals 12 morlas.⁸

'Reason to believe.'—See s. 26, supra.

Copy.—A person may be convicted of using as genuine a document which he knows to be forged, though, he in the first instance produced only a copy of ¹ Em Prosad Maity, (1908) 8 C. L. J. 317, 12 C. W. N. 1113.

² Arzobuddin Sartar v. Kalidazal Mulik, (1914) 19 C. W. N. 125.

³ Islar Das, (1924) 6 Lab. 50.

⁴ Sajanlal Bursasa, (1920) 2 U. P. L. R.

(P.) 42.

⁵ Joseph, (1924) 3 Rang. 11.

⁶ Coole, (1838) 6 C. & P. 592.

⁷ Ranakhaldas Nagardas, (1896) 22 Bom. 317.

⁸ Karim Dad, (1913) P. R. No. 25 of 1913.

it.¹ Where a person took copies of a forged document and put these copies for use, it was held that this was a use by him of the document. But it is otherwise where the offender used the copy knowing or having reason to believe that the entries in the original documents were forgeries and intending to use them for fraudulent purposes. A certified copy of a forged document is not a forged document.² The making of a copy of a forgery does not constitute forgery unless the maker of the copy was authorised to make the copy.³ The accused was told to produce copies of revenue records in support of his complaint of trespass and he knowingly produced forged copies as genuine. It was held that this was not an involuntary production of a document in Court and that he was, therefore, guilty of an offence under this section.⁴

CASES.

Alteration in a document without a fraudulent intent.—The creditors of a Police Constable applied to the District Superintendent of Police that Rs. 2 might be deducted monthly from the debtor's pay until the debt was satisfied. Upon an order being passed, directing that the deduction asked for should be made, the debtor produced a receipt purporting to be a receipt for Rs. 18, the whole amount due. It subsequently appeared that the receipt was one for Rs. 8, which the debtor had altered by the figure "1" so as to make it appear that the receipt was for Rs. 18. It was held that the real intent in the prisoner's mind being to induce his superior officer to refrain from the illegal act of stopping a portion of his salary, the Court, in a criminal case, ought not to speculate as to some other intent over and above this that might have presented itself to him, that it did not necessarily follow that he contemplated setting up the altered receipt to defeat his creditors' claim; and that, therefore, he ought not to have been convicted under this section.⁵

The accused made a change in a document so that it may be taken in evidence. The document related to certain transactions which the Settlement Officer could not take into consideration but would not have been bound by what it stated. In fact the accused's case was ruined. It was held that the accused acted improperly but not dishonestly and could not be convicted of an offence under this section.⁶

Certificate.—The accused applied to the Superintendent of Police at Poona for employment in the Police force. In support of his application he presented two certificates which he knew to be false. One of these certificates was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the other was altered by several additions made subsequently to the issue of the certificate. It was held that the accused was guilty of offences under s. 463 and this section.⁷ Where the accused used a forged certificate of competency as an engine room first tindal, he was held guilty under this section and s. 463.⁸

Plaint.—The accused gave his pleader a copy of a document which had been falsified by an interpolation being made in it for the purpose of its being used in the trial of his suit. It was held that he was guilty not of an attempt to commit an offence under this section but of the offence itself.⁹

Fabrication of receipts.—Where it was found that four forged receipts for the payment of rent, used by the prisoner, had been fabricated in lieu of genuine receipts which had been lost, it was held that, with reference to the definitions of the terms

¹ Nujum Ali, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 41.

⁷ Kali Din, (1919) 17 A. L. J. R. 872.

² ... 783.

'dishonestly' and 'fraudulently' in ss. 24 and 25, the prisoner had not committed this offence.¹ This case seems to lay down bad law in the light of several cases noted under ss. 24 and 25.

A declared insolvent wishing to obtain some contract work was asked to produce an order to the effect that he was solvent. In order to obtain the necessary certificate of solvency he produced before the Official Receiver a forged receipt showing that he had paid up a certain debt which the creditor had written off as a bad debt. It was held that the intention of the accused was by means of deceit to obtain a wrongful gain for himself, so that he had acted dishonestly, and was therefore guilty of an offence under this section.² Where a Bench Clerk received a sum of money paid in as fine and misappropriated it, and made a false receipt to cover up such misappropriation, it was held that the offence came under the provisions of s. 467 and this section.³

Diary.—False alteration of a police diary by a Head Constable will fall under this section as the forgery of a document made by a public servant.⁴

Sanad.—The accused, in order to obtain a recognition from a Settlement Officer that they were entitled to the title of 'loskur,' filed a sanad before that officer purporting to grant that title. This document was found not to be genuine. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused under this section and s. 464. It was held that even supposing the accused had used the document knowing it not to be genuine, they could not be found guilty as the intention of the accused was not to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss to any one, their intention being to produce a false belief in the mind of the Settlement Officer that they were entitled to the dignity of 'loskur' and that this could not be said to constitute 'an intention to defraud.'⁵

Decree.—Where the accused, a pleader's clerk, altered the date in the copy of a decree in order to hide his fault in not filing the execution petition in time and filed it with the copy of the altered decree, it was held that the accused was not guilty under s. 467, the copy of the decree not being a valuable security, but was guilty of the offences under s. 193 and this section.⁶

Attakshi.—A process-server made an attakshi with false signatures in order to defraud a District Munsiff into excusing his delay in returning processes and his absence from duty. It was held that he was guilty under s. 468 and this section.⁷

Uttering.—English cases.—If A exhibits a forged receipt to B, a person with whom he is claiming credit for it, this is an uttering.⁸ Delivering a box containing, among other things, forged stamps to the party's own servant that he might carry them to an inn to be forwarded by a carrier to a customer in the country, was an uttering.⁹ But showing a man an instrument the uttering of which would be criminal, though with an intent of raising a false idea in him of the party's substance, was not uttering.¹⁰ Where the accused placed a forged receipt for poor rates in the hands of the prosecutor for the purpose of inspection only, in order, by representing himself as a person who had paid his rates, fraudulently to induce the prosecutor to advance money to a third person, it was held that this was an uttering.¹¹ The accused, being the Secretary of an enrolled benefit society of which his wife was a member, and having received a sum of money belonging to the members with directions to pay it into a certain savings bank, uttered what purported to be a bank pass-book containing a false entry of the receipt of the money, knowing it to be forged, in order to induce the members

¹ Sheo Dayal, (1885) 7 All. 459.

² Abdul Ghafur, (1920) 43 All. 225.

³ Nga Ba Sein, (1924) 3 B. L. J. 113.

⁴ Rughoo Barrick, (1869) 11 W. R. (Cr.) 44.

⁵ Jan Mohamed, (1884) 10 Cal. 584. Is it not supporting a claim to a title to which he is not legally entitled?

⁶ Godlavedu Balayya, (1902) 1 Weir 651.

⁷ Kamatchinatha Pillai, (1918) 42 Mad. 558.

⁸ Radford, (1844) 1 Den. 69.

⁹ Thomas Collicott, (1812) R. & R. 212.

¹⁰ John Shukard, (1811) R. & R. 200.

¹¹ William Jon, (1858) 6 Cox 1; William Fitchie, (1857) Dears. & B. 175.

of the Society to believe that he had paid the money into the bank when he had not done so. It was held that he was guilty of uttering a forged writing.¹ Where the accused forged a bill payable to his own order, and uttered it without endorsement as a security for a debt, he was held guilty of uttering.² Where a person presented a bill of exchange for payment with a forged endorsement upon it of a receipt by the payee, and the clerk to whom he presented it objected to a variance between the spelling of the payee's name in the bill and the endorsement, upon which the person altered the endorsement into a receipt by himself for the drawer, it was held that the act of presenting the bill to the clerk previous to his objection was sufficient to constitute the offence of uttering the forged endorsement.³

If an engraving of a forged note be given to a party as a pattern or specimen of skill, the party giving it not intending that the particular note should be put in circulation, it is not uttering.⁴

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the document was a forged one.⁵

(2) That the accused used such document.

(3) That he used it as a genuine one.⁶

(4) That he knew, or had reason to believe, that it was a forged one.⁷

In a case in which the accused was charged with dishonestly obtaining a lease which he knew: it was held that it was sufficient if it was inserted with his knowledge.⁸

In a case for uttering forged bills, the guilty knowledge of the accused was proved by producing other forged bills on the same house in the possession of the accused.⁹ If the possession of other forged instruments is offered in evidence to prove a guilty knowledge, there must be regular evidence that such instruments were forged.¹⁰ Evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment is not admissible unless upon the issue whether the acts charged against the accused were designed or accidental, or unless to rebut a defence otherwise open to him.¹¹ See also ill. (c) to s. 159 of the Indian Evidence Act.

(5) That he used it dishonestly or fraudulently.¹²

In deciding whether there has been a 'using as genuine' of the document, the Court will advert to the nature of the document. Some documents, such as receipts, are intended to remain in the holder's possession, other documents, such as cheques or promissory notes, must be tendered to the persons who are to pay them. Whatever the document, the dealing with it by the accused person must be such as to satisfy the Court that he intended to defraud, but it is not necessary that wrongful gain or wrongful loss should actually be caused by the use.¹³

On an indictment for uttering a forged will, which, together with writings in support of it, it was suggested had been examined by a jury, the marks which had been made by the accused, who had examined the documents, were admissible on the part of the prosecution.¹⁴

¹ William Moody, (1862) L. & C. 173.

² John Birckett, (1865) R. & R. 86.

³ Arscott, (1834) 6 C. & P. 408.

⁴ Harris, (1836) 7 C. & P. 428.

⁵ Id. 465, 466.

⁶ Jala Bur, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 81;

⁷ Muler Srivastava Padayachi, (1889) 1 Weir 550.

⁸ Bholay Pramanick, (1872) 17 W. R. (Cr.) 22.

⁹ Hemondal, (1868) 9 W. R. (Cr.)

22.

¹⁰ George Hough, (1866) R. & R. 120. See Edward Ball, (1867) R. & R. 122; Coleclough, (1882) 15 Cox 92.

¹¹ Samuel Milward, (1813) R. & R. 245.

¹² Maha v. At-Grat for New South Wales, [1894] A. C. 57.

¹³ Kishen Pershad, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 202.

¹⁴ M. & M. 419.

¹⁵ Thomas Williams, (1823) 8 C. & P. 434.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by the same Court as that by which the forgery is triable.

When the forged document is a promissory note of the Government of India—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint.—Complaint in writing of the Court before which the offence is committed, or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate is necessary.¹ No such complaint is required for the prosecution of a person in respect of a forged document when he is not a party to the proceeding in which the forged document is produced.²

Forger cannot be punished separately for using the forged document.—A person who, being himself the forger thereof, has used as genuine a forged document, cannot be punished as well under this section for the use as under s. 466³ or s. 467⁴ for the forgery.

Sections 471 and 474.—Convictions under this section and s. 474 cannot stand together.⁵

Sections 471 and 196.—The using of a forged document is punishable under this section and not under s. 196.⁶

Separate charges.—The accused was charged with using as genuine eleven forged receipts which were put in by him in sets on three separate occasions, each set with a written statement in three suits pending against him. A charge was framed against him in respect of the using of each set of receipts, and he was tried on those three charges and convicted and sentenced. On appeal, it was contended that a separate charge should have been framed in respect of each of the documents as the using of each document constituted a distinct and separate offence and that consequently the trial was illegal and should be set aside, the accused having been tried for more than three offences in one and the same trial. It was held that as the 'using' charged was the putting in of each set of documents with the respective written statements in three suits, and as there was nothing to show that any of the documents had been used at any other time, there was only one using in respect of each set of documents and that there was, therefore, no valid ground for questioning the conviction.⁷

Punishment.—The offence of uttering forged documents requires to be punished with the severest punishment allowed by law.⁸ If a document is used fraudulently and dishonestly and if it purports to be a valuable security, the punishment provided by s. 467 and not that provided by s. 465 will be that to which the accused will be liable under this section.⁹

Charge.—This section does not specify the punishment, but declares that using a forged document shall be punished like forgery, and a charge for using a forged document should make mention of it coupled with one or other of ss. 465, 466, or 467, according to the nature of the document forged.¹⁰ The definition of forgery should not be entered in the charge: simply describing the offence as one of using a forged document is sufficient.¹¹

The charge should run thus:—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195 (1) (c)

² Kondeti Obalesu, (1914) 26 M.L.J. 220.

³ Umrao Lal, (1900) 23 All. 84; Pirbhu Dial, (1913) P. L. R. No. 52 of 1913. P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 45 of 1913. See Badri Prasad, (1912) 10 A. L. J. R. 473, where it is held that an accused person can be convicted at the same trial of forging a document and using that document as forged and the charges under ss. 467 and 471 may be regarded as alternative.

⁴ Pirbhu Dial, sup.

⁵ Nuzur Ali, (1873) 6 N. W. P. 39.

⁶ Kherode Chunder Mozumdar, (1880) 5 Cal 717.

⁷ Raghu Nath Das, (1893) 20 Cal 413.

⁸ Mohesh Chunder Sircar, (1885) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 13.

⁹ Sagarmal Agarwalla, (1924) 40 C. L. J. 135.

¹⁰ (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr. L.) 10; (1863) 3 W. R. (Cr. L.) 8; Gangaram Matji, (1869)

6 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 43; Tikaram Lohar (1893)

8 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 1.

¹¹ (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr. L.) 7.

That you, on or about the — day of —, at —, fraudulently (or dishonestly) used as genuine a certain document, to wit —, which you knew, or had reason to believe, at the time you used it, to be a forged document; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 465 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

472. Whoever makes or counterfeits¹ any seal, plate or other instrument for making an impression, intending that the same shall be used for the purpose of committing any forgery which would be punishable under section 467 of this Code, or, with such intent, has in his possession² any such seal, plate or other instrument, knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Making or possessing counterfeit seal, etc., with intent to commit forgery punishable under section 467.

COMMENT:

The making or possession of instruments such as plates for engraving bank notes, for forging valuable securities, etc., where the purpose for which such instruments are intended to be used is known, is the offence here punished. In the Chapter of offences relating to Coin and Government Stamps, there are similar provisions. This section and the section following are akin to ss. 235, 255 and 256.

1. 'Counterfeits.'—See s. 28, supra.

2. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made or counterfeited the seal, plate, etc., or that he had such seal, etc., in his possession, and that he knew it to be counterfeit.

(2) That such seal, etc., was made in order to produce impressions.

(3) That he intended to use such seal, etc., for the purpose of committing forgery.

(4) That such forgery was punishable under s. 467.

Counterfeit seals and forged documents were found in the prisoner's possession; and as he could give no satisfactory information as to how he became possessed of them, it was inferred that he kept them with the intention of using them fraudulently.¹

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the — day of —, at —, made (or counterfeited) a seal, (or plate or instrument) for making an impression, intending that the same shall be used for the purpose of committing any forgery punishable under s. 467 of the Indian Penal Code, or, with such intent, had in your possession any such seal (or plate, or instrument) knowing the same to be counterfeit, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 472 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

¹ Kisto Sunder Deb, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

473. Whoever makes or counterfeits any seal, plate, or other instrument for making an impression, intending that the same shall be used for the purpose of committing any forgery which would be punishable under any section of this Chapter other than section 467, or, with such intent, has, in his possession any such seal, plate or other instrument, knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Making or possessing counterfeit seal, etc., with intent to commit forgery punishable otherwise.

COMMENT.

If the forgery is not of such a serious nature as is punishable under s. 467, then it will be punishable under this section.

Where counterfeit seals and forged documents were found in the prisoner's possession, and he could give no satisfactory information as to how he became possessed of them, it was inferred that he kept them with the intention of using them fraudulently.¹

Where the accused was in possession of a counterfeit stamp for making an impression by letters or marks on trees in order to indicate that the trees had been passed for removal by the Ranger of a forest, it was held that he was guilty of an offence under this section.²

PRACTICE:

Evidence.—Prove points (1) to (3) as for s. 472; and further;—

(4) That such forgery was punishable under any section of this Chapter.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Separate offences.—Where several seals of different descriptions were found in the possession of the accused with intent to commit forgery, it was held that there was a complete and separate offence committed in respect of every seal found, and that the accused could be legally convicted of a separate offence in regard to each seal, unless it appeared that several such seals were in their possession for the purpose of committing one particular forgery.³

Charge.—See s. 472, supra.

474. Whoever has in his possession¹ any document,² knowing the same to be forged, and intending that the same shall fraudulently³ or dishonestly⁴ be used as genuine, shall, if the document is one of the description mentioned in section 466 of this Code, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the document is one of the description mentioned in section 467, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Having possession of document described in section 466 or 467, knowing it to be forged and intending to use it as genuine.

¹ Kist. Soonder Deb, (1855) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

² Krisappa Khandappa, (1925) 27 Bom.

L. R. 599, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 41.

³ Odutt Chauder, (1876) 13 W. R. (Cr.) 1.

COMMENT.

Persons who have in their possession forged documents of any description knowing that they are forged, are guilty of this offence if they intend that the document shall be used for a fraudulent or dishonest purpose. It does not signify whether such fraudulent use will be by themselves or by other person to whom they may dispose of the documents for the purpose of such fraudulent use. It may be reasonably inferred that a person in whose possession several forged documents are found has an intention to use them fraudulently, unless he can give satisfactory information as to how he became possessed of them and as to the purpose for which he retains them in his possession.¹

This section resembles ss. 242, 243 and 259.

1. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra. Where a person took a forged document into a Court in connection with a case, but did not actually use it, although he intended to do so, if necessary, he was held guilty of an offence under this section.² A document alleged to have been executed by one M was found in the possession of the accused. It was found that M did not execute the document and that it was executed in the presence of the accused for their benefit. It was contended by the accused that as the property comprised in the document belonged to them by virtue of certain other documents executed in the name of M benami for them, the document was not dishonest or fraudulent. It was held that as it was executed and registered to confirm their alleged title and to enable them to deal with the property to the detriment of persons dealing with them in regard to that property, the document was fraudulent and a forgery.³

2. 'Document.'—See s. 49, supra.

3. 'Fraudulently.'—See s. 45, supra.

4. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 44, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the document was a forged one.⁴

(2) That the accused had it in his possession.

(3) That he knew it to be forged when he had it in his possession.

(4) That he intended that it should be used as a genuine document.

(5) That he intended as above dishonestly or fraudulently.

Prove also whether the forged document is one of the description mentioned in s. 466 or 467.⁵

It is not sufficient for a conviction to say that the prisoner might possibly have used an altered document; the guilty intent must be proved, not inferred.⁶

But where forged documents are found in the possession of the accused and he could not give satisfactory information as to how he became possessed of them it was inferred that he kept them with the intention of using them.⁷

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

475. Whoever counterfeits¹ upon, or in the substance of, any material, any device or mark used for the purpose of authenticating any document² described in section 467 of this Code, intending that such device or mark shall be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to any document then forged or thereafter to be

Counterfeiting device or mark used for authenticating documents described in section 467, or possessing counterfeit marked material.

¹ M. & M. 421.

² Hatim Moonshee, (1867) 8 W. R. (Cr.) 11

³ Somasundaram Pillai, (1909) 6 M. L. T. 266.

⁴ Vide s. 465, sup.

⁵ Abaji Ramchandra, (1891) 16 Bom. 165.

⁶ Lokenath Shaha, (1864) W. R. (Gap. No.) Cr. 12.

⁷ Kisto Soonder Deb, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 5.

forged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession any material upon or in the substance of which any such device or mark has been counterfeited, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT:

The commencement of the forgery of bank notes and other similar securities, where it has proceeded to the length which is described in this section, is treated as a substantive offence and punished. Also the possession of the prepared material, etc., is punished.

This section supplements the provisions of s. 472.¹

The document must be of a nature mentioned in s. 467.²

1. 'Counterfeits.'—See s. 28, supra.

2. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra;

3. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused counterfeited upon or in the substance of any material, a device or mark.

(2) That such device or mark is used for the purpose of authenticating any document described in s. 467.

(3) That the accused intended to use such device or mark for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to some document.

(4) That such document was forged or was thereafter to be forged.

Or prove—

(1) That the accused was in possession of the papers referred to in the charge;

(2) that the device or mark was counterfeited on them;

(3) that the marks were such as are used for the purpose of authenticating any document described in s. 497; and

(4) that the accused intended that the marks should be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to documents, either then forged or thereafter to be forged.³

As to the admissibility in evidence of other forged documents, see *Abaji Ramachandra*⁴ and Parbhudas Ambaram.⁵

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint.—Complaint in writing of the Court before which the offence is committed, or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate is necessary.⁶

Charge.—In the trial of an accused person on a charge under this section, the charge should be so framed as to specify distinctly that part of the section which is applicable to the case, and should distinctly specify the particular papers bearing a counterfeit mark or device which the accused was alleged to have had in his possession with the intent mentioned in the section.⁷

The charge should run thus:—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ M. A. M. 421.

² Rughoonundun Puttronussee, (1871) 15 W. R. (Cr) 19.

³ Abaji Ramachandra, (1891) 16 Bom. 165; Rughoonundun Puttronussee, sup.

⁴ (1890) 15 Bom. 189.

⁵ (1874) 11 B. H. C. 90.

⁶ See Criminal Procedure Code, s. 193 (1)

⁷ Abaji Ramachandra sup.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, counterfeited upon (or in the substance of) any material, to wit—, a device (or mark), to wit—, used for the purpose of authenticating any document, [or that you were in possession of any material, to wit—, upon] (or in the substance of) which any device (or mark) was used for the purpose of authenticating a document, intending that such device (or mark) shall be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to some document then forged (or that you thereby committed an offence pun-Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

476. Whoever counterfeits¹ upon, or in the substance of, any material, any device or mark used for the purpose of authenticating any document² other than the documents described in section 467 of this Code, intending that such device or mark shall be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to any document then forged or thereafter to be forged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession³ any material upon or in the substance of which any such device or mark has been counterfeited, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Counterfeiting device or mark used for authenticating documents other than those described in section 467, or possessing counterfeit marked material.

COMMENT:

This section is similar to the last section, but as the document, the counterfeit of which is made punishable, is not of so much importance as in the last, the punishment is not so severe.

1. 'Counterfeits.'—See s. 28, supra.
2. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra.
3. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

PRACTICE:

Evidence.—Prove the same points as for s. 475, showing in (2) that such device or mark is used for the purpose of authenticating any document other than the document described in s. 467.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint.—Complaint in writing of the Court before which the offence is committed, or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate is necessary.¹

477. Whoever¹ fraudulently or dishonestly,² or with intent to cause damage or injury³ to the public⁴ or to any person,⁵ cancels, destroys or defaces, or attempts to cancel, destroy or deface, or secretes or attempts to secrete any documents⁶ which is or purports to be⁷ a will,⁸ or an authority to adopt a son, or any valuable security,⁹ or commits

Fraudulent cancellation, destruction, etc., of will, authority to adopt, or valuable security.

¹ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 193 (1) (c).

mischief¹⁰ in respect to such document, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section applies when the document tampered with or destroyed is either a will, or an authority to adopt, or a valuable security. Owing to the great importance of documents of this kind the punishment provided is severe.

1. 'Fraudulently.'—See s. 25, supra.

2. 'Dishonestly.'—See s. 44, supra.

3. 'Injury.'—See s. 24, supra.

4. 'Public.'—See s. 12, supra.

5. 'Person.'—See s. 11, supra.

6. 'Document.'—See s. 29, supra.

7. 'Purports to be.'—These words make the law of India upon this matter what it has in a long succession of cases been held to be in England, namely, that the absence of a stamp is insufficient to deprive the document of its character of a valuable security in the view of penal law.¹

8. 'Will.'—See s. 31, supra.

9. 'Valuable security.'—See s. 30, supra.

Tearing up of a lease,² a promissory note,³ or a rough account showing a liability on the part of the prisoner,⁴ amounts to the destruction of a valuable security, within the meaning of this section, even though the document may not be stamped, and is therefore inadmissible to enforce any legal claim. A person tearing to pieces a registered conveyance was guilty under this section although the document was invalid for want of consideration.⁵

10. 'Mischief.'—See s. 425, supra.

PRACTICE:

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the document in question is, or purports to be, a will, or an authority to adopt, or a valuable security.

(2) That the accused has cancelled, destroyed, defaced, or secreted the same or has attempted to do so, or that he has committed mischief in respect of it.

(3) That he did as above fraudulently or dishonestly or to cause damage or injury to the public, or to some person.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Sections 467 and 477.—Where the act of the accused which constitutes forgery is the same as the act which amounts to fraudulent destruction or defacement or cancellation of the document, he cannot be convicted of separate offences under ss. 467 and 477.⁷

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, &c.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

¹ (1873) 7 M. H. C. App. 26.

² Nittar Mundle, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 33.

³ Madurai, (1888) 12 Mad. 54.

⁴ Ramasami, (1883) 12 Mad. 148, 154.

⁵ Kotha Goundan, (1890) 1 Weir 554.

⁶ (1875) 4 W. R. (Cr. L.) 2.

⁷ Pirbha Dial, (1912) P. L. R. No. 52 of 1913, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 45 of 1913.

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, fraudulently [or dishonestly, or with intent to cause damage or injury to AB (or to the public)] cancelled [or destroyed, or defaced, or attempted to cancel, destroy, deface, or secreted, or attempted to secrete, or committed mischief, in respect of] a document, to wit—, which is [or purported to be] a will [or an authority to adopt, or valuable security], and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 474 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

477-A. Whoever, being a clerk, officer or servant, or employed ^{Falsification of} or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer or ^{accounts.} servant,¹ wilfully, and with intent to defraud, destroys, alters, mutilates or falsifies any book, paper, writing, valuable security² or account which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or wilfully, and with intent to defraud, makes or abets the making of any false entry in, or omits or alters or abets the omission or alteration of any material particular from or in, any such book, paper, writing, valuable security or account, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation.—It shall be sufficient in any charge under this section to allege a general intent to defraud without naming any particular person intended to be defrauded or specifying any particular sum of money intended to be the subject of the fraud, or any particular day on which the offence was committed.

COMMENT.

This section makes the falsification of books and accounts punishable even though there is no evidence to prove misappropriation of any specific sum on any particular occasion

Object.—This section was introduced by Act III of 1895, s. 4. It is intended to meet a glaring defect in the law which was proved to exist in *Shama Churn Sen's case*¹ in which a man was charged with defrauding a bank to the extent of three lakhs of rupees. He was acquitted because it could not be shown that the three lakhs had been abstracted upon any one particular occasion or in any particular sums. The present section is intended to meet such cases and to make the falsification of books punishable even though no particular sum of money or particular occasion can be shown. It is, with some verbal alterations, the same in substance, as s. 1 of the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875,² which runs thus:—

“That if any clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant, shall wilfully and with intent to defraud, destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify any book, paper, writing, valuable security, or account which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or shall wilfully and with intent to defraud make or concur in making any false entry in, or omit or alter, or concur in omitting or altering, any material particular from or in any such book, or any document, or account, then in every such case the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for a term not exceeding of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, are, under Order in Council, for the time being applicable.

¹ Calcutta case. Unreported.

² 38 & 39 Vic., c. 24.

COMMENT.

A trade-mark is some symbol, consisting in general of a picture, label, word, or words, which is applied or attached to a trader's goods, so as to distinguish them from similar goods of other traders, and to identify them as his goods, or as those of his successors in the business in which they are produced or put forward for sale.

A mark to be a trade-mark must be a mark used for denoting that the goods are the manufacture or the merchandise of a particular person.¹ A trade-mark must be some visible and concrete device or design affixed to goods to indicate that they are the manufacture of the person whose property the trade mark is.² "The right which a manufacturer has in his trade mark is the exclusive right to use it or the purpose of indicating where, or by whom, or at what manufactory, the article to which it is affixed was manufactured."³ A man may mark his own manufactures, either by his name, or by using for the purpose any symbol or emblem, however unmeaning in itself, and if such symbol or emblem comes by use to be recognized in trade as the mark of the goods of a particular person, no other trader has a right to stamp it upon his goods of a similar description.⁴ "A man is not to sell his own goods under the pretence that they are the goods of another man; he cannot be permitted to practise such a deception, nor to use the means which contribute to that end. He cannot therefore be allowed to use names, marks, letters, or other indicia, by which he may induce purchasers to believe, that the goods which he is selling are the manufacture of another person."⁵ It is immaterial whether the deception arises from the use of a name which is, as it happens, the name of the defendant, or whether it arises from the use of any other description which in a sense may be accurate of that which he sells. For, if the article which he sells is come to be known in the market as meaning something made by somebody other than himself it is impossible for him to sell it simpliciter by that name, although it be his own, without misleading purchasers.⁶

When a manufacturer has no exclusive right to manufacture a certain article or even articles of a particular brand, all that he can claim is that no other manufacturer should so mark such articles as to pass them off as the former's when they are not.⁷

In India there is no system of registration of trade-marks, nor is there any provision for a statutory title to a trade-mark so that the rights of parties setting up rival claims to the ownership of a trade-mark is determined in accordance with the principles of the English common law.⁸ A trade-mark may be acquired by adoption and user upon a vendible article. If a photographer applies a trade-mark to photographs which he sells, the provisions of this section are as applicable to such trade-mark as they are to trade-marks on other goods and vendible articles.⁹ A person may to some extent appropriate to his own use a name suggested by his trade, without infringing the law relating to trade-marks or trade descriptions.¹⁰

1. 'Mark.'—The section deals with trade-marks and not with cases analogous to those of trade-marks. The Bombay High Court has held that the general

¹ Anookool Chunder Nundy, (1900) 27 Cal. 776.

² Anath Nath Dey, (1913) 40 Cal. 281.

³ Per Lord Cranworth, in Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., (1865) 11 H. L. C. 523, 533, 534.

⁴ Per Lord Kingsdown, in ibid., p. 538.

⁵ Per Lord Langdale, in Perry v. Truefit, (1842) 6 Bosw. 66, 73.

⁶ Valentine Meat Juice Co. v. Valentine

Extract Co., Ltd., (1900) 83 L. T. 259. See Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Dunlop Motor Co., [1907] A. C. 439; Eno v. Dunn, (1890) 15 App. Cas. 232.

⁷ Anath Nath Dey, sup.

⁸ The British American Tobacco Co. v. Mahboob Buksh, (1910) 15 C.W.N. 250.

⁹ Klier v. Ahuja, (1907) 13 Burma L. R. 336.

¹⁰ Bakulak Mallik, (1901) 21 Cal. 411.

resemblance or get up, irrespective of the circumstance that the registered trade-mark is different, does amount to counterfeiting a trade mark.¹ Similarly, the Calcutta High Court has laid down that the expression 'trade-mark' must not be confined to the trade-mark of the complaining party registered in England, but must include the whole design and label.² The former Chief Court of Lower Burma was of a contrary opinion.³

"Property in a trade-mark is...the right to the exclusive use of some mark, name, or symbol in connexion with a particular manufacture, or vendible commodity; consequently, the use of the same mark in connexion with a different article is not an infringement of such right of property. If, therefore, the trade-mark contains in itself a clear and distinct description of the commodity to which it is affixed, it is not pirated by the use of a mark which, although in other respects similar, does not contain or give the same description, and which is impressed upon an article which is not of the nature or quality so described."⁴ "There can be no right to the exclusive ownership of any symbol or mark universally in the abstract. Thus, an iron-founder who has a particular mark for his manufactures in iron could not restrain the use of the same mark when impressed on cotton or woollen goods; for the property in a trade-mark consists in the exclusive right to the use of that mark as applied to some particular manufacture" or vendible commodity.⁵

Importer of goods may have his own mark.—A distinctive mark may be adopted by a person who is not the manufacturer but the importer of goods, and he will acquire property in that mark as indicating all goods which bear it have been imported by him. Where the complainants, importers of hand-made sugar, used a distinctive mark denoting that the sugar contained in the bags so marked had been imported by them, (their customers accepting the mark as a guarantee that the sugar was hand-made), and the accused were found as having used the same mark whereby the complainants had established a special trade, it was held that the accused were guilty of using a false trade-mark.⁶

479. A mark used for denoting that moveable property belongs to a particular person is called a property mark.

COMMENT.

The distinction between 'trade-mark' and 'property-mark' is not recognized in English law.

480. Whoever marks any goods or any case, package or other receptacle containing goods, or uses any case, package or other receptacle with any mark thereon,¹ in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked, or any goods contained in any such receptacle so marked, are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not,² is said to use a false trade mark.

¹ Ganpat Sitaram Mukadam, (1914) 16 Bom. L. R. 78, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 177.

² Nilmoney Nag v. Durga Pado, (1915) 19 C. W. N. 937.

³ Pelley & Son v. Stephen Ak Kyun, (1903) 2 L. R. R. 159; Stephen Ak Kyun v. James Pelley, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 84.

⁴ Per Lord Chancellor Westbury in Leather Cloth Co. v. American Cloth Co., (1864) 33 L. J. Ch. 199, 201, on appeal, (1865) 11 H. L. C. 523.

⁵ Per Lord Westbury, in Hall v. Barrows, (1863) 33 L. J. Ch. 204, 207-8.

⁶ Lalji, (1916) 39 All. 123.

COMMENT.

This section says what constitutes the user of a false trade-mark.

Ingredients.—This section has two essentials.—

1. Marking any goods or any case, package, or receptacle, containing goods; or using any case, package, or receptacle, with any mark thereon.

2. Such marking or using must be in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked, or the goods in the marked receptacle, are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not.

1. 'Whoever marks any goods or any case, package or other receptacle containing goods, etc.'—If the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark he has used come to be known by a particular name, the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which would cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as an actual copy of his device. In such cases dissimilarity of the rival marks is not a complete defence.¹ The word 'goods' includes books.² On a complaint alleging that the accused printed and sold an unauthorized edition of a book with the contents, outer cover and title page being exactly the same as in the authorized edition, it was held that in order to bring the case under this section the question would be whether the accused had marked the book he was selling in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that it was the manufacture or merchandise of, or that it belonged to, a person whose manufacture or merchandise it was not, or to whom it did not belong.³

2. 'In a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed, etc.'—The test of the infringement of a trade-mark is whether the acts alleged as an infringement are likely to mislead the public into dealing with the alleged infringer under the belief that they are dealing with a person who first used the mark.⁴ How is this to be tested? Lord Herschell says: "The eye must be the judge in such a case as this... and... the question must be determined by placing the designs side by side, and asking whether they are the same, or whether the one is an obvious imitation of the other."⁵ More "differences in detail do not prevent the two designs being essentially the same."⁶ "The question of a man's trade-mark, in a manner liable to mislead the public, is not a question of whether the device or inscription upon the mark is so similar to the device or inscription upon the mark of another person who carefully and intelligently examined and studied it ought not to be misled."⁷ Thus, it is by no means necessary that there should be absolute identity. What degree of resemblance is necessary from the nature of things, is a matter incapable of definition a priori. All that the Court of Justice can do is to say that no trader can adopt a trade-mark so resembling that of a rival, as that ordinary purchasers, purchasing with ordinary caution, are likely to be misled. Actual physical resemblance of the two marks is not the sole question for consideration.⁸

1. See Trade-Mark Act, 1875, s. 31.

ing Co. v. Loog, (1882) 8 App. Cas. 15, 18.

² Seizo v. Provezende, (1865) L. R. 1 Ch.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

192, 196; Johnstone v. Ewing, (1882) 8 App.

sup.

⁴ Hall v. Barrows, (1863) 23 L. J. Ch. 204;

Leather Cloth Co., v. The American Leather

Cloth Co., (1865) 11 H. L. C. 523; Tapidas

Durlabdas, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. 732.

⁵ Hells Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter

& Co., (1889) 14 App. Cas. 550, 555.

⁶ Per Lord Herschell in John Harper & Co.

v. Wright & Butler & Co., Ltd., [1896] 1 Ch. 142, 147.

⁷ Per Lord Selborne in Singer Manufactur- considerable resemblance to the mark got up of the complainant's mark yet the High Court set aside the conviction holding that the marks were not sufficiently decided as being identical.

Mulindam,

v. C. 177.

'A person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not.'—It is good law as well as common sense that no man has a right to put off his goods for sale as the goods of a rival trader, and with that object to use names, marks, letters or other indications by which he may induce purchasers to believe that the goods which he is selling are the manufacture of another person's. Still less is he entitled to use marks containing a falsehood on their face for the purpose of deceiving purchasers and palming off upon them an article other than that which they believed they were contracting to buy.

CASES.

Calendars.—The complainant, a descendant of Shri Chandu, used to prepare calendars bearing the name of "Shri Chandu Panchang" at Jodhpur and sent each year the copy of such calendar to the publishers in different parts of India allowing them to use the name of "Shri Chandu Panchang" to denote calendars prepared in Jodhpur by the descendants of Chandu. These calendars had acquired the reputation that they were prepared by those descendants and under their authority. The defendant, a publisher in Bombay, published a calendar and used the words "Shri Chandu Panchang" on the cover, although it was not prepared by the descendants of Chandu. The complainant, thereupon, proceeded against the defendant under this section. It was held that the defendant's act could not come under this section, for the title "Shri Chandu Panchang" could not fall within the definition of 'trade-mark' under s. 478.¹

Labels.—The complainants, the Holland Bombay Trading Co., used to import white shirtings bearing the mark "H. B. T. C. 40,000," a label with a design of a lion and snake and an oval stamp containing written in it the words "Sole Importers, Holland Bombay Trading Company, Limited," and a buff heading. The accused had in their possession for purposes of sale some packages of white shirtings bearing the mark H. P. F. C. 40,000, a label with two lions and two snakes complainants had a property in their mark) that the accused had used a false trade-mark and were liable to conviction under ss. 482 and 486.² The complainant had for many years carried on business as a vendor of ground coffee. He sold this in cylindrical tin boxes, each containing one pound of coffee. On the outside of the cylindrical portion of each box he had affixed a paper label on which was printed, inter alia, a picture of a railway engine and carriage. Over the lid and round each box vertically he had pasted an orange coloured paper band, and on this, in the

The accused sold a shade of pink, and a label on which was printed a picture of a steamer, the pink band purporting to be a facsimile of the accused's signature in the same position as that in which the complainant's facsimile signature appeared on his boxes. It was held that on the complainant's boxes the chief trade-mark was the picture of a railway train; that he might have a trade-mark in his facsimile signature, but the trade-mark could not reasonably be held to be infringed by the use of a signature of another person of a very different name; and that consequently a prosecution based on the use of what purported to be a facsimile of the accused's name could not succeed. It was held, further, that the band round the boxes vertically did not constitute a trade-mark as defined in the Penal Code and such band was merely a part of the 'get-up' of the boxes.¹

¹ Radha Krishna v. Kissonlal Shridhar, (1901) 3 Bom. L. R. 883, 26 Bom. 289.

² Holland Bombay Trading Co. v. Buktar Mull, (1903) 8 C. W. N. 421.

Gold bars.—The mere fact that a bank imported and sold gold bars with a particular mark impressed upon them, a mark which was not originally theirs, but belonged to a bank that had ceased to exist, and where there was no proof of any transfer or assignment of the mark, or that the new bank succeeded the other in the sense either that it was a continuation of that bank under another name, or that it succeeded to the business or acquired the good-will of that bank, was held not to be sufficient to establish that the mark was the trade-mark of the new bank.²

General name cannot be the subject of a trade-mark.—The appellants, who sold fish-hooks in boxes similar to those of the respondents with a design of one fish with its head and tail turned up, were held not to have infringed the trade-mark of the respondents, who also sold fish-hooks with the design of two fish crossed, with their heads and tails turned up. It was held further that where the public had chosen a name for its own use such as "fish marks" (fish mark), that fact could not be held to prevent other persons from applying a mark to fish-hooks, which might be generally known by the same term.³

Use of the same receptacle.—A sold illuminant kerosine oil of his own refining in tins originally issued with oil of the same description by B and bearing B's trade-mark. The tins had been altered in minor particulars, and paper labels indicating the true manufacturer of the oil had been fixed. The bodies of the tins, however, on which B's trade-mark appeared remained unaltered. It was held that A had committed this offence.⁴ According to an agreement between Oil Companies it was settled that one Company could use the tins of another Company, provided the

of this agreement the Burma Oil Company could use the tins of the Standard Oil Company (U. S.) by putting on the cap the words "Standard Oil" and the words "eight tins of kerosine oil, but only two of the tins had the words on the cap, the other six had plain tin caps.

purchaser that the tins contained oil of the Burma Oil Company and the price agreed upon was the price of the Burma Oil Company as prevailing in the market. It was held that although the accused was guilty of using a false trade-mark so far as the six tins with plain caps were concerned, yet in the absence of a conspiracy between the purchaser and the accused, the accused could not be convicted of using a false trade-mark, as he had acted without intent to defraud.⁵

481. Whoever marks any moveable property or goods or any case, package or other receptacle containing moveable property or goods, or uses any case, package or other receptacle having any mark thereon, in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the property or goods so marked, or any property or goods contained in any such receptacle so marked, belong to a person to whom they do not belong, is said to use a false property mark.

COMMENT.

This section defines the offence of using a false property-mark.

A property mark is intended to denote ownership over all moveable property belonging to a person whether it is all of one kind or of different kinds. So long as

¹ Stephen Ah Kyun v. James Petley, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 84.

² Anoolool Chunder Nundy, (1900) 27 Cal. 776. See Dahyabhai Chakasha, (1904) 6

Bom. L. R. 513.

³ Bakaullah Mallik, (1904) 31 Cal. 411.

⁴ Po Saing, (1907) 4 L. B. R. 192.

⁵ Abdul Rashid, (1918) 16 A. L. J. R. 476.

the person owns moveable properties his property-mark impressed upon them remains his, though any particular article out of it may after such impression pass out of his hands and cease to be his.¹

The function of a property mark to denote certain ownership is not destroyed because any particular property on which it was impressed has ceased to be of that ownership.²

Ingredients.—This section requires two essentials :—

1. Marking any moveable property or goods or any case, package or receptacle containing goods; or using any case, package or receptacle, with any mark thereon.

2. Such marking or using must be in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the property or goods so marked, or the property or goods contained in such receptacle belonged to a person to whom they did not belong.

1. 'Marking any moveable property or goods, etc.'—"The term 'moveable property' was intended by the Legislature to include a class or category of properties falling under one ownership, not merely the parts of it which may pass from the hands of the owner into other hands. The class is stable, though the units are ambulatory. The class may be likened to a chain with a multitude of links some of which from time to time drop off but there are others left or those extinct are replenished by fresh links to keep the chain going. So long as the chain remains, the moveable property represented by it is there, though its component parts fluctuate. The term 'moveable property'...was intended to include collective class nouns," i.e., nouns that express a number of objects of the same class collected together."³

2. 'In a manner reasonably calculated to cause, etc.'—See Comment on s. 481, p. 1012

Trade-mark and Property-mark.—The term 'property-mark' is one unknown to English law, and the description of its wrongful use as given in s. 481 would, in most cases, if not in every possible case, be within the scope of English law, viewing the wrong either as a crime or a civil injury. The distinction in the Penal Code between a 'trade-mark' and a 'property-mark' is, that the former denotes the manufacture or quality of the goods to which it is attached, and the latter denotes the ownership of them; or more briefly, the former concerns the goods themselves, the latter the proprietor of them. From s. 481 it may be gathered that the result of this distinction is to secure greater precision of definition, rather than to extend the law of trade-marks as far as to include property-marks. The maker or manufacturer of goods, when he puts them up and he uses a thus have the benefit of his skill in selection, then, in the terminology of the Penal Code, the mark would be a property and not a trade-mark. but if the main purpose of the mark were to indicate the quality of the goods, then even though A was not the maker of them, it would be a trade-mark and not a property-mark. On the other hand, a mark may be applied to a natural product as distinguished from a manufactured one and though such mark would then probably be called in Indian law a property-mark, it would be equally protected by English law as a trade-mark.

482. Whoever¹ uses any false trade mark or any false property mark shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for using a false trade mark or property mark.

¹ Dahyabhai Chakula, (1904) 6 Bom. L. R. 313.

² Ibid.

³ Per Chandavarkar, J., in ibid. p. 515.

COMMENT.

The use of false trade-mark (with 'intent to defraud') constitutes the offence under this section. If the maker of an article puts on it the trade-mark of another maker and he does this with the intention that purchasers may be induced to believe that the article was made by such other maker, he commits this offence. It will be no defence to show that the article is in every respect equal or even superior to similar articles made by the other maker, if the offender intended to practise deception and used the mark for this purpose. Where the trade-marks are so different that no one would be misled, no offence is committed.

1. 'Whoever.'—This word means the same thing as 'every person who' and shews that the provisions of the section apply to persons generally. In law a corporation is a person. A limited company or a corporation is liable for using a false trade-mark or property-mark.¹

Statutory application.—See the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), s. 46 (c).

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—For using a false trade-mark prove (1) that the accused marked the goods in question, or some case, package, or receptacle containing goods; or that he used some case, package, or receptacle bearing some mark.

(2) That the accused did as above in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked, or the goods contained in the receptacle so marked, were the goods or merchandise of some person.

(3) That the accused acted with intent to defraud of that person.

For using a false property-mark prove (1) that the accused marked moveable property or goods in question, or some case, package, or receptacle containing moveable property or goods; or that he used some case, package, or receptacle bearing some mark.

(2) That the accused did as above in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the property or goods so marked, or the property or goods contained in the receptacle so marked, belonged to some person.

(3) That such property or goods do not belong to that person.

Onus.—An important alteration of principle has been made in regard to offences under this section. Ordinarily, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the person charged had acted with intent to defraud; under this section it is incumbent on the person charged to prove that he acted innocently or that he acted without intent to defraud.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when taken before the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable summarily by the Court before the first or second class.

Merchandise Marks Act IV of 1889, the former of which provides for unintentional contravention of the law relating to marks and description, and the latter for forfeiture of goods when a person is convicted under this section. They run as follows:—

8. Where a person is accused under s. 482 of the Indian Penal Code of using false trade-mark or property-mark by reason of his having applied a mark to any goods, property of receptacle in the manner mentioned in s. 480 or s. 481 of that Code, as the case may be, or under 6 of this Act of applying to goods any false trade description, or under s. 485 of the Indian Penal Code of making any die, plate or other instrument for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade-mark or property-mark and proves—

¹ Seeva M. Haniff & Co. v. Liptons Ltd., (1914) 7 L. B. R. 306.

COMMENT.

Where the trade-mark of the complainant's goods contains a name to which there might be no right of exclusive use, and another person using a similar trade-mark with the same name is charged with selling goods marked with a counterfeit mark, a material circumstance that has to be considered in the case is what the general effect of the trade mark adopted by the accused is and whether an incautious purchaser would be led to believe that he is buying the complainant's goods.¹

1. 'Counterfeit.'—See s. 28, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused counterfeited the mark in question.

(2) That such mark is the trade mark or property mark of some person.

(3) That it was so used by that person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, counterfeited a trade mark or property mark, to wit—, used by AB, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 483 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

484. Whoever counterfeits¹ any property mark used by a public servant,² or any mark used by a public servant to denote that any property has been manufactured by a particular person or at a particular time or place, or that the property is of a particular quality or has passed through a particular office, or that it is entitled to any exemption, or uses as genuine any such mark knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Counterfeiting a mark used by a public servant.

COMMENT.

The offence under this section is an aggravated form of the offence described in the preceding one. An enhanced punishment is, therefore, given where a property mark used by a public servant is counterfeited.

1. 'Counterfeit.'—See s. 28, supra.
2. 'Public servant.'—See s. 21, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused counterfeited the property mark, or some other mark in question.

(2) That such mark is used by some public servant.

(3) That it was used to denote that the property had been manufactured by a particular person; or at a particular time or place; or that the property was of a particular quality, or had passed through a particular office, or was entitled to some exemption.

¹ Nallaya Pillai, (1895) 1 Weir 536.

Or prove :—

(1) That the accused used the property mark, or some other mark in question.

(2) and (3) as above.

(4) That he used the mark as genuine.

(5) That when he used it he knew the same to be counterfeit.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, counterfeited any mark (or property-mark), to wit—, used by a public servant, to wit—, to denote that some property was manufactured by AB [or at a particular time or place, to wit—, or that the property is of a particular quality, to wit—, or has passed through a particular office, to wit—, or that it is entitled to a certain exemption, to wit—,] [or used as genuine a mark, to wit—knowing the same to be counterfeit], and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 484 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

485. Whoever makes or has in his possession any die, plate or other instrument for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade mark or property mark, or has in his possession a trade mark or property mark for the purpose of denoting that any goods are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose Making or possession of any instrument for counterfeiting a trade mark or property mark.

manufacture or merchandise they are not, or that they belong to a person to whom they do not belong, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

The making or possession of instruments for counterfeiting a trade-mark or property-mark is hereby punished. This section resembles ss. 235, 256 and 472.

As to the definition of "possession," see s. 27, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made, or had in his possession, the die, plate, or instrument in question.

(2) That such die, etc., was for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade-mark or property-mark.

Or prove—

(1) That the accused had in his possession the trade-mark or property-mark in question.

(2) That he possessed such trade-mark or property-mark for the purpose of denoting that goods bearing such mark were the manufacture or merchandise of some person, or that they belonged to some person.

(3) That such goods were not the manufacture or merchandise of that person or that they did not belong to that person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

See ss. 8 and 9 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, set out in the Appendix.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) heroby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, sold (or exposed, or had in possession for sale, etc.), certain goods, to wit—, a counterfeit trade-mark [or property-mark], to wit—, affixed to [or impressed upon] the said goods, to denote that they were the manufactures of AB; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 486 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I heroby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

486. Whoever¹ sells, or exposes, or has in possession² for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things with a counterfeit trade mark³ or property mark affixed to or impressed upon the same or to or upon any case, package or other receptacle in which such goods are contained, shall, unless he proves—

(a) that, having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against this section, he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the mark, and

(b) that, on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods or things, or

(c) that otherwise he had acted innocently, he punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section saves from punishment persons dealing with goods bearing false trade-marks if they are able to prove that after taking reasonable precautions they had no ground to suspect the genuineness of the mark, and that they gave all the information in their power as to the source from which the goods were obtained or that otherwise they had acted innocently in the matter. Thus they are saved from punishment, and it becomes possible to trace the goods to the importer. Section 17 of the Merchandise Marks Act may be compared with this section. See the Appendix where it is set out in full.

Scope.—This section does not extend to persons who act as commission agents and intermediaries only between the importers and manufacturers and ordered out goods marked with a counterfeit trade-mark, which is seized on the way and which never reaches their place of business.¹

1. 'Whoever.'—This word includes a limited liability company or a corporation.²

2. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.

3. 'Counterfeit trade-mark' is one by means of which resemblance to a genuine one is intended to deceive and to lead a purchaser to imagine that the counterfeit is in reality the genuine article.³ A general resemblance constitutes

¹ Hargobind v. Greaves, Cotton & Co., Bombay, (1902) P. R. No. 32 of 1902.

(1914) 7 L. B. R. 306.

² Hargobind v. Ralli Bros., (1902) P. R.

³ Seena M. Haniff & Co. v. Liptons Ltd.,

No. 32 of 1902.

infringement.¹ A representation that the goods of the manufacture of A are those of B need not be made orally or in writing, but it may be made by the manner in which the goods are made up by the wrapper or by the name or design. The counterfeit is itself a representation.²

Where a person sold books with a counterfeit property-mark, it was held that he was guilty of an offence under this section.³

... ed to here-were or s. 486.⁴

As to meaning of the word 'counterfeit,' see s. 28, supra.

Statutory application.—See the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), s. 46 (d); Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886), s. 57 (d).

PRACTICE.

[Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused sold, or exposed or had in possession for sale or some purpose of trade or manufacture, the goods or things in question.

(2) That such goods or things had some trade-mark or property-mark affixed to, or impressed upon, them, or had some trade-mark or property-mark affixed to, or impressed upon, some case, package, or other receptacle in which they were contained.

(3) That such trade-mark or property-mark was counterfeit.

Where a person is charged with the commission of an offence under this section and the facts mentioned in the first paragraph thereof are proved, there are two alternative defences open to the accused—the first being that indicated by clauses (a) and (b) of the section read together, and the second being that indicated by clause (c). The first defence presupposes that the person charged believed the trade-mark in question to be a genuine one. The second defence pre-supposes that the person charged did not know that the trade-mark in question was the trade-mark of any firm or person.⁵

Onus.—The onus is not on the complainant to show that the accused acted dishonestly, but on the accused to bring himself within the exception.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

In *Dowlat Ram's case*⁷ Maclean, C. J., said: "It seems to me that when a case of this class (counterfeiting a trade-mark) is brought into a criminal Court, if the Magistrate is of opinion that there is a bona fide dispute as to whether the complainant has any trade-mark at all or whether the accused is or is not entitled to use the mark he is using, I say, if the Magistrate is satisfied that there is this bona fide dispute, he should not deal with the matter as a criminal matter, but leave it to the complainant to maintain, if he can, in a civil Court the right which he claims. If after the decision of the civil Court it be found that he has a trade-mark, and that the accused is fraudulently counterfeiting that trade-mark, the case

¹ Ganpat Sitaram Muladam, (1914) 16 Bom. L. R. 78, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 177; contra, Pithey & Sons v. Stephen Ak Kyun, (1903) 2 L. R. R. 159; Stephen Ak Kyun v. James Pithey, (1903) 10 Burma L. R. 84.

² Tapidas Durlabhdas, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. 732.

³ Kunai Das Bairagi v. Radha Shyam

Basack, (1898) 26 Cal. 232.

⁴ Matlal Premank v. Kanhai Lal Dass, (1903) 32 Cal. 969.

⁵ Ilahi Bakhsh, (1897) 17 A. W. N. 99.

⁶ Holland Bombay Trading Co. v. Bultear Mull, (1903) 8 C. W. N. 421.

⁷ (1905) 35 Cal. 431, 436.

could then be properly brought into a criminal Court under the section (s. 486) to which I have referred."

Jurisdiction.—A Magistrate has jurisdiction to try an offence under this section, although the sale, or the trade, or the manufacture, be not intended to take place within the jurisdiction of a Court in which the complaint is lodged. Possession of certain tins of clarified butter at Howrah, bearing a counterfeit trade-mark, though intended for sale in Rangoon, was held to constitute an offence committed at Howrah.¹

Limitation.—Prosecution should be instituted within one year from the discovery of the offence.²

Forfeiture.—Sees. 9 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, set out in the Appendix.

487. Whoever makes any false mark upon any case, package or other receptacle containing goods, in a manner reasonably calculated to cause any public servant or any other person to believe that such receptacle contains goods which it does not contain or that it does not contain goods which it does contain, or that the goods contained in such receptacle are of a nature or quality different from the real nature or quality thereof, shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud,¹ be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT.

The fraudulent making of false marks of any description on goods for the purpose of deceiving public servants such as custom officers, is punishable under this section. Thus, importation of contraband goods under false marks will come under the purview of this section. This section, therefore, is more comprehensive than ss. 482 and 486.

1. 'Intent to defraud.'—See ss. 45 and 486, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made some mark upon some case package, or other receptacle containing goods.

(2) That such mark was a false mark.

(3) That he did so in a manner reasonably calculated to cause some public servant or some other person to believe (a) that the receptacle contained goods which it did not contain, or (b) that it did not contain goods which it did contain, or (c) that the goods contained in such receptacle were of a nature or quality different from the real nature or quality thereof.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Forfeiture.—See s. 9 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, set out in the Appendix.

¹ Yusuf Mahomed Abarath v. Bantidhar Surangi, (1898) 25 Cal. 630

² Ruppell v. Ponnusami Tenn., (1899) 22 Mad. 455.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, made a false mark, to wit—, upon a case, to wit—, (or package or other receptacle containing goods) in a manner reasonably calculated to cause a public servant, to wit—, (or AB) to believe that such case contains goods, to wit—, which it does not contain [. of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

488. Whoever makes use of any such false mark in any manner prohibited by the last foregoing section shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud,¹ be punished as if he had committed an offence against that section.

COMMENT.

This section punishes the making use of a false mark. The last section punished the making of such a mark.

1. 'Intent to defraud.'—See ss 15 and 486, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made use of some mark upon some case, package, or receptacle containing goods.

(2) and (3) same as for s. 487.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class

Forfeiture.—See s. 9 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, set out in the Appendix.

Charge.—See s. 487, supra.

489. Whoever removes, destroys, defaces or adds to any property mark, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury¹ to any person,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Tampering with property mark with intent to cause injury.

COMMENT.

This section punishes the tampering with of a property-mark. Criminal intention or knowledge on the part of the accused is required under it.

1. 'Injury.'—See s. 44, supra.

2. 'Person.'—See s. 11, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the mark in question is a property mark.

(2) That the accused removed, destroyed, or defaced, or added to, such mark.

(3) That he did so intending thereby to cause injury to some person; or that he did so knowing that he might thereby cause injury to some person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, removed (or destroyed, defaced or added to) a property mark, to wit—, intending [or knowing it to be likely], that you may thereby cause injury to AB, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 489 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Of Currency-Notes and Bank-Notes.

489-A. Whoever counterfeits,¹ or knowingly performs any part of the process of counterfeiting, any currency-Counterfeiting currency-notes or bank-notes. note or bank-note, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section and of sections 489B, 489C and 489D, the expression “bank-note” means a promissory note or engagement for the payment of money to bearer on demand issued by any person carrying on the business of banking in any part of the world, or issued by or under the authority of any State or Sovereign Power, and intended to be used as equivalent to, or as a substitute for, money.

COMMENT.

This section is similar to ss. 231 and 255.

Object.—Sections 489A, 489B, 489C and 489D were introduced by the Currency Notes Forgery Act (XII of 1899), s. 2, in order to provide more adequately for the protection of currency-notes and bank-notes from forgery. Under the Indian Penal Code, which was passed prior to the existence of a paper currency in India, currency-notes were not protected by any special provisions, but merely by the general provisions applying to the forgery of valuable securities. Before these sections were introduced, charges for forging currency-notes had to be preferred under s. 467, for uttering them, under s. 471, and for making or possessing counterfeit plates, under s. 472. The provisions of s. 467 afforded sufficient means of dealing both with forgery generally and with forgery of currency-notes. But it was at times difficult to obtain a conviction under the other sections.

1. ‘Counterfeits.’—See s. 28, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the note in question is a currency-note or bank note.

(2) That the accused counterfeited it, or knowingly performed any part of the process of counterfeiting it.

A conviction under this section cannot be maintained unless it is proved that the accused really intended to counterfeit and either did counterfeit or perform any part of the process of counterfeiting.¹

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, counterfeited (or knowingly performed a part of the process of counterfeiting to wit—), a currency-note (or a bank-note) (state the value of the note), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 489-A of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

489-B. Whoever sells to, or buys or receives from, any other person, or otherwise traffics in or uses as genuine, any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section provides against trafficking in forged or counterfeit notes. It resembles ss. 239, 241 and 258.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1, that the currency-note or bank-note in question was forged or counterfeited

(2) That the accused sold to, or bought or received from, some person, or trafficked in, or used as genuine, such currency-note or bank-note.

(3) That when he did so he knew or had reason to believe that it was forged or counterfeited.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, sold to AB (or bought from AB, etc.), a forged (or counterfeit) currency-note, to wit—, knowing (or having reason to believe), the same to be forged (or counterfeit), and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 489-B of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

489-C. Whoever has in his possession¹ any forged² or counterfeit³ currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit and intending to use the same as genuine or that it may be used as genuine, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Possession of forged or counterfeit currency-notes or bank-notes.

¹ Meera, (1917) 10 B. L. T. 255.

COMMENT.

This section deals with the mere possession of a forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note. It resembles ss. 212, 213 and 259.

1. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.
2. 'Forged.'—See ss. 463, 461 and 470, supra.
3. 'Counterfeit.'—See s. 28, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the currency-note or bank-note in question was forged or counterfeited.

(2) That the accused was in possession of it.

(3) That he at the time of his possession knew, or had reason to believe, that it was forged or counterfeited.

(4) That he intended to use it as genuine or that it might be used as genuine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, had in your possession a forged (or counterfeit) currency-note (or bank-note), to wit—, knowing (or having reason to believe) the same to be forged (or counterfeit) and intending to use the same as genuine or that it may be used as genuine, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 489-C of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

489-D. Whoever makes, or performs any part of the process

Making or possessing instruments or materials for forging or counterfeiting currency-notes or bank-notes.

of making, or buys or sells or disposes of, or has in his possession,¹ any machinery, instrument or material for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for forging or counterfeiting² any currency-note or bank-note, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

COMMENT.

This section is analogous to ss. 233, 234, 256, 257 and 485. It was introduced into the Code by Act XII of 1899.

1. 'Possession.'—See s. 27, supra.
2. 'Counterfeiting.'—See s. 28, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the thing in question was a machinery, instrument or material necessary for or used in forging or counterfeiting a currency-note or bank-note

"In some cases a mere inspection of the articles would satisfy the Court that they are capable of being used in the making of counterfeit notes. But where that is not the case, it is the duty of the Crown to adduce evidence of a competent and qualified witness who would be able to explain to the Court the process by which the instruments or materials in question could be used in making a counterfeit note... Instruments and materials which may be useful in making correct drawings of the outlines of the designs and figures of a currency-note may be of no use whatever in manufacturing counterfeit notes."¹

(2) That the accused made, or performed, some part of the process of making the machinery, instrument, or material, in question; or that he bought, sold, or disposed of it; or that he had it in his possession.

(3) That the object of the accused was that such machinery, instrument, or material might be used for the purpose of forging or counterfeiting currency-notes or bank-notes; or that he knew, or had reason to believe, that the same was intended to be used for such purpose.

Before the Court could come to the conclusion that the accused had the objects in question for the purpose of counterfeiting, the prosecution should establish that he had formed in his mind the purpose or intention of counterfeiting currency-notes. The onus of doing so is on the Crown according to the language of the section—unlike the English law where in the case of a similar offence with respect to the counterfeiting of Bank of England notes, the onus is laid on the accused of proving a lawful excuse "for knowingly having in his custody or possession any plate, stone or other material or any instrument or device for engraving a bank-note." But "if the purpose and intention of the accused be proved, it is not necessary that all the articles required for counterfeiting should be found on him to hold him guilty of an offence under the section. A man may not be able to command all the articles required for the purpose but he may be actually proved to be in possession of only some. This would not deter the Court from convicting him of an offence under the statute."²

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, made (or performed any part of the process of making, or bought or sold or disposed of, or had in your possession) an instrument (or material, to wit—, for the purpose of being used (or knowing or having reason to believe that it was intended to be used) for forging (or counterfeiting) a currency-note (or a bank-note), to wit—, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 489-D of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

¹ Per Abdur Rahim, J., in Abdul Rahiman, (1911) 21 M. L. J. 766, 768, 769, 10 M. L. T. 108, 109, 110

² Per Sundara Aiyar, J., in ibid, pp. 773, 776 and 114.

OF THE CRIMINAL BREACH OF CONTRACTS OF SERVICE.

Object.—The authors of the Code say: “We agree with the great body of jurists in thinking that in general a mere breach of contract ought not to be an offence, but only to be the subject of a civil action.

“To this general rule there are, however, some exceptions. Some breaches of contract are very likely to cause evil such as no damages or only very high damages can repair, and are also very likely to be committed by persons from whom it is exceedingly improbable that any damages can be obtained. Such breaches of contract are, we conceive, proper subjects for penal legislation.”¹

490. Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract¹ to render his personal service² in conveying or conducting any person or any property from one place to another place, or to act as servant to any person during a voyage or journey, or to guard any person or property during a voyage or journey, voluntarily omits so to do,³ except in the case of illness or ill-treatment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, or with both.

Breach of contract of service during voyage or journey.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, a palanquin bearer, being bound by legal contract to carry Z from one place to another, runs away in the middle of the stage. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A, a coolie, being bound by lawful contract to carry Z's baggage from one place to another, throws the baggage away. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(c) A, a proprietor of bullocks, being bound by legal contract to convey goods on his bullocks from one place to another, illegally omits to do so. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(d) A, by unlawful means, compels B, a coolie, to carry his baggage. B in the course of the journey puts down the baggage and runs away. Here, as B was not lawfully bound to carry the baggage, he has not committed any offence.

Explanation.—It is not necessary to this offence that the contract should be made with the person for whom the service is to be performed. It is sufficient if the contract is legally made with any person, either expressly or impliedly, by the person who is to perform the service.

ILLUSTRATION.

A contracts with a dak company to drive his carriage for a month. B employs the dak company to convey supplies B with a carriage voluntarily leaves the carriage guilty of an offence under this section.

B employs the company of the journey with B, A is ¹ Note P, p. 170.

COMMENT.

This section has been repealed by the Workman's Breach of Contract (Repealing) Act, 1925 (III of 1925) with effect from April 1, 1926.¹

The Commentary is therefore omitted.

491. Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract¹ to attend

Breach of contract to attend on and supply wants of helpless person.

on or to supply the wants of any person who, by reason of youth, or of unsoundness of mind, or of a disease or bodily weakness,² is helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety or of supplying his own wants, voluntarily omits so to do, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

COMMENT.

Object.—The authors of the Code say: "We also think that persons who contract to take care of infants of the sick and of the helpless lay themselves under an obligation of a very peculiar kind, and may with propriety be punished if they omit to discharge their duty. The misery and distress which their neglect may cause is such as the largest pecuniary payment would not repair; they generally come from the lower ranks of life, and would be unable to pay anything. We therefore propose to add to this class of contracts the sanction of the penal law."²

Ingredients.—This section requires three essentials:—

1. Binding of a person by a lawful contract.
2. Such contract must be to attend on or to supply the wants of a person who is helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety or of supplying his own wants by reason of (i) youth, or (ii) unsoundness of mind, or (iii) disease, or (iv) bodily weakness.
3. Voluntary omission to perform the contract by the person bound by.

1. 'Whoever being bound by a lawful contract.'—Under this section it is not the breach of contract towards the other party to the contract that is to be regarded, but the breach of the legal obligation towards the incapable person, which has been accepted and transferred by the contract. See Comment on 490, supra.

2. 'To attend on or to supply the wants of any person who, by reason of youth, etc.'—The Law Commissioners observe: "We are not prepared to punish as a criminal every menial servant, who quits his employer without a certain notice upon the expiration of the term for which he is hired, under ordinary circumstances. But we conceive that Clause 465 may be improved in one respect. It seems, as it stands, not to be applicable to any but those servants who have contracted specially to attend upon the sick, insane, &c., but we think it should be made to apply to servants who are or ought to be in attendance upon a sick or insane master, though they may have only contracted with him in the ordinary way, while he was of sound body and mind, and to servants, whether engaged specifically for the purpose or not, who by the lawful command of their employers have been ordered to take care of young children and have not objected to do so."³ The accused, a cook, on a morning whilst the complainant's wife was ill and unable to supply her own wants, left his service without warning or permission. It was alleged that the illness of the complainant's wife was aggravated thereby. It was held that the accused was engaged only as an ordinary cook to a family, and was not bound to attend on, or

¹ Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 14th February 1925, p. 3.

² Note P. p. 171.

³ 2nd Rep., s. 329.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE CRIMINAL BREACH OF CONTRACTS OF SERVICE.

Object.—The authors of the Code say: “We agree with the great body of jurists in thinking that in general a mere breach of contract ought not to be an offence, but only to be the subject of a civil action.

“To this general rule there are, however, some exceptions. Some breaches of contract are very likely to cause evil such as no damages or only very high damages can repair, and are also very likely to be committed by persons from whom it is exceedingly improbable that any damages can be obtained. Such breaches of contract are, we conceive, proper subjects for penal legislation.”¹

490. Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract¹ to render his personal service² in conveying or conducting any person or any property from one place to another place, or to act as servant to any person during a voyage or journey, or to guard any person or property during a voyage or journey, voluntarily omits so to do,³ except in the case of illness or ill-treatment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, or with both.

Breach of contract of service during voyage or journey.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, a palanquin bearer, being bound by legal contract to carry Z from one place to another, runs away in the middle of the stage. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A, a coolie, being bound by lawful contract to carry Z's baggage from one place to another, throws the baggage away. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(c) A, a proprietor of bullocks, being bound by legal contract to convey goods on his bullocks from one place to another, illegally omits to do so. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(d) A, by unlawful means, compels B, a coolie, to carry his baggage. B in the course of the journey puts down the baggage and runs away. Here, as B was not lawfully bound to carry the baggage, he has not committed any offence.

Explanation.—It is not necessary to this offence that the contract should be made with the person for whom the service is to be performed. It is sufficient if the contract is legally made with any person, either expressly or impliedly, by the person who is to perform the service.

ILLUSTRATION.

A contracts with a dak company to drive his carriage for a month. B employs the dak company to convey him on a journey, and during the month the company supplies B with a carriage which is driven by A. A in the course of the journey voluntarily leaves the carriage. Here, although A did not contract with B, A is guilty of an offence under this section.

¹ Note P, p. 170.

COMMENT.

This section has been repealed by the Workman's Breach of Contract (Repealing) Act, 1925 (III of 1925) with effect from April 1, 1926.¹

The Commentary is therefore omitted.

491. Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract¹ to attend on or to supply the wants of any person who, by reason of youth, or of unsoundness of mind, or of a disease or bodily weakness,² is helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety or of supplying his own wants, voluntarily omits so to do, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

COMMENT.

Object.—The authors of the Code say: "We also think that persons who contract to take care of infants of the sick and of the helpless lay themselves under an obligation of a very peculiar kind, and may with propriety be punished if they omit to discharge their duty. The misery and distress which their neglect may cause is such as the largest pecuniary payment would not repair; they generally come from the lower ranks of life, and would be unable to pay anything. We therefore propose to add to this class of contracts the sanction of the penal law."²

Ingredients.—This section requires three essentials:—

1. Binding of a person by a lawful contract.
2. Such contract must be to attend on or to supply the wants of a person who is helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety or of supplying his own wants by reason of (i) youth, or (ii) unsoundness of mind, or (iii) disease, or (iv) bodily weakness.
3. Voluntary omission to perform the contract by the person bound by.

1. 'Whoever being bound by a lawful contract.'—Under this section it is not the breach of contract towards the other party to the contract that is to be regarded, but the breach of the legal obligation towards the incapable person, which has been accepted and transferred by the contract. See Comment on 490, supra.

2. 'To attend on or to supply the wants of any person who, by reason of youth, etc.'—The Law Commissioners observe: "We are not prepared to punish as a criminal every menial servant, who quits his employer without a certain notice upon the expiration of the term for which he is hired, under ordinary circumstances. But we conceive that Clause 465 may be improved in one respect. It seems, as it stands, not to be applicable to any but those servants who have contracted specially to attend upon the sick, insane, &c., but we think it should be made to apply to servants who are or ought to be in attendance upon a sick or insane master, though they may have only contracted with him in the ordinary way, while he was of sound body and mind, and to servants, whether engaged specifically for the purpose or not, who by the lawful command of their employers have been ordered to take care of young children and have not objected to do so"³ The accused, a cook, on a morning whilst the complainant's wife was ill and unable to supply her own wants, left his service without warning or permission. It was alleged that the illness of the complainant's wife was aggravated thereby. It was held that the accused was engaged only as an ordinary cook to a family, and was not bound to attend on, or to supply the wants of, any helpless person, and that, therefore, this section did not apply to such a case.¹

¹ Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 14th February 1925, p. 3.

² Note P, p. 171.

³ 2nd Rep., s. 329.

3. 'Voluntarily omits.'—The omission to perform the contract must be without any reasonable cause. A person who is disabled by illness cannot be said to voluntarily omit. As to the meaning of the word 'voluntarily,' see s. 39, supra.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused entered into a contract to attend on, or supply the wants of, the person in question.

(2) That such contract was a lawful one.

(3) That such person was helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety or of supplying his own wants.

(4) That such helplessness or incapableness was due to youth, or unsoundness of mind, disease or bodily weakness.

(5) That the accused omitted to attend on such person, or to supply his wants.

(6) That he did so voluntarily.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class—Triable summarily.

492. Whoever, being bound by lawful contract in writing¹

Breach of contract to serve at distant place to which servant is conveyed at master's expense.

to work for another person as an artificer, workman or labourer, for a period not more than three years, at any place within British India to which by virtue of the contract he has been or is to be conveyed at the expense of such other,² voluntarily deserts the service of that other during the continuance of his contract, or without reasonable cause refuses to perform the service which he has contracted to perform,³ such service being reasonable and proper service,⁴ shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding one month, or with fine not exceeding double the amount of such expense, or with both, unless the employer has ill-treated him or neglected to perform the contract on his part.

COMMENT:

This section has been repealed by the Workman's Breach of Contract (Repealing) Act, 1925, (III of 1925) with effect from April 1, 1926.²

The Commentary is, therefore, omitted.

¹ Solomon, (1887) Cr. R. No. 43 of 1887, Unrep. Cr. C. 354.

² See Gazette of India, Part IV, dated 14th February 1925, p. 3.

CHAPTER XX.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO MARRIAGE.

493. Every man who by deceit causes any woman who is not lawfully married to him to believe that she is lawfully married to him and to cohabit or have sexual intercourse with him in that belief, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Cohabitation caused by a man deceitfully inducing a belief of lawful marriage.

COMMENT.

Object.—This section punishes the offence committed when a man, either married or unmarried, induces a woman to become, as she thinks, his wife, but in reality his concubine. The form of the marriage ceremony depends on the race or creed as herself and thus inducing her to contract a marriage, in reality unlawful, but which, according to the law under which she lives is valid. Suppose a person half English half Asiatic by blood, calls himself a Mahomedan or a Hindu and by this deception causes a Mahomedan or a Hindu woman to go through the ceremony of marriage, in a form which she deems valid and to cohabit with him, he has committed this offence. A man who deceives a woman into the belief that a certain ceremony which he causes to be performed by some accomplice, constitutes a valid marriage and thus induces the woman to cohabit with him, may be punished under this section.¹

The act falling within the purview of this section will also come under cl. 4 of s. 375.

Ingredients.—The section has two ingredients:—

1. The deceit that causes a false belief in the existence of a lawful marriage.
2. Cohabitation or sexual intercourse with the person causing such belief.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused caused the woman in question to believe that she was lawfully married to him.

(2) That he induced that woman to cohabit with him under the belief.

(3) That he caused such belief by deceit.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint by the person aggrieved is necessary.—No Court shall take cognizance of this offence except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by it.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, by deceit caused a certain woman, to wit AB, who was not lawfully married to you, to believe that she was lawfully married to you, and, in that belief cohabited or had sexual intercourse with her; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 493 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

¹ M. & M. 432.

² Criminal Procedure Code, s. 160.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

494. Whoever, having a husband or wife living,¹ marries ^{Marrying again during lifetime of husband or wife.} in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Exception.—This section does not extend to any person whose marriage with such husband or wife has been declared void by a Court of competent jurisdiction;

nor to any person who contracts a marriage during the life of a former husband or wife, if such husband or wife, at the time of the subsequent marriage, shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years, and shall not have been heard of by such person as being alive within that time, provided the person contracting such subsequent marriage shall, before such marriage takes place, inform the person with whom such marriage is contracted of the real state of facts so far as the same are within his or her knowledge.

COMMENT:

This section punishes the offence known to English law as bigamy.

Scope.—This section does not apply to Hindu or Mahomedan males, who are allowed to marry more than one wife, but it applies to Hindu and Mahomedan females, and to Christians³ and Parsis² of either sex.

Ingredients.—This section requires:—

1. Existence of the first wife or husband when the second marriage is celebrated.

2. The second marriage being void by reason of the subsistence of the first according to the law applicable to the person violating the provisions of the section.

1. 'Having a husband or wife living.'—This phrase is interpreted in the case of Hindus, Mahomedans, Jews, Buddhists, accordance with their religious usages. In mined by Act XV of 1872, of Parsis, by Act XV of 1865. The validity of a marriage celebrated under the Special Marriage Act³ will be determined by its provisions.

If the first marriage is not a valid marriage no offence will be committed by contracting a second marriage. For instance, if A marries B, a person within prohibited degrees of affinity, and during B's life-time marries C, A has not committed bigamy.⁴

"A marriage, good by the laws of one country, is held good in all others where the question of its validity may arise. For the question always must be. Did the parties intend to contract marriage? And if they did that which in the place they were in is deemed a marriage, they cannot reasonably, or sensibly, or safely,

¹ Act XV of 1872.

² Act XV of 1865.

³ Act III of 1872, as amended by Act

XXX of 1923.

⁴ Chadwick, (1847) 11 Q. B. 205. See Kay, (1887) 16 Cox 202.

be considered otherwise than as intending a marriage contract."¹ But a union formed between a man and a woman in a foreign country, although it may there bear the name of marriage, and the parties to it may there be designated husband and wife, is not a valid marriage according to the law of England unless it be formed on the same basis as marriages throughout Christendom, and be in its essence the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others.²

'Living.'—It must be shown that the husband or wife is alive at the date of the second marriage.

Mahomedan law allows a minor to repudiate marriage on attaining puberty.—"Under the Mohamedan law, when a child is given in marriage by any person other than the father or grandfather, he or she has the option of either ratifying it or repudiating it on attaining puberty. . . . The only difference between the Sunni and the Shiah law on the question of option on puberty is that whereas according to the latter school a marriage contracted for a minor by a person other than the father or grandfather is wholly ineffective until it is ratified by the minor on attaining puberty, according to the (Hanafi) Sunni school it continues effective until it is cancelled by the minor. Both schools give to the minor an absolute power either to ratify or to cancel the unauthorised marriage. The (Hanafi) Sunni law presumes ratification when the girl after attaining the age of puberty has remained silent and has allowed the husband to consummate the marriage."³ B, a Mahomedan girl, whose father was dead, was alleged to have been given in marriage by her mother to J., some years before she attained puberty. Prior to her attaining puberty, J. was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for theft. While he was in married eeded with cause, assuming that B was properly married to J by B's mother when B was a child, B had the option of either ratifying or repudiating such marriage on attaining puberty.⁴

A nikah marriage⁵, or *sagai*⁶, or *pat*⁷ marriage falls within the purview of this section, but not jhingara.⁸

Marriage during Iddat.—In a Bombay Sessions case it was held that a Mahomedan woman marrying again during the lifetime of a husband who has divorced her but within the period of iddat is not guilty of bigamy.⁹ The Calcutta High Court holds the same view. It has laid down that under Mahomedan law the marriage of a man, who subsequently embraces Christianity, becomes ipso facto void, notwithstanding his reconversion to Islam during the period of iddat; marriage during such period, does not commit husband but by reason of a Penal Code has nothing to do.¹⁰ The former Chief Court of the Punjab decided that a second marriage contracted with a woman whose husband was dead and who was ¹ Warrender v. Warrender, (1835) 2 Cl. & F. 488, 530; Brinkley v. Attorney-General, (1890) 15 P. D. 78.

² In re Bethell: Bethell v. Hildyard, (1888) 38 Ch. D. 220.

³ Per Amur Ali, J., in Badal Aurat, (1891) 19 Cal. 79, 82.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Jadoo Mussulmanee, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 60.

⁶ Mussamut Chama, (1880) 7 C. L. R. 351, Bisaram Koiree, (1878) 3 C. L. R. 410.

⁷ Bai Rupa, (1864) 2 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 117; Ramjee Telu v. Ragho Telu, (1899) 12 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 19.

⁸ Gopal v. Phia, (1898) P. R. No. 25 of 1898.

⁹ Sabiha, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. J. 207.

¹⁰ Abdul Ghani v. Azizul Hug, (1911) 39 Cal. 409, 412.

not consummated. Sometime after the marriage, the complainant went to South Africa, and during his absence there he did not write to his wife, nor did he furnish her with maintenance. The accused obtained, according to custom of her caste, a release dissolving the marriage (fargati) from her caste people and married accused No. 2. It was held that the release was inoperative and that both the accused were guilty of bigamy.¹

The Calcutta High Court has, however, upheld a caste custom which allowed a wife to undergo a nikah or sagai marriage after she was relinquished by her husband.² According to the Mac... such custom should be allowed by Courts.³ In ... Court did give countenance to the custom of a c ... for a sufficient reason to divorce his wife. In this case a member of the Ajanya Rajput Guzars caste executed a deed of divorce to his wife. The Court held on the evidence that the deed was proved; that in that caste a husband was, for a sufficient reason, such as incontinence, allowed to divorce his wife; that the deed had not been executed for a sufficient reason; and that, consequently, the parties entering into a second marriage were guilty of an offence under this section.

Conversion from Hinduism.—According to Hindu law an apostate is not absolved from all civil obligations, the matrimonial bond remaining indissoluble. A non-Christian marriage is not dissolved by the mere fact of the conversion of one or both of the parties to Christianity.⁴ Hindu law does not recognize polygamy on the part of a woman. A Hindu woman who having a Hindu husband living marries a Mahomedan⁵ or a Christian⁷ even after becoming a Mahomedan or Christian, as the case may be, commits bigamy. A Hindu husband under similar circumstances commits no offence as Hindu law recognizes the right of a husband to contract a valid second marriage notwithstanding the continuance of a former marriage.

Conversion from Christianity.—The Madras High Court once held that a Hindu Christian convert relapsing into Hinduism and marrying a Hindu woman cannot be convicted of bigamy on the ground that he has another wife living whom he married while a professed Christian.⁸ It was so held on the ground that the Hindu law allowed polygamy on the part of a husband. The same High Court doubted the correctness of this ruling in a subsequent case: which a Native Christian according to Hindu law was guilty of bigamy even if he had renounced the Christian religion before contracting the second marriage.⁹ But in a later case the former ruling has been followed and the latter has been dissented from. In this case a Hindu convert had married a Christian woman according to the rites of the Roman Catholic religion. Subsequently, and during the life-time of his Christian wife, he reverted to Hinduism and married a Hindu woman in accordance with the rites of the class to which the parties belonged. It was held that he was not guilty of bigamy.¹⁰

¹ Bas Ganga, (1916) 19 Bom. L. R. 56, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 3.

² Jukni, (1892) 19 Cal. 627.

³ Tholasingam, (1896) 1 Weir 568.

⁴ (1882) 6 Bom. 126.

⁵ Ram Kumari, (1891) 18 Cal. 264; Mussamat Gholam Fatima, (1870) P. R. No. 32 of 1870.

⁶ Ganga, (1880) 4 Bom. 330; Budama Rauther v. Fatema Bi, [1914] M. W. N. 278, (1913) 26 M. L. J. 260 Nandi, (1919)

⁷ Sub. 160 See ...

the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869).

⁸ Millard, (1887) 10 Mad. 218.

⁹ (1866) 3 M. H. C. App. 7; Michael, (1886) 1 Weir 563.

¹⁰ Lazar, (1907) 30 Mad. 550.

¹¹ Antony, (1910) 33 Mad. 371.

in the state of observing her iddat being unlawful under the Mahomedan law, no conviction under this section was sustainable.¹

Divorce.—Divorce dissolves a valid marriage, and the parties obtaining such dissolution can re-marry. Divorce is unknown to Hindu law, though it is customary amongst lower classes of the Hindus. Divorce is allowed amongst the Mahomedans, the Parsis,² and the Native Christians.³

2. 'Marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife.'—Where a person, already bound by an existing marriage, goes through with another person a form of marriage known to, and recognised by, the law as capable of producing a valid marriage, such person is guilty of bigamy, notwithstanding any special circumstances which, independently of the bigamous character of the marriage, may constitute a legal disability in the parties, or make the form of marriage resorted to inapplicable to their case.⁴ It is immaterial even if the second marriage is void on another ground besides that of its being bigamous.⁵

It is immaterial whether the ceremony of the second marriage takes place within or beyond the King's dominions.⁶

Good faith and mistake of law are no defences to a charge of bigamy.⁷ It is no defence in law to an indictment for bigamy that the accused, at the time of the alleged bigamous marriage, believed, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, that he had been divorced from the bond of his first marriage, if in fact he had not been divorced.⁸

Publication of banns of marriage.—The act of causing the publication of banns of marriage is an act done in the preparation to marry but does not amount to an attempt to marry. Where, therefore, a man having a wife living, caused the banns of marriage between him and a woman to be published, it was held that he could not be punished for an attempt to marry again during the life-time of his wife.⁹

Whether custom a good defence to prosecution.—The Bombay High Court has ruled that Courts will not recognize the authority of a caste to declare a marriage void, or to give permission to a woman to re-marry. Bona fide belief that the consent of the caste made the second marriage valid does not constitute a defence to whom she has been first married, and to contract a second marriage (nair) with another man during the life-time of her first husband, and without his consent, was held to be invalid, as being entirely opposed to the spirit of the Hindu law; and that such marriage was "void by reason of its taking place during the life-time of such husband," and therefore punishable, as regards the woman, under this section.¹⁰ Accused No. 1 was married to the complainant but the marriage was

¹ Musst. Bibi, (1882) P. R. No. 43 of 1882.

² The Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, XV of 1865.

³ The Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, XXI of 1866.

⁴ Henry Allen, (1872) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 367; Jane Brown, (1843) 1 C. & K. 144. This view is not adopted in the Irish case of Fanning, (1866) 10 Cox 411, where it is said that English cases are distinguishable as the bigamous marriages in them were void for concubinage and not for fornication.

⁵ Gurbaksh Singh v. Shama Singh, (1876) P. R. No. 19 of 1876.

⁶ Russell, [1901] A. C. 448.

⁷ Nuranakath Ayullah v. Perakkal Mammur, (1922) 45 Mad. 986.

⁸ Thomas Wheat, [1921] 2 K. B. 118.

⁹ Peterson, (1876) 1 All. 316.

¹⁰ Sambhu Raghu, (1876) 1 Bom. 347. See Sankaralingam Chetti v. Subban Chetti, (1894) 17 Mad. 479, where it is decided that there is nothing immoral in a caste custom by which divorce and re-marriage are permissible on mutual agreement, on one party paying to the other the expense of the latter's original marriage.

¹¹ Bai Rupa, (1864) 2 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 117; Keshar Hargovan v. Bai Gendi, (1915) 17 Bom. L. R. 594.

not consummated. Sometime after the marriage, the complainant went to South Africa, and during his absence there he did not write to his wife, nor did he furnish her with maintenance. The accused obtained, according to custom of her caste, guilty of bigamy.¹

The Calcutta High Court has held that a Hindu husband who allowed a wife to live with another man, and who did not provide for her by her husband's means, was guilty of bigamy. The Court held that by her husband's custom should be taken into consideration. The Court held that the husband should give sufficient reason to divorce his wife. In this case a member of the Ajanya Rajput Gujars caste executed a deed of divorce to his wife. The Court held on the evidence that the deed was proved; that in that caste a husband was, for a sufficient reason, such as incontinence, allowed to divorce his wife; that the deed had not been executed for a sufficient reason; and that, consequently, the parties entering into a second marriage were guilty of an offence under this section.

Conversion from Hinduism.—According to Hindu law an apostate is not absolved from all civil obligations, the matrimonial bond remaining indissoluble. A non-Christian marriage is not dissolved by the mere fact of the conversion of one or both of the parties to Christianity.² Hindu law does not recognize polygamy on the part of a woman. A Hindu woman who having a Hindu husband living marries a Mahomedan³ or a Christian⁴ even after becoming a Mahomedan or Christian, as the case may be, commits bigamy. A Hindu husband under similar circumstances commits no offence as Hindu law recognizes the right of a husband to contract a valid second marriage notwithstanding the continuance of a former marriage.

Conversion from Christianity.—The Madras High Court once held that a Hindu Christian convert relapsing into Hinduism and marrying a Hindu woman cannot be convicted of bigamy on the ground that he has another wife living whom he married while a professed Christian.⁵ It was so held on the ground that the Hindu law allowed polygamy on the part of a husband. The same High Court has since held that a Christian convert who relapses into Hinduism and marries a Hindu woman is guilty of bigamy if he had the rites of the Roman Catholic religion. Subsequently, and during the life-time of his Christian wife, he reverted to Hinduism and married a Hindu woman in accordance with the rites of the class to which the parties belonged. It was held that he was not guilty of bigamy.¹⁰

¹ Bas Gangra, (1916) 19 Bom. L. R. 56, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 3.

² Jukni, (1892) 19 Cal. 627.

³ Tholasingam, (1896) 1 Weir 568.

⁴ (1882) 6 Bom. 126.

⁵ Ram Kumari, (1891) 18 Cal. 264; Mussamat Gholam Fatima, (1870) P. R. No. 32 of 1870.

⁶ Ganga, (1880) 4 Bom. 330; Budamsa Routhar v. Fatema Bi, [1914] M. W. N. 278, (1913) 26 M. L. J. 260 Nandi, (1919)

⁷ Millard, (1887) 10 Mad. 218.

⁸ (1866) 3 M. H. C. App. 7; Michael, (1886)

⁹ Weir 563.

¹⁰ Lazar, (1907) 30 Mad. 550.

¹¹ Antony, (1910) 33 Mad. 371.

in the state of observing her iddat being unlawful under the Mahomedan law, no conviction under this section was sustainable.¹

Divorce.—Divorce dissolves a valid marriage, and the parties obtaining such dissolution can re-marry. Divorce is unknown to Hindu law, though it is customary amongst lower classes of the Hindus. Divorce is allowed amongst the Mahomedans, the Parsis,² and the Native Christians.³

2. 'Marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife.'—Where a person, already bound by an existing marriage, goes through with another person a form of marriage known to, and recognised by, the law as capable of producing a valid marriage, such person is guilty of bigamy, notwithstanding any special circumstances which, independent of the bigamous character of the marriage, may constitute a legal disability inapplicable to their case.⁴ It is on another ground besides that of its being bigamous.⁵

It is immaterial whether the ceremony of the second marriage takes place within or beyond the King's dominions.⁶

Good faith and mistake of law are no defences to a charge of bigamy.⁷ It is no defence , at the time of the alleged reasonable grounds, that he had in fact he had not been divorced.⁸

Publication of banns of marriage.—The act of causing the publication of banns of marriage is an act done in the preparation to marry but does not amount to an attempt to marry. Where, therefore, a man having a wife living, caused the banns of marriage between him and a woman to be published, it was held that he could not be punished for an attempt to marry again during the life-time of his wife.⁹

Whether custom a good defence to prosecution.—The Bombay High Court has ruled that Courts will not recognize the authority of a caste to declare a marriage void, or to give permission to a woman to re-marry. Bona fide belief that the a defence custom husband (natra) with another man during the life-time of her first husband, and without his consent, was held to be invalid, as being and that such marriage was of such husband," and there section.¹¹ Accused No. 1 was married to the complainant but the marriage

¹ Musst. Bibi, (1882) P. R. No. 43 of 1882.

² The Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, X of 1865.

³ The Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, XXI of 1866.

⁴ Henry Allen, (1872) L. R. 1 G. C. R. 367; Jane Brown, (1843) 1 C. & K. 144. This view is not adopted in the Irish case of Fanning, (1866) 10 Cox 411, where it is said that English cases are distinguishable as the bigamous marriages in them were void for (1874)

⁵ Russell, [1903] A. C. 310.

⁷ Narantokath Avelok v. Parakkal

Mammu, (1922) 45 Mad. 986.

⁸ Thomas Wheat, [1921] 2 K. R. 119.

⁹ Peterson, (1876) 1 All. 316.

¹⁰ Sambhu Baghu, (1876) 1 Bom. 247.

¹¹ See Sanjivalingam Chetti v. Subban Chetti, (1894) 17 Mad. 479, where it is decided that by marriage.

¹² Bai Rupa, (1864) 2 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 117;

Keshar Hargoran v. Bai Gandhi, (1915) 17 Bom. L. R. 594.

reason of a mistake of fact K thought that the previous marriage had been declared void by a Court of competent jurisdiction, he had not committed any offence.¹

Absence for seven years.—Where the accused's first wife had left him for sixteen years and it was proved by the second wife that she had known him for nine years, living as a single man, and that she had never heard of the first wife, who, it appeared, had been living seventeen miles from where the accused resided, it was held that the accused ought to be acquitted.² The accused's first husband had been continually absent from her for seven years next preceding the second marriage, on which occasion she represented herself as a single woman, and was married by her maiden name. The jury found that they had no evidence that, at the time of her second marriage, she knew that he was alive, but that she had means of acquiring knowledge of that fact, had she chosen to make use of them. It was held that on that finding the conviction could not be supported.³ Where it was proved that the accused had married W in 1865, and lived with her after the marriage, but for he had gone through the evidence as to the accused they last saw each other, Lord Coleridge, C. J., said: "There is proof of the existence of a state of things and no evidence of the cessation of that state of things, consequently, the presumption is that the existing state continued."

In 1864 W married A. In 1868 he was charged with bigamy in marrying B, his wife A being then alive, and was convicted. In 1879 he married C and in 1880, C being then alive, he married D. Afterwards, upon a charge of bigamy in marrying D, C being then alive, W was convicted, it being held by the presiding judge that W was alive when W married C, or that the question should have been left to the jury whether upon the above facts A was alive or not when W married C.⁴

Persons present at a bigamous marriage.—Mere consent of persons to be present at an illegal marriage, or their presence in pursuance of such consent, or the grant of accommodation in a house for the marriage, does not necessarily constitute abetment of such marriage.⁵

Abetment.—A man may be guilty of abetment although the girl herself may be, from want of intelligence or knowledge, incapable of committing this offence.⁶ The wife of the first accused having left his house with her minor daughter, performed the marriage of the daughter with a boy. The first accused hearing of this applied to a Magistrate for a warrant under s. 100, Criminal Procedure Code, and thereupon the girl was handed over to him, and a few months later she was married by him to the second accused. Both the accused were then prosecuted for abetting the offence of bigamy. It was held that although a Hindu father was the proper person to give his daughter in marriage, the rule was firmly established that a marriage, which was duly solemnised and was otherwise valid, was not rendered void because it was brought about without the consent of the guardian in marriage or even in contravention of an express order of the Court; that even if the marriage was brought about by fraud and might on that account be declared invalid, it was not a nullity and was binding until it was set aside by a competent Court, and that unless it was declared to be invalid it could sustain an indictment for bigamy.⁷

¹ Karim Balkash, (1918) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 31 of 1918.

² Thomas Jones, (1842) Car. & Mar. 614.

³ Mary Briggs, (1856) 26 L. J. (M. C.) 7.

⁴ Jones, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 118.

⁵ Willshire, (1880) 6 Q. B. D. 366.

⁶ Umi, (1882) 6 Bom. 126.

⁷ Nand Lal Singh, (1902) 6 C. W. N. 343; Hub Ali, (1923) 21 A. L. J. R. 187.

⁸ Gajja Nand, (1921) 2 All 288.

A Christian cannot by embracing Mahomedanism marry a second time during the life-time of his first wife.¹ The accused, a Christian woman, who had married a Christian according to Christian rites and during the life-time of her husband had become a Mahomedan and married a Mahomedan according to Mahomedan rites was guilty of an offence under this section, notwithstanding the provisions of the Mahomedan law.² Whether a change of religion, made honestly after marriage with the assent of both spouses, without any intent to commit a fraud upon the law, will have the effect of altering rights incidental to the marriage, such as that of divorce, is a question of importance and of nicety not decided as yet.³

Conversion from Mahomedanism.—A Mahomedan who becomes an Ahmediyan (a sect of Mahomedans) does not become an apostate and his wife is guilty of bigamy if she marries another during his life-time.⁴

Exception.—The exception speaks of (1) the first marriage having been declared void by a Court; and (2) seven years' absence on the part of a spouse in a manner not heard of by the other party. Under the English law there is a third element, viz., bona fide belief in the spouse's death,⁵ which is not adopted in this exception. The proviso to this exception confines its application to cases in which the accused before the second marriage discloses the real state of the case, and such knowledge as he or she may have concerning the circumstances, to the person about to be married.

If the accused bona fide believed that the earlier marriage was set aside by the Court he would not be guilty.⁶

If it is proved that the accused and his first wife have lived apart for the seven years preceding the second marriage, it is incumbent on the prosecution to shew that during that time he was aware of her existence; and, in the absence of such proof, the accused is entitled to be acquitted.⁷ Even where the absence is the result of wilful desertion, it lies on the prosecution to shew, not merely that the person charged had the means of knowledge, but the person knew that the first consort was living.⁸ But it has been held in two Indian cases that a woman, who, having the means of acquiring knowledge of the death of her first husband, does not choose to make use of them, and marries, commits bigamy.⁹

The doctrine of a certain school of Mahomedan divines in regard to the competency of a woman to marry again after the absence of her husband for four years does not entitle a woman so re-marrying to the benefit of the exception.¹⁰

Under this exception it is incumbent on the person contracting the second marriage, if it is contracted within seven years, to inform the other party about the first marriage.¹¹

Bona fide belief as to earlier marriage having been set aside by Court.—A certain girl was married by her grandfather to one B. On attaining puberty she brought a suit to have the marriage declared void, as she wished to repudiate it, and obtained an ex parte decree which was, however, set aside and later on the suit was

It was ree had h as by

¹ Skinner v. Orde, (1871) 14 M. I. A. 309, 324.

² Mussammat Ruri, (1918) P. R. No. 5 of 1919.

³ Robert Skinner v. Charlotte Skinner, (1897) 25 Cal. 537, 546.

⁴ Narantakath Avallah v. Parakkal Mammu, (1922) 45 Mad. 986.

⁵ Tolson, (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 168.

⁶ Karim Balshah, (1918) P. W. R. (Cr.)

No. 31 of 1918, infra.

⁷ John Curgerveen, (1865) L. R. 1 C. C. R. 1; Heaton, (1863) 3 F. & F. 819.

⁸ Faulles, (1903) 19 T. L. R. 250.

⁹ Enai Beebe, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 25;

Mussammat Muhammad Nissa, (1899) P. R. No. 1 of 1900.

¹⁰ Alam Shah v. Jewan, (1878) P. R. No. 27 of 1878.

¹¹ Enai Beebe, sup.

of a marriage celebrated in a foreign country must be ascertained. The general country is, that between of the place where it is celebrated. If valid there, it is valid everywhere. If invalid there, it is equally invalid everywhere. But there are exceptions to this rule. On the one hand a Christian country would not recognise, as lawful, polygamy or some incestuous marriages contracted by Christians while residing in Mahomedan or other countries. On the other hand, where there is a local necessity from the absence of laws or the presence of prohibitions or obstructions not binding upon other countries, or from

Courts, its validity is to be determined by the law prevailing in British India.²

Proof of marriage among the English.—To constitute a valid marriage by the common law (clergyman in holy in holy —lid.³

th or be to be ding

to the law of the country in which it was celebrated. If the marriage is proved by a person present at it, it is not necessary to prove the registration, or licence, or bans.⁴

Proof of marriage among the Hindus.—There is no statutory marriage law for the Hindus, and the validity of any particular marriage depends chiefly on the usages of the caste to which the parties belong.⁵

Proof of marriage among the Mahomedans.—At a marriage between Mahomedans, a Mullah, with the necessary witnesses and vakils, is always present to read the sigha. He should, therefore, be called as a witness. The sigha recited at the marriage of minors is different from that recited at the marriage of adults. There should be evidence to show that akd was performed.⁶ Where, however, the on of the certificate given under s. 6 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1865, or a certified extract from the register of marriages under s. 7 of the Act.

Proof of marriage among the Native Christians.—This can be proved by a certified copy of any entry of a marriage in the Marriage Register under s. 80 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act.⁷

Proof of marriage among the Jews.—In order to prove a Jewish marriage it is not sufficient to produce a witness who was present at the religious ceremony in the synagogue, a written contract (katuba) between the parties being essential to the validity of the marriage, production and proof of the execution of such document is necessary.⁸ Jews domiciled in England cannot validly contract a marriage within the degrees prohibited by English law.¹⁰

² M. & M. 433.

³ Budama v. Rother v. Fatima B., [1914] M. W. N. 278, 26 M. L. J. 260.

⁴ Beamish v. Beamish, (1859) 9 H. L. C. 274.

⁵ William Allson, (1806) R. & R. 109.

⁶ Subbarayan, (1885) 9 Mad. 9.

⁷ Badal Akrat, (1891) 19 Cal. 79.

⁸ Sheikh Alimuddin, (1906) 10 C.W.N. 952.

⁹ Act XV of 1872.

¹⁰ Althausen, (1893) 17 Cox 630. See Nathan v. Wolf, (1890) 16 T. L. R. 250.

¹¹ In re De Wilton, De Wilton v. Montefiore, (1900) 2 Ch. 481; Benjamin v. Benjamin (1925) 28 Bom. L. R.

Where a Mahomedan guardian of a married female infant, while her husband was living, caused a marriage ceremony to be gone through in her name with another man, but without her taking any part in the transaction, it was held that he did not commit the offence of abetment under s. 109 and this section.¹

Priest officiating at a bigamous marriage.—The priest who officiates at a bigamous marriage is an abettor under this section and s. 109.²

Statutes relating to marriage and divorce.—Act XV of 1865 (Parsis); Act XXI of 1866 (Act to legalize the dissolution of marriages of Native Converts to Christianity); Act IV of 1869 (Act to amend the law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial causes); Act III of 1872 (Special form of Marriages) as amended by Act XXX of 1923; Act XV of 1872 (Christians); Act VII of 1909 (Sikhs).

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the following facts:—

(1) That the accused had already been married to some person.³ The provision of s. 50 of the Indian Evidence Act shows that where marriage is an ingredient of an offence, the fact of the marriage must be strictly proved.⁴ Proof of actual marriage is always necessary; proof of marriage by cohabitation, reputation and other circumstances from which a marriage may be inferred is not sufficient.⁵ A mere statement on the part of the accused that he had committed bigamy is not sufficient.⁶ The Court should require some better evidence of the marriage than the mere statement of the complainant and the woman.⁷ The Madras High Court has expressed its opinion that a husband or wife is not precluded from proving his or her marriage. Where, therefore, the complainant, the woman, and her mother swore to the fact of the marriage, it was held that the marriage was sufficiently proved.⁸ A marriage may be established by preponderating repute and by conduct, even though the repute may be divided.⁹ Where there is prima facie evidence of cohabitation as man and wife, and a long course of treatment of the woman as wife and the children as legitimate, the presumption of marriage can be repelled only by evidence of the clearest character. Much weight must be attached to reputation among the relations on both sides, among all the friends and among all the acquaintances in the locality where the parties resided. The evidence of resemblance of a child to the putative father is admissible.¹⁰

Evidence of the identity of the accused on the occasions both of the first and of the second marriage is necessary. On an indictment for bigamy, a photographic likeness of the first husband was allowed to be shown to the witnesses present at the first marriage, in order to prove his identity with the person mentioned in the marriage certificate.¹¹ But, except under very special circumstances, the Court will not act upon identification by a photograph only.¹²

It is also incumbent upon the prosecution to prove the validity of the first marriage.¹³ Where the first marriage took place not within any part of the British dominions but in a foreign country, and there is a question concerning the validity

¹ Abdool Kureem, (1878) 4 Cal. 10. This case does not seem to lay down sound law.

² Umi, (1882) 8 Bom. 126; Millard, (1887) 10 Mad 218.

³ Burubul v. Sawan, (1874) P. R. No. 4 of 1874; Alam Shah v. Jewan, (1878) P. R. No. 27 of 1878; Makandi v. Mohri, (1893) P. R. No. 17 of 1893.

⁴ Pitambur Singh, (1879) 5 Cal. 566, re n, overruling Watra, (1872) 8 Beng. L. R. App. 63, 17 W. R. (Cr) 5; Shivana, (1883) Unrep. Cr. C. 190; Kallu, (1892) 5 All 233.

⁵ Morris v. Miller, (1767) 4 Burr. 2057, 2059.

⁶ Daniel Flaherty, (1847) 2 C. & K. 782; Lindsay, (1902) 66 J. P. 505, 18 T. L. R. 761.

Contra, John Newton, (1843) 2 M. & Rob. 503.

⁷ Dal Singh, (1897) 20 All. 166.

⁸ Subbarayann, (1885) 9 Mad. 8, 11.

⁹ Lytle v. Ellwood, (1874) L. R. 19 Eq. 93; Sastry Velaidar Aronegary v. Sembecutty

Vaigalie, (1891) 6 App. Cas. 364.

¹⁰ Bibi Imambandi v. Haji Motamaddi, (1911) 15 C. L. J. 621.

¹¹ Tolson, (1864) 4 F. & F. 103.

¹² Frith v. Frith, [1896] P. 74.

¹³ Kay, (1887) 10 Cox 292.

of such marriage, the law of the foreign country must be ascertained. The general principle with regard to marriages contracted in a foreign country is, that between persons of full age, marriage is to be decided by the law of the place where it is celebrated. If valid there, it is valid everywhere. If invalid there, it is equally invalid everywhere. But there are exceptions to this rule. On the one hand a Christian country would not recognise, as lawful, polygamy or some incestuous marriages contracted by Christians while residing in Mahomedan or other countries. On the other hand, where there is a local necessity from the absence of laws or the presence of prohibitions or obstructions not binding upon other countries, or from peculiarities of religious opinions, or conscientious scruples, or from circumstances of exemption from local jurisdiction, marriages will be allowed to be valid according to the law of the place where they are contracted. In such cases, marriages are allowed to be valid according to the law of the place where they are contracted.

Courts, its validity is to be determined by the law prevailing in British India.²

Proof of marriage among the English.—To constitute a valid marriage by the

to the law of the country in which it was celebrated. If the marriage is proved by a person present at it, it is not necessary to prove the registration, or licence, or banns.⁴

Proof of marriage among the Hindus.—There is no statutory marriage law for the Hindus, and the validity of any particular marriage depends chiefly on the usages of the caste to which the parties belong.⁴

Proof of marriage among the Mahomedans.—At a marriage between Mahomedans, a Mullab, with the necessary witnesses and vakils, is always present to read the sigha. He should, therefore, be called as a witness. The sigha recited at the marriage of minors is different from that recited at the marriage of adults. There should be evidence to show that ald was performed.⁶ Where, however, the father of a minor girl is present at her marriage and is a consenting party, no special recitations are necessary to make a valid marriage under the Hanafi law.⁷

Proof of marriage among the Parsis—This can be proved by the production of the certificate given under s. 6 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1905.

copy of any entry of a marriage in the Marriage Register under s. 80 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act.⁸

Proof of marriage among the Jews.—In order to prove a Jewish marriage it is not sufficient to produce a witness who was present at the religious ceremony in the synagogue, a written contract (katuba) between the parties being essential to the validity of the marriage, production and proof of the execution of such document is necessary.⁹ Jews domiciled in England cannot validly contract a marriage within the degrees prohibited by English law.¹⁰

¹ M. & M. 433.

* Budamsa Routher v. Fatema Bi, [1914] M. W. N. 278, 26 M. L. J. 260.

³ Beamish v. Beamish, (1859) 9 H. L. C. 274.

⁴ William Allison, (1806) R. & R 109

* Subbarayan, (1885) 9 Mad. 9

* Badal Aurat, (1891) 19 Cal 79.

¹ Sheikh Alimuddin, (1906) 10 C.W.N. 982.

⁴ Act XV of 1872.

* Althausen, (1893) 17 Cox 630. See Nathan v. Wolf, (1890) 16 T. L. R. 250

¹⁰ In re De Wilton, De Wilton v. Montefiore, [1900] 2 Ch. 481; Benjamin v. Benjamin (1925) 28 Bom. L. R.

(2) That the person with whom he had married was still living. The prosecution must prove to the satisfaction of the Court that the husband or wife, as the case may be, was alive at the date of the second marriage. This is purely a question of fact. The existence of the party at an antecedent period may or may not afford a reasonable inference that he was living at the subsequent date. If, for example, it were proved that he was in good health on the day preceding the second marriage, the inference would be strong, almost irresistible, that he was living on the latter day, and the Court would in all probability find that he was so. If, on the other hand, it were proved that he was then in a dying condition, and nothing further was proved, the Court would probably decline to draw that inference. The law makes no presumption either way. The legislature sanctions a presumption that a person who has not been heard of for seven years is dead¹; but this affords no ground for the converse proposition, viz., that when a party has been seen or heard of within seven years, a presumption arises that he is still living.²

Whether evidence is necessary, on the part of the prosecution, to show that the accused married, knowing his second wife to be alive, depends upon the particular facts of each case.³ Positive proof that at the time of his second marriage the accused knew that his first wife was alive is not absolutely necessary.⁴

(3) That the accused married another person.

The celebration of the second marriage is proved in the same manner as that of the first.

(4) That the second marriage was void by reason of its taking place during the life of the first spouse.⁵

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Complaint by the person aggrieved is necessary.—Under s. 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure no Court shall take cognizance of an offence falling under this section except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence. This section is intended to prevent Magistrates from inquiring into cases coming under ss. 493 to 496, unless the husband or some person aggrieved lodges a complaint. It is not necessary, however, that a complainant should state precisely the section of the Code under which the accused shall be charged. It is sufficient if the complainant lays before the Magistrate matters which, if proved, would be sufficient to warrant a commitment under this section.⁶

The brother of a lunatic husband is not a 'person aggrieved' by the wife's bigamy, and he is not competent to complain.⁷ Similarly, the brother of the second (bigamous) husband⁸ or the father of the first husband⁹ of the accused is not a 'person aggrieved.' The person aggrieved is either the first husband or the second.¹⁰

Venue.—The proper Court to try a charge under this section is the Court which has territorial jurisdiction at the place where the offence was committed. Persons accused of abetting the commission of the offence are triable by the Court within whose territorial jurisdiction the abetment takes place.¹¹

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, having a wife [or husband] to wit—, living, married again AB, and such marriage being void by reason of

¹ See the Indian Evidence Act, s. 108.

² Lumley, (1869) L. R. 1. Q. C. R. 106, 108.

³ Ellis, (1858) 1 F. & P. 309.

⁴ David Jones, (1869) 11 Cox 358.

⁵ Musst, Bibi, (1892) P. R. No. 43 of 1882; (1870) 1 Weir 565, p. 2.

⁶ Ali, (1902) 25 All. 209; Ujjala Bewa,

(1878) 1 C. L. R. 523.

⁷ Bai Rukshmoni, (1886) 10 Bom. 310.

⁸ Imtiazan, (1902) 25 All. 132.

⁹ Lala, (1909) 32 All. 78.

¹⁰ Sarna Kahmi, (1893) 26 Cal. 336 C; Lala,
sup.

¹¹ Mussamat Bhagoolia, (1924) 3 Pat. 417.

its taking place during the life-time of the said wife [or husband], and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 494 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.¹

Punishment.—As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d); and 12 (2).

495. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section having concealed from the person with whom the subsequent marriage is contracted, the fact of the former marriage, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Same offence with concealment of former marriage from person with whom subsequent marriage is contracted.

{COMMENT:

Object.—This section provides a higher penalty when the fact of the former marriage is concealed from the person with whom the subsequent marriage is contracted.

The authors of the Code say: "The act which in the English law is designated as bigamy is always an immoral act. But it may be one of the most serious crimes that can be committed. It may be attended with circumstances which may excuse though they cannot justify it.

"The married man who, by passing himself off as unmarried, induces a modest woman to become, as she thinks, his wife, but in reality his concubine, and the mother of an illegitimate issue, is guilty of one of the most cruel frauds that can be conceived. Such a man we would punish with exemplary severity.

"But suppose that a person arrives from England, and pays attentions to one of his countrywomen at Calcutta. She refuses to listen to him on any other terms than those of marriage. He candidly owns that he is already married. She still presses him to go through the ceremony with her. She represents to him that if they live together without being married, she shall be an outcast from society, that nobody in India knows that he has a wife, that he may very likely never fall in with his wife again, and that she is ready to take the risk. The lover accordingly agrees to go through the forms of marriage.

"It cannot be disputed that there is an immense difference between these two cases. Indeed, in the second case the man can hardly be said to have injured any individual in such a manner as calls for legal punishment. For what individual has he injured? His second wife? He has acted by her consent, and at her solicitation. His first wife? He has certainly been unfaithful to his first wife. But we have no punishment for mere conjugal infidelity. He will often have injured his first wife no more than he would have done by keeping a mistress calling that mistress by his own name, introducing her into every society as his wife, and procuring for her the consideration of a wife from all his acquaintance. The legal rights of the first wife and of her children remain unaltered. She is the wife; the second is the concubine. But suppose that the first wife has herself left her husband, and is living in adultery with another man. No individual can then be said to be injured by this second invalid marriage. The only part injured is society, which has undoubtedly a deep interest in the sacredness of the matrimonial contract, and which may therefore be justified in punishing those who go through the forms of that contract for the purpose of imposing on the public.

¹ (1867) 3 W. R. (Cr. L.) 2.

"The law of England on the subject of bigamy appears to us to be in some cases too severe, and in others too lenient. It seems to bear a close analogy to the law of perjury. The English law on these two subjects has been framed less for the purpose of preventing people from injuring each other, than for the purpose of preventing the profanation of a religious ceremony. It therefore makes no distinction between perjury which is intended to destroy the life of the innocent, and perjury which is intended to save the innocent; between bigamy which produces the most frightful suffering to individuals, and bigamy which produces no suffering to individuals at all. We have proceeded on a different principle. While we admit that the profanation of a ceremony so important to society as that of marriage is a great evil, we cannot but think that evil immensely aggravated when the profanation is made the means of tricking an innocent woman into the most miserable of all situations. We have therefore proposed that a man who deceives a woman into believing herself his lawful wife when he knows that she is not so, and induces her, under that persuasion, to cohabit with him, should be punished with great severity.

"There are reasons similar, but not exactly the same, for punishing a woman who deceives a man into contracting with her a marriage which she knows to be invalid. For this offence we propose a punishment which, for reasons too obvious to require explanation, is much less severe than that which we have provided for a similar deception practised by a man on a woman."

The authors of the Code intended to punish with greater severity only the man who deceived a woman. But the section as it stands applies to either party.

CASES.

Concealment of the fact of the first marriage at the time of contracting the second.

—A woman, who does not use all reasonable means in her power to inform herself of the fact of her first husband's alleged demise, and contracts a second marriage within sixteen months after cohabitation with her first husband, without disclosing the fact of the former marriage to her second husband, is liable to enhanced punishment under this section.²

Infant marriage.—Where a child of ten years was married again during the life-time of her husband, the marriage being negotiated and caused to be performed by the mother of the accused, it was held that the child had not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of her conduct on the occasion of the second marriage.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove the same points (1) to (4) as for s. 464; and further:—

(5) That the accused, when marrying the second person, concealed from such person the fact of the former marriage.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint by the person aggrieved is necessary.—See s. 493, supra.⁴

496. Whoever, dishonestly or with a fraudulent intention, goes through the ceremony of being married,¹ knowing that he is not thereby lawfully married,² shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Marriage ceremony fraudulently gone through without lawful marriage.

¹ Note Q, pp. 171, 172.

² Enas Beebee, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 25.

³ Godi, (1896) Unrep. Cr. C. 876.

⁴ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 193.

COMMENT.

Ingredients.—The section requires two essentials :—

1. Dishonestly or with a fraudulent intention going through the ceremony of marriage.

2. Knowledge on the part of the person going through the ceremony that he is not thereby lawfully married.

1. 'Dishonestly or with a fraudulent intention, goes through the ceremony intention.'

2. 'Knowing that he is not thereby lawfully married.'—The accused must have the knowledge that there is no marriage. A case of bigamy is not contemplated by this section. Where it is intended that there should be a valid marriage and that there should be only a show of marriage for some ulterior and fraudulent purpose, the case does not come under this section.¹ The section punishes mock marriages. It applies to cases in which a ceremony is gone through which would ties is deceived by the which effect is sought purpose. Where the ceremony gone through does, but for the previous marriage, constitute a valid marriage, and both parties are aware of the circumstances of the previous marriage, s. 494 applies.²

An abuse of the marriage ceremony where no deceit is practised on the woman, and no dishonest or fraudulent intent is proved, is not an offence under this section.

Sections 493 and 496.—The two sections are somewhat alike; the difference appears to be that under s. 493 deception is requisite on the part of the man, and cohabitation or sexual intercourse consequent on such deception. The offence under s. 496 requires no deception, cohabitation, or sexual intercourse as a sine qua non, but a dishonest or fraudulent abuse of the marriage ceremony. In the latter case the offence can be committed by a man or a woman, in the former only by a man.

Abetment.—The mere act of allowing the marriage to take place at one's house does not amount to an abetment of illegal marriage.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused went through the ceremony of marriage.

(2) That when he went through such ceremony he knew that he was not thereby lawfully married to the complainant.

(3) That he did as in (1) dishonestly or with a fraudulent intention.⁴

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Complaint by the person aggrieved is necessary.—See s. 493, supra.⁵

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, dishonestly (or fraudulently) went through the ceremony of being married to AB, knowing that you were not thereby lawfully married, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable

¹ Sheikh Alimuddin, (1906) 10 C. W. N. 982.

² Rama Sona, (1873) Cr. R. July 1873, Hawen Cr. C. 77.

³ Kudam, (1864) W. R. (Gap. No.) Cr. 13.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 193.

he was found in a place in which adultery might have been committed and that he was minded to commit it.¹ Where a married woman went to visit a man, but before adultery was committed, she was taken away by her husband, it was held that the man could not be convicted of an attempt to commit adultery.²

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused had sexual intercourse with the woman in question.

The sexual intercourse required for adultery being the same identical thing as the sexual intercourse required for rape, the evidence of sexual intercourse on a charge of adultery must not be stronger than that in a suit for a divorce. The best proof available must always be produced, but in both cases evidence of opportunities sought for and obtained and of familiarities which point strongly to an inference of guilt, are sufficient to establish the fact of sexual intercourse.³

Evidence of having lived with the wife of an absent person for several weeks and moreover of having slept in the same bed for a number of days and of considerable attachment between the accused and the woman where there is no allegation that the accused is impotent, is, although circumstantial, sufficient evidence to prove sexual intercourse between them.⁴

(2) That she was then the wife of another man.

Strict proof is necessary of the marriage of the woman.⁵ The actual fact of the marriage between the complainant and the woman must be proved in some way or another.⁶

(3) That the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that she was the wife of another man.

The question the Court has to determine is, whether or not the accused honestly believed that the woman was the wife of another man.⁷

(4) That such man did not consent to, or connive at, such intercourse.

A person may call the woman with whom he is accused of having had sexual intercourse as a witness on his behalf.⁸

The admission of a man and a woman coupled with the evidence of the witnesses to the effect that the two lived together as man and wife leads to the inevitable presumption that acts of adultery must have been committed.⁹

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Death of husband does not put an end to prosecution.—The death of the husband does not necessarily put an end to a prosecution under this section.¹⁰

Complaint by the person aggrieved is necessary.—No Court shall take cognizance of the offence except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman or, in his absence, by some person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed.¹¹ It is submitted that a husband who has

¹ Basara Chary, (1889) 1 Weir 569.

² Ghulam Mahomed, (1879) F. R. No. 13 of 1879; Paira Ram, (1902) P. R. No. 25 of 1902.

³ Madhub Chunder Giri Mohunt, (1873) 21 W. R. 13; Hunter, (1920) 2 U. P. L. R. 419.

⁴ Hunter, sup.

⁵ Smith, (1885) 1 W. R. 1041.

⁷ Manohar Raiji, (1868) 5 B. H. C. (Cr. C.)

17. ⁸ Sheikha Beechoo, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 82.

⁹ Tran. & Doct. (1887) 7 W. R. 1049.

Ns.

See

F.)

9;

14-

Jil

an 14,

2)

¹¹ Bhaghu Dhondi, (1914) 17 Bom. L. R. 75, 3 Bom. Cr. C. 8.

U. B. R. 155.

obtained a divorce cannot be a complainant because divorce puts an end to the relationship of husband and wife.¹

Although a man cannot be charged with adultery except by the husband of the woman with whom he commits it, yet he may be charged with and convicted of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery, without the husband himself making the charge, if there is no consent or connivance on the part of the latter.² In a case the accused was found in the complainant's house by night, and he stated that he was there for the purpose of carrying on an intrigue with the complainant's wife. The complainant refused to lay a complaint of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery. It was held that the Magistrate was right in refusing to convict him of a charge which the husband refused to make.³ Where an accused person was committed to the Sessions Court to stand his trial for adultery by a husband under s. 498, it was held that the Sessions Judge had acted without jurisdiction under this section.⁴ The Court of Session may add charges under this section and s. 498, in the manner indicated in s. 226 and the following sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when the complaint of the husband is not merely of offences involving the use of force but was also a specific complaint of the offence punishable under the aforesaid sections.⁵ Where in a prosecution under s. 366 the husband of the woman appeared as a witness and asked the Magistrate to drop the proceedings under s. 366 as he intended to prosecute the accused under s. 498, it was held that the statement made by the husband, as a witness, fell within the definition of complaint as defined in s. 4, cl. (h) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and therefore a conviction under s. 498, treating the statement made by the husband as a complaint, was legal.⁶

Withdrawal of charge.—Where the husband of a woman, with whom the accused was alleged to have committed adultery, professed himself unwilling to proceed with the prosecution, and the judge thereupon ordered the accused to be discharged, the High Court, in the exercise of its discretion, declined to interfere.⁷ But in an Allahabad case it has been ruled that a charge of adultery cannot be withdrawn by a complainant with the Magistrate's consent.⁸

Orders for re-trial and examination of wife.—In an enquiry into a case of alleged adultery and enticing away a married woman for illicit purposes, the complainant refused to examine his wife as to the marriage. The Deputy Magistrate declined to frame a charge and discharge the accused. The Sessions Judge directed a re-trial to be held by another Deputy Magistrate and ordered that the evidence of the wife should be taken as to the marriage. It was held that the Sessions Judge in ordering a re-trial had not exercised a proper discretion, he having admitted that the prosecution had failed to prove the marriage, and it not being alleged that any evidence was tendered by the prosecution and not taken by the Deputy Magistrate.⁹

Offender liable to a conviction for every fresh act.—Where a man who has been convicted of adultery with another man's wife, continues his adulterous intercourse, he will be liable to a second conviction and punishment for the fresh act, notwithstanding that the woman has not returned to the protection of her husband after the conviction of her paramour.¹⁰

¹ William v. Goss (1893) 1 D. 42.

² Bhawani Das, (1916) 38 All. 276.

³ Ramto Jerio, (1868) 5 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 27.

⁴ Gumbheer, (1870) 2 N. W. P. 234.

⁵ Chunder Nath Ghose v. Nundololl Chatterji, (1884) 11 Cal. 81.

⁶ Emaji, (1880) Cr. R. 28th Oct. 1880, Unrep. Cr. C. 150.

⁷ (1921) 34 C. L. J. 51.

Mayne is of opinion that a man cannot be convicted of adultery a second time in respect of the same woman, if she is not taken back by her husband. But there is nothing in the section to support this view.

Charge.—A charge of adultery, alleging commission of offences between two dates, is legal where it is impossible, in the circumstances of the case, to assign particular dates on which sexual intercourse took place.¹

It should run thus—

I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, committed adultery with AB, knowing or having reason to believe her to be the wife of CD, and without the consent or connivance of the said CD; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 497 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (if the case is tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Punishment. As to the Frontier District, see the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901, ss. 11 (3) (d); and 12 (2).

498. Whoever takes or entices away any woman who is and Enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman.

whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of any other man, from that man, or from any person having the care of her on behalf of that man, with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person, or conceals or detains with that intent any such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT;

Sections 361 and 366 may be compared with this section which comes into operation when the two former sections fail to apply.

Ingredients.—The section requires two things:—

1. Taking or enticing away or concealing or detaining the wife of another man from (a) that man, or (b) any person having the care of her on behalf of that man.

2. Such taking, enticing, concealing or detaining must be with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person.

This and the preceding sections are evidently intended for the protection of husbands, who alone can institute prosecutions for offences under them.

1. 'Takes or entices away any woman who is...the wife of any other man.'—'Enticing' implies some blandishment or coaxing. It is the taking or enticing of the wife from the husband or the person having the care of her on behalf of the husband for the illicit purpose that constitutes the offence. It is none the less taking, although the woman and the accused had for some time been living together. request² If in point of fact the husband had, previously, acted of taking or enticing away under such circumstances as to render the act of taking of the section, living under the protection of her husband or of some one acting on his behalf.¹ The fact that the woman accompanied the accused of her own free-will does not diminish the criminality of the act.²

¹ Bhola Nath Mitter, (1924) 51 Cal. 488.

² Kumarasami, (1865) 2 M. H. C. 331.

It is the enticement or taking away from the husband and not the enticement to any person which constitutes the offence. If, therefore, it is clearly proved that a man has enticed the woman away from her husband's control with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person and she has actually left her husband's control without any definite intention to return or with the intention to remain away from her husband's protection indefinitely, the offence is complete as regards the person who has so enticed the woman, who may, as a matter of fact, not be her paramour at all, but some third person, even though the woman and her paramour should never meet at all.³ For the purposes of a conviction under this section there must be an intention that the woman should leave her husband's control without any definite intention that she should return to him, or an intention that she should remain away indefinitely.⁴

'Whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of another man.'—The woman must be the wife of another man. If the marriage is voidable then this section does not apply.⁵

If a particular union between two persons is recognized as marriage, then the taking or enticing away the woman with a party to such union will amount to an offence under this section. Thus, where the accused enticed away a woman, who was the illegitimate daughter of a Brahmin father and Bania mother and who had married a Bania, it was held that the accused was guilty as such a marriage was recognized by the caste to which the husband belonged and was not invalid according to Hindu law.⁶ Where by custom a marriage with a widow is valid and the accused abducted a woman so married with knowledge of the marriage, it was held that he was guilty of an offence under this section.⁷

Mahomedan law.—Iddat.—According to Mahomedan law if a woman marries before the expiry of iddat the marriage is null and void. Where a woman had married her husband's brother during her iddat and subsequently married the accused, it was held that the accused had committed no offence under this section.⁸

The complainant, a Mahomedan, alleged that he had been married six times; that all the wives were living, but that he kept two of the first four partially divorced (i.e., by pronouncing the words of divorce only once or twice and not thrice) in order to legalize his marriage with the fifth and the sixth, and so kept within the law which permitted him to have four wives. The accused was charged with abducting or committing adultery with the sixth wife. It was held that the woman in question was not the wife of the complainant.⁹

Where a wife, who was deserted by her husband, went of her own free-will, to live with another man, a conviction under this section was set aside, as there was no enticing or taking away.¹⁰

'Woman.'—See s. 10, supra.

'Reason to believe.'—See s. 26, supra.

'Conceals or detains such woman.'—The words 'conceals or detains' are intended to be applied to the enticing or inducing a wife to withhold or conceal herself from her husband, and assisting her to do so, as well as to physical restraint or prevention of her will or action. Depriving the husband of his proper control

¹ Mihan Singh, (1883) P. R. No. 15 of 1883, p. 26.

² Jan Mahomed, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 435.

³ Gaman, (1899) P. R. No. 9 of 1899.

⁴ Ahmad, (1917) P. L. R. No. 145 of 1817.

⁵ Bulanda, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 33 of 1910.

⁶ Madan Gopal, (1912) 34 All. 589.

⁷ Gobindu, (1918) P. R. No. 10 of 1919.

⁸ Isa v. Ranon, (1911) P. W. R. No. 1 of 1912, P. L. R. No. 83 of 1912.

⁹ Rab Nawaz Khan, (1874) P. R. No. 1 of 1875.

¹⁰ Pochun Chung, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 35; Pahlwan, (1914) P. L. R. No. 129 of 1915, P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 5 of 1915.

over his wife, for the purpose of illicit intercourse is the gist of the offence, and a detention occasioning such deprivation may be brought about simply by the influence of allurements and blandishments.¹ Detention does not necessarily imply that it is against the consent of the person detained. Where a married woman left her husband's house and went to another man's and lived with him as his wife, it was held that the man with whom she lived had committed an offence under this section.² If a man keeps the wife of another under his protection in a house he detains her within the meaning of this section.³ But there can be no detention where the man is living with a man of her own free-will and refuses to go back with her husband.⁴

The words 'such woman' do not mean such woman as has been so enticed away as mentioned in the section, but mean such woman whom the accused knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of any other man; the detention of such a woman with the particular intent defined in the section is one of the offences made punishable under the section.⁵ In an earlier case the same High Court had expressed the opinion, though the point had not been specifically discussed, that a person could not be convicted of detaining an enticed woman until the enticing had been proved.⁶ This interpretation gives the go-bye to the latter part of the section which makes concealment or detention of such woman punishable and is not followed by Straight, J., in Niadar's case above referred to.

"A wife living in her husband's house, or in a house hired by him for her occupation, and at his expense, is, during his temporary absence, living under his protection so as to bring the case within the meaning of s. 498—provided, of course, that...he knew, or had reason to know, that she was the wife of the man from whose protection he took her, or on whose behalf the person from whom he took her had charge of her, and also provided that he took her with the intent specified in the Act. To hold otherwise would be to declare the worst cases of seduction not punishable under the Penal Code."⁷

2. "With intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person."—Intention is the gist of this offence. The intention must be that the woman should have unlawful sexual intercourse with a person.

A person who entices away a married woman from her husband's house with intent that he may dispose of her in marriage to some one else commits an offence under this section, because sexual intercourse between the woman and any other person to whom she has thus been given in marriage, during the life-time of her husband, would be illicit intercourse within the meaning of this section.⁸

Where a procuress induced a married woman of twenty to leave her husband, she had made her deliberate choice and was determined to leave her husband and become a prostitute in Calcutta, the High Court held that the procuress could not be convicted of kidnapping under s. 366, but was guilty of enticing away a married woman under this section, "for whatever the wife's secret inclinations were, she would have had no opportunity of carrying them out had not the prisoner interposed."⁹ The complainant alleged that his father-in-law had detained his wife, and that with his help the accused married his wife and since then had kept her in his (accused's) house. The accused was convicted under this section. It was held that the conviction was bad inasmuch as there was no evidence whatever to show that the accused

¹ Sundara Dass Teran, (1868) 4 M. H. C.

² (1872) 7 Mad. Jur. 133.

³ Bansi Lal v. Ali Muhammad, (1913) P. L. R. No. 319 of 1913, P. W. R. No. 36 of 1913.

⁴ Lachman Chamar, (1920) 18 A. L. J. R. 311.

⁵ Niadar, (1888) 10 ALL. 580; Ala Baksh, (1891) P. R. No. 16 of 1891.

⁶ Tika Singh, (1880) 3 ALL. 251.

⁷ Per Jackson and Glover, JJ., in Mutty Khan v. Mungloo Khansama, (1866) 6 W. R. (Cr.) 50.

⁸ Naurang, (1915) 13 A. L. J. R. 251.

⁹ Srimotee Poddee, (1864) 1 W. R. (Cr.) 45.

enticed away the complainant's wife from her husband's or her father's house with intent to have illicit intercourse with her.¹

Sections 366 and 498.—Section 366 applies to cases where, at the time of the abduction, the woman has no intention of marriage or illicit intercourse at the time when the abduction takes place, but it is the intention of the person abducting to compel her afterwards to marry him. The offence of abducting a woman with intent to have illicit intercourse with her afterwards to illicit intercourse of the taking or enticing is that of another person, even though, as it generally happens, she is quite aware of the purpose of the abductor. The offence is a complete one, and the abductor is liable to punishment as compared with Wife cannot be punished as abettor.—In the case of adultery it is distinctly enacted that the wife is not punishable as an abettor; it is, therefore, inconsistent to punish her as an abettor of the minor offence mentioned in this section.² It has been left an open question whether a woman can be convicted of abetting the 'taking away' of herself within this section.⁴ Enticement denotes a state of passivity on the part of the woman, and hence does not come within the three clauses of s. 107 which imply a certain degree of activity in the abettor. If a woman requested a man to take her away her act would probably be covered by s. 107, cl. (1).

Alyasanatan law.—The cohabitation of man and woman under the Alyasanatan system is not considered to be a marriage so as to render punishable a person who entices away the woman with the intent specified in the section.⁵

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the woman in question is the wife of another man.

The provisions of s. 50 of the Evidence Act show that where marriage is an ingredient in an offence the fact of the marriage must be strictly proved.⁶ It is not sufficient for the prosecution to prove that the complainant and the woman in respect of whom the charge is made lived together as man and wife.⁷ Strict proof of marriage is necessary,⁸ it cannot be presumed.⁹ The Court should require some better evidence of the marriage than the mere statement of the complainant and the woman.¹⁰ The Madras High Court has, however, held that the evidence of the husband and wife is sufficient to prove the marriage.¹¹ The fact and the legality of the marriage are material elements in a case of enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman and must be proved as strictly as any other material facts, but it is not necessary that they should be proved in any particular way.¹² The law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously for a number of years and at the time of the commencement of cohabitation a marriage between them was possible. This presumption of law can be repelled only by strong, distinct and conclusive evidence, and the mere fact that the direct evidence of the marriage which took place many years ago is unsatisfactory cannot displace this

¹ Jasimaddin Sheshk v. Ichohal Mistri, (1897) 1 C. W. N. 498.

² Jatra Sheshk v. Reazat Sheshk, (1892) 20 Cal. 483.

³ Prinze v. Jirun Singh, (1897) 20 Cal. 483.

⁴ Balambal, (1902) 26 Mad. 463.

⁵ Koraga, (1883) 6 Mad. 374.

⁶ Pilambur Singh, (1879) 5 Cal. 566, r. r.

⁷ Arshed Ali, (1883) 13 C. L. R. 125.

⁸ Sobrat v. Jungli, (1898) 2 C. W. N. 245.

⁹ Mokendi v. Mohri, (1893) P. R. No. 17 of 1893.

¹⁰ Dal Singh, (1897) 20 All. 166; Kallu, (1882) 5 All. 233; Santok Singh, (1898) 18 A. W. N. 186; Padam Singh, (1906) 3 A. L. J. R. 224n; Budhu, (1920) 42 All. 401; Pirthi, (1900) 3 O. C. 342; Phikku, (1925) 2 O. W. N. 586.

¹¹ Subbarayan, (1885) 9 Mad. 9.

¹² Nazir Khan, (1913) 36 All. 1.

presumption. Marriage is evidenced, not constituted, by habit and repute and in a case where no valid marriage is possible no amount of evidence as to habit and repute can establish it.¹

Although in some cases there may be danger in relying solely upon the interested evidence of a spouse, nevertheless a conviction based upon the evidence of a spouse is not illegal.²

(2) That she was under the care of her husband, or of some one on his behalf.

(3) That the accused took or enticed her away from her husband or that other person, or concealed, or detained her.

(4) That the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that she was the wife of another man.

(5) That the accused did as above with intent that she might have illicit intercourse with some person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Complaint by the aggrieved person is necessary.—No Court shall take cognizance of this offence unless upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or, in his absence, by some person who had care of such woman.³ Complaint by a man who has purchased a married woman is not competent.⁴

The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring, of their own motion, into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But where the husband is a complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366, a conviction under this section may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence, and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one.⁵ But this view has not been adopted in some cases.⁶ In a Bombay case, the accused was tried on charges under ss. 363 and 366. At the conclusion of the case, the Court added a charge under this section and convicted the accused on all the three charges. It was held that the procedure in the case was not regular; and the additional charge framed at the stage it was framed was prejudicial to the accused. The Court set aside the conviction under this section and ordered an inquiry into the remaining charges.⁷

Where, in a case in which the complaint was of the offences of kidnapping a minor girl and theft of her jewels, there was no allegation even in the sworn statement of the complainant that the accused's purpose was to have illicit intercourse with her daughter, and there was not even a statement as to puberty; it was held that there was no complaint of an offence under this section, so as to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to try and convict the accused of such an offence.⁸ Though a person having the care of a woman on behalf of her husband can lodge a complaint, such person cannot compound an offence under that section and an acquittal based on a compounding of offence by such person is erroneous.⁹ The death of the husband does not put an end to the prosecution launched under this section.¹⁰ Detention of a married woman is a continuing offence and a person committing such an offence is always liable to prosecution except for any period in respect of which he has been found innocent. Acquittals in respect of previous detentions are no bar to a fresh charge for a subsequent detention.¹¹

¹ Indar Singh v. Thakar Singh, (1921) 3 L. L. J. 317.

² Syed Munir, (1917) 14 N. L. R. 28.

³ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 199; Nihala, (1909) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 22 of 1909.

⁴ Mughlu, (1925) 26 P. L. R. 382.

⁵ Jatra Sheikh v. Rezaat Sheikh, (1892) 20 Cal. 483.

⁶ Chemon Garo, (1902) 29 Cal. 415; Isap Mahomed, (1906) 31 Bom. 218; Kallu, (1882) 5 All. 233; Bangaru, (1903) 27 Mad. 61;

Bhana, (1910) P. R. No. 32 of 1910; Roda Singh, (1917) P. R. No. 2 of 1918; Khusal Singh, (1904) 17 C.P.L.R. 105. See Bhavani Das, (1916) 38 All. 276.

⁷ Isap Mahomed, sup.; Bhana, sup.
⁸ Arunachalam Chetty, (1923) 45 M. L. J. 543, (1923) M. W. N. 876.

⁹ Fateh Muhammad, (1910) 4 L. L. J. 488; Mir Alam, (1922) 5 L. L. J. 183.

¹⁰ Manj Din, (1922) 4 Lab. 7.

¹¹ Nadar, (1920) 4 L. L. J. 635.

Sections 497 and 498.—A person convicted of adultery under s. 497 of the Code need not be convicted also under this section.¹

Finding.—A finding exactly in the words of this section—that the prisoner took or enticed away a married woman from her husband; or some person having the care of her on his behalf, with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person, or concealed or detained such woman with a like intent—though not actually illegal, when it is doubtful which of the several offences has been committed, is a finding which ought not to be resorted to if it can be avoided, and it can be determined under which part of the section the accused is guilty.²

Place of trial.—A complaint under this section for detaining a woman for the purpose of illicit intercourse can be enquired into only in the district where such detention occurs.³

The Punjab Rule.—In cases under s. 498 of the Indian Penal Code where the fact of an existing marriage between the complainant and the woman enticed away is in issue, it is not an uncommon practice for the Court trying the case to stay proceedings on the criminal side, and to refer the prosecutor for redress to the civil Court. This procedure is irregular. It is optional to the injured person to seek redress either in the criminal or civil Court. If he elects the former, the Court has no authority to refuse a hearing and to pass an order which entails upon him the delay and expense of a civil suit. But the marriage must be fully proved before a conviction can be arrived at. In many such cases the question really in dispute is only the amount of the dowry or by and to whom it is to be paid.⁴

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, took away (or enticed away, or concealed, or detained) a certain woman, to wit AB, whom you knew or had reason to believe to be the wife of CD, from the said CD, [or from EF who had the care of the said AB on behalf of CD], with intent that the said AB might have illicit intercourse with some person; and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 498 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Punishment.—Where the accused was convicted of an offence under this section and it appeared that the woman being not on good terms with her husband went to the accused of her own accord, a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was considered to be too severe.⁵ A light sentence is sufficient to meet the ends of justice when the abducted woman is an active abettor,⁶ or where the husband did not care much about his wife and did not take any action against the accused for a number of months after her abduction.⁷

¹ Pochun Chung, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 35

² Mothoor Nath Roy, (1874) 22 W. R. (Cr.) 72.

³ Jaswant Singh, (1916) P. L. R. No. 51 of 1918, P. W. R. No. 8 of 1918.

⁴ P. C. C. R. & O., Vol. II, No. 30, p. 199

⁵ Rasul Khan, (1910) P. L. R. No. 33 of 1910 P. W. R. No. 60 of 1910.

⁶ Jaswant Singh, (1916) P. L. R. No. 51 of 1918, P. W. R. No. 8 of 1918.

⁷ P. C. C. R. & O., Vol. II, No. 30, p. 199

CHAPTER XXI.

OF DEFAMATION.

499. Whoever by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations,¹ makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person² intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person,³ is said, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, to defame that person.

Explanation 1.—It may amount to defamation to impute anything to a deceased person, if the imputation would harm the reputation of that person if living, and is intended to be hurtful to the feelings of his family or other near relatives.

Explanation 2.—It may amount to defamation to make an imputation concerning a company or an association or collection of persons as such.

Explanation 3.—An imputation in the form of an alternative or expressed ironically, may amount to defamation.

Explanation 4.—No imputation is said to harm a person's reputation, unless that imputation directly or indirectly, in the estimation of others, lowers the moral or intellectual character of that person, or lowers the character of that person in respect of his caste or of his calling, or lowers the credit of that person, or causes it to be believed that the body of that person is in a loathsome state, or in a state generally considered as disgraceful.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A says—"Z is an honest man; he never stole B's watch": intending to cause it to be believed that Z did steal B's watch. This is defamation, unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

(b) A is asked who stole B's watch. A points to Z, intending to cause it to be believed that Z stole B's watch. This is defamation, unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

(c) A draws a picture of Z running away with B's watch, intending it to be believed that Z stole B's watch. This is defamation, unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

First Exception.—It is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. Whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact.

Imputation of truth which public good requires to be made or published.

Second Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, or respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Public conduct of public servants.

Third Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of any person touching any public question, and respecting his character so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Conduct of any person touching any public question.

ILLUSTRATION.

It is not defamation in A to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the duties of which the public is interested.

Fourth Exception.—It is not defamation to publish a substantially true report of the proceedings of a Court of Justice, or of the result of any such proceedings.

Explanation.—A Justice of the Peace or other officer holding an enquiry in open Court preliminary to a trial in a Court of Justice is a Court within the meaning of the above section.

Fifth Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the merits of any case, civil or criminal, which has been decided by a Court of Justice, or respecting the conduct of any person as a party, witness or agent, in any such case, or respecting the character of such person, as far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Merits of case decided in Court or conduct of witnesses and others concerned.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A says—"I think Z's evidence on that trial is so contradictory that he must be stupid or dishonest." A is within this exception if he says this in good faith, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses respects Z's character as it appears in Z's conduct as a witness, and no further.

(b) But if A says—"I do not believe what Z asserted at that trial, because I know him to be a man without veracity." A is not within this exception, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z's character, is an opinion not founded on Z's conduct as a witness.

Sixth Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion respecting the merits of any performance which its author has submitted to the judgment of the public, or respecting the character of the author so far as his character appears in such performance, and no further.

Merits of public performance.

Explanation.—A performance may be submitted to the judgment of the public expressly or by acts on the part of the author which imply such submission to the judgment of the public.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A person who publishes a book, submits that book to the judgment of the public.

(b) A person who makes a speech in public, submits that speech to the judgment of the public.

(c) An actor or singer who appears on a public stage, submits his acting or singing to the judgment of the public.

(d) A says of a book published by Z—"Z's book is foolish; Z must be a weak man. Z's book is indecent; Z must be a man of impure mind." A is within this exception, if he says this in good faith, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z respects Z's character only so far as it appears in Z's book, and no further.

(e) But if A says—"I am not surprised that Z's book is foolish and indecent, for he is a weak man and a libertine," A is not within this exception, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z's character is an opinion not founded on Z's book.

Seventh Exception.—It is not defamation in a person having over another any authority, either conferred by law or arising out of a lawful contract made with that other, to pass in good faith any censure on the conduct of that other in matters to which such lawful authority relates.

Censure passed in good faith by person having lawful authority over another.

ILLUSTRATION.

A Judge censuring in good faith the conduct of a witness, or of an officer of the Court; a head of a department censuring in good faith those who are under his orders; a parent censuring in good faith a child in the presence of other children; a schoolmaster, whose authority is derived from a parent, censuring in good faith a pupil in the presence of other pupils; a master censuring a servant in good faith for remissness in service; a banker censuring in good faith the cashier of his bank for the conduct of such cashier as such cashier—are within this exception.

Eighth Exception.—It is not defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against any person to any of those who have lawful authority over that person with respect to the subject-matter of accusation.

Accusation preferred in good faith to authorized person.

ILLUSTRATION.

If A in good faith accuses Z before a Magistrate; if A in good faith complains of the conduct of Z, a servant, to Z's master; if A in good faith complains of the conduct of Z, a child, to Z's father—A is within this exception.

Ninth Exception.—It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of any other person, or for the public good.

Imputation made in good faith by person for protection of his or other's interests.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A, a shopkeeper, says to B, who manages his business—"Sell nothing to Z unless he pays you ready money, for I have no opinion of his honesty." A is within the exception, if he has made this imputation on Z in good faith for the protection of his own interests.

(b) A, a Magistrate, in making a report to his superior officer, casts an imputation on the character of Z. Here, if the imputation is made in good faith, and for the public good, A is within the exception.

Tenth Exception.—It is not defamation to convey a caution, in good faith, to one person against another, provided that such caution be intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed, or of some person in whom that person is interested, or for the public good.

500. Whoever defames another shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Punishment for defamation.

COMMENT.

In the words of the authors of the Code, "the essence of the offence consists in its tendency to cause that description of pain which a person who knows himself to be the object of the unfavourable sentiment of his fellow-creatures, and those inconveniences to which a person who is thus exposed."

The criminal law of this country with regard to defamation is the construction of s. 499, not on what may be the English law, or on the construction of the criminal law of England. In England, private libel consists in its tendency to provoke a breach of the peace. In the Penal Code, defamation has been made an offence on account of its tendency to cause acts of illegal violence. The author appears to us evident that between the offence of defamation, looking to a breach of the peace, there is a distinction between theft and murder. Defamatory imputation, on the other hand, has a tendency to cause acts of violence. Words which may have that tendency in the case of defamation, considered as defamation, are in no sense considered as defamation, may be considered as a provocation to a breach of the peace, as a woman, published by a person, in one of its most serious forms, a satirist could be said to have imputed on the count of seen only by that offence, defamation, in a very obvious tendency to cause

as ular

11 I Q. B.
Edmondson v.
B 371.
[1891] 1 Q. B.
Stagh, sup.
(1883) P.

int, ('

of

1 Note B, 211.
2 Griffin v. Jones,
27; Law v. Fraser,
22 All 231; See telegram,¹ or printed on papers distributed, broadcast,² constitute publication. So is filing in Court a petition containing defamatory matter concerning a person with the intention that it should be read by other persons.³ When a person presents a defamatory petition to a superior public officer, who, in the ordinary course of official routine, sends it to some subordinate officer for inquiry, there is a publication of the letter at the place where he may receive it, and a publication for which the original writer may prima facie be held responsible, whether or not he expressly asks for an enquiry.⁴ Communication to a husband or wife of a charge against the wife or husband is a publication⁵ but uttering of a libel by a husband to his wife is not.⁶

Where there is a duty which forms the ground of privileged occasion, the person exercising the privilege is entitled to take all reasonable means of so doing, and those reasonable means may include the introduction of third persons where that is reasonable and in the ordinary course of business. A solicitor, acting on behalf of his client, wrote and sent to the plaintiff a letter containing defamatory statements regarding her. The letter was dictated to a clerk in the office and was copied into the letter-book by another clerk. In an action against the solicitor for libel it was held that the publication to his clerks was necessary and usual in the discharge of his duty to his client.⁷ But where there is no such duty the act of dictating a letter even to a short-hand writer will amount to publication.⁸

The accused in reply to a notice from the complainant's pleader calling upon him to pay money lent to him by the complainant wrote a letter to the pleader containing defamatory statements about the complainant. The complainant thereupon charged the accused with defamation. The lower Courts held that the letter having been sent to the complainant's pleader must be considered to have been addressed to the complainant himself and therefore there was no publication to a third person. On revision, the former Chief Court of the Punjab held that as the defamatory statements contained in the accused's letter to the complainant's pleader were wholly irrelevant to, and unconnected with, the question of the alleged loan mentioned in the pleader's letter, the pleader must be held to be a third person as far as those statements were concerned, and that therefore there had been publication within the purview of this section.⁹

Where a libel is printed, the sale of each copy is a distinct publication, and a fresh offence; and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for publishing one copy will be no bar to an indictment for publishing another copy.¹⁰

The person who publishes the imputation need not necessarily be the author of the imputation. The person who publishes, and the person who makes, an imputation are alike guilty.¹¹ It is not necessary that the accused himself must actually utter the words; it is enough if some body else utters the words and the accused by his conduct and by words adopts as his own the words reported by the other.¹² "In considering whether there has been publication of it by him (the person who is not the printer or the first or main publisher of a work which contains a libel, but has only taken a subordinate part in disseminating it), the particular

¹ Whitfield v. N. E. R. Y., (1858) El. Bl. & El. 115.

² Thaggaraya v. Krishnaswami, (1892) 15 Mad. 214.

³ Greene v. Delanney, (1870) 14 W. R. (Cr.) 27; Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mulraj, (1881) 3 All. 815.

⁴ Raja Shah, (1889) P. R. No. 14 of 1889.

⁵ Wenman v. Ash, (1853) 13 C. B. 830; Shoobhage Koeri v. Balkori Ram, (1906) 4 C. L. J. 390.

⁶ Wennhal v. Morgan, (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 635; Jaikishen Das v. Sher Singh, (1910) P. R. No. 10 of 1910.

⁷ Boxerus v. Goblet Freres, [1894] 1 Q. B. 842. See to the same effect Edmondson v. Birch & Co., Ltd., [1907] 1 K. B. 371.

⁸ Pullman v. Hill & Co., [1891] 1 Q. B. 524.

⁹ Jaikishen Das v. Sher Singh, supra.

¹⁰ Pundit Mokand Ram, (1883) P. R. No. 12 of 1883.

¹¹ Boxerus v. Goblet Freres, [1894] 1 Q. B. 842.

¹² Susima Appunna v. Peta Alkanna, (1924) 20 L. W. 921, 47 M. L. J. 748.

telegram has printed on papers distributed broadcast & constitutes publication. So is filing in Court a petition containing defamatory matter concerning a person with the intention that it should be read by other persons.¹ When a person presents a defamatory petition to a superior public officer, who in the ordinary course of official routine, is bound to come into contact with it frequently, there is a publication of the letter at the place where he may receive it, and a publication for which the original writer may prima facie be held responsible, whether or not he expressly asks for an answer.² Communication to a husband or wife of a charge against the wife or husband is a publication,³ but uttering of a libel by a husband to his wife is not.⁴

Where there is a duty which forms the ground of privileged occasion, the person exercising the privilege is entitled to take all reasonable means of so doing, and those reasonable means may include the introduction of third persons where that is reasonable and in the ordinary course of business. A solicitor, acting on behalf of his client, wrote and sent to the plaintiff a letter containing defamatory statements regarding her. The letter was dictated to a clerk in the office and was copied into the letterbook by another clerk. In an action against the solicitor for libel it was held that the publication to his clerks was necessary and usual in the discharge of his duty to his client.⁵ But where there is no such duty the act of dictating a letter even to a shorthand writer will amount to publication.⁶

The accused in reply to a notice from the complainant's pleader calling upon him to pay money lent to him by the complainant wrote a letter to the pleader containing defamatory statements about the complainant. The complainant thereupon charged the accused with defamation. The lower Courts held that the letter having been sent to the complainant's pleader must be considered to have been addressed to the complainant himself and therefore there was no publication to a third person. On revision, the former Chief Court of the Punjab held that as the defamatory statements contained in the accused's letter to the complainant's pleader were wholly irrelevant to, and unconnected with, the question of the alleged loan mentioned in the pleader's letter, the pleader must be held to be a third person as far as those statements were concerned, and that therefore there had been publication within the purview of this section.⁷

Where a libel is printed, the sale of each copy is a distinct publication, and a fresh offence, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for publishing one copy will be no bar to an indictment for publishing another copy.⁸

The person who publishes the imputation need not necessarily be the author of the imputation. The person who publishes, and the person who makes, an imputation are alike guilty.⁹ It is not necessary that the accused himself must actually utter the words, it is enough if some body else utters the words and the accused by his conduct and by words adopts as his own the words reported by the other.¹⁰ In considering whether there has been publication of it by him (the person who is not the printer or the first or main publisher of a work which contains a libel, but has only taken a subordinate part in disseminating it), the particular

¹ Wheatfield v. A. E. R. 1, (1858) EL. BL. & EL. 115.

² Thaparaya v. Krishnaswami, (1892) 15 Mad. 214.

³ Greene v. Delaney, (1870) 14 W. R. (Cr.) 27; Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mulargi, (1881) 3 All. 815.

⁴ Raja Shah, (1859) P. R. No. 14 of 1859.
⁵ Wenman v. Ash, (1853) 13 C. B. 536;
Shoodhagre Koeri v. Bokhari Ram, (1906) 4 C. L. J. 290.

⁶ Hennrich v. Morgan, (1888) 20 Q. B. D. 635; Jailishen Das v. Sher Singh, (1910) P. R. No. 10 of 1910.

⁷ Burns v. Goblet Freres, (1894) 1 Q. B. 842. See to the same effect Edmondson v. Burch & Co., Ltd., [1907] 1 K. B. 371.

⁸ Pullman v. Hill & Co., [1891] 1 Q. B. 524.

⁹ Jailishen Das v. Sher Singh, sup.
¹⁰ Pandit Mohand Ram, (1883) P. R. No. 12 of 1883.

¹¹ Janardhan Damodar Dikshit, (1894) 10 Bom. 703; Leandro Mascarenhas, (1895) Unrep. Cr. C. 769, Cr. R. No. 34 of 1895.

¹² Basina Appanna v. Peta Akkanna, (1924) 20 L. W. 921, 47 M. L. J. 740.

circumstances under which he disseminated the work must be considered. If he did it in the ordinary way of his business, the nature of the business and the way in which it was conducted must be looked at; and, if he succeeds in shewing (1) that he was innocent of any knowledge of the libel contained in the work disseminated by him, (2) that there was nothing in the work or the circumstances under which it came to him or was disseminated by him which ought to have led him to suppose that it contained a libel, and (3) that, when the work was disseminated by him, it was not by any negligence on his part that he did not know that it contained the libel, then, although the dissemination of the work by him was prima facie publication of it, he may nevertheless, on proof of the before-mentioned facts, be held not to have published it.¹ "An accidental publication is no publication at all."²

Repetition.—The Code makes no exception in favour of a second or third publication as compared with the first. If a complaint is properly laid in respect of a publication which is prima facie defamatory, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of the complaint, and deal with it according to law.³ Repetition of rumours, however prevalent, is not an excuse.⁴

The doctrine of merger has no place in criminal law, and the circumstance that a person has in the first instance made a defamatory statement out of Court and has afterwards, by repeating such defamatory statement, when examined as a witness in Court, committed the offence of perjury, can be no bar to a prosecution for defamation in respect of the defamatory statement made out of Court.⁵ The accused made certain defamatory statements about an officer in a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces who ordered an enquiry. The accused was called by two officers, one after another, who were appointed to enquire into the truth of the allegations and repeated the statements. It was held that the conviction of the accused on three separate charges for making and publishing the statement was good.⁶

Publication of defamatory matter in a newspaper.—The publisher of a newspaper is responsible for defamatory matter published in such paper whether he knows the contents of such paper or not.⁷ It would be a sufficient answer to a charge of defamation against the editor of a newspaper if he proved that the libel was published in his absence and without his knowledge, and that he had in good faith entrusted the temporary management of the newspaper during his absence to a competent person.⁸ Under the common law of England the proprietor of a newspaper was criminally responsible for the publication of a libel in its columns, whether the libel was inserted with or without his knowledge. Statute 6 & 7 Vic., c. 96, was, therefore, passed to mitigate the rigour of the common law, and to give the proprietor the benefit of the presumption that when one person employs another to do a lawful act, he is to be taken to authorize him to do it in a lawful and not in an unlawful manner, and that the statute declared for the purpose that it was competent to the proprietor to prove that the libel was published without his authority, consent or knowledge, and that the publication did not arise from want of due care or caution on his part.⁹

The sending of a newspaper containing defamatory matter by post from Calcutta, where it is published, addressed to a subscriber at Allahabad, is publication of such defamatory matter at Allahabad.¹⁰

¹ Per Romer, L. J., in Vizetelly v. Mudie's Select Library Ltd., [1900] 2 Q. B. 170, 380.

² Per Wills, J., in Munslow, [1895] 1 Q. B. 758, 765; Emmens v. Pottle, (1885) 16 Q. B. D. 354.

³ Howard, (1887) 12 Bom. 167.

⁴ Wraithman v. Weaver, (1822) 11 Price 257n.

⁵ Periyaswami Kolaswami Tever, (1886) 1 Weir 580.

⁶ Jai Debi, (1915) 13 A. L. J. R. 681.

⁷ McLeod, (1880) 3 All. 342.

⁸ Ramasami v. Lokanada, (1886) 3 Mad. 387; Pundit Mokand Ram, (1883) P. R. No. 12 of 1883.

⁹ Holbrook, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. 42.

¹⁰ McLeod, sup.; Girjashankar Kashiram, (1890) 15 Bom. 286; Bal Gangadhar Tulak, (1897) 22 Bom. 112, 129; Kally Doss Mitter, (1866) 5 W. R. (Cr.) 44.

No privilege attaches to the profession of the press as distinguished from the members of the public. The freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist; but, apart from statute law, his privilege is no other and no higher.¹

'Imputation concerning any person.'—The words complained of must contain an imputation concerning some particular person or persons whose identity can be established. If the words complained of contain no reflection upon a particular individual or individuals, but may equally apply to others although belonging to the same class an action will not lie. Where the accused published in his paper an account of an outrage on a woman alleged to have been perpetrated by two constables within the jurisdiction of the Begunia thana, in which four constables were stationed, it was held that, in the absence of proof that it was intended to charge any particular and identifiable constables with the alleged offence, the accused was not guilty of defamation.²

It is immaterial whether the imputation is conveyed obliquely, or indirectly, or by way of question, conjecture, or exclamation, or by irony,³ or by feigned names.⁴ An imputation, even if it be true, is not by itself good ground for making it.⁵

The words "a coward, dishonest man, and something worse than either,"⁶ and the words to the effect that the complainant and others were preparing to bring false charges against the accused,⁷ are held to be defamatory. It is not open to one member of a caste to call another an outcaste. Words which impute unworthiness to remain a member of the caste are defamatory.⁸

the
the any ions
may amount to defamation (Explan 3)

'Imputation against a dead person.'—It has been held with regard to libels on the memory of persons deceased, that a writing reflecting on the memory of a dead person, not alleged to be published with a design to bring a scandal or contempt on the family of the deceased, is not punishable as a libel (See Explanation 1). "Now to say, in general, that the conduct of a dead person can at no time be canvassed: to hold that, even after ages are passed, the conduct of bad men cannot be contrasted with the good, would be to exclude the most useful part of history. And therefore it must be allowed that such publications may be made fairly and honestly. But let this be done whenever it may, whether soon or late after the death of the party, if it be done with a malevolent purpose, to vilify the memory of the deceased and with a view to injure his posterity, . . . then it becomes illegal."⁹

Where the defamation consists of imputing matters concerning a deceased person, the essence of the offence consists in its tendency to cause that description of pain which is felt by a person who knows himself to be the object of the unfavourable sentiments of his fellow-creatures and in those inconveniences to which a person who is the object of such unfavourable sentiments is exposed.¹⁰

¹ Channing Arnold, (1914) 16 Bom L R 544, p. c.

² Government Advocate, Bihar v. Gopa Bandhu Das, (1922) 1 Pat. 414, 3 P. L. T. 209, Protap Chandra Guha Roy, (1925) 29 C. W. N. 904, 42 C. L. J. 178.

³ See for authorities Archbold, 23rd Edn., p. 1129.

⁴ William Tayler, (1869) 26 C. L. J. 345.

⁵ Gopalrao v. Mt. Piarri Bi, (1882) 5 C. P. L. R. (Cr) 55.

⁶ McCarthy, (1887) 9 All. 420.

⁷ Shibu Prasad Pandah, (1878) 4 Cal. 124.

⁸ Coopposami Chetty v. Duraisami Chetty, (1909) 33 Mad. 67. See Vengala Venkayya v. Thallam Venkataramiah, (1914) 17 M. L. T. 369.

⁹ Per Lord Kenyon in Topham, (1791) 4 T. R. 126, 129. See Labourer, (1834) 12 Q. B. D. 320.

¹⁰ Parvuri, (1919) 41 All. 311.

A prosecution may be maintained for defamation of a deceased person, but no suit for damage will lie in such a case. Where, therefore, a suit was brought by the heir and nearest relation of a deceased person for defamatory words spoken of such deceased person, and alleged to have caused damage to the plaintiff as a member of the same family, it was held that the suit was not maintainable.¹

Imputation against a combination of persons.—"Explanation 2 includes a company or an association or collection of persons as such within the word 'person' as used in the definition, so that the latter should not be limited to individuals.² Explanation 2 which finds a parallel in the English law gives a legal remedy to a combination of persons, when, by defamation of that combination, many individual persons might be injured.³

It has been held in a series of cases that an action of libel will lie at the suit of an incorporated trading company in respect of a libel calculated to injure its reputation in the way of its business.⁴ The words complained of must attack the corporation or company in the method of conducting its affairs, must accuse it of fraud or mismanagement, or must attack its financial position.⁵

In a case in which the explanation is properly called into use the identity of the Company or Association or collection of persons must be maintained throughout with reference to the imputation said to have been made concerning them as such with the intention of harming their reputation so that thereby they are defamed. An imputation concerning a company or association of persons as such cannot by virtue of this explanation justify a charge of defaming an individual and a charge cannot combine the explanation with the definition for such a purpose.⁶ It is words can only be interpreted in such a way as to reflect on all the members of that class. "If a person wrote that all lawyers were thieves no particular lawyer could sue him unless there is something to point to the particular individual."⁷ Where a writing inveighs against mankind in general, or against a particular order of men, as for instance, men of the gown, it is no libel, but it must descend to particulars and individuals to make it a libel⁸; e.g., the religious society called the S. Nunnery⁹ "or certain persons lately arrived from Portugal and living near Broad Street."¹⁰ The imputation must be capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such.¹² Where a defamatory matter appears only to apply to a class of individuals, if the description in such matters is capable of being, by innuendo, shown to be directly applicable to any one individual of that class, an action may be maintained.¹³

Ironical expressions.—Explanation III which finds a corresponding parallel in the English law makes ironical expressions, if defamatory, punishable. Where it has been sarcastically said of a lawyer, with intent to convey an entirely opposite idea as that "he is an honest lawyer," this explanation will apply.

¹ Luckamey Rowji v. Harbun Nursey, (1881) 5 Bom. 580.

² Per Buckland, J., in Protap Chandra Guha Roy, (1925) 29 C. W. N. 904, 42 C. L. J. 178.

³ See Williams, (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 295.

⁴ South Helton Coal Co., Ltd. v. N. E. News Association, [1894] 1 Q. B. 133.

⁵ Per Lord Esher, M. R., in ibid., p. 141.

⁶ Protap Chandra Guha Roy, sup.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Per Willes, J., in Eastwood v. Holmes, (1658) 1 F. & F. 347, 349; Osborn, (1732)

⁹ Barnard (K. B.) 138, 166.

¹⁰ Alme d. Nott, (1699) 3 Salk. 224.

¹¹ Gathercole, (1838) 2 Law. 237.

¹² Osborn, (1732) 2 Barnard, sup., Kel., (J.) Pl. 183, 230.

¹³ Government Advocate, Bihar v. Gopa Bandhu Das, (1922) 3 P. J. T. 209, 1 Pat. 414.

¹⁴ Protap Chandra Guha Roy, sup.

Imputation concerning a caste.—The accused, who were members of the Reddi caste, convened a meeting of their caste in the village and stated at such meeting to the members of the caste that the members of another caste in the village, viz., the Bahjas, were inferior to their caste, that they (the Reddies) should have no intercourse with the Bahjas, and that the village servants should not serve the latter. The village servants consequently refused to serve the Bahjas, and the Reddies abstained from associating with them. It was held that the acts of the accused did not amount to such an imputation on the complainant, who was a member of the Bahja caste, as would warrant a conviction for defamation.¹ The Court said: "No conduct affecting the complainant's status as a member of the Bahja caste or involving in it a transgression of the rules of his caste and tending to lower his reputation as a Bahja among his castemen or the general public, appears to have been imputed."

2. 'Words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations.'—An essential difference between the Indian and the English law is that the former recognizes 'words spoken' as a mode of defamation, and the latter does not. By the English law, defamation is a crime only when it is committed by writing, printing, engraving or some similar process. Spoken words reflecting on the private character, however atrocious may be the imputation which these words convey, however numerous may be the assembly before which such words are uttered, furnish ground only for a civil action. Under the English law no indictment will lie for words spoken and not reduced into writing unless they be seditious, blasphemous, grossly immoral or obscene, or uttered to a Magistrate in the execution of his office, or uttered as a challenge to fight a duel, or with an intention to provoke the other party to send a challenge.² The Penal Code makes no distinction between written and spoken defamation.³ In it the term 'defamation' is used to embrace both libel and slander. The authors of the Code say: "Herein the English law is scarcely consistent with itself. For if defamation be punished on account of its tendency to cause breach of the peace, spoken defamation ought to be punished even more severely than written defamation, as having that tendency in a higher degree. A person who reads in a pamphlet a calumnious reflection on himself, or on some one for whom he is interested, is less likely to take a violent revenge than a person who hears the same calumnious reflection uttered. Public men who have, by long habit, become callous to slander and abuse in a printed form, often show acute sensibility to imputations thrown on them to their faces. Indeed, defamatory words, spoken in the presence of the person who is the object of them, necessarily have more of the character of a personal affront, and are, therefore, more likely to cause breach of the peace than any printed libel."

"The distinction which the English criminal law makes between written and spoken defamation is generally defended on the ground that written defamation is likely to be more widely spread and to be more permanent than spoken defamation. These considerations do not appear to us to be entitled to much weight. In the first place, it is by no means necessarily the fact that written defamation is more extensively circulated than spoken defamation. Written defamation may be contained in a letter intended for a single eye. Spoken defamation may be heard by an assembly of many thousands. It seems to us most unreasonable that it should be penal to say, in a private letter, that a man is dissipated, and not penal to stand up at the town-hall, and there, before the whole society of Calcutta, falsely to accuse him of poisoning his father."

"In the second place, it is not necessarily the fact that the harm caused by defamation is proportioned to the extent to which the defamation is circulated. Some slanders,—and those slanders of a most malignant kind,—can produce harm

¹ Venkata Reddi, (1885) 1 Weir 575.

² See Archbold, 23rd edn., p. 1127.

³ Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) 8 Mad. 175; Mohunt Pursoram Doss, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 36.

A prosecution may be maintained for defamation of a deceased person, but no suit for damage will lie in such a case. Where, therefore, a suit was brought by the heir and nearest relation of a deceased person for defamatory words spoken of such deceased person, and alleged to have caused damage to the plaintiff as a member of the same family, it was held that the suit was not maintainable.¹

Imputation against a combination of persons.—"Explanation 2 includes a company or an association or collection of persons as such within the word 'person' " as used in the definition, so that the latter should not be limited to individuals.² Explanation 2 which finds a parallel in the English law gives a legal remedy to a combination of persons, when, by defamation of that combination, many individual persons might be injured.³

It has been held in a series of cases that an action of libel will lie at the suit of an incorporated trading company in respect of a libel calculated to injure its reputation in the way of its business.⁴ The words complained of must attack the corporation or company in the method of conducting its affairs, must accuse it of fraud or mismanagement, or must attack its financial position.⁵

In a case in which the explanation is properly called into use the identity of the Company or Association or collection of persons must be maintained throughout with reference to the imputation said to have been made concerning them as such with the intention of harming their reputation so that thereby they are defamed. An imputation concerning a company or association of persons as such cannot by virtue of this explanation justify a charge of defaming an individual and a charge cannot combine the explanation with the definition for such a purpose.⁶ It is doubtful if the police force at a particular place is such an association or collection of persons as is contemplated in explanation 2.⁷

Where a collection of persons is defamed, the defamatory words must apply to all the class. The libel need not name the class as such; it is sufficient if the words can only be interpreted in such a way as to reflect on all the members of that class. "If a person wrote that all lawyers were thieves no particular lawyer could sue him unless there is something to point to the particular individual."⁸ Where a writing inveighs against mankind in general, or against a particular order of men, as for instance, men of the gown, it is no libel, but it must descend to particulars and individuals to make it a libel⁹; e.g., the religious society called the S. Nunnery¹⁰ "or certain persons lately arrived from Portugal and living near Broad Street."¹¹ The imputation must be capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such.¹² Where a defamatory matter appears only to apply to a class of individuals, if the description in such matters is capable of being, by innuendo, shown to be directly applicable to any one individual of that class, an action may be maintained.¹³

Ironical expressions.—Explanation III which finds a corresponding parallel in the English law makes ironical expressions, if defamatory, punishable. Where it has been sarcastically said of a lawyer, with intent to convey an entirely opposite idea as that "he is an honest lawyer," this explanation will apply.

¹ Luckinsey Row v. Hurbun Nursey, (1881) 5 Bom. 580

² Per Buckland, J., in Protap Chandra Guha Roy, (1925) 29 C. W. N. 904, 42 C. L. J. 178.

³ See Williams, (1822) 5 B. & Ald 595

⁴ South Helton Coal Co., Ltd. v. N. E. News Association, [1894] 1 Q. B. 133

⁵ Per Lord Esher, M. R., in ibid., p. 141.

⁶ Protap Chandra Guha Roy, sup.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Per Willes, J., in Eastwood v. Holmes, (1858) 1 F. & F 347, 349; Osborn, (1732) 2 Barnard (K. B.) 138, 166.

⁹ Alme & Nott, (1899) 3 Salk. 224.

¹⁰ Gathercole, (1838) 2 Lew. 237.

¹¹ Osborn, (1732) 2 Barnard, sup., Kel. (J.) Pl. 183, 230.

¹² Government Advocate, Bihar v. Gopa Bandhu Das, (1922) 3 P. L. T. 209, 1 Pat. 416.

¹³ Protap Chandra Guha Roy, sup.

Imputation concerning a caste.—The accused, who were members of the Reddi caste, convened a meeting to the members of the Balijas, were intercourse with the Balijas, and that the village servants should not serve the latter. The village servants consequently refused to serve the Balijas, and the Reddies abstained from associating with them. It was held that the acts of the accused did not amount to such an imputation on the complainant, who was a member of the Balija caste, as would warrant a conviction for defamation.¹ The Court said: "No conduct affecting the complainant's status as a member of the Balija caste or involving in it a transgression of the rules of his caste and tending to lower his reputation as a Balija among his castemen or the general public, appears to have been imputed."

2. 'Words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations.'—An essential difference between the Indian and the English law

defamation, and the latter when it is committed by Spoken words reflecting on the private character, however atrocious may be the imputation which these words convey, however numerous may be the assembly before which such words are uttered, furnish ground only for a civil action. Under the English law no indictment will lie for words spoken and not reduced into writing unless they be seditious, blasphemous, grossly immoral or obscene, or uttered to a Magistrate in the execution of his office, or uttered as a challenge to fight a duel, or with an intention to provoke the other party to send a challenge.² The Penal Code makes no distinction between written and spoken defamation.³ In it the term 'defamation' is used to embrace both libel and slander. The authors of the Code say: "Herein the English law is scarcely consistent with itself. For if defamation be punished on account of its tendency to cause breach of the peace, spoken defamation is more likely to cause breach of the peace than written defamation, as having more effect on the person who reads in a pamphlet a calumnious reflection on a person whom he is interested, is less likely to take a violent revenge than a person who hears the same calumnious reflection uttered. Public men who have, by long habit, become callous to slander and abuse in a printed form, often show acute sensibility to imputations thrown on them to their faces. Indeed, defamatory words, spoken in the presence of the person who is the object of them, necessarily have more of the character of a personal affront, and are, therefore, more likely to cause breach of the peace than any printed libel."

"The distinction which the English criminal law makes between written and spoken defamation is generally defended on the ground that written defamation is likely to be more widely spread and to be more permanent than spoken defamation. These considerations do not appear to us to be entitled to much weight. In the first place, it is by no means necessarily the fact that written defamation is more extensively circulated than spoken defamation. Written defamation may be contained in a letter intended for a single eye. Spoken defamation may be heard by an assembly of many thousands. It seems to us most unreasonable that it should be penal to say, in a private letter, that a man is dissipated, and not penal to stand up at the town-hall, and there, before the whole society of Calcutta, falsely to accuse him of poisoning his father."

"In the second place, it is not necessarily the fact that the harm caused by defamation is proportioned to the extent to which the defamation is circulated. Some slanders,—and those slanders of a most malignant kind,—can produce harm

¹ Venkata Reddi, (1885) 1 Weir 575.

² See Archbold, 23rd edn., p. 1127.

³ Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) 8 Mad. 175; Mohunt Pureoram Doss, (1865) 2 W. R. (Cr.) 36.

only while confined to a very small circle, and would be at once refuted if they were published. A malignant whisper addressed to a single hearer, and meant to go no further, may indicate greater depravity, may cause more intense misery, and may deserve more severe punishment than a satire which has run through twenty editions. A person, for example, who, in private conversation, should infuse into the mind of a husband suspicions of the fidelity of a virtuous wife, might be a defamer of a far worse description than one who should insert the lady's name in a printed lampoon.

"It must be allowed that, in general, a printed story is likely to live longer than a story which is only circulated in conversation. But, on the other hand, it is far easier for a calumniated person to clear his character, either by argument or by legal proceedings, from a charge fixed in a printed form, than from a shifting rumour, which nobody repeats exactly as he heard it. In general, we believe, a man would rather see in a newspaper a story discreditable to him which he had the means of refuting, than know that such a story, though not published, was current in society."¹

"Intended to be read."—Where the words containing the imputation are in writing, it is necessary, . . . that the maker of the imputation shall intend that the words shall be read, that is, read by some other person than the person defamed, or, in other words, that they shall be made public, for the essence of the offence . . . is the intention to harm reputation, and that necessarily requires publicity to be given to the imputation."²

"By signs or by visible representations."—This is a class of defamation likely to do as much mischief as any . . . and it has always been considered by the English law to be a . . . of a man which renders him ridiculous or even . . . ous charges are, and very often has a wider effect. The words 'visible representations' will include every possible form of defamation which ingenuity can devise. "For instance, a statue, a caricature, an effigy, chalk marks on a wall, signs or pictures may constitute a libel."³

3. "Intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person."—It is not necessary to prove that the complainant actually suffered directly or indirectly from the scandalous imputation alleged; it is sufficient . . . intended to harm, or knew, or had reason to believe, . . . the reputation of the complainant. . . . Intention to harm . . . there was reason to believe that the imputation . . .

An imputation, although made in the absence of actual . . . Con- . . . be no malice in fact. . . . Where . . . in a street quarrel and were mere vulgar abuse, it was held that in the circumstances there was no deliberate intention to harm the reputation of the person defamed.⁷

"Harm the reputation."—The meaning which should be attached to 'harm' is . . . 'harm' is meant imputation . . . in . . .

¹ Note B, pp. 176, 177.

² Per Oldfield, J., in Tuli Husain, (1884) 7 All. 205, 222, 2. R.

³ Per Lopes, L. J., in Monson v. Tussauds Limited, [1894] 1 Q. B. 671, 692.

⁴ Thakur Dass, (1874) 6 N. W. P. 86, Gobinda Pershad Pandey v. Garth, (1900) 28

Cal. 63; (1883) 1 Weir 575; Alex Pimenta, (1920) 22 Bom. L. R. 1224, 5 Bom. Cr. C. 257.

⁵ Kewala Nandgir, (1913) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 34 of 1913.

⁶ Palani Asari, (1882) 1 Weir 613.

⁷ Anthony Rodgers, (1887) 1 Weir 607.

certainly does not constitute defamation.¹ A person who commits defamation is not to be excused from the penalties attached to the offence merely because he has comported himself in respect of the mode of giving expression to the defamatory matter in such a way that little real injury results from the offence.²

The word 'harm' is used in the definition of 'injury' (s. 44).

A man's reputation is his property, and if possible of more value than other property. But a man's opinion of himself cannot be called his 'reputation.'³ A man has no 'reputation' to himself and therefore communication of defamatory matter to the person defamed is no publication.

The use of common abuses cannot be regarded as conveying any such imputation as can in any way harm the reputation of the person towards whom it is used and it therefore does not constitute this offence.⁴ But if obscene and insulting words are used regarding any person after an altercation with him is over, the person using such words would be guilty of defamation.⁵

Explanation 4 specifies the various ways in which the reputation of a person may be harmed. It says that the imputation must directly or indirectly lower the moral or intellectual character of the person defamed. "The words 'directly or 'indirectly'...mean that the person defamed must either be abused in express terms, or the wording of the communication must convey such imputations as any person reading it must understand to impute misconduct or bad character. The words cannot...be understood to mean that the person libelled should himself be the direct means of publishing the libel to others."⁶ This explanation does not apply where the words used, and forming the basis of a charge, are per se defamatory, though when the meaning of words spoken or written is doubtful, and evidence is necessary to determine the effect of such words and whether they are calculated to harm a particular person's reputation, it is possible that the principle enunciated in the explanation might and would with propriety be applied.⁷ The complainant, one Scott, was a Chairman of a Municipal Board. At a meeting of the Board, which was presided over by the complainant, a resolution was passed calling on the accused to pay certain taxes due by her to the Municipality and was signed by the complainant. A copy of the resolution, signed by the Secretary, was sent to the accused, who returned it after writing upon it the words, "Mrs. McCarthy will take no notice of anything written by H. G. Scott, he already having shown himself a coward, dishonest man, and something worse than either." It was held that the accused was guilty of defamation. The Court said: "In this case there is no question as to the significance or meaning of the words written. They are distinctly defamatory within the meaning of s. 49, and, as such, whether they were written in haste or in anger, the respondent is clearly responsible."⁸ The wording of this explanation is very loose. Anything calculated to lower the reputation of a person may come under this provision. Thus an accusation of anonymous letter writing may amount to defamation.⁹ An imputation that a Mahomedan had killed a cow in his compound is not one which can be said to harm his reputation.¹⁰ In reply to a book written by the complainant attacking Vaishnavism and its founders, the accused retorted by a similar publication and both books dealt with highly controversial religious matters. Very violent language was used in the latter about the complainant. It was held that it did not amount to defamation, as the personal character or respectability of the complainant was not in any way assailed.¹¹

¹ Per Mahmood J., in Tel. Press, (1884).

² Id. 205, 220, 1, 2.

³ Southamkumar, (1884) 1 Wor 104.

⁴ Per Mahmood J., in Tel. Press,
sup.

⁵ Id. (1885) 3 A. W. N. 3, Am. Press (1885) 3 A. W. N. 117.

⁶ Per Mahmood J. (1884) 1 A. L. J. R. 408.

⁷ Per Mahmood J., in Tel. Press.

sup., p. 221.

⁸ Id. (1887) 9 A. L. J. 420.

⁹ Id. p. 420.

¹⁰ (1872) 2 Nat. Jur. 212.

¹¹ Sankar Das v. Janna, (1882) 5 C. P. L. J. 12, 13.

¹² Kamarpuram, Sankar v. Kandaswami, Madras, (1874) 47 M. L. J. 464, (1874) 2 A. W. N. 704.

It is not defamation for a number of persons to meet and resolve for good reasons not to associate with a particular person. But they should not publish the resolution.¹

Exceptions.—There are occasions when a man is allowed to speak out or write matters about others which would ordinarily be defamatory. These occasions are reduced to the following ten exceptions:—

1. Imputation of truth which public good requires to be made or published.
2. Public conduct of public servants.
3. Conduct of public question.
4. Publication Courts.
5. Merits of a conduct of witnesses and others concerned.
6. Merits of a public performance.
7. Censure passed in good faith by a person having lawful authority over another.
8. Accusation preferred in good faith to an authorised person.
9. Imputation made in good faith by a person for the protection of his or other's interests.
10. Caution intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed or for public good.

Exception 1.—This and exception 4 require that the imputation should be true. The remaining exceptions do not require it to be so. They only require that the imputation should be made in good faith. "For," say the authors of the Code, "to require in these cases that the imputation should be true, would be to render these exceptions mere nullities. Whether a public functionary is or is not fit for his situation; whether a person who has bestirred himself to get been tried for an offence was or was not guilty; which of two witnesses who contradicted each other on a trial ought to be believed; whether a portrait is (life) like; whether a song has been well sung; whether a book is well written;—these are questions about which honest and discerning men may hold opinions diametrically opposite; and to require a man to prove to the satisfaction of a Court of law that the opinion which he has expressed on such a question is a right opinion is to prohibit all discussion on such questions. The same may be said of those private communications which we propose to allow. It is plainly desirable that a merchant should disclose to his partners his unfavourable opinion of the honesty of a person with whom the firm has dealings. It is desirable that a father should caution his son against marrying a woman of bad character. But if the merchant is permitted to say to his partners, if the father is permitted to say to his son, only what can be legally proved before a Court, it is evident that the permission is worth nothing."²

'Public good.'—The truth of the imputation complained of shall amount to a defence if it was for the public benefit that the imputation should be published but not otherwise. The authors of the Code observe: "A person who has been guilty of gross acts of swindling at the Cape comes to Calcutta, and proposes to set up a house of agency. A person who has been forced to fly from England on account of his infamous vices repairs to India, opens a school, and exerts himself to obtain pupils. A captain of a ship induces natives to emigrate, by promising to convey them to a country where they will have large wages and little work. He takes them to a foreign colony, where they are treated like slaves, and returns to India to hold out similar temptations to others. A man introduces a common prostitute as his wife into the society of all the most respectable ladies of the presidency. A person in a high station is in the habit of encouraging ruinous play among young servants of the Company. In all these cases, and in many others which might be named, we conceive that a writer who publishes the truth renders a great service to the public, and cannot, without a violation of every sound principle, be treated as a criminal.

¹ Nag v. Oa Tia, (1921) 1 B. L. J. 32.

² Note B, pp. 183, 184.

"There are undoubtedly many cases in which the spreading of true reports, prejudicial to the character of an individual, would hurt the feelings of that individual, without producing compensating advantage in any other quarter. The proclaiming to the world that man keeps a mistress, that he is too much addicted to wine, that he is penurious in his house-keeping, that he is slovenly in his person; the making use of other laws and deemed as stories about the moral indiscretions of a man, who has a good character, can do no harm, and may be of great service to the community."

In discussing the claims of a councillor for a Municipal office, a person is entitled to make remarks in the interests of the public, so long as he abstains from aspersing the private character of the former.¹

Exception 2.—"Every subject has a right to comment on those acts of public men which concern him as a subject of the realm, if he does not make his commentary a cloak for malice and slander. A writer in a public paper has the same right as any other person, and it is his privilege, if indeed it is not his duty, to comment on the acts of public men which concern not himself only but which concern the public, and the discussion of which is for the public good. And where a person makes the public conduct of a public man the subject of comment and it is for the public good, he is not liable to an action if the comments are made honestly, and he honestly believes the facts to be as he states them, and there is no wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which he must have known to be a misstatement if he had exercised ordinary care."²

If a person undertake to criticise the acts of a public man, he must take care not to assert that which is not true as the basis of his criticism and he is bound not to conceal wilfully anything which would show that the criticism is not well-founded.³ The opinion expressed must be expressed in good faith and must not contain only the half truth. The accused, an editor of a newspaper, published an article in which the following passage, admittedly referring to the complainant, occurred:—"Has his (the complainant's) character been inquired into? Does no one remember that this very man was sent by the Subordinate Judge of Sholapur to be prosecuted? Are not the proceedings instituted by the Subordinate Judge to be found on the record?" The Magistrate found that it was literally true that the complainant had been sent to be prosecuted, but that it was also true that the prosecution had, to the accused's knowledge, been ordered to be withdrawn by the District Judge. It was held that although the statement contained only the truth, it was incomplete and misleading; and that, as the accused was well aware that the prosecution referred to had been withdrawn, and did not injuriously affect the complainant's character, he could not plead that the imputation made by him on the complainant's character was made in good faith, or for the public good.⁴

In dealing with the question of good faith, the proper point to be decided is not whether the allegations put forward by the accused in support of the defence are true, but whether they are made in good faith. After

The expression 'opinions in good faith' means that in order to express an opinion in good faith the person who holds it must have taken care and attention in forming it.⁵

The mere absence of ill-will does not of itself prove that the imputation was made in good faith.⁷

As to 'public servant,' see s. 21, supra.

Exception 3.—"The authors of the Code say: "There are public men who are not public functionaries; persons who hold no office may yet...take a very active part in urging or opposing the adoption of measures in which the community is deeply interested. It appears clear to us that every person ought to be allowed to comment, in good faith, on the proceedings of these volunteer servants of the public, with the same freedom with which we allow him to comment on the proceedings

¹ Subroya Iyer v. Moulvi Kadar Rowthu Abdul, [1914] M. W. N. 351.

² Per Couch, J., in Howard v. Mull, (1866) 1 B. H. C. App. 85, 91; see also Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukorji, (1881) 3 All. 815.

³ William Taylor, (1896) 26 C. L. J. 345.

⁴ Kakde, (1880) 4 Bom. 298.

⁵ Shiō Prosad Pandah, (1878) 4 Cal. 124. See s. 52.

⁶ Banks, (1869) 26 C. L. J. 401.

⁷ Palani Asari, (1882) 1 Weir 613.

It is not to be expected that in discharging this duty of a public journalist he will always be infallible. His judgment may be biassed, one way or the other, without the slightest reflection upon his good faith; and, therefore, if his comments are fair, no one has a right to complain... It is well that the conduct of the judge or jury should, if necessary, be brought to the bar of public opinion, like all other matters of public concern... That the administration of justice should be made a subject for the exercise of public discussion is a matter of the most essential importance. But... it behoves those who pass judgment, and call upon the public to pass judgment, on those who are suitors or witnesses in courts of justice, not to give reckless vent to harsh and uncharitable views of the conduct of others; but to remember, that they are bound to exercise a fair, an honest, and an impartial judgment upon those whom they hold up to public obloquy."¹ Writers in public papers are of great utility, and do great benefit to the public interests by watching the proceedings of the Courts of Justice, and fairly commenting on them if there is anything that calls for observation; but they should be careful, in discharging that function, that they do not wantonly assail the character of others, or impute criminality to them, and if they do so, and do not bring to the performance of the duty they discharge that due regard for the interests of others which the assumption of so important a censorship necessarily requires, they must take the consequences.²

Exception 6.—The object of this exception is that the public should be aided by comment in its judgment of the public performance submitted to its judgment. All kinds of performances in public may be truly criticised, provided the comments are made in good faith. "Liberty of criticism," says Lord Ellenborough,³ "must be allowed, or we should neither have purity of taste nor of morals. Fair discussion is essentially necessary to the truth of history and the advancement of science. That publication, therefore, I shall never consider as a libel which has for its object, not to injure the reputation of any individual, but to correct misrepresentations of fact, to refute sophistical reasoning, to expose a vicious taste in literature, or to censure what is hostile to morality."

"What is the meaning of a 'fair comment'? I think the meaning is this: is the article in the opinion of the jury beyond that which any fair man, however prejudiced or however strong his opinion may be, would say of the work in question? Every latitude must be given to opinion and to prejudice, and then an ordinary set of men with ordinary judgment must say whether any fair man would have made such a comment on the work. It is very easy to say what would be clearly beyond that limit, if, for instance, the writer attacked the private character of the author. But it is much more difficult to say what is within the limit. That must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case... Mere exaggeration, or even gross exaggeration, would not make the comment unfair. However wrong the opinion expressed may be in point of truth, or however prejudiced the writer, it may still be within the prescribed limit. The question which the jury must consider is this—would any fair man, however prejudiced he may be, however exaggerated or obstinate his views, have said that which this criticism has said?"⁴

A fair comment upon a literary work, or other such production, submitted to the judgment of the public, that is to say, a comment which is the expression of honest opinion and does not go beyond the limits of what may fairly be called 'criticism,' is no libel.⁵ A fair comment is a comment which is true, or which, if false, expresses the real opinion of its author, such opinion having been formed with a reasonable degree of care and on reasonable grounds. The right of fair comment involves two essentials: first, that the imputation should be a comment on the

¹ Per Cockburn, C. J., in Woodgate v. Ridout, (1865) 4 F. & F. 202, 216, 223.

² Per Cockburn, C. J., in Tanfield, (1878) 42 J. P. 423, 424.

³ Tabart v. Tipper, (1808) 1 Camp. 350, 351.

⁴ Per Lord Esher, M. R., in Merivale v. Carson, (1887) 20 Q. B. D. 275, 280, 281.

⁵ McQuire v. Western Morning News Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 100.

levy of assessment by the complainant (a Mamlatdar) by sale of moveable property, alleged that the complainant acted towards him unjustly and spitefully, that in passing the order appealed against he was actuated by personal ill-will and malice towards the accused, and had exercised his authority with a view to cause harassment and loss to the accused. It was held that the accused was protected by exceptions 8 and 9 in making the statements as they were made in good faith.¹ Certain paddy traders sent to the Traffic Manager of the Burma Railways a telegram, containing an allegation that a station master was giving preferential treatment to charcoal dealers and setting forth particulars in support of their allegation. The railway authorities after an inquiry into the allegation held that it was not substantiated, and the station master prosecuted the paddy traders for defamation. They showed that when they sent their telegram they had good reasons for supposing their allegation to be true. It was held that they were entitled to the protection of this exception.²

Where the accused told his friend E and subsequently at the instance of E wrote to the superior officer of the complainant to the effect that the complainant and the wife of E had been seen behaving on a certain night in such a manner and under such circumstances as to render unavoidable the conclusion that acts of impropriety took place between them and it was found that the accused honestly believed in the truth of the statements, it was held that the accused was not guilty of defamation.³

Accusation made to unauthorised persons.—Where the right to a plot of land was in dispute between the complainant and the accused, and the latter in a petition presented by him to the Municipal Council of his town about the land, made a statement that the complainant was convicted and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment, it was held that the statement to the Municipal Council, though true, was not privileged.⁴

Exception 9.—The exception relates to private communications which a person makes, in good faith, for the protection of his own interests or of any other person, or for the public good. This exception is nothing more than a reproduction of the canon or guiding principle which was stated by Lord Campbell in Harrison v. Bush,⁵ namely: "A communication made bona fide upon any subject matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, is privileged, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains criminatory matter, which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable."

Any one in the transaction of business with another has a right to use language bona fide which is relevant to that business, and which a due regard to his own interests makes necessary, even if it should directly, or by its consequences, be injurious or painful to another.⁶ The rule of public policy on which this principle is based is that honest transactions of business and of social intercourse would otherwise be deprived of the protection which they should enjoy.⁷

According to the Calcutta High Court this exception does not formulate any rule of absolute privilege. Good faith on the part of the person who makes or publishes the imputation must be established.⁸

In considering whether there was 'good faith,' i.e., due care and attention, the position of the person making the imputation must be taken into considera-

¹ Asandruo Balkrishna Rangnekar, (1914)

² Slater, (1890) 15 Bom. 351, Sher Singh, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 6 of 1910.

³ Venkata Narasimha v. Kolayya, (1889) 12 Mad. 374, 377.

⁴ Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ramdayal De, (1920) 32 C. L. J. 91, 21 C. W. N. 832.

tion.¹ If good faith was not established it was not strictly necessary to consider if the public good was involved.²

This exception includes the first exception. It refers to any imputation made in good faith, whereas the first exception applies only to true imputation made for the public good. It is not essential that, before a person can be held entitled to the privilege of having made a statement in good faith for the protection of his interests, he should establish that every word he has spoken or written is literally true. If, having regard to certain facts and circumstances within his knowledge, he might, as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man, have drawn the conclusions which he has expressed in defamatory language for the protection of his own interests, he may fairly be held to have made out his good faith.³ Where a matter is of public interest, the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale; some allowance must be made for even intemperate language, provided, however, the writer keeps himself within the bounds of substantial truth, and does not misrepresent or suppress any facts.⁴

A person making defamatory expressions for the protection of his son's interests is not privileged, unless the imputation is made in good faith.⁵

Communications by a member of a caste.—There is a dividing line between the passing of a resolution at a caste meeting and its communication by the authorities of the caste to its members in their discharge of their social duty. If any member of a caste publish to all its members a caste resolution in such discharge of duties the law will hold the occasion of the publication to be privileged. The member who publishes it is bound to publish it and the members of the caste have an interest in hearing it. But there must be good faith on the part of the member who publishes, that is, it must be proved that the publication was made with due care and attention.⁶ If a person really was outcasted, a statement to the members of the brotherhood that he was outcasted is the kind of statement contemplated by the expression "public good." The Court observed: "So long as caste prevails and it must be remembered that it is sanctified by religious and by social tradition going back for the centuries and forming one of the pillars of the Indian social system, it is not surprising that the caste system should be so deeply rooted in the minds of the people." Id.

'public good.' If it is not from the Indian point of view for the 'public good,' caste ought to be abolished. It seems to me that there is no way out of that dilemma, and, therefore, to justify this conviction it was necessary to hold, not merely that the statement was untrue, but that if, as the Sessions Judge thought, it was true, that it was a statement not honestly made for the benefit of the brotherhood."⁷ Where, according to the practice of a caste Sabha, a member who absented himself, when summoned to answer a charge, was excommunicated and the fact reported to all other Sabhas of the caste, and the accused so excommunicated the complainant and reported that fact to all other caste Sabhas, it was held that there was nothing to show that the accused were not acting in good faith.⁸ The accused having suspected that the complainants were given to drinking liquor, made an application to the caste calling for an enquiry into their conduct. For this they were convicted of defamation. It was held that the accused were not guilty, for, as members of the caste, they had every right to do what they had done, so long as they acted in good faith

¹ Nagari, Trikamji, (1894) 19 Bom. 340; Sealy v. Ramnarain Bose, (1865) 4 W. R. (Cr.) 22.

² Purna Chandra Ghose, (1924) 28 C. W. N. 579.

³ Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mubriji, (1911) 3 All. 815, 817.

⁴ Fernandez, (1911) 13 Bom. L. R. 1187, 1188, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 68.

⁵ Purooram Dass, (1865) 3 W. R. (Cr.) 45.

⁶ Vijji Bhagwan, (1909) 11 Bom. L. R. 633.

⁷ Umed Singh, (1923) 46 All. 61, 67.

⁸ Ayyanar v. Iyer, (1924) 19 L. W. 639, 47 M. L. J. 8.

and for the protection of the interests of the caste : and that the communication was privileged inasmuch as it was not communicated to anybody beyond the caste, and all that the accused did was to complain to the caste which had jurisdiction to enquire into the complaint.¹ Where a libellous communication is made regarding a member of a caste, the mere fact that the person making such communication is a member of the caste, will not of itself suffice to make the communication privileged.²

Privileges of Judges, etc.—The privileges of judges, parties, counsel, attorneys, pleaders, and witnesses, come under this exception. So also, statements made in pleadings and in reports to superior officers are protected by it. (As to civil action, see the authors' "The English and Indian Law of Torts," 9th Edn., p. 171.)

In India the law regarding defamatory statements made, in the course of judicial proceedings, by judges, counsel or pleaders, witnesses, and parties is in an unsettled condition. The Madras High Court has adopted the English rule of absolute immunity in all cases. The Bombay High Court has not followed the English rule in cases of criminal prosecutions on the ground that English law could not be resorted to where it went beyond the terms of s. 499, but in civil actions it has followed the dictum of the Privy Council in Baboo Gunnessh Dutt v. Mugneeram. The Calcutta High Court has gone a step further and held that in accordance with the Indian Evidence Act. The Calcutta High Court has held that of a person prosecuted for defamation must be determined by the application of the provisions of the Penal Code and not otherwise.⁴

Section 77, no doubt protects Judges for acts done when acting judicially. Section 7 of this section protects a Judge generally. There is no reported Indian criminal case touching the absolute immunity of judges.

It has been the English law that a Judge "can't be put to answer civilly or criminally for words spoken in office."⁵ This rule is maintained against a Judge for words used by him in the exercise of his judicial functions.

which this rule rests on that if such an action would lie the judges would lose their independence, and that the absolute freedom and independence of the judges is necessary for the administration of justice.⁷ This provision of the law is not intended for the protection or benefit of a malicious or corrupt Judge, but for the benefit of the public, whose interest it is that the Judges do exercise their functions with independence and without fear of consequences.⁸ In Madras it has been held that the English authorities on the subject apply to Judges and Courts in India.⁹

According to common law no action will lie against a Judge for words spoken with reference to, and in the course of, an enquiry before a judicial tribunal, although they are uttered by the advocate maliciously and not with the object of supporting the case of his client, and are

¹ Padam Babul Mhatre, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 595, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 152.

² Coomarasamy Chetty v. Duraisami Chetty, (1909) 33 Mad. 67. See Vengala Venkayya v. Thallam Venkataramiah, (1913) 17 M. L. T. 309; Bishambhar Das v. Gobind Das, (1914) 12 A. L. J. R. 552.

³ (1872) 11 Beng. L. R. (P. C.) 331.

⁴ Satia Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ramdayal De, (1920) 48 Cal. 388.

⁵ Per Lord Mansfield in Skinner, (1773) Loft, 53, 64.

⁶ Raman v. Subramanya, (1893) 17 Mad. 87; Moulavi Ally Kurreeem v. Teyyammuth Sandys, (1858-59) Boul. 1; Anderson v. Gorrie, [1893] 1 Q. B. 668.

⁷ Per Lord Esher, in Anderson v. Gorrie, [1893] 1 Q. B. 670.

⁸ Anderson v. Gorrie, (1893) 17 Mad. 87.

⁹ Anderson v. Gorrie, (1893) 17 Mad. 87.

¹⁰ See also the judgment in Vapaji Trikamji, (1914) 19 Bom. 310.

uttered without any justification or even excuse and from personal ill-will or anger towards the person defamed arising out of a previously existing cause, and are irrelevant to every issue of fact which is contested before the tribunal.¹ The rule is made so wide not to protect counsel who deliberately and maliciously slander others, but in order that innocent counsel who act bona fide may not be "unrighteously harassed with suits."

The advocate "is trusted with interests and privileges and powers, almost to an unlimited degree. His client must trust to him at times for fortune and character and life. The law trusts him with a privilege in respect of liberty of speech which is in practice bounded only by his own sense of duty, and he may have to speak upon subjects concerning the deepest interests of social life and the innermost feelings of the human soul... his words and acts ought to be guided by a client—binding him to exert every faculty... may maintain that client's right, together... iding him to guard against the abuse of the powers and privileges intrusted to him, by a constant recourse to his own sense of right."²

In Sullivan v. Norton,³ the Madras High Court has applied the common law principle to advocates in this country. Collins, C. J., in this case said: "I think that the advocates in this country have and should have the same privileges in respect of liberty of speech (bearing always in mind the remarks of Earle, C. J. in Kennedy v. Broun) they have so long enjoyed in England; and that in this country it would be beyond measure embarrassing to the advocate and disastrous to the interests of the client, if the advocate was exposed to the liability of a criminal or civil charge for defamation for words uttered in Court..."

"I disagree with the learned Acting Advocate-General that an advocate is bound to consider the position in life of the person whose conduct he is condemning. His words and acts ought only to be guided by a sense of duty—duty to his client—and by a constant recourse to his own sense of right to guard against the abuse of the powers and privileges entrusted to him."

The Bombay High Court has, however, observed that Sullivan v. Norton is not an interpretation of s. 499, which should be construed without reference to the English law. It has held that where express malice is absent (and it ought not to be presumed) a Court, having due regard to public policy, would be extremely cautious before it deprived the advocate of the protection of this exception.⁴ But, in a subsequent Full Bench case it has expressly laid down that in this country an advocate enjoys the same measure of license as he enjoys in England; that he cannot be punished for acting on the instructions given him when he did not and could not know that they were false; and that he has the fullest liberty of speech so long as his language is justified by his instructions, or by the evidence, or by the proceedings on the record. The mere fact that his words are defamatory, or that they are calculated to hurt the feelings of another, or that they ultimately turn out to be absolutely devoid of all solid foundation will not make him responsible nor render him liable in... a later case the same High Court, after... or a pleader has the unqualified privilege... t when a pleader is charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written while performing his duty as a pleader, the Court ought to presume good faith and not hold him criminally liable unless there is satisfactory evidence of actual malice and unless there is cogent proof that unfair advantage was taken of his position as a pleader for an indirect purpose.⁵

¹ Munster v. Lamb, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 588.

² Per Earle, C. J., in Kennedy v. Broun, (1863) 32 L. J. (C. P.) 137, 146.

³ (1886) 10 Mad. 28, 35, v. n.

⁴ Nagarji Trilamji, (1894) 9 Bom. 340, followed in Upendra Nath Bagchi, (1909) 36

Cal. 375.

⁵ Bhaishanker v. Wadia, (1899) 2 Bom. L. R. 3, v. n.

⁶ Purshottamdas Ranchhodas, (1907) 9 Bom. L. R. 1287.

The Calcutta High Court has held that it is not defamation for a pleader to put a question in cross-examination to a witness, for the purpose of impeaching his credit, even if it appears that the question assumed a state of facts to be true, which was not really so, if it is based on facts known to the pleader, which knowledge was used in apparent good faith, entirely in the interest of his client and not for his own ends. The Court said: "It seems to us, especially in the morass of this country, where instructions, to the personal knowledge of one of us, are very commonly inaccurate and misleading, that a pleader would certainly be at least as much justified in acting on his own recollection as on specific instructions, and we do not think that, because he has drawn merely a wrong inference from a fact, that of itself, in the absence of any malice, should take him out of the ninth Exception to s. 499."¹ Following this case it has further held that a question put to a witness in cross-examination by a pleader making an imputation affords no ground for a criminal prosecution. A pleader is entitled to the presumption that the questions he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. To rebut this presumption there must be convincing evidence that the pleader was actuated by an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interests of his client in the cause. It is the duty of the pleader to present his client's case, but it is not his duty to enquire whether it is true or false, so far, at any rate, as the purposes of a prosecution for defamation are concerned. The Court said: "It is for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client. The provisions of the ninth Exception to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code must be interpreted accordingly."²

The Rangoon High Court has held that the English law of absolute privilege does not apply to statements of advocates in judicial proceedings. Legal practitioners are subject to the criminal law of defamation in this section.³ An advocate cannot shelter himself behind his clients when he allows himself to be made the medium of reckless imputations on a Court of Justice.⁴

Witness.—According to English law a witness in a Court of Justice is absolutely privileged as to anything he may say as a witness having reference to the inquiry on which he is called as a witness. A statement as to another matter, made to justify the witness in consequence of a question going to the witness' credit, has reference to the enquiry within the above rule.⁵ But a remark made by a witness in the box, wholly irrelevant to the matter of enquiry, uncalled for by any question of counsel and introduced by the witness maliciously for his own purposes, would not be privileged. . . . statements about the Court, before or after he

Recently, the . . . want statements made by a witness on oath or solemn affirmation in a judicial proceeding are not absolutely privileged on a prosecution for defamation, but are governed by the provisions of s. 499.⁷

According to the Calcutta High Court a witness who, being actuated by malicious motives, makes a voluntary and irrelevant statement, not elicited by any question put to him while under examination, to injure the reputation of another,

¹ Upendra Nath Bagchi, (1909) 36 Cal. 376, 383.

² Nikunja Behari Sen v. Harendra Chandra Sen, (1912) 41 Cal. 511, 517.

³ P. D. 540, on appeal, 2 C. P. D. 53; Goffin v. Don- nally, (1881) 6 Q. B. D. 307.

⁴ Trotman v. Dunn, (1816) 4 Camp. 211; Lynam v. Gowin, (1880) 6 L. R. Ir. 259.

⁵ Bai Shanta v. Umrao Amir Malik, (1925) 29 Bom. L. R. 1, 8 Bom. Cr. C. 193, r. r. overruling Babaji, (1892) 17 Bom. 127 and Balkrishna, (1893) 17 Bom. 573. See Karigonda, (1894) 19 Bom. 51.

commits an offence under this section.¹ If the statements are relevant to the issue in the case under enquiry no prosecution for defamation would lie.² Where the accused, shortly after the disposal of a criminal case against him brought by one B, stated openly in answer to a query of his pleader in that case that the origin of the criminal case was due to the fact that some one of the accused's party had said at a social gathering that B's daughter-in-law had eloped, and he was subsequently prosecuted for defamation for making a statement defamatory of B. It was held that the statement of the accused did not constitute this offence as it was not made with the intention of harming the reputation of anybody, but was made in answer to a natural question put to him by his legal adviser at a time when the relationship of legal adviser and client continued.³ This principle has been extended to a person for what he states in answer to questions put to him by a police-officer conducting an investigation under the Code of Criminal Procedure.⁴ Subsequently, however, the Judges felt disposed to refer the question to a Full Bench.⁵

The Madras High Court following the English law has laid down that statements of witnesses made in the witness-box are absolutely privileged. If they are false the remedy is by indictment for perjury and not for defamation. In this case the petitioner, Manjappa, was charged under this section, and convicted. The family." The Head Assistant Magistrate who convicted the prisoner was of opinion that the petitioner's answer as above caused harm to the reputation of Shesha Chetti, and that even if the petitioner did not know the answers to be false, yet he did not know them to be true, and the circumstances under which the statements were made indicated a total absence of legal and actual good faith. When the case went up to the High Court in revision, Collins, C. J., in the course of his judgment, said: "I apply the observations of Cockburn, C. J., in the case of Seaman v. Netherclift,⁶ and of Field, J., in *Goffin v. Donnelly*⁷ as to the rules of public policy which subordinated the interest of the individual to that of a higher interest, viz., public justice and of this Court, in the case of Hinde v. Baudry.⁸ The Judges there said that the principle of public policy guards the statements of a witness against an action whether the statements were malicious or not. I think the same observations will apply if the criminal is convicted under this section, and the Indian Penal Code for that offence. I defamation." Shepherd, J., agreeing with the learned Chief Justice, observed "I would only refer to the opinion strongly expressed by the Judicial Committee in *Baboo Gunnessh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhry*⁹ that witnesses are free from any other consequences with respect to statements made by them as such, except that of indictment for perjury. This opinion was expressed with reference to a civil action for damages, but that, as it appears to me, makes no difference. If the ground of the principle is that 'it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages,' public policy must no less require that they should not be exposed to the fear of

¹ Haidar Ali v. Abru Mia, (1905) 32 Cal. 756; Moher Sheikh, (1893) 21 Cal. 392; Mohammed Durrani v. Durrani, (1895) 9 W. P. (C.S.) 100.

⁴ Methuram Dass v. Jaggannath Dass, (1901) 28 Cal. 794. See Govinda Pillai (1892) 16 Mad. 607.

⁸ Debendra Nath Shaha v. Bhaginath Shaha, (1909) 13 C. W. N. 1087.

⁹ (1891) 11 Beng. L. R. (P.C.) 321.

prosecution except, as I have observed, the prosecution for perjury."¹ This case has been followed in a later case,² in which the complainant brought a suit for money against the defendant in the Munsif's Court. The defendant pleaded that the suit was brought out of spite, and, in reply to questions put to him by the Court, he gave answers which were defamatory of the plaintiff. The accused on these facts was convicted of defamation. He put in a revision petition to the High Court against the above conviction. Mr. Justice Benson, in reversing the judgment, said: "It is not clear whether he was examined on solemn affirmation; but in any case he was under sections 5 and 13 of the Indian Oaths Act under an obligation to state the truth, and was liable to punishment if he spoke falsely. That befor using the language he di Manjaya v. Shesha Shetti."

The Allahabad High Court has held that if a witness whilst giving evidence makes a statement concerning any person which amounts to defamation, he may be prosecuted under this section in respect of such statement, and it lies upon him to show that the statement which he has made falls within one or other of the exceptions or that he is protected from prosecution by the proviso to s. 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. In this case one Ganga Prasad was a witness for the defence on the trial of one Birbal for theft. When put into the witness-box he was asked what he knew about Birbal's case. He replied that he knew nothing; but he added of his own accord that he knew that Birbal had stolen his watch eight years previously and that he had to give Rs. 10 to one Banke Lal, whom he pointed out as one of the persons present in the Court, before he got the watch back. He said, further, that if his house was searched, "thousands of rupees worth of stolen property would be found." It was found that Banke Lal was a respectable Zemindar, and that he was a drug contractor for the Moradabad district and paid Rs. 400 as income-tax. Banke Lal prosecuted Ganga Prasad for defamation. The Joint Magistrate convicted him and this conviction was upheld by the Sessions Court. Ganga Prasad all along put forward the plea of absolute privilege and applied to the High Court in revision to set aside the conviction on the same ground. The case was at first heard by Knox, C. J., and Richards, J., but had to be posted again before a third Judge as there was a difference of opinion between the two Judges who first heard the case, Richards, J., holding in favour of the privilege and Knox, C. J., holding otherwise. Mr. Justice Aikman, the third Judge, concurred with Knox, C. J.³ This exception is intended primarily to apply to statements which the accused cannot prove to have been true in fact, or which are mere expressions of opinion, or not true in fac
ments made l statements are true; and if the statements are true in fact, and relevant to the matter under investigation, it is obviously for the public good that they should be made.⁴

Thus the opinion of the Bombay, Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts is opposed to the adoption of the English rule of absolute privilege.

The former Chief Court of the Punjab adopted the reasoning of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts. It ruled that this exception modified the principle of English law. There was nothing in this section which protected witnesses as a class in respect of statements made by them in that character. The true test of immunity in the case of witnesses, as of other persons, was whether the exception was established in its entirety.⁵

¹ Manjaya v. Shesha Shetti, (1888) 11 Mad. 477, 478.

² Maya Das, (1893) I. R. No. 14 of 1893.
Phundi Ram, (1910) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 7 of 1911; Miran Saha, (1912) P. W. R. (Cr.) No. 31 of 1912, P. L. R. No. 244 of 1912.

The former Judicial Commissioner's Court of Upper Burma followed the Calcutta and Allahabad rulings.¹

Facts.—According to English law no action can be brought for any statement made by parties during the conduct of a case.

The Bombay High Court has held that a complainant who, when asked by the Magistrate to state his grievance, deliberately makes a defamatory statement without any justification is not protected by this exception.² Whilst an application and a counter-application to prevent a breach of the peace were being investigated into by the police, the accused called the complainant a 'rogue'. It appeared that some four months previously the complainant was convicted and fined at the instance of the accused. The accused having been convicted of defamation, it was held that the accused was protected by exception 9, inasmuch as the statement was made apparently for the protection of his own interest and when his application was under investigation by the police, and that the statement was made by him in good faith.³

The Madras High Court has recognized the great importance of allowing the utmost freedom to counsel, parties and witnesses during the progress of a case, and if the accused himself asks any question, while defending himself, the question could not be made the subject of a civil action, nor would any criminal proceeding lie for defamation.⁴ Where, therefore, a person who was being defended by a counsel on a criminal charge interfered in the examination of a witness and made a defamatory statement with regard to his character, it was held that he was guilty of defamation.⁵ But where, in the course of a criminal trial, the pleader who defended the accused put a question to the complainant who was examined therein as a witness, conveying an insinuation of being implicated in a crime, it was held that the accused was not guilty of defamation.⁶ Statements of a defamatory character made by an accused in the course of the statement which he is invited to make under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, is privileged.⁷ In a Full Bench case it has been laid down that the statement of a person charged with an offence in answer to a question put by the judge is absolutely privileged.⁸

Under the law as laid down in the Penal Code did not exclude the application of the doctrine of absolute privilege from the law of defamation in India; and the statement made by a person regarding another in a complaint presented by the former against the latter is absolutely privileged.⁹ But where a defamatory statement is made before an officer, who is neither a judicial officer nor a Court, e.g., a registration officer, it has been held in a subsequent Full Bench case that it is not absolutely privileged.¹⁰

In a Full Bench case the Calcutta High Court has laid down that a defamatory statement, on oath or otherwise, by a party to a judicial proceeding falls within s. 499, and is not absolutely privileged. Under cl. 30 of the Letters Patent, 1865,

¹ Meer Burks v Maung Hla Pe, (1918) 3 U. B. R. 101

² Dinshaji Edalji v. Jehangir Cowasji, (1922) 24 Bom. L. R. 400, 6 Bom. Cr. C. 200.

³ Eswfali Abdul Hussein, (1918) 20 Bom. L. R. 601, 4 Bom. Cr. C. 255.

⁴ Hayes v. Christian, (1892) 15 Mad. 414, 416.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Venkata Reddy, (1912) 36 Mad. 216, F. B.

⁷ Muthuswami Naidu, (1912) 11 M. L. T. 431.

⁸ Krishnamal v. Krishnaiyengar, (1912) 23 M. L. J. 50, [1912] M. W. N. 473, F. B.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Ibid.

persons were preparing to bring false charges against him, he was convicted of defamation.¹ The Calcutta High Court has held in a case that statements made by a complainant before a Magistrate by way of a complaint are absolutely privileged.² In a subsequent case, after distinguishing this decision on the ground that the privilege claimed there was not in a criminal prosecution but in a suit for damages, it was held that there was no absolute privilege for a defamatory statement made in accused for the

by the terms of come within the exceptions, it was not privileged; and that the English common law doctrine of absolute privilege did not obtain in the mofussil in India.³ But on similar facts another Division Bench of the same High Court had previously held that a complainant making untrue statements in such an application could not be convicted of defamation.⁴

There is no case decided by the Bombay High Court under the Penal Code but in a civil action it has held that statements in pleadings are not actionable.⁵

The Madras High Court remarked in *Hinde v. Baudry*⁶: "If they (defendants) were rightfully making an application in the suit, the principle of public policy which guards the statement of a party or witness against an action would protect them whether the statement was malicious or not." It is of opinion that there is no difference between evidence given in the box and the evidence on affidavits, in that they are both absolutely privileged and no suit for damages will lie in respect of evidence given therein.⁷ A defamatory statement in a complaint to a Magistrate is absolutely privileged.⁸

The former Chief Court of the Punjab laid down that a person who made defamatory statements in former Chief Court of Lower Bur
High Court has held that in cri
ement was made on an occasion of privilege or not is to be decided with reference to the provisions of s. 105 of the Indian Evidence Act and this section.¹¹

According to English law no action lies for any statement made in the pleadings.¹²

Reports.—The report of an officer, in the execution of his duty, under his superior's orders, which contains defamatory imputations against others, but which does not appear to have been made recklessly or unjustifiably is covered by this exception. An Inspector of Police sent to enquire whether it was true that a certain person was the leader of dacoits, reported that it was false, but the Banias of the village were trying to get the man punished from an ill-feeling, and added: "I learn from private enquiries that there is scarcely a woman in the house of the Banias who has not passed a night or two with the defendant." It was held that he was not protected by this exception.¹³

Cases.—Statement made to protect the interest of another.—Where a man who was watching a case on behalf of his partner informed the judge, while the hearing was

¹ Shibo Proshad Pandah, (1878) 3 C. L. R. 122.

² Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khettry, (1911) 38 Cal. 880. So far as civil Courts are concerned it has, however, decided that defamatory statements in pleadings are not absolutely privileged; Augada Ram v. Nema Shaha, (1896) 23 Cal. 867; Sandyal v. Bhata Sundari Devi, (1910) 15 C. W. N. 605.

³ Nathan v. Nathan, (1880) 11 M. L. T. 55.

⁴ Muthusami Naidu, (1912) 37 Mad. 110.

⁵ Kirpa Ram, (1887) P. R. N. 21 of 1887.

⁶ Maung Mya Thi v. Henry Po Saur, (1906) 13 Burma L. R. 96.

⁷ Ma Mya Shwe v. Maung Maung, (1924) 2 Rang. 333.

⁸ Reis v. Smith, (1856) 18 C. B. 126.

⁹ Rajnarin Sein, (1870) 6 Beng. L. R. App. 42, 14 W. R. (Cr.) 22. See Sher Singh, (1880) P. R. No. 23 of 1880.

interests of those to whom he made the imputation. If the accused speaks about the complainant violently and publicly he would not be protected.¹

Cases.—Want of good faith.—The complainant, a Brahman, who had been put out of caste, was re-admitted by the executive committee of the caste after performing expiatory ceremonies. This re-admission was not approved of by the accused, who formed a faction of the caste; and they, after an interval of six months, distributed in the bazaar to all classes of the public printed papers in which the complainant was described as a "doshi," or sinner, which signified that he was a person unfit to be associated with. The accused were charged with the offence of defamation. They pleaded privilege, and it was admitted that they had acted without malice. It was held that the accused had not acted in good faith, and that the publication was not, under the circumstances, privileged and protected by this exception.² U, a woman, left her first husband and contracted a secret pat marriage with J, but the then swami of the community, to which the parties belonged, declared the connection as adulterous. Some years after, another swami of the community declared the second marriage valid. Certain members of the community, however, disapproved of this action of the swami, and addressed him several communications which elicited no reply from him. Thereupon, twelve of the villagers of the place published in a newspaper that "J having kept a concubine by name U . . . held that they were guilty of defamation, for made for the benefit of a portion of the public, still the accused had no privilege to disseminate them to a circle of readers wider than those who could possibly be interested in the allegations."³ Where the accused published a circular purporting to say that at a panchayat held at a certain place it was resolved that the complainant who had been to England was not to be taken into caste and that those of their community, who associated with him, could be taken into the caste only on their undergoing a penance and on consenting to give up all connection with the complainant, and where it was found that no panchayat was actually held and the publication was not made in good faith, it was held that the accused was rightly convicted of the offence of defamation. The publication of the circular lowered the character of the complainant in respect of his caste as it represented the complainant to be one with whom to associate would entail excommunication on the members of his brotherhood associating with him.⁴

Caution conveyed in good faith.—The accused, with a number of other persons at a caste meeting, passed a resolution to the effect that "the Nilgiris people do not belong to the caste" (to which the accused and the Maharattas belonged), "but that the complainant seems to belong to the Rangari caste." It was admitted that the complainant was a Maharatta living on the Nilgiris. The members of the meeting arrived at this conclusion after making enquiries. The complainant had notice of the meeting and the resolution was recorded in a book kept by the caste panchayat. It was held that under the circumstances the accused were not guilty of defamation.⁵ A person was put out of caste by a meeting of his caste fellows for having taken water from the hands of a certain other person. The accused told some members of the caste not to take water from the hands of the person outcasted as if they did so they would be liable to be excommunicated. It was held that the accused was protected by this exception and was not guilty of defamation.⁶

¹ Palani Asari, (1892) 1 Weir 614.

² Thiagaraya v. Krishnasami, (1892) 15 Mad. 214.

³ Srirajendra, (1901) 3 Bom. L. R. 189.

⁴ Mukund Ram, (1909) G. A. L. J. 472.

⁵ Salar Mannaji Row, (1887) 1 Weir 614.

⁶ Unad Singh, (1923) 22 A. L. J. R. 79,

46 All. 64.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the imputation in question consisted of words, spoken or intended to be read, or of signs, etc.

(2) That the imputation concerned the complainant.

(3) That such imputation emanated from the accused.

(4) That he made or published the same.

There must be evidence to show that the publication was made by the accused.¹ The prosecution must affirmatively prove that the defendant published the libel complained of. Admissions as to publication in the written statement of the accused cannot be used to fill up the gap in the prosecution evidence.² In a prosecution for libel the only evidence adduced of publication was that the particular issue of the journal containing the libel bore the statement that it was printed and published by the accused. The sworn complaint also stated that the accused published it, and the accused said in the lower Court in his written statement that what was published was a substantially true report without any malicious intention and he did not deny that he published the libel. It was held that there was no legal evidence of publication.³

It is incumbent on the complainant to produce evidence to show that the accused made or published the imputation complained of notwithstanding the accused admits the publication when examined under s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A Magistrate is neither empowered under that section to put questions to the accused if the prosecution has not let in evidence implicating him in the offence nor is his statement admissible in evidence to fill the gap in the absence of such evidence.⁴

On the prosecution of the editor of a newspaper for defamation by publishing a libel in his paper, an attested copy of a declaration made by the editor under s. 5 of Act XXV of 1867, to the effect that he was the printer and publisher of the newspaper was produced in evidence by the complainant. It was held that the declaration was prima facie proof of publication by the editor.⁵ If the manuscript of a libel be proved to be in the handwriting of the accused, and it be also proved to have been printed and published, this is sufficient evidence to show that it was published by the accused, although there be no evidence given to show that the printing and publication were by the direction of the accused.⁶ Publication is sufficiently proved by the production of a printed copy.⁷

(5) That he intended thereby to harm the reputation of the complainant, or that he knew or had reason to believe that it would do so. The intention of the accused must be gathered from the document complained of as a whole.⁸ Intention like any other psychological fact has to be inferred from the act itself. The jury has to see whether the natural result of the act is not to harm the reputation of the persons attacked.⁹

The question of the physical and moral as distinguished from the legal character of the act of a person accused under this section is, like those which arise under other sections of the Code, one to be determined by considerations and inferences drawn from the common experience rather than from rules of legal construction.¹⁰

It is not an error in law for a Judge to require the accused to prove several distinct imputations contained in a libellous article published by him with the same strictures with which he would be required to prove them if he were the defendant in a civil action.¹¹

¹ Morison, (1904) 10 Burma L. R. 314.

² Jeremiah v. Lee, [1911] 2 M. W. N. 576.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Devi Jayal, (1922) 4 Lab. 55.

⁵ Ramasami v. Lakshmana, (1888) 9 Mad.

587. See Stanger, (1871) L. R. 6 Q. B. 552;

Hart & White, (1888) 10 East 54.

⁶ Leach, (1859) 2 C. & F. 422.

⁷ Sewell v. Naidu, (1891) 1 Weir 579.

⁸ Laidman v. Harvey, (1885) 7 All. 193.

⁹ Kali Prasad v. Kalyaksharal, (1897) 1 C. W. N. 465.

¹⁰ Pattamler, (1879) 12 Cr. C. 140.

¹¹ Krishna Parthasar, (1872) 3 B. H. C. 451.

Truth as defence.—Where the accused intends to bring evidence to prove the truth of the defamatory matter, his advocate should cross-examine the complainant upon every matter upon which evidence is intended to be brought. If he does not do so, it is a subject of serious consideration whether he should subsequently be allowed to tender proof as to the material incidents of which he was not cross-examined.¹

Where the accused having publicly charged a woman with being pregnant by adultery, requested the Court to have the complainant, the woman, medically examined in order that the truth or falsehood of the matter alleged might be satisfactorily established. It was held that there was no law which empowered the Courts to order such an examination in such a case.²

Good faith.—The authors of the Code say: "Whether an imputation be or be not made in good faith is a question for the Courts of law. The burden of the proof will lie sometimes on the person who has made the imputation, and sometimes on the person on whom the imputation has been thrown. No general rule can be laid down. Yet scarcely any case could arise respecting which a sensible and impartial judge would feel any doubt. If, for example, a public functionary were to prosecute for defamation a writer who had described him in general terms as incapable, the court would probably require the prosecutor to give some proof of bad faith. If the prosecutor had no such proof to offer, the defendant would be acquitted. If the prosecutor were to prove that the defendant had applied to him for money, had promised to write in his praise if the money were advanced, and had threatened to abuse him if the money were withheld, the Court would, probably, be of opinion that the defendant had not written in good faith, and would convict him."

"On the other hand, if the imputation were an imputation of some particular fact, or an imputation which, though general in form, yet implied the truth of some particular fact which, if true, might be proved, the Court would probably hold that the burden of proving good faith lay on the defendant. Thus if a person were to publish that a collector was in the habit of receiving bribes from the zemindars of his district, and were unable to specify a single case, or to give any authority for his assertion, the courts would probably be of opinion that the imputation had not been made in good faith."

"Again: if a critic described a writer as a plagiarist, the courts would not consider this as defamation without very strong proof of bad faith. But if it were proved that of opinion that he had not mation."³

Relevant facts.—A sues B for a libel contained in a letter forming part of a correspondence. Letters between the parties relating to the subject out of which the libel arose, and forming part of the correspondence in which it is contained, or relevant facts, though they do not contain the libel itself.⁴

A sues B for a libel imputing disgraceful conduct to A; B affirms that the matter alleged to be libellous is true. The position and relations of the parties at the time when the libel was published may be relevant facts as introductory to the facts in issue.⁵

A is accused of defaming B by publishing an imputation intended to harm the reputation of B. The fact of previous publications by A respecting B showing ill-will on the part of A towards B, is relevant, as proving A's intention to harm B's reputation by the particular publication in question. The facts that there was no previous quarrel between A and B, and that A repeated the matter complained

¹ Dhum Singh, (1884) 6 All. 220.

² Pudmon, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 474, Cr. R. No. 33 of 1889.

³ Note R, p. 184.

⁴ Indian Evidence Act, s. 6, ill. (c).

⁵ Ibid s. 9, ill. (b).

of as he heard of it, are relevant, as showing that A did not intend to harm the reputation of B.¹

Admissibility of evidence.—A sues B for a libel expressed in a painted caricature exposed in a shop window. The question is as to the similarity of the caricature and its libellous character. The remarks of a crowd of spectators on these points may be proved.²

A and B separately sue for a libel which reflects upon each of them. C in each case says, that the matter alleged to be libellous is true, and the circumstances are such that it is probably true in each case, or in neither. A obtains a decree against C for damages on the ground that C failed to make out his justification. The fact is irrelevant between B and C.³

Evidence of the complainant having previously acted as alleged in the libel is admissible.⁴ When defamation affects a person's general character then evidence of the general reputation of that person may be given to show that there was a reasonable ground for the imputation and thus to reduce the sentence.⁵ The accused was convicted for having defamed a public servant by publishing an imputation that the latter had compelled him to pay a bribe in order to avoid a prosecution for a certain offence. The accused wanted to produce evidence as to the complainant having taken bribes on other occasions, and general evidence as to the complainant's reputation, but this was disallowed by the trial Court. It was held that evidence as to the complainant having taken bribes on other specific occasions would be irrelevant, but that the accused was entitled to produce evidence to show that the complainant had the reputation of being a bribe-taker.⁶

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Where a complaint shows that an imputation against the complainant's character has been made and that such imputation is prima facie defamatory, a Magistrate is bound to issue summons and is not at liberty to anticipate a case of privilege unless the privilege is distinctly admitted by the complainant.⁷ The examination and cross-examination of the complainant should be held in the former section on the application of a person discharged or acquitted, when the Court has refused sanction under the latter section.⁸

Jurisdiction.—Where the publication of the defamatory matter is outside British India, the British Courts have no jurisdiction to try the offence.¹⁰ To maintain a prosecution for defamation in a particular Court, there must be a publication of the libel within the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court. Where the alleged libel was said to be contained in a letter purporting to be written from Bangalore to England, it was held that to maintain a prosecution in the Bangalore Court, there must be evidence that the letter was handed over to somebody at Bangalore to be taken to the addressee or that it was posted at Bangalore.¹¹

Complaint by the aggrieved person is necessary.—No Court shall take cognizance of this offence except upon a complaint made by the person aggrieved.¹² Death of the complainant terminates the prosecution. A prosecution for defamation

¹ Brindaban Chander Das v. Ishaguddin Choudhry, (1909) 13 C. W. N. 550.

² Prasanna Kumar Ghose v. Havendra Nath Chatterjee, (1916) 44 Cal. 970.

³ Varnakote Illath Krishnan Nambudri, (1900) 1 Weir 579.

⁴ Burke v. Skipp, (1923) 45 M. L. J. 754, 33 M. L. T. 168.

⁵ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 198.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the matter in question is defamatory (vide s. 499).
 (2) That the accused printed or engraved it.

(3) That when he did so know he knew or had reason to believe that such matter was defamatory.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Destruction of libellous matter.—On a conviction under this section the Court may order the destruction of all the copies of the thing in respect of which the conviction was had, and which are in the custody of the Court or remain in the possession or power of the person convicted.¹

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, printed or engraved some matter, to wit—, knowing or having good reason to believe that the same was defamatory, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 501 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (if the case is tried by a Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

502. Whoever sells or offers for sale any printed or engraved substance containing defamatory matter, knowing that it contains such matter, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Sale of printed or engraved substance containing defamatory matter.

COMMENT :

This section supplements the provisions of the previous section by making the seller of defamatory matter punishable under it.

Ingredients.—This section has two essentials :—

1. Selling or offering for sale any printed or engraved substance.
2. Knowledge that such substance contains defamatory matter.

"It is, no doubt, necessary in order to substantiate a charge under s. 502 to prove that the seller of a printed substance knows its contents, which imports proof that he understands the language used, and to prove that its contents are defamatory, but there appears to be no need, if the contents are defamatory, to prove further that he knows them to be defamatory. In cases where it is necessary to prove against a person that he has committed defamation by publishing an imputation, when the matter published is per se defamatory, all that the prosecution is bound to prove, in the first instance, is the fact of publication. When the tendency of the imputation published concerning any person, is to harm the reputation of that person, a Court is fully justified in inferring from the terms of the matter itself that the publisher intended to harm or knew or had reason to believe that such imputation would harm his reputation. . . . But is there no mens rea in the definition of the offence falling under s. 502 ? The definition requires knowledge that the printed substance sold contains defamatory matter. A person who conducts a business in the course of which he is liable to sell books or papers, or the like, which may contain matter which is injurious to the reputation of another person, and may be in fact defamatory as defined in the Penal Code, is bound by reason of the penalty imposed by this section, if not otherwise, to abstain from selling any book or the like, which to his knowledge contains matter which is defamatory. If he sells in ignorance of the contents, he is not guilty of an offence under this section. I or paper containing defamatory matter, for the latter are liable criminally as well as civilly, whether or not they know the contents of the printed substance sold."

¹ Criminal Procedure Code, s. 521 (1).

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the matter is defamatory (vide s. 494).

(2) That it is printed or engraved on the substance in question.

(3) That the accused sold, or offered for sale, that substance.

(4) That he then knew that it contained such defamatory matter.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by the Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Destruction of libellous matter.—See s. 521, Criminal Procedure Code.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, sold or offered for sale any printed (or engraved) substance, to wit—, containing defamatory matter knowing that it contained such matter, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 502 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (if the case is tried by a Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge

¹ Per Piowden, J., in Sardar Dyal Singh, (1891) P. R. No. 8 of 1891, pp. 25, 26.

CHAPTER XXII.

OF CRIMINAL INTIMIDATION, INSULT AND ANNOYANCE.

503. Whoever threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation or property, or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested,¹ with intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which that person is legally entitled to do, as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat,² commits criminal intimidation.

Explanation.—A threat to injure the reputation of any deceased person in whom the person threatened is interested, is within this section.

ILLUSTRATIONS

A, for the purpose of inducing B to desist from prosecuting a civil suit, threatens to burn B's house. A is guilty of criminal intimidation.

COMMENT.

Criminal intimidation is closely analogous to extortion. In extortion, the immediate purpose is filthy lucre by obtaining money or money's worth; in criminal intimidation, the immediate purpose is to induce the person threatened to do, or abstain from doing, something which he was not legally bound to do or omit.

Ingredients.—This section has the following essentials :—

1. Threatening a person with any injury
 - (i) to his person, reputation, or property; or
 - (ii) to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested.
2. The threat must be with intent
 - (a) to cause alarm to that person, or
 - (b) to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat, or
 - (c) to cause that person to omit to do any act which that person is legally entitled to do as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat.

1. 'Threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation or property, etc.'—The gist of the offence is the effect which the threat is intended to have upon the mind of the person threatened, and it is equally clear that before it can have any effect upon his mind it must be either made to him by the person threatening or communicated to him in some way. The threat referred to in this section must be a threat communicated, or uttered with the intention of its being communicated, to the person threatened for the purpose of influencing his mind.¹

The question whether the threat amounts to a criminal intimidation or not, does not depend on the nerves of the individual threatened; if it is such a threat the ent if the threat, though addressed to third parties, was intended to reach the prosecutor as the party threatened, ² e.g., threat to a person's pleader.³ A communication by a person that he is going to take revenge by false complaints cannot amount to threat or criminal intimidation. A threat, in order to be indictable, must be made with intent to cause alarm to the complainant.⁴ To advise others not to deal with a man is an injurious act but it is not a threat and the harm caused is not to property already possessed by that man but rather to his opportunities of future gain.⁵

* Injury.—Sec. s. 44, supra. There can be no criminal intimidation where the injury of which complaint is made is the hardship arising from a conventional punishment which a spiritual superior, acting in the exercise of his authority as regulated by the custom of the caste, is competent to inflict.⁶ The harm threatened must be illegal.⁷ A certain President of a self-constituted Arbitration Court caused a notice to be issued over his signature to a certain person requesting the latter to be present on a given date and arrange for amicable settlement of a certain claim. The notice concluded with the statement that if the defendant did not give an answer (or file written statement) on that date, the suit would be decreed ex parte. It was held that a threat of a decree is a threat of harm to an individual in his person, reputation or property. That the tribunal is incompetent to execute its decree is immaterial. This section says nothing about the capacity of the person making the threat to carry it into execution. Nor does the section say anything about the effect upon the person threatened, and whether or not the complainant knew that the notice was innocuous is equally immaterial. Under s. 44, injury in that the notice threatened the complainant with such a decree, it threatened the complainant with harm to be caused illegally. The accused was, therefore, held guilty of the offence of criminal intimidation.⁸

* Person.—That is, the individuality of a human being; individual character or station; bodily form or substance.

* Reputation.—That is, credit, honour, character, good name.⁹

* Or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested.—In the case of injury to a third person in whom the person threatened is interested, the injury should be to his person or reputation. Injury to the property only of the third person does not come within the purview of the section, though injury to the property of the person threatened does.

2. * Intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act...as the means of avoiding the...threat.—The threat must be with intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do or omit to do any act as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat. See s. 43 for the meaning of 'legally bound to do.'

¹ M. & M. 450.

² (1865) 1 Weir 622; Palani Goundan, (1892) 1 Weir 623.

³ Syed Mahomed v. Sarwar Khan, (1882) 5 C. P. L. R. 50.

⁴ Gowad Raoji Thosur, (1900) 2 Bom. L. R. 55.

⁵ Giles Mal, O. S. C. 146.

⁶ Sri Vidya Sankara Narasimha Bharathi Gururamulu, (1883) 6 Mad. 381.

⁷ Nga Shue Waing, (1900) 1 U. B. R. (1897, 1901) 359.

⁸ Priyannath Gupta v. Lal Jai Chowdhary, (1923) 27 C. W. N. 479.

⁹ Wharton's Law Lexicon, 13th Edn., p. 742.

CASES.

Threat of vengeance.—A constable was sent to fetch to a Police Inspector some persons from whom the latter wished to make inquiries regarding an offence. While the constable was taking two persons with him, the accused came up and threatened them both and the constable with the Head Constable's vengeance, and as a consequence the two persons refused to accompany the constable who had to go without them. It was held that the accused had committed this offence.¹

Threat of excommunication.—Where the accused told the complainant, a member of their caste, that he should give up his field or else they would put him out of caste, it was held that this offence was not committed.²

Threat to kill a person.—Where the accused and his brother having had a quarrel, the former ran off and fetched a sword, but was seized by other persons and was disarmed and he then asserted his intention of killing his brother if he was let go, it was held that the words used by the accused could not be construed into a threat within the meaning of this section.³

Threat to get a person imprisoned.—Where the accused went to the complainant, a brother of an adult woman, and told him that he had come from the Government, and would get him six months' imprisonment if he did not let his sister go, it was held that this was not an offence under any other section.⁴

Threat to get a person dismissed.—Where the accused held out a threat of getting a Head Constable of police dismissed from service, it was held that this did amount to a threat of injury as was punishable under this section.⁶

Threat to ruin another by cases.—Where the accused who threatened to ruin the complainant by cases was convicted of criminal intimidation, it was held that the conviction could not stand. The Court said that had the threat been to ruin the complainant by false cases, the offence would have been committed; but as the threat was to ruin him by cases, it could not be assumed that by cases was meant false cases.⁷ A threat by a person, who was called upon to pay house-tax under a warrant for the attachment of his brother's property, that he would take legal steps, was held to be not a threat of injury as defined in the Code.⁸

Threat to ruin another by cases.—Where the accused who threatened to ruin the complainant by cases was convicted of criminal intimidation, it was held that the conviction could not stand. The Court said that had the threat been to ruin the complainant by false cases, the offence would have been committed; but as the threat was to ruin him by cases, it could not be assumed that by cases was meant false cases.⁷ A threat by a person, who was called upon to pay house-tax under a warrant for the attachment of his brother's property, that he would take legal steps, was held to be not a threat of injury as defined in the Code.⁸

Compelling a public servant by threats to draw up a false document.—Where the accused in offering resistance to a police-officer compelled him to draw up a document to the effect that a search was conducted and nothing incriminating was found it was held that they were guilty of an offence under this section.⁹

Person informed about threatened injury to another must be interested in that other person.—The accused sent a fabricated petition to the Revenue Commissioner & D. A. stating that if a certain Forest Officer were not removed else-that the Commissioner had neither official
It was held that, as the person to whom rested in the person threatened, the act

¹ Purshotam Vanamali, (1896) Unrep. Cr. U. 850, Cr. R. No. 18 of 1896.

² Alya Dhurma, (1870) Unrep. Cr. C. 37, Cr. R. 17th August 1870; Fakirappa, (1882) Unrep. Cr. C. 186.

³ Data Ram, (1882) P. R. No. 45 of 1882.

⁴ Moroba Bhaskarji, (1871) 8 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 101.

⁵ Ata Husain, (1885) 6 A. W. N. 41.

⁶ Dada Hanmant Dani, (1895) 20 Bom. 94.

⁷ Jowahir Pattal v. Parbhoo Ahir, (1902) 30 Cal. 418, 7 C. W. N. 116; Chidraputira, (1901) 26 Cal. 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

⁸ Jowahir Pattal v. Parbhoo Ahir, (1902) 30 Cal. 418, 7 C. W. N. 116; Chidraputira, (1901) 26 Cal. 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

⁹ Jowahir Pattal v. Parbhoo Ahir, (1902) 30 Cal. 418, 7 C. W. N. 116; Chidraputira, (1901) 26 Cal. 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386 intended and done by the accused did not amount to criminal intimidation.¹ A threat to commit suicide is not within the section unless the other person be interested in the person making the threat.²

504. Whoever intentionally insults,¹ and thereby gives provocation to, any person,² intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause him to break the public peace,³ or to commit any other offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Intentional insult with intent to provoke breach of the peace.

COMMENT:

Object.—An imputation not defamatory may be uttered in the hearing of the person who is the object of it, for the purpose of provoking that person to break the public peace. If so, it is punishable under this section. The authors of the Code observe: "There are many cases in which it is fit that unpleasant truth should be told respecting an individual. But there is no case in which it is desirable that such truth should be told in such a way that the telling of it is a gross personal outrage. A person who has detected, or thinks that he has detected, a dishonest misrepresentation in a book has a right to expose it publicly. But he cannot be allowed to intrude into the presence of the author of the book, and to tell him to his face that he is a liar. A person who knows the mistress of a female school to be a woman of infamous character deserves well of society if he states what he knows. But he cannot be allowed to follow her through the streets calling her by opprobrious names, though he may be able to prove that all those names were mented. A person who brings to notice the malversation of a public functionary deserves applause. But a person who hangs a public functionary in effigy at that functionary's door, with an opprobrious label, does what cannot be permitted, even though every word on the label, and every imputation which the exhibition was meant to convey, may be perfectly true."³

This section provides a remedy for using abusive and insulting language.⁴

Sections 499 and 504.—The difference between an offence under s. 504 and s. 499 lies in the fact that in the latter publication to the prosecutor alone is not sufficient, as such an imputation could not be said to harm the reputation of the person; but according to the former this would be a complete offence. Section 501 corresponds precisely with those cases in which, under the English law, defamatory matter published to the prosecutor alone would be indictable as libellous.

Ingredients.—This section requires.—

1 Intentional insult.

2 The insult must be such as to give provocation to the person insulted.

3 Intention that such provocation should cause, or knowledge that such provocation was likely to cause, the person so insulted to break the public peace or to commit any other offence

1. 'Intentionally insults.'—The word 'insult' signifies, to treat with offensive disrespect, to offer indignity to. Such insult may be inferred not merely from the words used, but also from the tone and manner in which the words are spoken.⁵ If the insult alleged consisted of spoken words only, it would be essential that the

¹ Mangesh Jiraji, (1887) 11 Bom. 376.

² Nabi Dulak v. Musat. Omra, (1866) P. R. No. 109 of 1866; Chikanti Omwadu, (1881) Weir (3rd Edn.) 390.

³ Note R, p. 183.

⁴ Girish Chander Mitter v. Jata-thari Sadu-Llan, (1879) 26 Cal. G. 53, 663, r. n.

⁵ Jayirishna, (1916) 24 C. L. J. 137, 138, 21 C. W. N. 95, 97.

shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Exception.—It does not amount to an offence, within the meaning of this section, when the person making, publishing or circulating any such statement, rumour or report has reasonable grounds for believing that such statement, rumour or report is true and makes, publishes or circulates it without any such intent as aforesaid.⁴

COMMENT:

This section was substituted by Act IV of 1898. The Select Committee in their Report said: "We have inserted the clause proposed by the Government, but we have altered and enlarged the scope of the exception to the clause. No doubt . . . red to are of a highly mischievous charac . . . under which modern journalism and th . . . necessarily carried on, we think that when the statement, rumour or report is published without any criminal intent, it is going too far to require the person who published it to prove its actual truth. To require such proof might be throwing an impossible burden said: "In 1898 the Select Committee . . . As the clause now stands, I think, it need cause no apprehension to any speaker or journalist who speaks in good faith. It must be borne in mind that the clause does not strike at mischievous and mendacious reports generally. It is aimed only at reports calculated to produce mutiny or to induce one section of the population to commit offences against another. If a man takes upon himself to circulate a report, he surely cannot complain if he is asked to show that his intentions were innocent and that he had reasonable grounds for believing the report."¹

This section instead of being inserted in Chapter VII, which deals with offences relating to the Army and Navy, appears in this Chapter, apparently because the repealed section contained some of the provisions contained in the present section and was not limited to offences relating to the Army and Navy.

1. 'Offence against the State.'—See Chapter VI, ss. 121–130. A tea estate duffadar, who had recently returned from Nepal, circulated a report among the garden coolies that a war was impending between the British Government and Nepal and that Nepalese soldiers were stationed on the frontier, and that the coolies

2. 'Against the public tranquillity.'—See Chapter VIII, ss. 141–160.

3. 'Offence.'—See s. 40, supra.

4. 'Without any such intent as aforesaid.'—If the statement, rumour, or report is true and is published without any such intent as is specified in cl. (a), (b)

no such statement, expression or comment, as might fall within the purview of this section, it was held that he could not be convicted.¹

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused made, published or circulated the statement, rumour, or report, in question.

(2) That he did so with intent to cause, or which was likely to cause, some officer, soldier, or sailor, to mutiny or otherwise disregard or fail in his duty as such.

(3) That such officer, or soldier, or sailor, belonged to the Army or Navy of His Majesty, or to the Royal Indian Marine, or to the Imperial Service Troops.

Or prove (1) as above; and

(2) That he did so with intent to cause or which was likely to cause fear or alarm to the public or to some section of the public.

(3) That the fear or alarm was such as might induce a person to commit an offence against the State or the public tranquillity.

Or prove (1) as above; and

(2) That he did so with intent to incite, or which was likely to incite, some class or community of persons to commit some offence against some other class or community.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

Sanction.—Previous sanction of Government is necessary for prosecution under this section.²

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, circulated a statement (or rumour, or report), to wit—, with intent (specify the clause under which the act comes), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 505 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

506. Whoever commits the offence of criminal intimidation shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both;

and if the threat be to cause death or grievous hurt, or to cause the destruction of any property by fire, or to cause an offence punishable with death or transportation, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, or to impute unchastity to a woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

COMMENT:

This section punishes the offence of criminal intimidation as defined in s. 503.

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused threatened some person.

¹ Gupta, (1924) 6 L. L. J. 162.

² Criminal Procedure Code, s. 198. See also Sivami Dayal, (1907) P. R. No. 8 of 1908.

in the middle of the night, into the room of the complainant, with whom he had previous acquaintance and who used to speak to strangers and give pan supari to visitors, it was held that this offence was not committed.¹

The accused followed in his carriage the complainant's unmarried daughter at various places, and laughed and grinned and stared at her while passing and re-passing in his carriage, and stood up in it and shouted her name and so on. The Magistrate convicted him under this section. On appeal, the Bombay High Court, confirming the conviction, observed: "We do not think it proper to draw subtle distinctions to show that these acts do not amount to outraging the modesty of a woman and are trying to say that Magistrate has taken an incorrect view of the section of the Indian Penal Code under which the accused has been convicted and sentenced."² These observations were quoted with approval in a recent case in which the accused, a University graduate, sent by post to the complainant, an English nurse, a letter containing indecent overtures and suggesting that the complainant should take certain action in order to show whether she accepted the terms mentioned in the letter. The complainant went to the Police, and in consequence of what they did, the accused was found to be the person who had sent the letter. It was held that in the circumstances an inference arose that the accused intended to insult the modesty of the complainant.³

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused uttered the words, or made the sound or gestures, etc., in question.

(2) That such word, sound, or gesture was intended by the accused to be heard or seen by some woman.

(3) That he thereby intended to insult the modesty of that woman.

Or prove—

(1) That the accused intruded upon the privacy of some woman.

(2) As (3) above.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable when permission is given by the Court before which the prosecution is pending—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first class.

510. Whoever, in a state of intoxication, appears in any public place, or in any place which it is a trespass in him to enter¹, and there conducts himself in such a manner as to cause annoyance to any person², shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to twenty-four hours, or with fine which may extend to ten rupees, or with both.

COMMENT.

... .. of humanity
arose from his own default, but is answerable equally as if he had been, ...

¹ Phiaz Mahamad, (1908) 5 Bom. L. R. 502.

² Mahomed Kassem Chisty, (1911) Criminal Appeal No. 454 of 1910, decided on 18th January 1911, per Chandavarkar and Heaton, JJ.

³ Tarak Das Gupta, (1925) 28 Bom. L. R. 99, 8 Bom. Cr. C.

act was done, in the full possession of his faculties, a principle of law which is embodied in the familiar adage, qui peccat ebrius luat sobrius.

Under the Police Act¹ cases of drunkenness are often punished, and the provisions of this section are rarely applied.

Ingredients.—This section requires two essentials :—

1. Appearance of a person in a state of intoxication in
 - (i) any public place, or
 - (ii) any place which it is a trespass in him to enter.
 2. The person so appearing must have conducted himself in such a manner as to cause annoyance to any person
1. 'In a state of intoxication appears in any public place, or in any place which it is a trespass in him to enter.'—The person must be in a state of intoxication caused by liquor or other drinks or drugs. As to the meaning of 'public place,' see s. 294 ; and as to 'trespass,' see s. 411.
2. 'Conducts himself in such a manner as to cause annoyance to any person.'—Mere intoxication is not made punishable. It is only when a person appears, in a state of drunkenness, in a public place, as in a street, or goes to a place where he has no right to go, and causes annoyance to the people, that he commits this offence.

P R A C T I C E :

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused appeared in some public place, or some place which it was a trespass in him to enter.

(2) That he was then in a state of intoxication

(3) That he conducted himself in such a manner as to cause annoyance to some person.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate—Triable summarily.

A private citizen has the right to arrest under the common law any person as to whom there is reasonable apprehension that he would commit a breach of the peace. The accused, a Village Magistrate, arrested a man who was very drunk and who had torn the sacred thread of a person and had bit the accused in the foot. The accused was convicted under s. 341 for wrongful restraint. It was held, quashing the conviction, that there was ample justification for the accused, not as a Village Magistrate but as a private citizen, to put a restraint upon the drunken and disorderly person who was not only threatening to commit a breach of the peace but was a danger to the other villagers.²

¹ Act V of 1861, s. 34 (b)

² Ramaswami Ayyar, (1921) 44 Mad. 913.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT OFFENCES.

511. Whoever attempts to commit an offence punishable by this Code¹ with transportation or imprisonment,² or to cause such an offence to be committed,³ and in such attempt does any act towards the commission of the offence,⁴ shall, where no express provision is made⁵ by this Code for the punishment of such attempt, be punished with transportation or imprisonment of any description provided for the offence, for a term of transportation or imprisonment which may extend to one-half of the longest term⁶ provided for that offence, or with such fine as is provided for the offence, or with both.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(a) A makes an attempt to steal some jewels by breaking open a box, and finds after so opening the box that there is no jewel in it. He has done an act towards the commission of theft, and therefore is guilty under this section.

(b) A makes an attempt to pick the pocket of Z by thrusting his hand into Z's pocket. A fails in the attempt in consequence of Z's having nothing in his pocket. A is guilty under this section.

COMMENT.

This is a general provision dealing with attempts to commit offences not made punishable by other specific sections.

By s. 10 of the Indian Army (Amendment) Act (XI of 1918), a similar provision is inserted in the Indian Army Act (VIII of 1911) as s. 39-A.

Scope.—According to the Allahabad High Court this section does not apply to attempts to commit murder which are fully and exclusively provided for by s. 307.¹ The Bombay High Court has, however, held otherwise.² The former Chief Court of the Punjab laid down that this section was in terms much wider than s. 307. Under the last-mentioned section the act done must be one capable of causing death, and it must also be the last proximate act necessary to constitute the completed offence; under this section the act may be any act in the course of the attempt towards the commission of the offence.³

This section does not apply to cases of dacoity.⁴

Stages of a crime.—In every crime, there is, first, intention to commit it; secondly, preparation to commit it; thirdly, attempt to commit it. If the third stage, that is attempt, is successful, then the crime is complete. If the attempt fails the crime is not complete but the law punishes the person attempting the act. An 'attempt' is made punishable, because every 'attempt,' although it fails of success, must create alarm, which of itself, is an injury, and the moral guilt of the offender is the same as if he had succeeded. Moral guilt must be united to injury in order to justify punishment; but as the injury is not as great as if the act had been committed, only half the punishment is awarded.⁵

¹ Niddha, (1891) 14 All. 38; Tulsha, (1897) 20 All. 143.

² Cassidy, (1867) 4 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 17.

³ Jivan Das, (1904) P. R. No. 30 of 1904.

⁴ Kooner, (1867) 7 W. R. (Cr.) 48.

⁵ Livingstone.

Every attempt to commit a felony or misdemeanour is under common law a misdemeanour.

An attempt to commit a crime is to be distinguished from an intention to commit it; and from preparation made for its commission.¹

1. Intention.—Intention is the direction of conduct towards the object chosen upon considering the motives which suggest the choice.² But the law will not take notice of an intent without an act.³ Mere intention to commit an offence, not followed by any act, cannot constitute an offence.⁴ The “will is not to be taken for the deed” unless there be some external act which shows that progress has been made in the direction of it, or towards maturing and effecting it. Intention can only be proved by acts, as “juries cannot look into the breast of criminals.”

It is a rule laid down by Lord Mansfield that “so long as an act rests in bare intention it is not punishable by our laws: but immediately when an act is done, the law judges, not only of the act done, but of the intent with which it is done; and if it is coupled with an unlawful and malicious intent, though the act itself would otherwise have been innocent, the intent being criminal, the act becomes criminal and punishable.”⁵ “When a man is charged with doing an act (that is, a wrongful act without any legal justification), of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious, the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act.”⁶

Although there is no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known to him to be so, still it must be presumed that when a man voluntarily does an act knowing at the time that in the natural course of events a certain result will follow he intends to bring about that result.⁷

2. Preparation.—Preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measures necessary for the commission of the offence. Where a man, having a wife living, caused the banns of marriage between himself and a woman to be published, it was held that he could not be punished for an attempt to commit bigamy, because the act of causing the publication of the banns of marriage was an act done in the preparation to marry, but did not amount to an attempt to marry. The accused might, before any ceremony of marriage was commenced, have willed not to carry out his criminal intention of marrying her.⁸ The provisions of the section do not extend to make punishable as attempts acts done in the mere stage of preparation.⁹

Preparation to commit an offence is punishable only when the preparation is to commit offences under s. 122 (waging war against the King-Emperor) and s. 399 (preparation to commit dacoity).

Preparation may amount to an abetment.¹⁰ But preparation of an offence which leads to nothing does not amount to an abetment under s. 109.¹¹

The question whether a certain act is merely one of preparation or one committed in the course of an attempt is a question of fact.¹²

Purchasing of stamp paper.—Mere purchasing of a stamp paper in the name of the person whose name it was intended to forge, was held not to constitute an attempt.¹³ But in a subsequent case, on similar facts, the same High Court has held ¹ Peterson, (1876) 1 All. 316, 317.

² Stephen's General View of the Criminal Law of England, p. 69. (2nd Edn.)

³ Dugdale, (1823) 1 E. & B. 435.

⁴ Baku, (1899) 1 Bom. L. R. 678, 21 Bom. 287.

⁵ Scofield, (1784) Cald. 397, 403.

⁶ Per Ellanberruck, C. J., in Per.

⁷ Per Ellanberruck, C. J., in Per, (1850) 1 C. & L. 400.

⁷ Luxman Raghunath, (1902) 4 Bom. L. R. 280.

⁸ Peterson sup.; Padala Venkatasami, (1881) 3 Mad. 4, 5. See Srinivasan, (1902) 25 Mad. 726.

⁹ Ramsarun Choubey, (1872) 4 N. W. P. 46, 48.

¹⁰ See Padala Venkatasami, sup.

¹¹ Surat Bahadur, (1924) 1 O. W. N. 362.

¹² MacCrea, (1893) 15 All. 173.

¹³ Ramsarun Choubey, sup. See Gulab Singh, (1916) 14 A. L. J. P. 688.

otherwise. M instigated Z to personate C and to purchase in C's name certain stamped paper, in consequence of which the vendor of the stamped paper endorsed C's name on such paper as the purchaser of it. M acted with the intention that such endorsement might be used against C in a judicial proceeding. It was held that the offence of fabricating false evidence had been actually committed, and that M was guilty of abetting the commission of such offence.¹ The former may be assumed it was the intention of the person who procured the stamp to make on the face of the stamp-paper. The offence of forgery had not proceeded beyond the stage of preparation, but in the case now before the Court there had been an actual fabrication: something had been done. It is true that no judicial proceeding had been instituted, but the petitioner's pleader is unable to suggest any other object for which the false endorsement should have been procured. The petitioner had undoubtedly threatened Chatter Singh that he would make him pay Rs. 50. He could not have carried out his threat without the intervention of the Court. The object of the endorsement made by the vendor of a stamp is to afford proof of the person to whom it is sold, and in suits brought on documents written on stamp-paper it is the usual course, when the execution of the document is denied, to advert to the endorsement and to the stamp-vendor's memory assisted by the endorsement as evidence of the person to whom the stamp was sold, and therefore as evidence of the probability that the document was made by the person by whom the paper was procured. I do not say that the accused should have been discharged. Had the point been raised, the accused might have been found guilty of the offence of which the petitioner has been convicted. In that in the case before the Court the evidence for the prosecution was such as to lead to the inference that the petitioner procured the false endorsement for the purpose of thereafter using it in a judicial proceeding, and consequently that the conviction is not open to the objection taken to it."²

In another case, C, calling himself K, went to a stamp-vendor, accompanied by a man named Kalyan, and purchased from him in the name of K a stamped paper. The two men then went to a petition-writer, and C again giving his name as K, they asked the petition-writer to write for them a bond for Rs. 50 payable by K to Kalyan. The petition-writer commenced to write the bond, but, his suspicious having being aroused, did not finish it, but took C and Kalyan to the nearest police-station. It was held that Kalyan was guilty of an attempt to commit the offence under s. 467, and C of abetment of the said attempt.³ Ramsarun's case was distinguished on the ground that nothing was written on the stamp-paper in that case.

False document.—In a case the Madras High Court arrived at the same conclusion as that in Ramsarun's case. The accused had conspired with other persons to prepare a document purporting to be a valuable security which he knew would be a false document, and be used for the purposes of fraud. He for that end prepared a draft which he was about to copy on an old stamp paper produced for the purpose, and applied to a witness to supply the Telugu date corresponding to the English date which the document was to contain. It was held that the accused had not passed beyond the stage of preparation, and was not guilty of an attempt to forge.⁴ The Court, however, convicted him of abetment.

In a Calcutta case, a person similar to those used by the same, it be his intention. It was held that he could not be convicted until he had committed some act ders for the printing of certain receipt forms Company, and corrected the proofs of the receipt forms in order to commit a fraud. It was held that he was guilty of an attempt to commit forgery by using one of the forms a false document,

¹ *Mv*² Per

p. 106.

³ K
P

(1894) 16 All. 409.

sami, (1881) 3 Mad. 4.

that until a form had been converted into a document, all that was done consisted in mere preparation for the commission of an offence. Garth, C. J., said: "In my opinion, the printed form was not in itself a false document, and that it would not have become a false document, or part of a document (according to the definition in s. 461), until the seal or signature of the Bengal Coal Company had been forged upon it, so as to make it appear that such seal or signature was that of the Bengal Coal Company. The prisoner, therefore, would not be guilty of the offence of forgery until the printed form had thus been converted into a false document; and for the same reason, I think that he would not be guilty of an attempt to commit forgery until he had done some act towards making one of the forms a false document. If, for instance, he had been caught in the act of writing the name of the Company upon the printed form, and had only completed a single letter of the name, I think that he would have been guilty of the offence charged, because... 'the actual transaction would have commenced, which would have ended in the crime of forgery, if not interrupted.' But as it was, all that he did consisted in mere preparation for the commission of the crime. He was no more guilty of an attempt to commit forgery in having the forms printed, than he would have been of an attempt to commit burglary by having a false key made of the house where he intended to commit the offence." Prinsep, J., said: "The acts... committed do not amount to an attempt, but at most only to a preparation to commit a forgery which might have proceeded no further... There must be something 'commenced which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted.'"¹ The definition of 'attempt' as given in the judgment in this case may be regarded as overruled in view of later English decisions on the point.²

Personation.—Where the accused was found carrying a police jacket under his arm with intent that it should be believed that he was a police constable, it was held that he was not guilty under s. 171 as his act amounted merely to preparation to commit the offence punishable under that section.³

Obtaining a certificate by false statements.—Where the accused by false statements obtained a certificate entitling him to a refund of octroi duty but was arrested before he applied for the refund, it was held that this amounted to a preparation only, for he might have torn up the certificate or changed his mind.⁴

Adulteration.—A contractor for the supply of milk to a regimental hospital was found in the hospital compound with about three gallons of stale milk in his possession going in the direction of the place where the cows were about to be milked, this milk being in a can similar to those in which the cows were milked. It was held that his act did not amount to more than preparation.⁵

Procuring poisonous drug to kill a person.—The accused asked a native doctor to supply her with medicine for the purpose of poisoning her son-in-law. It was held that the offence committed was not an attempt to murder, as it was a mere act by way of preparation to commit an offence and was not a transaction which would have necessarily ended in murder if not interrupted, but that such act might be held to be an instigation by the native doctor to abet the accused in the commission of murder, and with reference to s. 103, expln. 4, might have been punished under ss. 116 and 302.⁶

Administering poison. Where a woman with a view to poison her husband administered to him a substance which was harmless and which could not in any circumstances bring about his death, but which she believed to be poison, it was

¹ Rand. Al. (1881) 7 Cal. 322, 256, 257.

² Brown, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 357; Fry.

(1892) 17 Cox 401.

³ Ag. P. Kyan, (1904) 1 U. R. R. (P. C.) 2.

⁴ Idrott, (1880) 8 All. 204.

⁵ Sikka, (1885) P. R. No. 40 of 1885.

⁶ Mass. Balkiswar, (1882) P. R. No. 24 of 1882.

held that she could not be convicted under this section read with s. 328, as the administration of the harmless substance was not an act towards the administration of the poisonous substance. Her act which was complete in itself and not constituting an offence could not constitute an attempt to commit an offence.¹

Arming oneself with a weapon to kill another.—The accused, on quarrelling with the complainant, fetched a sword, but was seized and disarmed by others before he could use it. He, however, asserted, while under restraint, his intention of killing the complainant if he were let go. It was held that fetching a sword was not an attempt under this section, since it was not "an act of such an approximate nature as would amount to an attempt to commit murder or grievous hurt; there was, it may be conceded, a preparation towards the commission of some such offence, but mere preparation is not sufficient to complete the offence of attempt under s. 511... It is quite possible that although the prisoner fetched the sword he might not after all have actually used it against the complainant, who was his own brother."² Similarly, where the accused raised his knife in a threatening manner manifesting an intention to stab, but did not actually try to stab the complainant, it was held that the act fell short of an attempt to stab.³

Suicide.—A woman ran to a well, stating that she would jump into it, and she was caught before she could reach it. The High Court in holding that she could not be convicted of an attempt to commit suicide remarked: "There is no doubt that the accused intended to commit suicide, and that she prepared to carry out that intention and proceeded to the well. She might have, however, still changed her mind, and she was caught before she did anything which might be regarded as the commencement of the offence."⁴

Murder.—A young Brahmin widow was confined of a child. The Chief Constable of Police, acting on information that the accused was about to kill the baby, went to search her house with a number of men, and found her lying on the first floor, and discovered on the second floor a living new-born child wrapped up in a cloth with a cooking pot turned over it. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused of attempt to murder. The High Court, on appeal, reversed the conviction, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support it.⁵

Theft.—The accused, with another boy, was seen by a policeman to sit together on some doorsteps near a crowd, and when a well-dressed person came up to see what was going on, one of the accused made a sign to others, and two of them got up and followed the person into the crowd. One of them was seen to lift the tail of the coat of that man, as if to ascertain if there was anything in the pocket, but making no visible attempt to pick the pocket, and to place a hand against the dress of a woman but no actual attempt to insert that hand into the pocket was observed. They then returned to the doorstep and resumed their seats. They repeated this two or three times. It was held that this was not sufficient evidence of an attempt to steal.⁶

House-trespass.—A person, who went at night on the roof of the house of another person with a stick and an instrument used for house-breaking, was held to be guilty of house-trespass under s. 447, and not of an attempt to commit house-breaking by night.⁷ The Court observed: "Mere presence on the roof of the house cannot be construed into an attempt to commit an offence under s. 511... In order to apply s. 511, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary not merely that there should be an attempt to commit an offence, but likewise that an act was done as such attempt towards the commission of the offence. Mere passing on the roof of the house

¹ Mt. Rupa Pantu, (1895) 9 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 14.

² Data Ram, (1862) P. R. No. 45 of 1862.

See also Shera, (1868) P. R. No. 18 of 1868.

³ Taa Do Hla, (1902) 1 L. R. 264.

⁴ Per Mattusami Ayyar, J., in Ramalia,

(1884) 8 Mad. 5, 6.

⁵ Chima, (1871) 8 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 16f.

⁶ Taylor, (1871) 25 L. T. 75.

⁷ Wolidad, (1907) P. R. No. 15 of 1907, followed in Batra Khan, (1919) 10 L. R. R. 51.

cannot in any sense be termed an act towards the commission of the burglary. It is an act of approach towards the house for the purpose of stealthily effecting an entrance into the premises, but can hardly be said to exceed the limits of mere preparation. While on the roof the accused had yet time to make up his mind to recede or attempt an entrance according as he found his opportunity or the state of vigilance inside the premises. It cannot be said that by his presence on the roof of the house he had finally committed himself to committing the offence of house-breaking."

Cheating.—The forwarding of fictitious consignment notes by a Station Master was held merely to be a preparation to commit the offence of cheating, as it was not done in the attempt to cheat.¹ This view is not sound, though the decision is right as the accused was convicted of abetment. With the object of obtaining money under an insurance policy the accused had recourse to a fraudulent device in order to attract the attention of passers-by and induce them to believe that he had been assaulted, bound, and robbed by burglars. Owing to the intervention of the police, who discovered the fraud, no communication was made to the underwriters, nor was any claim made under the policy. It was held that the accused could not be convicted of an attempt to obtain money by false pretences.²

Adultery.—Preparation or providing an opportunity is a stage of the proceeding short of attempt and is not punishable by law.³ An opportunity was made for sexual intercourse by a married woman's going to the accused's shop. She was at once followed, and the shop, as it were, besieged. It was held that the acts done amounted only to preparation and were not punishable as an attempt to commit adultery.⁴ The presence of a woman in the same room with the accused was held insufficient to prove any attempt to commit adultery.⁵

Kidnapping.—The law allows locus penitentiae, and will not hold that a person has attempted a crime until he has passed beyond the stage of preparation.⁶ An indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which can be held to be a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. A minor girl under the age of sixteen years was taken by accused No. 1, under the direction of accused No. 2 from Sholapur to Tuljapur (in the Nizam's territory) and there dedicated to goddess Amba, with intent or knowing it to be likely that the minor would be used for the purpose of prostitution. It was held that the intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl to Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment. Ranade, J., said: "In the present case, beyond the mere intention and indirect preparation, there was no distinct offence by way of instigating the act committed out of British India. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute an offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which can be held to be a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same."⁷

Rape.—Facts amounting to preparation only so far as a particular offence is concerned may independently amount to another offence under certain circumstances. In a case the accused was convicted by "C" of an attempt to rape. On appeal it was contended that the evidence established more than an indecent assault. Melv

¹ Raghunath, (1889) Unrep. Cr. C. 470.

² Robinson, [1915] 2 K. B. 342

³ Paira Ram, (1902) P. R. No. 25 of 1902

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Ghulam Mahomed, (1879) P. R. No. 13 of 1879.

⁶ Padala Venkatasami, (1881) 3 Mad. 4.

⁷ Balu, (1899) 1 Bom. L. R. 678, 681, 24 Bom. 287.

on which we entertain any doubt in this case is whether the prisoner's conduct amounted to an attempt to commit rape. In Reg. v. Lloyd,¹ Patterson, J., in summing up, said :—“ In order to find the prisoner guilty of an assault with intent to commit a rape, you must be satisfied that the prisoner, when he laid hold of the prosecutrix, not only desired to gratify his passions upon her person, but that he intended to do so at all events, and notwithstanding any resistance on her part. We believe that in this country indecent assaults are often magnified into attempts at rape, and even more often into rape itself ; and we think that a conviction of an attempt at rape ought not to be arrived at unless the Court be satisfied that the conduct of the accused indicated a determination to gratify his passions at all events, and in spite of all resistance. In the present case, having regard to the medical evidence, and to the varying statements made at different times by the complainant, we find it impossible to place entire reliance upon her statement ; and, as to the extent of the violence to which she was subjected, there is no evidence except her own statement. The Sessions Court has not believed her allegation that penetration took place, and has consequently refused to convict the prisoner of rape. We feel a similar hesitation in coming to the conclusion, on the complainant's unsupported statement, that the prisoner's conduct amounted to an attempt to commit rape. He seems to have desisted before he was interrupted ; and no evidence has been given to show that the complainant's person showed marks of violence (while the Civil Surgeon's evidence is to the contrary effect), nor that the clothes, either of the complainant's or the prisoner's showed any stains which would indicate to what point the prisoner's criminality had proceeded.”² The conviction was made under s. 354.

3. Attempt.—“ Attempt ” is the direct movement towards the commission after the preparations are made.³ An attempt to commit a crime must be something more than mere preparation.⁴ Acts remotely leading towards the commission of the offence are not to be considered as attempts to commit it, but acts immediately connected with it are.⁵ The difference between mere preparation and actual attempt to commit an offence consists chiefly in the greater degree of determination in ‘ attempt ’ as compared with ‘ preparation.’⁶

“ Attempt is an act done in part execution of a criminal design, amounting to more than mere preparation, but falling short of actual consummation, and, possessing, except for failure to consummate, all the elements of the substantive crime; in other words, an attempt consists in the intent to commit a crime, combined with the doing of some act adapted to but falling short of its actual commission ; it may consequently be defined as that which if not prevented would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted.”⁷

The Calcutta High Court in *Riasat Ali's case*⁸ laid down that a person could not be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under this section unless the offence would have been committed if the attempt charged had succeeded. It based its decision on the observations of Cockburn, C. J., in *R. v. M'Pherson*⁹ (viz., “ The word ‘ attempt ’ clearly conveys with it the idea, that if the attempt had succeeded, the offence charged would have been committed ”), and of Blackburn, J., in *R. v. Cheeseman*¹⁰ (viz., “ If the actual transaction has commenced which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted, there is clearly an attempt to commit the crime ”). In M'Pherson's case the accused was indicted for breaking and entering a dwelling house and stealing therein certain goods. All those goods

¹ (1836) 7 C. & P. 318.

² Shankar, (1881) 5 Bom. 403, 404.

³ Quoted with approval from Mayne's Criminal Law in Petersen's case, (1876) 1 All. 316 ; and Parula Venkataswami, (1891) 3 Mad. 4.

⁴ Robinson, (1915) 2 K. B. 342.

⁵ Eagleton, (1855) 6 Cox 559

⁶ Mangal, O. S. C. 76.

⁷ Per Woodroffe, J., in In the matter of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, (1919) 30 C. L. J. 239, 293, 404.

⁸ (1881) 7 Cal. 352.

⁹ (1857) Drum. & B. 197, 202, 7 Cox 291.

¹⁰ (1862) L. & C. 140, 145.

had been stolen by other persons before the accused entered the house; but there were other goods of the complainant which the accused might have stolen if he had not been interrupted. The jury acquitted the accused of the felony charged, but found him guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the complainant and attempting to steal his goods therein. It was held that the conviction was wrong. In Cheeseman's case the accused was entrusted by his master with some meat which was to be weighed out and delivered to a customer. By means of a false weight he kept back a part of the meat with intent to steal it; but the fraud was discovered before he had actually moved away with it. It was held that he had committed an attempt to steal the meat. M'Pherson's case was followed in *R. v. Collins*¹ wherein Cockburn, C. J., again said: "An attempt to commit felony can only in point of law be made out where, if no interruption had taken place, the attempt could have been carried out successfully, so as to constitute the offence which the accused is charged with attempting to commit." In this case the accused put his hand into the gown pocket of a lady with intent to steal what he could find there; but the pocket was empty and he could not steal anything. It was held that he could not be convicted of an attempt to steal. But Collins' case has been expressly overruled in *R. v. Brown*² and R. v. Ring,³ which lay down that in order to prove that an attempt to commit a felony has been committed, it is not necessary to prove that, had the attempt not been frustrated, the felony would have been committed. In Brown's case the accused had pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with having attempted to commit unnatural offences with domestic fowls. In Ring's case the accused were seen to hurry on to the platform of a station just as a train was about to start; they did not go by that train, and separated on reaching the platform. On the arrival of the succeeding train, they crowded round and hustled a woman who was entering a compartment, and one of them was seen endeavouring to find the pocket of her dress. It was held that they were guilty of an attempt to steal. In Q. v. Williams,⁴ two Judges expressly say that they do not assent to the notion that a person cannot be convicted of an attempt to do that which the law says he cannot do. However, in a case⁵ decided two years after Brown's case, we find the Calcutta High Court re-affirming its decision in Riasat Ali's case. The view of the Calcutta High Court is, therefore, not in accordance with the present view of the English law, and, as it is based on the authorities which are expressly overruled, it is no longer good law.

The Allahabad High Court has not followed Riasat Ali's case. It has remarked in *Ramsaran's case*⁶ and *MacCrea's case*⁷ that the rulings of English Judges on the criminal law of England are inapplicable to the interpretation of the Indian Penal Code, which the Courts in India must interpret on the same principles of interpretation as they would employ in the interpretation of any other Act of the legislature. In the latter case A had obtained administration to the estate of his brother H, and had caused a Government promissory note, No. 9764 which belonged to M, to be entered in the letters of administration as part of the estate of the deceased. The note was in the possession of the Controller-General and the accused MacCrea joined A in an attempt to induce that officer to deliver it to him or to A. Letters were written by the accused to that officer but they were not relied on, and the Judge directed the attention of the jury to the acts committed by the accused in making use of the letters of administration granted to A, and in the preparation of a so-called copy of the lost note, and its production before the City Magistrate. The scheme failed, and the accused was convicted of an attempt to cheat.⁸

¹ (1864) 33 L. J. (N. S.) 127, 178.

² (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 337.

³ (1892) 17 Cox 491.

⁴ (1893) 1 Q. B. 520.

⁵ Chand, Prasad v. Akbar, Lakshmi, (1891).

⁶ 22 Cal. 131, 128.

⁷ (1872) 4 N. W. P. 46, 47.

⁸ (1890) 15 All. 173, 178.

⁹ Id., pp. 177, 178.

In Ramsaran's case, Turner, J., said: "To constitute then the offence of attempt under this section, there must be an act done with the intention of committing an offence, and for the purpose of committing that offence, and it must be done in attempting the commission of the offence.

"Two illustrations of the offence of attempt as defined in this section are given in the Code; both are illustrations of cases in which the offence has been committed. In each we find an act done with the intent of committing an offence, and immediately enabling the commission of the offence, although it was not an act which constituted a part of the offence; and in each we find the intention of the person making the attempt was frustrated by circumstances independent of his own volition.

"From the illustrations it may be inferred that the Legislature did not mean that the act done must be itself an ingredient (so to say) of the offence attempted, and in this respect there appears to me there is a noticeable difference between the definition given in the section under consideration and that given in section 307. To convict a person of an attempt to murder under section 307 it must be shown that he has done some act with such intention, that, if by that act he caused death, he would be guilty of murder under section 307, then the act necessary to constitute the attempt is an act which, if it had not fallen short of its object, would have constituted the offence attempted. Similarly, to constitute an attempt under section 308, the act proved must be an act which, had the results contemplated by the doer followed, would have completed the offence attempted; whereas, under the terms of section 511, it is only necessary to prove an act done in the attempt towards the commission of the offence, and, as the illustrations show, an act in itself complete, and not falling short of its object, or failing to bring about the result anticipated by the doer.

"The circumstances stated in the illustrations to section 511, Indian Penal Code, would not have constituted attempts under the English law, and I cannot but think that they were introduced in order to show that the provisions of section 511, Ind. Code, were designed to extend to a much wider range of cases than we have in the English law."

In The Queen-Empress v. Riasat Ali, the learned Chief Justice appears to have acted upon English precedents, and those precedents, precedents of no modern date. So far as I am concerned, I feel myself unable to follow the English law, because there appears to me a wide difference between the meaning of the word 'attempt' as understood by English lawyers in the phrase 'attempt to commit a felony,' and the word 'attempt' as actually defined in the Indian Penal Code. With all respect therefore to the learned Chief Justice, I have no doubt that the word 'attempt' as used in s. 511. In this case no reference is made to Q. v. Peterson,¹ in which Pearson, J., followed the American rule that "an attempt can only be manifested by acts which would end in the consummation of the offence, but for the intervention of circumstances independent of the will of the party."

In a Bombay case 'attempt' has been defined as "an intentional preparatory action which fails in object—which so fails through circumstances independent of the person who seeks its accomplishment."² "Where a man does an intentional external act, something tangible and ostensible of which the law can take notice."

¹ (1876) 1 All. 316, 317.

² Per Jenkins, C. J., in Luzman Narayan Joshi, (1899) 2 Bom. L. R. 286, 296.

³ Per Jenkins, C. J., in Vinayak Narayan Bhatye, (1899) 2 Bom. L. R. 304, 307, 308; Jaimal, (1924) 1 L. C. 331.

an act showing progress towards the actual commission of the offence. It does not matter that the progress is interrupted.¹

Stephen² says: "An attempt to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted. The point at which such a series of acts begin cannot be defined; but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case." Attempt is also defined as "an act done in part execution of a criminal design, amounting to more than mere preparation, but falling short of actual consummation and possessing, except for failure to consummate, all the elements of the substantive crime."³

1. 'Offence punishable by this Code.'—This leaves untouched attempts to commit, or to cause to be committed, offences under special or local laws which are not also offences under the Code. No criminal liability can be incurred under the Code by an attempt to do an act which, if done, will not be an offence against the Code.⁴

Impossible offence.—"An attempt... is possible, even when the offence attempted cannot be committed; as when a person, intending to pick another person's pocket, thrusts his hand into the pocket, but finds it empty. That such an act would amount to a criminal attempt, appears from the illustrations to section 511. But in doing such an act, the offender's intention is to commit a complete offence, and his act only falls short of the offence by reason of an accidental circumstance which has prevented the completion of the offence. It is possible to attempt to commit an impossible theft, and so offend against the Code, because theft is itself an offence against the Code, and may, therefore, be attempted within the meaning of the Code."⁵

The trend of recent English decisions, as already observed, is that it is not necessary that it should have been legally or physically possible for the offender to commit the full offence.⁶

2. 'With transportation or imprisonment.'—Offences punishable with death only, or fine only, are not contemplated by this section.

3. 'To cause such an offence to be committed.'—This will include an attempt to abet an offence. So it has been held that it is not legally impossible to attempt the abetment of an offence—the abetment of an offence being itself an offence.⁷ A common form of such attempt is the soliciting of another to commit an offence. The act done towards the commission of the offence consists in the solicitation itself. It will not affect the offence though the person solicited declines the persuasion.

4. 'Does any act towards the commission of the offence.'—In each of the two illustrations given under this section there is not merely an act done with the intention to commit an offence, which act is unsuccessful because it could not possibly result in the completion of the offence, but an act is done 'towards the commission of the offence,' that is to say, the offence remains incomplete only because something

¹ Ganesh Balwant Modak, (1909) 12 Bom. L. R. 21.

² Dig. of Crim. L., Art. 50 (5th Edn.).

³ Inde American and English Encyclopedia of Law, Vol. III, p. 250 (2nd Edn.), where several definitions of 'attempt' are given.

⁴ Mangesh Jivaji, (1887) 11 Bom. 376, 381. Budan, (1910) P. R. No. 2 of 1911.

⁵ Per Birdwood, J., in Mangesh Jivaji, sup., pp. 380, 381; Mt. Export Panku, (1895) 9 C. P. L. R. (Cr.) 14, does not lay down sound law. In that case a woman with a view to poison her husband administered to him a substance which was harmless and which could not in any circumstances bring about his death, but which she believed to be poison. It was held that she could not be convicted under ss. 511 and 328 as the administration of the harmless substance was not an act towards the administration of a poisonous substance; and that her act which was complete in itself and not constituting an offence, could not constitute an attempt to commit an offence.

⁶ Brown, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 357; Ring, (1892) 17 Cox 491, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116; Williams, [1893] 1 Q. B. 320.

⁷ Spier, (1887) P. R. No. 49 of 1887.

yet remains to be done, which the person intending to commit the offence is unable to do by reason of circumstances independent of his own volition. Thus, in ill. (a) the act of breaking open the box is done towards the commission of the theft of the jewels. The theft itself, that is the actual removal of the jewels, still remains to be done and it remains undone only because it turns out that there are no jewels to remove. In ill. (b) Z fails to comply with the essentials of theft simply because there is nothing in the pocket.

False evidence.—Where the accused dug a hole intending to place salt in it, in order that the discovery of the salt might be used in evidence against the prosecutor in a judicial proceeding, it was held that he was guilty of an attempt to fabricate false evidence, because by digging the pit he did an act towards the commission of the offence.¹

Counterfeiting coin.—The accused with intent to coin counterfeit half dollars of Peru, caused to be made and procured in England dies necessary for the purpose of making such counterfeit coin, but which would not alone produce it, but the accused intended to procure the rest of the necessary apparatus for the purpose and with the intention of using the entire apparatus, when procured, in making the counterfeit coin. It was found that the accused intended to make only a few of the counterfeit coins in England by way of trying whether the apparatus would answer before sending it out to Peru to be there used in making counterfeit coin. It was held that to make a few coins in England with the object stated would be to commit the offence of making counterfeit foreign coin and that the procuring the dies was an act in furtherance of the criminal purpose sufficiently proximate to the offence.²

Unnatural offence.—The accused sent to H a letter with intent to incite H to commit an unnatural offence. H was a boy at school and he had received two other letters from the accused which he had read, but he had not read the one on which the charge was framed and which he had handed over to the school authorities. It was held that the sending the letter proved the attempt to incite, although it might be doubtful whether it could be said to amount to inciting or soliciting, inasmuch as H was not aware of its contents.³

Bribery.—Where B, who was employed as a clerk in the Pension Department, in an interview with A, who was an applicant for a pension, after referring to his own influence in that department, and instancing appeals in which, by that influence, increased pensions had been obtained, promised to procure that anything might be effected by payment, and, on the overture being rejected, concluded by declaring that A would rue and repent the rejection of it, it was held that the offence of attempting to obtain a bribe was consummated.⁴ A person who offers to pay gratification to a public servant is punishable under ss. 116, 161, and 511.⁵

Cheating.—M wrote a letter to the Currency Office at Calcutta, enclosing the halves of two Government currency notes, stating that the other halves were lost, and enquiring what steps were to be taken for their recovery. The Currency Office having been paid to the holder of the notes, and the amount of the notes had been withdrawn from circulation, M then sent M the notes to the Currency Office and returned to it. M never contemplated paying for the notes, and the Currency Office was not intended to return the notes to M, although M intended to return the notes to the Currency Office. M was guilty of cheating, and was punishable under ss. 116, 161, and 511.⁶

1 A
2 H
3 B

W. P. L.
J. Hearn
O.

6 B
7

ALL
No.

Rs. 530 containing two pieces of waste paper, intending to use the receipt for the same as evidence of payment of Rs. 530 towards the liquidation of his debt to the complainant. It was held that the petitioner was guilty of an attempt to cheat.¹

The accused, having contracted to deliver a certain quantity of good cotton to the complainant, delivered instead for acceptance by the complainant a quantity of bad cotton, that is, cotton heavily adulterated with rubbish in such a manner that the fraud would be likely to escape the ordinary inspection. The complainant's agent, to whom delivery was offered, suspected the character of the goods and declined to accept them. The accused were, on these facts, convicted of the offence of attempting to cheat. On appeal they were acquitted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the acts of the accused did not amount to an attempt to cheat but only to a preparation for cheating. It was held, setting aside the order of acquittal, that there was a complete case of an attempt to cheat, and the only at an attempt and did not proceed to the who was sought to be cheated was cautious and did all they could to perfect their offence, that is to say, an overt act was begun which would have led to the finished offence, but for an interruption arising independently of the will of the accused.² A manufactured spurious trinkets, and took them to N saying they were of gold (which they were not) and that they were stolen property (which was also not true) and that he (A) did not like to sell them in the bazaar and asked him to buy. N did not buy, but A was arrested. It was argued that no attempt to cheat had been proved, because more had to be done by A, such as weighing the articles, etc., before wrongful loss would fall upon N. It was held that the act of A amounted to an attempt to cheat.³ The first accused insured his paddy in certain godowns with three Fire own, he first sent to the subsequently presented as to the quantity of paddy stored in the godowns and destroyed by the fire. It was held that the sending of the notices was an act of preparation but when the accused followed up these notices with the actual claim papers, he committed himself to a representation of fact which being false to his knowledge must be regarded as an overt act towards the commission of the offence of cheating—an act which had gone beyond the stage of preparation.⁴ The accused sent two anonymous letters to the complainant, a well-to-do Mahomedan purporting to come from the Deity at Nagore directing him to pay certain sums of money to a person specified in the letters and threatening him with ruin and death from Divine displeasure if he failed to do so. He showed two more letters to the complainant purporting to have been received by him from the Nagore Deity wherein he was commanded to explain the serious situation and to receive Rs. 300 from the complainant and finally followed it up with a letter saying that that was the last communication that the complainant would receive and that dire consequences would follow without further warning. Th not believe the letters. It accused informed an octroi superintendent that there were sixteen maunds of an article in a cart, whereas there were only six, and by this act he induced the superintendent to grant him a refund of the duty on sixteen maunds of the article instead of six maunds, and where this was discovered before any money was paid to the accused; it was held that the accused was guilty

¹ Arura, (1912) P. L. R. No. 299 of 1913.

² Mansing Daji Patil, (1913) 15 Bom. L. R. 568, 2 Bom. Cr. C. 80.

³ Abdullah, (1914) P. R. No. 14 of 1914.

⁴ Maung Po Hmyin, (1923) 2 Rang. 53.

⁵ Dorassamy Ayyar, (1925) 48 Mad. 774, [1925] M. W. N. 113.

Melting sovereigns.—The accused, a professional melter of gold and silver, was found near the heated furnace in his workshop with a crucible containing molten silver and 500 sovereigns along at hand. He was, on these facts, found guilty of the offence punishable under Rules 21-A and 28 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1915. It was held that he was guilty of attempt to melt sovereigns for the only act that remained unperformed to complete the offence of melting the sovereigns was the final act of putting the sovereigns into the molten silver in the crucible.¹

Abduction.—Where the accused lifted a woman on her refusing to accompany them from the bed of her husband where she was sleeping on the roof of the house and on alarm being given dropped her there and made good their escape; it was held that the offence of abduction was not completed but the accused were guilty of an attempt to abduct her.²

Act too remote.—The words 'does any act towards the commission of the offence' must not be construed to include all acts, however remote, which tend towards the commission of the offence. The thing done may be too small or it may proceed too short a way towards the accomplishment of the offence for the law to notice it as an attempt (vide ills. to s. 307). "It is difficult, and perhaps impossible, to lay down a clear and definite rule, to define what is, and what is not such an act done, in furtherance of a criminal intent, as will constitute an offence. Many acts, coupled with the intent, would not be sufficient. For instance, if a man intends to commit a murder, and is seen to walk towards the place of the contemplated scene, that would not be enough."³ It has been laid down, "Acts remotely leading towards the commission of the offence are not to be considered as attempts to commit it, but acts immediately connected with it are."⁴ The act must be one immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he has the power of carrying his intention into execution. Thus, it is a sufficient overt act to render a person liable to be found guilty of attempting to set fire to a stack of hay, to go to the stack, with the intention of setting fire to it, and light a lucifer for that purpose, but abandons the attempt because he finds that he is being watched.⁵

In a village, incendiarism had occurred on several occasions. A ball of rag with a piece of burning charcoal within it. The prisoner was discovered to have a ball of that description concealed in his pocket. It contained burning charcoal. It was held, but not unanimously, that this was an attempt to commit mischief by fire. Glover J. said: "If the prisoner had a piece of unlighted charcoal only, I should have held that it was not sufficient commencement of any act which would lead to mischief by fire, and that the prisoner would be liable only for being a person who, intending to murder some other person, or to cause the death of him, buys a gun or poison and keeps it ready for use. It is dangerous, and not so immediately connected with the commission of the offence, as punishable under s. 511 of the Penal Code. It is a mere preparation for causing mischief by fire, and is not a sufficient commencement of the offence. A party carrying it had no opportunity of using it. It was not a step towards going about at night providing for the commission of the offence. It was mischief by fire, intended to be committed, and the prisoner was liable to move towards the commission of the offence."⁶

¹ Abu Hama, (1911) 2 Cr. App. 121.
² Per Cr. App. 121.

³ Alia, (1911) 2 Cr. App. 121.

⁴ Per Jones, (1911) 2 Cr. App. 121.
 (1915) 2 Cr. App. 121.

'attempt.' Mitter, J., on the other hand, said: "The only fact proved against the prisoner is that he was apprehended with a ball of rag containing a piece of lighted charcoal in his possession; but this fact is no more consistent with the intention of setting fire to a human dwelling than with that of setting fire to a stack of hay or to something else. There is not a particle of evidence on the record to show that the prisoner intended to destroy any particular object by fire, and in the absence of such evidence it is impossible to say that he intended to destroy a building used as a human dwelling. . . . The mere fact of being in possession of a ball, like the one which was found with the prisoner, is by no means sufficient to warrant a conviction for attempting to cause mischief by fire. In order to support a conviction for attempting to commit an offence of the nature described in s. 511, it is not only necessary that the prisoner should have done an overt act 'towards the commission of the offence,' but that the act itself should have been done 'in the attempt' to commit it. The Sessions Judge says that the very fact that the prisoner went out of his house with the ball which was found in his possession, was an overt act, 'towards the commission of the offence,' but the question is, was there any attempt to commit a particular offence, and if so, was the act done 'in such attempt'? I am of opinion, that both these questions ought to be answered in the negative. Suppose a man goes out of his house into the street with a loaded gun in his possession, and suppose even that there is evidence to show that he did so with the intention of shooting Z. If Z is not found in the street, or when found no attempt is made to shoot him either from fear or repentance, or from any other cause, can it be said that the man is guilty of attempting to murder Z? The going out of one's house with a loaded gun and with the intention of shooting a particular individual might be in one sense considered as an act done towards the shooting of that individual; but so long as nothing further is done, so long as there is no attempt to shoot him, and no overt act done 'in such attempt,' it is impossible to hold that there has been an attempt to murder. There can be no doubt that the man, who goes out of his house in such a manner and with such an intention, does an act which is highly reprehensible and improper, and the legislature might have, if it thought fit, declared it punishable as an offence; but in the absence of such a declaration, it is not for us to say that the author of that act ought not to go unpunished. . . . The distinctions made by the legislature between the offences of 'attempting to commit dacoity,' 'making preparations for dacoity,' and 'assembling together for the purpose of committing dacoity,' seem to support this view very strongly."¹

An act too remote, or quite foreign to the end proposed, or too small for the law's notice, creates no apparent danger and perturbation in the peaceful order of things, and therefore is not sufficient in attempt.² But where a person does an act, the natural consequence of which is criminal, but such consequence is prevented by extraneous causes, he is nevertheless to be taken to have intended that the natural consequence of his act should result, that is to say, he is to be considered as having intended to commit the crime which would have resulted had he not been prevented from completing his act. Where, therefore, in support of a conviction for attempting to discharge a loaded fire-arm with intent to do grievous bodily harm, the evidence was that the accused had presented a loaded revolver at another person, but had been prevented from discharging it by a third person, it was held that the accused intended to do that which he was prevented from doing; and that there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction.³ Similarly, where the accused pointed at the prosecutor a revolver loaded in some of its chambers with ball cartridges, but not in others, saying that he would shoot him, and he pulled the trigger of the revolver, but the hammer fell upon a chamber

¹ Doyal Buro, (1869) 3 Bng. L. R. s. 739 (8th Edn.)

(A. Cr. J.) 55, 56.

² Bishop's New Criminal Law, Vol. I,

³ Duckworth, (1892) 17 Cox 495.

which contained an empty cartridge case, it was held that the accused could be convicted of attempting to discharge a loaded arm with intent to murder.¹ Where the acts committed by the accused consisted in running after the complainant with an axe in his hand and raising it to the shoulder when about four foot-steps from the complainant, but before there was time to do anything further in pursuance of his purpose the axe was snatched out of the accused's hands, it was held that the accused was not guilty of an attempt to commit murder as neither of his acts could per se have caused death, but that he was guilty of an offence to cause grievous hurt punishable under this section read with s. 326.²

In Ramsarun's case,³ Turner, J., said: "I do not hold that the provisions of this section would extend to make punishable as attempts acts done in the mere stage of preparation. Although such acts are doubtless done towards the commission of the offence, they are not done in the attempt to commit the offence in the construction which I think should be put on the term 'attempt' as used in this section. I regard that term as here employed as indicating the actual taking of those steps which lead immediately to the commission of the offence, although nothing be done, or omitted, which of itself is a necessary constituent of the offence attempted." But in MacCrea's case,⁴ Knox, J., after remarking that Turner, J., arrived at that conclusion not without some doubt, observes: "I do not hold, and have no hesitation in saying, that s. 511 was never meant to cover only the penultimate act towards completion of an offence and not acts precedent, if those acts are done in the course of the attempt to commit the offence, are done with the intent to commit it and done towards its commission.

"It is no doubt most difficult to frame a satisfactory and exhaustive definition which shall lay down for all cases where preparation to commit an offence ends and where attempt to commit that offence begins. The question is not one of mere proximity in time or place. Many offences can easily be conceived where, with all necessary preparations made, a long interval will still elapse between the hour when the attempt to commit the offence commences and the hour when it is completed. The offence of cheating and inducing delivery is an offence in point. The time that may elapse between the moment when the preparations made for committing the fraud are brought to bear upon the mind of the person to be deceived and the moment when he yields to the deception practised upon him may be a very considerable interval of time. There may be the interposition of inquiries and other acts upon his part. The acts whereby those preparations may be brought to bear upon the mind may be several in point of number, and yet the first act after preparation completed will, if criminal in itself, be, beyond all doubt, equally an attempt with the ninety and ninth act in the series.

"Again, the attempt once begun and a criminal act done in pursuance of it towards the commission of the act attempted, does not cease to be a criminal attempt, in my opinion, because the person committing the offence does or may repent before the attempt is completed. The attempt to defraud a widow of valuable security commenced by an act of criminal intimidation committed in such attempt and towards the fraud does not cease to be an attempt because the perpetrator repents and abstains from completing the attempt.

"The question whether the act is an act of preparation or an act in the attempt and towards commission is a fact to be determined upon the evidence. It is in most cases a question for the jury to distinguish between an act before attempt has begun, an act after attempt begun, and towards commission of the offence attempted, and an act independent of the attempt altogether."

Blair, J., also in the same case, remarks:⁵ "The definition of 'attempt' is conveyed in s. 511, Indian Penal Code... It seems to me that that section uses the

¹ Jackson, (1890) 17 Cox 104.

² Jivan Das, (1904) P. R. No. 30 of 1904.

³ (1872) 4 N. W. P. 46, 48

⁴ (1893) 15 AIL 173, 179.

⁵ Ibid., p. 181.

word 'attempt' in a very large sense; it seems to imply that such an attempt may be made up of a series of acts, and that any one of those acts done towards the commission of the offence, that is, conducive to its commission, is itself punishable, and, though the Act does not use the words, it can mean nothing but punishable as an attempt. It does not say that the last act which would form the final part of an attempt in the larger sense is the only act punishable under the section. It says expressly that whosoever in such attempt, obviously using the word in the larger sense, does any act, etc., shall be punishable. The term 'any act' excludes the notion that the final act short of actual commission is alone punishable, and the notion that any of the other acts would be without the range of this section is probably derived from the rulings in the English cases...

"The difficulty with s. 511 might easily have been removed by saying that where in such an attempt, using the word in the larger sense, any person does any act towards the commission of an offence he shall be held to have committed an 'attempt' within the meaning of this section. That I take to be the real meaning and drift of the section, differentiating in a marked manner the definition of 'attempt' in the Indian Penal Code and the accepted English doctrine."

The Bombay High Court, agreeing with the opinion of Knox, J., has held that this section does not relate only to the penultimate act, but to all preceding acts if they were done with the intent to commit or facilitate the commission of the act.¹

The Calcutta High Court has, in an early case,² laid down: "In order to support a conviction for attempting to commit an offence of the nature described in s. 511, it is not only necessary that the prisoners should have done an overt act 'towards the commission of the offence,' but that the act itself (that is the overt act) should have been done 'in the attempt' to commit it (that is, the offence)."

The former Chief Court of the Punjab decided that from the moment when an intention was formed to commit an offence, every act done which facilitated the commission of the offence, and which was done with that object in view, was, in one sense, an act done towards the commission of the offence, but the doing of every such act did not constitute an attempt to commit the offence. It must in every case be a question depending upon the circumstances, whether a particular act done (with the requisite intention) towards the commission of an offence was sufficiently proximate to its commission to constitute an attempt, or was so remote as to merely constitute preparation for its commission.³

5. 'Where no express provision is made by this Code.'—This section does not apply to cases of attempts made punishable by express provisions of the Code. The attempts specially provided for are—

Sec. 121, attempt to wage war against the Queen.

Sec. 124, attempt wrongfully to restrain the Governor-General and other high officials with intent to induce or compel them to exercise or refrain from exercising any of their lawful powers.

Sec. 125, attempt to wage war against the Government of an Asiatic Power in alliance or at peace with the King.

Sec. war.

Sec. gratification.

Sec. 162, attempt to obtain a gratification in utter by corrupt or illegal means to influence a public servant.

Sec. 163, attempt to obtain a gratification for exercising personal influence over a public servant.

Sec. 196, corrupt attempt to use as true, evidence known to be false.

¹ Anant Vinayak Puranik, (1900) 2 Bom. L. R. 633, 25 Bom. 90.

² Per Mitter, J., in Doyal Bawri, (1869) 3 Bang. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 55, 57. See Hurjee Mull

W. N. 278 No. 13 (1925)

4 B. L. J. 85.

Secs. 198 and 200, corrupt attempt to use as true, a certificate or declaration known to be false in a material point.

Sec. 213, attempt to obtain a gratification to screen an offender from punishment.

Secs. 239 and 240, attempt to induce a person to receive a counterfeit coin.

Sec. 241, attempt to induce a person to receive as genuine a counterfeit coin which, when the offender took it, he did not know to be counterfeit.

Secs. 307 and 308, attempt to commit murder and culpable homicide.

Sec. 309, attempt to commit suicide.

Secs. 385, 387 and 389, attempt to put a person in fear of injury or accusation in order to commit extortion.

Sec. 391, conjoint attempt of five or more persons to commit a robbery.

Secs. 393, 394 and 398, attempt to commit robbery.

Sec. 460, attempt by one of many joint house-breakers by night to cause death or grievous hurt.

6. 'For a term of transportation...which may extend to one-half of the longest term, etc.'—In calculating fractions of terms of punishment, transportation for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to transportation for twenty years (s. 67).

Section 75.—The offences which fall under this section must be punished entirely irrespective of s. 75.¹ See Comment on s. 75, p. 111

PRACTICE.

Evidence.—Prove (1) that the accused attempted to commit some offence punishable with transportation or imprisonment under the Indian Penal Code, or that he attempted to cause such offence to be committed

(2) That in such attempt he did some act towards the commission of that offence.

The Court should be satisfied that the offender had in his mind the design to commit a certain offence, and that he had begun to move towards an execution of his purpose: there must also be proof of some act, not of an ambiguous kind, but directly approximating to the commission of the offence. When the offender's design is made manifest by any such act, it becomes an attempt cognizable as an offence, and punishable under this section.

Procedure.—Same as for the offence attempted.

Where an accused person has been indicted for committing any offence the jury may find him not guilty of committing, but guilty of attempting to commit, the offence under this section.²

Punishment.—A was convicted of an attempt to commit rape, and was sentenced by the Judge to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, which he converted, under s. 59, to transportation for the same term. It was held that, under ss. 376 and 511 of the Indian Penal Code, a sentence of imprisonment for the offence committed could not be for a longer term than five years, and such sentence could not be converted, under s. 59, to transportation for a longer term.³

In the case of a conviction of attempting to commit house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, a sentence of whipping was annulled as being illegal.⁴

Charge.—The charge should make mention of this section and the section declaring the punishment for the offence attempted to be committed.⁵

It should run thus:—

¹ Bharosa, (1895) 17 All. 123.

² Criminal Procedure Code, s. 238.

³ Joseph Meriam, (1868) 1 Beng. L. R. (A. Cr. J.) 5, 10 W. R. (Cr.) 10.

⁴ Yella Lalad Parshia, (1861) 3 B. H. C. (Cr. C.) 37. See the Whipping Act (IV of 1900)

⁵ 1 W. R. (Cr. L.) 11.

LAW OF CRIMES.

1126

I (name and office of Magistrate, &c.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the—day of—, at—, attempted to commit (specify the offence attempted), and in such attempt did a certain act towards the commission of the said offence, to wit (specify the act done); and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under section—(specify the section punishing the offence attempted) and s. 511 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance [or within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court)].

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by a Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

A P P E N D I X .

THE ELECTION OFFENCES AND INQUIRIES ACT.

(Act No. XXXIX of 1920).

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the punishment of malpractices in connection with elections, and to make further provision for the conduct of inquiries in regard to disputed elections to legislative bodies constituted under the Government of India Act ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

PRELIMINARY.

- Short title and extent 1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian Elections Offences and Inquiries Act, 1920 ; and
- (2) It extends to the whole of British India.

PART I.

AMENDMENT OF THE INDIAN PENAL CODE AND CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

[The amendments in the Penal Code are introduced in the text at proper places]

PART II.

ELECTION INQUIRIES AND OTHER MATTERS.

- Definitions 4 In this Part, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) “ costs ” means all costs, charges and expenses of, or incidental to, an inquiry .

(b) “ election ” means an election to either chamber of the Indian legislature or to a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act ;

(c) “ inquiry ” means an inquiry in respect of an election by Commissioners appointed for that purpose by the Governor-General, Governor or Lieutenant-Governor ,

(d) “ pleader ” means any person entitled to appear and plead for another in a Civil Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court

5 Commissioners appointed to hold an inquiry shall have the powers which are vested in a Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, when trying a suit in respect of the following matters :—

Powers of commissioners.

- (a) discovery and inspection,
- (b) enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and requiring the deposit of their expenses, property in British India, or to enable any other person by means thereof to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in British India ; shall, whether any explosion does or does not take place and whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not, be punished with transportation for a term which may extend to twenty years, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, to which fine may be added.

NOTE.

This section substantially reproduces the provisions of s. 3 of the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vic., c. 3).

The word 'unlawfully' signifies 'not for a lawful object'; and the word 'maliciously' means intentionally and without justification or excuse or claim of right.¹ The latter word occurs in ss. 219-220 of the Indian Penal Code.

The 'explosive substance' need not be such as to enable a person by means thereof alone without the aid of other substances, to cause danger to life or injury to property. The term 'explosive substance' includes any part of any apparatus, machine, or implement intended to be used or adopted for causing or aiding in causing any explosive substance.

5. Any person who makes or knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance, under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he is not making it or does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object, shall, unless he can show that he made it or had it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object, be punishable with transportation for a term which may extend to fourteen years, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, to which fine may be added.

NOTE.

Under this section it is not necessary to come to any more definite finding than that the accused had possession of the explosive substance under suspicious circumstances.²

Where a bomb was found in the house of a person it was held that it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused had himself placed the bomb at the place where it was found ; that it was sufficient to prove that it was found there, and that it remained for the accused to rebut the legal inference which followed under this section.³

6. Any person who by the supply of or solicitation for money, the providing of premises, the supply of materials, or in any manner whatsoever, procures, counsels, aids, abets, or is accessory to, the commission of any offence under this Act shall be punished with the punishment provided for the offence.

7. No Court shall proceed to the trial of any person for any offence against this Act except with the consent¹ of the Local Government or the Governor-General in Council.

¹ Amrita Lal Hazra, (1915) 42 Cal. 957.

657, 7 M. L. T. 314, (1910) M. W. N. 77.

² Chukkappa Ramayya, (1919) 20 M. L. J.

³ Anar Singh, (1919) 1 L. L. J. 173.

NOTE.

Where a complaint was filed by a Sub-Inspector of Police before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of an offence under s. 399 of the Penal Code, and the facts disclosed also an offence under s. 4 (b) of this Act of which the Magistrate could not then take cognizance for want of the consent of Government under s. 7 of the Act, and a complaint was subsequently filed by the Superintendent of Police, with such consent obtained, before the Additional District Magistrate, it was held that the latter had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence and that the initiation and continuation of the proceedings by him were legal notwithstanding that he had not withdrawn the original case to his own file.¹

1. 'Consent.'—The consent under this section should state briefly the facts which constitute the offence and authorize the trial of the accused person upon those facts as constituting, in the opinion of the consenting authority, an offence under one or other sections of the Act. It is for the Court to decide finally whether upon the facts stated in the order of consent a particular offence has been committed and the mere fact that the consenting authority is of opinion that the facts constitute an offence under one section of the Act, is in itself no bar to a conviction of the person upon the same facts of another offence under another section.²

¹ Lalit Chandra Chanda Choudhury, (1911) 29 Cal. 119.

² Amar Singh, (1919) P. R. No. 31 of 1919

THE FUGITIVE OFFENDERS ACT, 1881.

(44 & 45 Vic., c. 69).

An Act to amend the Law with respect to Fugitive Offenders in Her Majesty's Dominions, and for other purposes connected with the trial of offenders.

Be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows; (that is to say).

Short title.

1. This Act may be cited as the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881.

PART I.

Return of Fugitives.

2. Where a person accused of having committed an offence (to which this part of this Act applies) in one part of Her Majesty's dominions has left that part, such person (in this Act referred to as a fugitive from that part) if found in another part of Her Majesty's dominions, shall be liable to be apprehended and returned in manner provided by this Act to the part from which he is a fugitive.

A fugitive may be so apprehended under an endorsed warrant or a provisional warrant.

3. Where a warrant has been issued in one part of Her Majesty's dominions for the apprehension of a fugitive from that part, any of the following authorities in another part of Her Majesty's dominions in or on the way to which the fugitive is or is suspected to be; (that is to say),

- (1) A judge of a superior court in such part; and
- (2) In the United Kingdom a Secretary of State and one of the magistrates of the metropolitan police court in Bow Street; and
- (3) In a British possession the governor of that possession, if satisfied that the warrant was issued by some person having lawful authority to issue the same, may endorse such warrant in manner provided by this Act. the warrant so endorsed shall be a sufficient authority to apprehend the fugitive in the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which it is endorsed, and bring him before a magistrate.

4. A magistrate of any part of Her Majesty's dominions may issue a provisional warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive who is or is suspected of being in or on his way to that part on such information, and under such circumstances, as would in his opinion justify the issue of a warrant if the offence of which the fugitive is accused had been committed within his jurisdiction, and such warrant may be backed and executed accordingly.

A magistrate issuing a provisional warrant shall forthwith send a report of the issue, together with the information or a certified copy thereof, if he is in the United Kingdom, to a Secretary of State, and if he is in a British possession, to the Governor of that possession, and the Secretary of State or Governor may, if he think fit, discharge the person apprehended under such warrant.

5. A fugitive when apprehended shall be brought before a magistrate, who (subject to the provisions of this Act) shall hear the case in the same manner and have the same jurisdiction and powers, as near as may be (including the power to remand and admit to bail), as if the fugitive were charged with an offence committed within his jurisdiction.

If the endorsed warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive is duly authenticated, and such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this Act) according to the law ordinarily administered by the magistrate, raises a strong or probable presumption that the fugitive committed the offence mentioned in the warrant, and that the offence is one to which this part of this Act applies, the magistrate shall commit the fugitive to prison to await his return, and shall forthwith send a certificate of the committal and such report of the case as he may think fit, if in the United Kingdom to a Secretary of State, and if in a British possession to the governor of that possession.

Where the magistrate commits the fugitive to prison he shall inform the fugitive that he will not be surrendered until after the expiration of fifteen days, and that he has a right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus, or other like process.

A fugitive apprehended on a provisional warrant may be from time to time remanded for such reasonable time not exceeding seven days at any one time as under the circumstances seems requisite for the production of an endorsed warrant.

6. Upon the expiration of fifteen days after a fugitive has been committed to prison to await his return, or if a writ of habeas corpus or other like process is issued with reference to such fugitive by a superior court, after the final decision of the court in the case,

(1) if the fugitive is so committed in the United Kingdom, a Secretary of State; and

(2) if the fugitive is so committed in a British possession, the governor of that possession, may, if he thinks it just, by warrant under his hand, order that fugitive to be returned to the part of Her Majesty's dominions from which he is a fugitive, and for that purpose to be delivered into the custody of the persons to whom the warrant is addressed, or some one or more of them, and to be held in custody, and conveyed by sea or otherwise to the said part of Her Majesty's dominions, to be dealt with there in due course of law as if he had been there apprehended, and such warrant shall be forthwith executed according to the tenor thereof.

The governor or other chief officer of any prison, on request of any person having the custody of a fugitive under any such warrant, and on payment or tender of a reasonable amount for expenses, shall receive such fugitive and detain him for such reasonable time as may be requested by the said person for the purpose of the proper execution of the warrant.

7. If a fugitive who, in pursuance of this part of this Act, has been committed to prison in any part of Her Majesty's dominions to await his return, is not conveyed out of that part within one month after such committal, a superior court, upon application by or on behalf of the fugitive, and upon proof that reasonable notice of the intention to make such application has been given, if the said part is the United Kingdom to a Secretary of State, and if the said part is a British possession to the governor of the possession, may, unless sufficient cause is shown to the contrary, order the fugitive to be discharged out of custody.

8. Where a person accused of an offence and returned in pursuance of this part of this Act to any part of Her Majesty's dominions, either is not prosecuted for the said offence within six months after his arrival in that part, or is acquitted of the said offence, then if that part is the United Kingdom a Secretary of State, and if that part is a British possession the Governor of that possession, may, if he think fit, on the request of such person, cause him to be sent back free of cost and with as little delay as possible to the part of Her Majesty's dominions in or on his way to which he was apprehended.

9. This part of this Act shall apply to the following offences, namely, to treason and piracy, and to every offence, whether called felony, misdemeanour, crime, or by any other name, which is for the time being punishable in the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which it was committed, either on indictment or information, by imprisonment with hard labour for a term of twelve months or more, or by any greater punishment; and for the purposes of this section, rigorous imprisonment, and any confinement in a prison combined with labour, by whatever name it is called, shall be deemed to be imprisonment with hard labour.

This part of this Act shall apply to an offence notwithstanding that by the law of the part of Her Majesty's dominions in or on his way to which the fugitive is or is suspected of being it is not an offence, or not an offence to which this part of this Act applies; and all the provisions of this part of this Act, including those relating to a provisional warrant and to a committal to prison, shall be construed as if the offence were in such last-mentioned part of Her Majesty's dominions an offence to which this part of this Act applies.

10. Where it is made to appear to a superior Court that by reason of the trivial nature of the case, or by reason of the application for the return of a fugitive not being made in good faith in the interests of justice or otherwise, it would, having regard to the distance, to the facilities for communication, and to all the circumstances of the case, be unjust or oppressive or too severe a punishment to return the fugitive either at all or until the expiration of a certain period, such court may discharge the fugitive, either absolutely or on bail, or order that he shall not be returned until after the expiration of the period named in the order, or may make such other order in the premises as to the court seems just.

11. In Ireland the Lord Lieutenant or Lords Justices or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, also the chief secretary of such Lord Lieutenant may, as well as a Secretary of State, execute any portion of the powers by this part of this Act vested in a Secretary of State.

PART II.

Inter-Colonial Backing of Warrants, and Offences.

(Application of part of Act.)

12. This part of this Act shall apply only to those groups of British possessions to which, by reason of their contiguity or otherwise, it may seem expedient to Her Majesty to apply the same.

It shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time by Order in Council to direct that this part of this Act shall apply to the group of British possessions mentioned in the Order, and by the same or any subsequent Order to except certain offences from the application of this part of this Act, and to limit the application of this part of this Act by such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient.

Backing of Warrants.

13. Where in a British possession of a group to which this part of this Act applies a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of a person accused of an offence punishable by law in that possession, and such person is or is suspected of being in or on the way to another British possession of the same group, a magistrate in the last-mentioned possession, if satisfied that the warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same, may endorse such warrant in manner provided by this Act, and the warrant so endorsed shall be a sufficient authority to apprehend, within the jurisdiction of the endorsing magistrate, the person named in the warrant, and bring him before the endorsing magistrate or some other magistrate in the same British possession.

14. The magistrate before whom a person so apprehended is brought, if he is satisfied that the warrant is duly authenticated as directed by this Act and was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same, and is satisfied on oath that the prisoner is the person named or otherwise described in the warrant, may order such prisoner to be returned to the British possession in which the warrant was issued, and for that purpose to be delivered into the custody of the persons to whom the warrant is addressed, or any one or more of them, and to be held in custody and conveyed by sea or otherwise into the British possession in which the warrant was issued, there to be dealt with according to law as if he had been there apprehended. Such order for return may be made by a warrant under the hand of the magistrate making it, and may be executed according to the tenor thereof.

A magistrate shall, so far as is requisite for the exercise of the powers of this section, have the same power, including the power to remand and admit to bail a prisoner, as he has in the case of a person apprehended under a warrant issued by him.

15. Where a person required to give evidence on behalf of the prosecutor or defendant on a charge for an offence punishable by law in a British possession of a group to which this part of this Act applies, is or is suspected of being in or on his way to any other British possession of the same group, a judge, magistrate, or other officer who would have lawful authority to issue a summons, requiring the attendance of such witness, if the witness were within his jurisdiction, may issue a summons for the attendance of such witness, and a magistrate in any other British possession of the same group, if satisfied that the summons was issued by some judge, magistrate, or officer having lawful authority as aforesaid, may endorse the summons with his name; and the witness, on service in that possession of the summons, so endorsed, and on payment or tender of a reasonable amount for his expenses, shall obey the summons, and in default shall be liable to be tried and punished either in the possession in which he is served or in the possession in which the summons was issued, and shall be liable to the punishment imposed by the law of the possession in which he is tried for the failure of a witness to obey such a summons. The expression "summons" in this section includes any subpoena or other process for requiring the attendance of a witness.

16. A magistrate in a British possession of a group to which this part of this Act applies, before the endorsement in pursuance of this part of this Act of a warrant for the apprehension of any person, may issue a provisional warrant for the apprehension of that person, on such information and under such circumstances as would in his opinion justify the issue of a warrant if the offence of which

Return of prisoner apprehended under backed warrant.

Backing in one British possession of summons, etc., of witness issued in another possession of same group.

Provisional warrant in group of British possessions.

such person is accused were an offence punishable by the law of the said possession, and had been committed within his jurisdiction, and such warrant may be backed and executed accordingly; provided that a person arrested under such provisional warrant shall be discharged unless the original warrant is produced and endorsed within such reasonable time as may under the circumstances seem requisite.

17. If a prisoner in a British possession whose return is authorised in pursuance of this part of this Act is not conveyed out of that possession within one month after the date of the warrant ordering his return, a magistrate or a superior Court, upon application by or on behalf of the prisoner, and upon proof that reasonable notice of the intention to make such application has been given to the person holding the warrant and to the chief officer of the police of such possession or of the province or town where the prisoner is in custody, may, unless sufficient cause is shown to the contrary, order such prisoner to be discharged out of custody.

Any order or refusal to make an order of discharge by a magistrate under this section shall be subject to appeal to a superior court.

18. Where a prisoner accused of an offence is returned in pursuance of this part of this Act to a British possession, and either is not prosecuted for the said offence within six months after his arrival in that possession or is acquitted of the said offence, the governor of that possession, if he thinks fit, may, on the requisition of such person, cause him to be sent back, free of cost, and with as little delay as possible, to the British possession in or on his way to which he was apprehended.

19. Where the return of a prisoner is sought or ordered under this part of this Act, and it is made to appear to a magistrate or to a superior court that by reason of the trivial nature of the case, or by reason of the application for the return of such prisoner not being made in good faith in the interests of justice or otherwise, it would, having regard to the distance, to the facilities of communication, and to all the circumstances of the case, be unjust or oppressive, or too severe a punishment, to return the prisoner either at all or until the expiration of a certain period, the court or magistrate may discharge the prisoner either absolutely or on bail, or order that he shall not be returned until after the expiration of the period named in the order, or may make such other order in the premises as to the magistrate or court seems just.

Any order or refusal to make an order of discharge by a magistrate under this section shall be subject to an appeal to a superior court.

PART III.

Trial, etc., of Offences.

20. Where two British possessions adjoin, a person accused of an offence committed on or within the distance of five hundred yards from the common boundary of such possessions may be apprehended, tried, and punished in either of such possessions.

21. Where an offence is committed on a person or in respect of any property in or upon any carriage, cart, or vehicle whatsoever employed in a journey, or on board any vessel whatsoever employed in a navigable river, lake, canal, or inland navigation, the person accused of such offence may be tried in any British possession through a part of which such carriage, cart, vehicle, or vessel passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which the offence was committed; and where the side, bank, centre, or other part of the road, river, lake, canal, or inland navigation along which the carriage, cart, vehicle, or vessel passed in the course of such journey or voyage is the boundary of any British possession, a person may be tried for such offence in any British possession of which it is the boundary:

Provided that nothing in this section shall authorise the trial for such offence of a person who is not a British subject, where it is not shown that the offence was committed in a British possession.

22. A person accused of the offence (under whatever name it is known) of swearing or making any false deposition, or of giving or fabricating any false evidence, for the purposes of this Act, may be tried either in the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which such deposition or evidence is used, or in the part in which the same was sworn, made, given, or fabricated, as the justice of the case may require.

23. Where any part of this Act provides for the place of trial of a person accused of an offence, that offence shall, for all purposes of and incidental to the apprehension, trial, and punishment of such person, and of and incidental to, any proceedings and matters preliminary, incidental to, or consequential thereon, and of and incidental to the jurisdiction of any court, constable, or officer with reference to such offence, and to any person accused of such offence, be deemed to have been committed in any place in which the person accused of the offence can be tried for it; and such person may be punished in accordance with the Courts (Colonial) Jurisdiction Act, 1874.

24. Where a warrant for the apprehension of a person accused of an offence has been endorsed in pursuance of any part of this Act in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or where any part of the Act provides for the place of trial of a person accused of an offence, every court and magistrate of the part in which the warrant is endorsed for the person accused of the offence can be tried shall have the same power of issuing a warrant to search for any property alleged to be stolen or to be otherwise unlawfully taken or obtained by such person, or otherwise to be the subject of such offence, as that court or magistrate would have if the property had been stolen or otherwise unlawfully taken or obtained, or the offence had been committed wholly within the jurisdiction of such court or magistrate.

25. Where a person is in legal custody in a British possession either in pursuance of this Act or otherwise, and such person is required to be removed in custody to another place in or belonging to the same British possession, such person, if removed by sea in a vessel belonging to Her Majesty or any of Her Majesty's subjects, shall be deemed to continue in legal custody until he reaches the place to which he is required to be removed; and the provisions of this Act with respect to the re-taking of a prisoner who has escaped, and with respect to the trial and punishment of a person guilty of the offence of escaping or attempting to escape, or aiding or attempting to aid a prisoner to escape, shall apply to the case of a prisoner escaping while being lawfully removed as aforesaid, in like manner as if he were being removed in pursuance of a warrant endorsed in pursuance of this Act.

PART IV.

SUPPLEMENTAL.

Warrants and Escape.

26. An endorsement of a warrant in pursuance of this Act shall be signed by the authority endorsing the same, and shall authorise all or any of the persons named in the endorsement, and of the persons to whom the warrant was originally directed, and also every constable, to execute the warrant within the part of Her Majesty's dominions or place within which such endorsement is by this Act made a sufficient authority, by apprehending the person named in it, and bringing him before some magistrate in the said part or place, whether the magistrate named in the endorsement or some other.

For the purposes of this Act every warrant, summons, subpoena, and process, and every endorsement made in pursuance of this Act thereon, shall remain in force, notwithstanding that the person signing the warrant or such endorsement dies or ceases to hold office

27. Where a fugitive or prisoner is authorised to be returned to any part of Her Majesty's dominions in pursuance of Part One or Part Two of this Act, such fugitive or prisoner may be sent thither in any ship belonging to Her Majesty or to any of Her subjects. For the purpose aforesaid, the authority signing the warrant for the return may order the master of any ship belonging to any subject of Her Majesty bound to the said part of Her Majesty's dominions to receive and afford a passage and subsistence during the voyage to such fugitive or prisoner, and to the person having him in custody, and to the witnesses, so that such master be not required to receive more than one fugitive or prisoner for every hundred tons of his ship's registered tonnage, or more than one witness for every fifty tons of such tonnage.

The said authority shall endorse or cause to be endorsed upon the agreement of the ship such particulars with respect to any fugitive prisoner or witness sent in her as the Board of Trade from time to time require. Every such master shall, on his ship's arrival in the said part of Her Majesty's dominions, cause such fugitive or prisoner, if he is not in the custody of any person, to be given into the custody of some constable, there to be dealt with according to law.

Every master who fails on payment or tender of a reasonable amount for expenses to comply with an order made in pursuance of this section, or to cause a fugitive or prisoner committed to his charge to be given into custody as required by this section, shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, which may be recovered in any part of Her Majesty's dominions in like manner as a penalty of the same amount under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and the Acts amending the same.

28. If a prisoner escape, by breach of prison or otherwise, out of the custody of a person acting under a warrant issued or endorsed in pursuance of this Act, he may be re-taken in the same manner as a person accused of a crime against the law of that part of Her Majesty's dominions to which he escapes may be re-taken upon an escape.

Escape of prisoner from custody.

A person guilty of the offence of escaping or of attempting to escape, or of aiding or attempting to aid a prisoner to escape, by breach of prison or otherwise, from custody under any warrant issued or endorsed in pursuance of this Act, may be tried in any of the following parts of Her Majesty's dominions, namely, the part to which and the part from which the prisoner is being removed, and the part in which the prisoner escapes and the part in which the offender is found.

Evidence.

29. A magistrate may take depositions for the purposes of this Act in the absence of a person accused of an offence in like manner as he might take the same if such person were present and accused of the offence before him.

Depositions to be evidence, and authentication of depositions and warrants.

Depositions (whether taken in the absence of the fugitive or otherwise) and copies thereof, and official certificates of or judicial documents stating facts, may, if duly authenticated, be received in evidence in proceedings under this Act.

Provided that nothing in this Act shall authorise the reception of any such depositions, copies, certificates, or documents in evidence against a person upon his trial for an offence.

Warrants and depositions, and copies thereof, and official certificates of or judicial documents stating facts, shall be deemed duly authenticated for the purposes of this Act if they are authenticated in manner provided for the time being by law, or if they purport to be signed by or authenticated by the signature of a judge, magistrate, or officer of the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which the same are issued, taken, or made, and are authenticated either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of a Secretary of State, or with the public seal of a British possession, or with the official seal of a Governor of a British possession, or of a Colonial Secretary, or of some Secretary or minister administering a department of the Government of a British possession.

And all courts and magistrates shall take judicial notice of every such seal as is in this section mentioned, and shall admit in evidence without further proof the documents authenticated by it.

Miscellaneous.

Provision as to exercise of jurisdiction by Magistrates

30. The jurisdiction under Part One of this Act to hear a case and commit a fugitive to prison to await his return shall be exercised,—

(1) In England, by a chief magistrate of the metropolitan police courts or one of the other magistrates of the metropolitan police court at Bow Street; and

(2) In Scotland, by the sheriff or sheriff substitute of the country of Edinburgh; and

(3) In Ireland, by one of the police magistrates of the Dublin metropolitan police district; and

(4) In a British possession, by any judge, justice of the peace, or other officer having the like jurisdiction as one of the magistrates of the metropolitan police court in Bow Street, or by such other court, judge, or magistrate as may be from time to time provided by an Act or ordinance passed by the legislature of that possession.

If a fugitive is apprehended and brought before a magistrate who has no power to exercise the jurisdiction under this Act in respect of that fugitive, that magistrate shall order the fugitive to be brought before some magistrate having that jurisdiction, and such order shall be obeyed.

31. It shall be lawful for Her Majesty in Council from time to time to make Power as to making and revocation of Orders in Council.

Orders for the purposes of this Act, and to revoke and vary any Order so made, and every Order so made shall, while it is in force, have the same effect as if it were enacted in this Act.

An Order in Council made for the purposes of this Act shall be laid before Parliament as soon as may be after it is made if Parliament is then in session, or if not, as soon as may be after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

Power of legislature of British possession to pass laws for carrying into effect this Act.

32. If the legislature of a British possession pass any Act or ordinance—

(1) For defining the offences committed in that possession to which this Act or any part thereof is to apply; or

(2) For determining the Court, judge, magistrate, officer, or person by whom and the manner in which any jurisdiction or power under this Act is to be exercised; or

(3) For payment of the costs incurred in returning a fugitive or a prisoner, or in sending him back if not prosecuted or if acquitted or otherwise, in the execution of this Act; or

(4) In any manner for the carrying of this Act or any part thereof into effect in that possession, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by Order in Council to direct, if it seems to Her Majesty in Council necessary or proper for carrying into effect the objects of this Act, that such Act or Ordinance, or any part thereof, shall with or without modification or alteration be recognised and given effect to throughout Her Majesty's dominions and on the high seas as if it were part of this Act.

Application of Act.

33. Where a person accused of an offence can, by reason of the nature of the Application of Act to offences at sea or triable in several parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

offence, or of the place in which it was committed, or otherwise, be, under this Act or otherwise, tried for or in respect of the offence in more than one part of Her Majesty's dominions, a warrant for the apprehension of such person may be issued in any part of Her Majesty's dominions in which he can, if he happens to be there, be tried; and each part of this Act shall apply as if the offence has been committed in the part of Her Majesty's dominions where such warrant is issued, and such person may be apprehended and returned in pursuance of this Act, notwithstanding that in the place in which he is apprehended a Court has jurisdiction to try him:

Provided that if such person is apprehended in the United Kingdom a Secretary of State, and if he is apprehended in a British possession, the governor of such possession, may, if satisfied that, having regard to the place where the witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence are to be found, and to all the circumstances of the case, it would be conducive to the interest of justice so to do, order such person to be tried in the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which he is apprehended, and in such case any warrant previously issued for his return shall not be executed.

34. Where a person convicted by a Court in any part of Her Majesty's dominions of an offence committed either in Her Majesty's dominions or elsewhere, is unlawfully at large before the expiration of his sentence, each part of this Act shall apply to such person, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, in like manner as it applies to a person accused of the like offence committed in the part of Her Majesty's dominions in which such person was convicted.

Application of Act to convicts.

35. Where a person accused of an offence is in custody in some part of Her Majesty's dominions, and the offence is one for or in respect of which, by reason of the nature thereof or of the place in which it was committed or otherwise, a person may under this Act or otherwise be tried in some other part of Her Majesty's dominions, in such case a superior court, and also if such person is in the United Kingdom a Secretary of State, and if he is in a British possession the Governor of that possession, if satisfied that, having regard to the place where the witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence are to be found, and to all the circumstances of the case, it would be conducive to the interest of justice so to do, may by warrant direct the removal of such offender to some other part of Her Majesty's dominions in which he can be tried, and the offender may be returned, and, if not prosecuted or acquitted, sent back free of cost in like manner as if he were a fugitive returned in pursuance of Part One of this Act, and the warrant were a warrant for the return of such fugitive, and the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

36. It shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time by Order in Council to direct that this Act shall apply as if, subject to the conditions, exceptions, and qualifications (if any) contained in the Order, any place out of Her Majesty's dominions in which Her Majesty has jurisdiction, and which is named in the Order, were a British possession, and to provide for carrying into effect such application.

37. This Act shall extend to the Channel Islands and Isle of Man as if they were part of England and of the United Kingdom, and the United Kingdom and those Islands shall be deemed for the purpose of this Act to be one part of Her Majesty's dominions; and a warrant endorsed in pursuance of Part One of this Act may be executed in every place in the United Kingdom and the said Islands accordingly.

38. This shall apply where an offence is committed before the commencement of this Act, or, in the case of Part Two of this Act, before the application of that part to a British possession or to the offence, in like manner as if such offence had been committed after such commencement or application.

Definitions and Repeal.

39. In this Act unless the context otherwise requires,—
 The expression "Secretary of State" means one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;

The expression "British possession" means any part of Her Majesty's dominions, exclusive of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and Isle of Man; all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are under one Legislature shall be deemed to be one British possession and one part of Her Majesty's dominions:

The expression "legislature," where there are local legislatures as well as "Legislature." central legislatures, means the central legislature only:

The expression "Governor" means any person or persons administering the Government of a British possession, and includes the "Governor." Governor and Lieutenant Governor of any part of India:

The expression "constable" means, out of England, any policeman or officer "Constable." having the like powers and duties as a constable in England:

The expression "magistrate" means, except in Scotland, any justice of the "Magistrate." peace, and in Scotland means a sheriff or sheriff substitute and in the Channel Islands, Isle of Man, and a British possession means any person having authority to issue a warrant for the apprehension of persons accused of offences and to commit such persons for trial:

The expression "offence punishable on indictment" means, as regards India, an offence punishable on a charge "Offence punishable on indictment." or otherwise:

The expression "oath" includes affirmation or declaration in the case of "Oath." persons allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, and the expression "swear" and other words relating to an oath or swearing shall be construed accordingly:

The expression "deposition" includes any affidavit, "Deposition." affirmation, or statement made upon oath as above defined. "Superior court."

The expression "superior court" means:

(1) In England, Her Majesty's Court of Appeal and High Court of Justice; and

(2) In Scotland, the High Court of Justiciary; and

(3) In Ireland, Her Majesty's Court of Appeal and Her Majesty's High Court of Justice at Dublin; and

(4) In a British possession, any court having in that possession the like criminal jurisdiction to that which is vested in the High Court of Justice in England, or such court or judge as may be determined by any Act or Ordinance of that possession.

40. This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, which date is in this Commencement of Act. Act referred to as the commencement of this Act.

41. The Act specified in the Schedule to this Act is hereby repealed as from the commencement of this Act, Repeal of Act in Schedule.

Provided that this repeal shall not affect—

(a) Any warrant duly endorsed or issued, nor anything duly done or suffered before the commencement of this Act; nor

(b) Any obligation or liability incurred under an enactment hereby repealed; nor

(c) Any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment hereby repealed; nor

(d) Any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such warrant, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment as aforesaid; and any such warrant may be endorsed and executed, and any such legal proceeding and remedy may be carried on, as if this Act had not passed.

SCHEDULE.

Year and Chapter.	Title.
6 and 7 Vict., c. 34.	An Act for the better apprehension of certain offenders.

The expression "British possession" means any part of Her Majesty's dominions, exclusive of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and Isle of Man; all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are under one Legislature shall be deemed to be one British possession and one part of Her Majesty's dominions:

The expression "legislature," where there are local legislatures as well as "Legislature," central legislatures, means the central legislature only:

The expression "Governor" means any person or persons administering the Government of a British possession, and includes the Governor and Lieutenant Governor of any part of India:

The expression "constable" means, out of England, any policeman or officer "Constable," having the like powers and duties as a constable in England:

The expression "magistrate" means, except in Scotland, any justice of the "Magistrate," peace, and in Scotland means a sheriff or sheriff substitute and in the Channel Islands, Isle of Man, and a British possession means any person having authority to issue a warrant for the apprehension of persons accused of offences and to commit such persons for trial:

The expression "offence punishable on indictment" means, as regards India, an offence punishable on a charge "Offence punishable on indictment," or otherwise:

The expression "oath" includes affirmation or declaration in the case of persons allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, and the expression "swear" and other words relating "Oath," to an oath or swearing shall be construed accordingly:

The expression "deposition" includes any affidavit, "Deposition," affirmation, or statement made upon oath as above defined.

"Superior court,"

The expression "superior court" means:

(1) In England, Her Majesty's Court of Appeal and High Court of Justice; and

(2) In Scotland, the High Court of Justiciary; and

(3) In Ireland, Her Majesty's Court of Appeal and Her Majesty's High Court of Justice at Dublin; and

(4) In a British possession, any court having in that possession the like criminal jurisdiction to that which is vested in the High Court of Justice in England, or such court or judge as may be determined by any Act or Ordinance of that possession.

40. This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, which date is in this Commencement of Act.

41. The Act specified in the Schedule to this Act is hereby repealed as from the commencement of this Act, Repeal of Act in Schedule.

be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or both.

(2) Whoever manages or assists in the management of an unlawful association, or promotes or assists in promoting a meeting of any such association, or of any members thereof as such members, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

NOTE.

The accused visited a village and addressed the people at the village gate. He stated that the British raj had come to an end or at any rate was about to do so, and exhorted the people to hold a divan and take steps to establish an independent State at that village. After staying at the village for two or three days he went away and immediately after his departure an unlawful association was formed of which his son was made the Secretary, and his brother, the Vice-President, other office-holders being also appointed. The accused also told the people that he had given Rs. 2,000 towards the movement which had been paid to his son and people could go to the latter to have their names registered. It appeared that Rs. 860 had actually been paid by the accused to his son at that time, which payment was apparently made as a subscription and for the purpose of being utilized for the objects of the association, the formation of which accused was advocating. The question was whether the accused's words and actions constituted an offence under this Act, or the Penal Code. It was held that the accused's act did not come within the purview of either clause (1) or (2) of s. 17 of this Act, as he did not contribute to the funds or assist in the management of an existing association. It was held, however, that the accused 'instigated' the formation of an association which was unlawful under s. 15 (2) (a) of this Act, and therefore abetted its formation (ss. 107 and 108 of the Indian Penal Code) and as any one becoming a member of that association or contributing funds to it would be guilty of an offence under s. 17 (1) of this Act, accused's act amounted to an abetment of an offence. It was further held that as this abetment was of the commission of an offence by a class of persons exceeding ten, the accused had brought himself within the ambit of s. 117 of the Penal Code and was liable to the punishment provided therein.¹

18. An association shall not be deemed to have ceased to exist by reason of only of any formal act of dissolution or change of title, but Continuan- of association. shall be deemed to continue so long as any actual combination for the purposes of such association continues between any members thereof.

¹ Mihan Singh, (1923) 5 Lah. 1.

THE INDIAN CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

(Act No. XIV of 1908.)

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the more speedy trial of certain offences, and for the prohibition of associations dangerous to the public peace; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908.

(2) It extends to the Provinces of Bengal and of Eastern Bengal and Assam; but the Local Government of any other Provinces may, at any time, by notification in the official Gazette and extend the whole or any part thereof to that Province.

[Clause 3 repealed by Act V of 1922, s. 3.]

[Clause (2) was amended by Act XXXVIII of 1920.]

PART I.

[Repealed by Act V of 1922, s. 3.]

PART II.

Unlawful Associations.

Definitions.

15. In this Part:—

(1) "association" means any combination or body of persons, whether the same be known by any distinctive name or not; and

(2) "unlawful association" means an association—

(a) which encourages or aids persons to commit acts of violence or intimidation or of which the members habitually commit such acts, or

(b) which has been declared to be unlawful by the Local Government¹ under the powers hereby conferred.

16. If the Local Government¹ is of opinion that any association interferes or Power to declare association unlawful.

has for its object interference with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order, or that it constitutes a danger to the public peace, the Local Government¹ may, by notification in the official Gazette, declare such association to be unlawful.

17. (1) Whoever is a member of an unlawful association, or takes part in meetings of any such association, or contributes or receives Penalties.

or solicits any contribution for the purpose of any such association, or in any way assists the operations of any such association, shall ¹ Substituted for the words "Governor-General in Council" by Act XXXVIII of 1920.

CHAPTER II.

Surrender of Fugitive Criminals in case of Foreign States.

3. (1) Where a requisition is made to the Government of India or to any Local Government by the Government of any Foreign State for the surrender of a fugitive criminal of that State, who is in, or who is suspected of being in British India, the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be, may, if it thinks fit, issue an order to any Magistrate who would have had jurisdiction to inquire into the crime if it had been an offence committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction, directing him to inquire into the case.

NOTE.

An order issued under this sub-section by the Government of Bengal upon a requisition made to the Government of India is held to be invalid, and cannot be "ratified" by a subsequent order of the Government of India. Where, however, the latter order directs the Magistrate in pursuance of the former order "and of the statutory provisions in that behalf to enquire into the said case," the Government gives valid effect to its intention, and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to enquire. The only Government competent to issue the order for inquiry is the Government to whom the foreign State has made a requisition. This function must be performed strictly, and cannot be delegated.¹

(2) The Magistrate so directed shall issue a summons or warrant for the arrest of the fugitive criminal according as the case appears to be one in which a summons or warrant would ordinarily issue.

(3) When such criminal appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the Magistrate shall inquire into the case in the same manner and have the same jurisdiction and powers, as nearly as may be, as if the case were one triable by the Court of Session or High Court, and shall take such evidence as may be produced in support of the requisition and on behalf of the fugitive criminal, including any evidence to show that the crime of which such criminal is accused or alleged to have been convicted is an offence of a political character or is not an extradition crime.

(4) If the Magistrate is of opinion that a prima facie case is made out in support of the requisition, he may commit the fugitive criminal to prison to await the orders of the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be.

NOTE.

The Magistrate must report the case to the Local Government.²

(5) If the Magistrate is of opinion that a prima facie case is not made out in support of the requisition, or if the case is one which is bailable under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force, the Magistrate may release the fugitive criminal on bail.

¹ Rudolf Stallmann, (1911) 39 Cal. 164.

² Ram Sahai, (1863) P. R. No. 10 of 1863.

THE INDIAN EXTRADITION ACT. (Act XV of 1903).

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the more convenient administration in British India of the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, and for the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881; and whereas it is also expedient to amend the law relating to the extradition of criminals in cases to which the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, do not apply;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

Preliminary.

Short title.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian Extradition Act, 1903.

Extent and commencement.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India (including British Baluchistan, the Santhal Parganas and the Parganas of Spiti); and

(3) It shall come into force on such day as the Governor-General in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, may direct.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(a) "European British subject" means a European British subject as defined by the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force;

(b) "extradition offence" means any such offence as is described in the first schedule;

(c) "Foreign State" means a State to which, for the time being, the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873, apply;

(d) "High Court" means the High Court as defined by the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force;

(e) "Offence" includes any act wheresoever committed which would, if committed in British India, constitute an offence; and

(f) "Rules" include prescribed forms.

NOTE.

Clause (c).—Chandragore is a 'Foreign State' as defined by this clause, and the provisions of Chapter II thereof must be followed before a fugitive offender can be surrendered to the French authorities.¹

Clause (e).—As to the wider interpretation assigned to the word 'offence' see Adams.²

¹ Collington, (1870) 48 Cal. 329.

² (1903) 26 Mad. 607.

NOTE.

A Magistrate is not warranted in keeping people in custody on a mere allegation that criminal proceedings against them are pending in a foreign state. Unless proper steps be taken against persons detained under the Act, they must be released.¹

4. (1) Where it appears to any Magistrate of the first class or any Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf that a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction is a fugitive criminal of a Foreign State, he may, if he thinks fit, issue a warrant for the arrest of such person, on such information or complaint and on such evidence as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime of which he is accused or has been convicted had been committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

Power to Magistrate to issue warrant of arrest in certain cases.

NOTE.

A Magistrate may issue a warrant when the person to be arrested is within his jurisdiction. Section 4 merely provides a preliminary procedure. Under it an arrest may be effected before the receipt of the requisition mentioned in s. 3, otherwise the criminal might escape. The two sections do not overlap.²

Issue of warrant to be reported forthwith.

(2) The Magistrate shall forthwith report the issue of a warrant under this section to the Local Government.

(3) A person arrested on a warrant issued under this section shall not be detained more than two months unless within that period the Magistrate receives an order made with reference to such person under section 3, (sub-section 1).

Person arrested not to be detained unless order received

(4) In the case of a person arrested or detained under this section the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force relating to bail shall apply in the same manner as if such person were accused of committing in British India the crime of which he is accused or has been convicted.

Bail.

5. (1) If the Government of India or any Local Government is of opinion that the crime of which any fugitive criminal of a Foreign State is accused or alleged to have been convicted is of a political character, it may, if it thinks fit, refuse to issue any order under section 3, (sub-section 1).

Power of Government to refuse to issue order under section 3 when crime of political character.

(2) The Government of India or the Local Government may also at any time stay any proceedings taken under this Chapter and direct any warrant issued under this Chapter to be cancelled and the person for whose arrest such warrant has been issued to be discharged.

Power of Government to discharge any person in custody at any time.

¹ Kaladgi Magistrate's Return, (1877) Unrep. Cr. C. 124.

² Rudolf Stallmann, (1911) 39 Cal. 164.

NOTE.

The High Court has the fullest discretion, having regard to the provisions relating to bail in the Criminal Procedure Code, to grant bail to a prisoner against whom proceedings are pending under this Act.¹

(6) The Magistrate shall report the result of his inquiry to the Government of India, or the Local Government, as the case may be, and shall forward, together with such report, any written statement which the fugitive criminal may desire to submit for the consideration of the Government.

NOTE.

This sub-section is not a substitute for and does not interfere with proceedings taken under s. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 491 is applicable to cases under the Indian Extradition Act.²

(7) If the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be, is of opinion that such report or written statement raises an important question of law, it may make an order referring such question of law to such High Court as may be named in the order, and the fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered until such question has been decided.

(8) If, upon receipt of such report and statement or upon the decision of any such question, the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be, is of opinion that the fugitive criminal ought to be surrendered, it may issue a warrant for the custody and removal of such criminal and for his delivery at a place and to a person to be named in the warrant.

(9) It shall be lawful for any person to whom a warrant is directed in pursuance of sub-section (8), to receive, hold in custody and convey the person mentioned in the warrant, to the place named in the warrant, and, if such person escapes out of any custody to which he may be delivered in pursuance of such warrant, he may be re-taken as a person accused of an offence against the law of British India may be re-taken upon an escape.

(10) If such a warrant as is prescribed by sub-section (8) is not issued and executed in the case of any fugitive criminal, who has been committed to prison under sub-section (4), within two months after such committal, the High Court may, upon application made to it on behalf of such fugitive criminal, and upon proof that reasonable notice of the intention to make such application has been given to the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be, order such criminal to be discharged, unless sufficient cause is shown to the contrary.

¹ Rudolf Stallmann, (1911) 39 Cal. 184. (1911) 38 Cal. 547.

² Ibid, distinguishing Rudolf Stallmann,

NOTE.

A Magistrate is not warranted in keeping people in custody on a mere allegation that criminal proceedings against them are pending in a foreign state. Unless proper steps be taken against persons detained under the Act, they must be released.¹

4. (1) Where it appears to any Magistrate of the first class or any Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf that a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction is a fugitive criminal of a Foreign State, he may, if he thinks fit, issue a warrant for the arrest of such person, on such information or complaint and on such evidence as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime of which he is accused or has been convicted had been committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

Power to Magistrate to issue warrant of arrest in certain cases.

NOTE.

A Magistrate may issue a warrant when the person to be arrested is within his jurisdiction. Section 4 merely provides a preliminary procedure. Under it an arrest may be effected before the receipt of the requisition mentioned in s. 3, otherwise the criminal might escape. The two sections do not overlap.²

Issue of warrant not to be reported forthwith.

(2) The Magistrate shall forthwith report the issue of a warrant under this section to the Local Government.

(3) A person arrested on a warrant issued under this section shall not be detained more than two months unless within that period the Magistrate receives an order made with reference to such person under section 3, (sub-section 1)

Person arrested not to be detained unless order received.

(4) In the case of a person arrested or detained under this section the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force relating to bail shall apply in the same manner as if such person were accused of committing in British India the crime of which he is accused or has been convicted.

Bail.

5 (1) If the Government of India or any Local Government is of opinion that the crime of which any fugitive criminal of a Foreign State is accused or alleged to have been convicted is of a political character, it may, if it thinks fit, refuse to issue any order under section 3, (sub-section 1).

Power of Government to refuse to issue order under section 3 when crime of political character

(2) The Government of India or the Local Government may also at any time stay any proceedings taken under this Chapter and direct any warrant issued under this Chapter to be cancelled and the person for whose arrest such warrant has been issued to be discharged.

Power of Government to stay proceedings and direct any warrant to be cancelled and the person to be discharged.

¹ Kaladgi Magistrate's Return, (1877) Un. rep. Cr. C. 124.

² Edwards' Statutes, (1911) 39 Cal. 164.

6. The expressions "the Police Magistrate" and "the Secretary of State"

References to "Police Magistrate" and "Secretary of State" in section 3 of Extradition Act 1870. in section 3 of the Extradition Act, 1870, shall be read as referring respectively to the Magistrate directed to inquire into a case under section 3 of this Act, and to the Government of India or the Local Government, as the case may be.

CHAPTER III.

Surrender of Fugitive Criminals in case of States other than Foreign States.

7. (1) Where an extradition offence has been committed or is supposed to have been committed by a person, not being a European British subject, in the territories of any State not being a Foreign State and such person escapes into or is in British India, and the Political Agent in or for such State issues a warrant, addressed to the District Magistrate of any district in which such person is believed to be, or if such person is believed to be in any Presidency-town to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of such town, for his arrest and delivery at a place and to a person or authority indicated in the warrant such Magistrate shall act in pursuance of such warrant and may give directions accordingly.

NOTE.

Extradition is only a means of bringing the accused before the tribunal having jurisdiction. Extradition proceedings could never limit the jurisdiction of the Court if there is nothing on the face of the proceedings to warrant the conclusion that any limitation has been imposed. The mere circumstance that one particular offence is mentioned when extradition is demanded does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that extradition is allowed for the purpose of the trial only on that charge, and on no other charge whatever. And in any event it could not exclude a trial and conviction on any charge, which the facts disclosed in the extradition proceedings would suffice to sustain.¹

A District Magistrate who is addressed with a view to the execution of a warrant issued by a Political Agent of a Native State under clause (1) of this section must act in pursuance of such warrant and has no authority to ascertain whether a prima facie case exists against the accused or not.² Where a warrant has been issued by the Political Agent under this section its execution by the District Magistrate in British India, in accordance with the Act, is an executive act, and the High Court cannot interfere in revision with the proceedings of the Magistrate and the order to surrender the fugitive criminal, but if the latter considers himself aggrieved thereby, he can invoke the action of the Government under s. 15.³

On a requisition made to him by a Native State, the Political Agent, who was also a District Magistrate, issued a warrant under this section to arrest the accused. The latter surrendered of his own accord and the warrant was returned unexecuted. The Political Agent then issued a certificate under s. 188 of the Cr. P. Code, 1892, in British India. Subsequently, the Political Agent accordingly ordered the accused to be produced before the Court. It was held that it was not open to the Political Agent to re-call the certificate issued by him.

¹ Khoda Uma, (1892) 17 Bom. 369, 374, 375.

² Giyan Chand, (1908) P. R. No. 3 of 1909.
³ Gulli Sahu, (1914) 42 Cal. 793.

under s. 168 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1899, and that the order passed by him allowing the trial in the Native State was unsustainable.¹

Power to grant bail.—A British Indian Magistrate to whom a warrant has been addressed under this section has no power to admit to bail a person arrested under it apart from the provisions of ss. 8 and 8A.²

(2) A warrant issued as mentioned in sub-section (1) shall be executed in the manner provided by the law for the time being in force with reference to the execution of warrants, and the accused person, when arrested, shall be produced before the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate, as the case may be, who shall record any statement made by him; such accused person shall then, unless released in accordance with the provisions of this act, be forwarded to the place and delivered to the person or authority indicated in the warrant.

NOTE.

Where the accused were charged with receiving property stolen in the commission of a dacoity in Indore but it appeared that the property was received in British India, it was held that the accused could not be surrendered under the warrant of the Political Agent.³

(3) The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force in relation to proclamation and attachment in the case of persons absconding shall, with any necessary modifications, apply where any warrant has been received by a District Magistrate under this section as if the warrant had been issued by himself.

8. (1) Where a Political Agent had directed by endorsement on any such warrant that the person for whose arrest it is issued may be released on executing a bond with sufficient sureties for his attendance before a person or authority indicated in this behalf in the warrant at a specified time and place the Magistrate to whom the warrant is addressed shall on such security being given release such person from custody.

(2) When security is taken under this section, the Magistrate shall certify the fact to the Political Agent who issued the warrant, and shall retain the bond.

(3) If the person bound by any such bond does not appear at the time and place specified, the Magistrate may, on being satisfied as to his default, issue a warrant directing that he be re-arrested and handed over to any person authorized by the Political Agent to take him into custody.

¹ Fazirsahab Allisahab Jhagirdar, (1912) 14 Bom. L. R. 377, 1 Bom. Cr. C. 140.

² In re Murlidhar Bhagandas, (1918) 20

Bom. L. R. 1009.

³ Hukam Chand, (1873) P. R. No. 14 of 1873.

(4). In the case of any bond executed under this section, the Magistrate may exercise the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force in relation to taking a deposit in lieu of the execution of a bond and with respect to the forfeiture of bonds and the discharge of sureties.

Deposit in lieu of bond, and forfeiture of bond.

NOTE.

Where a person was arrested upon a warrant issued by a Political Agent under this Act, and was placed before a Magistrate, and such Magistrate passed an order releasing him on bail and directing him to appear before the Political Agent on a certain date, although there was no endorsement on the warrant, giving the Magistrate power to pass such an order, it was held that in the absence of such an endorsement under this section the Magistrate had no authority to pass such an order.¹

8-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 7, sub-section (2) or in section 8, when an accused person arrested in accordance with the provisions of section 7 is produced before the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate, as the case may be, and the statement (if any) of such accused person has been recorded, such Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, before proceeding further report the case to the Local Government and, pending the receipt of orders on such report, may detain such accused person in custody or release him on his executing a bond with sufficient sureties for his attendance when required.

Power to report case for order of local Government.

9. Where a requisition is made to the Government of India or to any Local Government by or on behalf of any State not being a Foreign State, for the surrender of any person accused of having committed an offence in the territories of such State, such requisition shall (except in so far as relates to the taking of evidence to show that the offence is of a political character or is not an extradition crime) be dealt with in accordance with the procedure prescribed by section 3 for requisitions made by the Government of any Foreign State as if it were a requisition made by any such Government under that section:

Requisitions by States not being Foreign States.

Provided that, if there is a Political Agent in or for any such State, the requisition shall be made through such Political Agent.

NOTE.

This section only applies when a requisition has been made to the Government of India or to a Local Government and not when a warrant has been addressed to the District Magistrate.²

10. (1) If it appears to any Magistrate of the first class or any Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf that a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction is accused or suspected of having committed an offence in any State not being a Foreign State and that such person may lawfully be surrendered to such State, or that a warrant may be issued for his arrest under section 7, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, issue a warrant for the arrest of such person on such information or complaint and on such evidence as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of a warrant if the offence had been committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

Power to Magistrates to issue warrants of arrest in certain cases.

¹ Raj Kumar Dutt v. Tathal Sijo, (1907) 12 C. W. N. 602, 7 C. L. J. 171.

² Jaipal Bhagat, (1921) 1 Pat. 57.

(2) The Magistrate shall forthwith report the issue of a warrant under this section, if the offence appears or is alleged to have been committed in the territories of a State for which there is a Political Agent, to such Political Agent, and in other cases to the Local Government.

(3) A person arrested on a warrant issued under this section shall not, without the special sanction of the Local Government, be detained more than two months, unless within such period the Magistrate receives an order made with reference to such person in accordance with the procedure prescribed by section 9, or a warrant for the arrest of such person under section 7.

(4) In the case of a person arrested or detained under this section, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the time being in force relating to bail shall apply in the same manner as if such person were accused of committing in British India the offence with which he is charged.

NOTE.

This section applies only if the warrant issued under s. 71 is for a person not being one of the offences mentioned in Schedule 1 of the Act, and the charge does not fall within s. 71. Where a person is arrested without a warrant under s. 54 (p) of the Criminal Procedure Code or under s. 20 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1902, and detained by a Magistrate under s. 20 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1902, and released on bail under s. 10 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1902, the person shall be deemed to have been arrested under s. 71.

11. (1) A person accused of an offence under the sentence under which he is surrendered to the Political Security Forces on behalf of the Government of India, except on the condition that he shall be tried for the offence for which he is surrendered to the Political Security Forces on behalf of the Government of India, shall be tried for the offence for which he is surrendered to the Political Security Forces on behalf of the Government of India.

Provided that the execution of a

(2) On the surrender of a person undergoing sentence under a conviction in British India, his sentence shall be deemed to be suspended until the date of his re-surrender, when it shall revive and have effect for the portion thereof which was unexpired at the time of his surrender.

12. The provisions of this Chapter with reference to accused persons shall, with any necessary modifications, apply to the case of a person who having been convicted of an offence in the territories of any State not being a Foreign State, has escaped into or is in British India before his sentence has expired.

13. Every person who is accused or convicted of abetting or attempting to commit any offence shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Chapter, to be accused or convicted of having committed such offence, and shall be liable to be arrested and surrendered accordingly.

14. It shall be lawful for any person to whom a warrant is directed in pursuance of the provisions of this Chapter, to receive, hold in custody and convey the person mentioned in the warrant, to the place named in the warrant, and, if such person escapes out of any custody to which he may be delivered in pursuance of such warrant, he may be re-taken as a person accused of an offence against the law of British India may be re-taken upon an escape.

15. The Government of India or the Local Government, may, by order, stay any proceedings taken under this Chapter, and may direct any warrant issued under this Chapter to be cancelled, and the person for whose arrest such warrant has been issued to be discharged.

NOTE.

The Bombay High Court has laid down that this section ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of the warrant, but leaves open the question of the High Court's power to interfere with a Magistrate's action, if it was proved that such action was consequent upon a warrant issued by a Political Agent which was plainly illegal.¹ Similarly, the Calcutta High Court agreeing with this view holds that where the order of the Magistrate is sought to be justified under an authority supposed to be derived from the law, but is in fact without jurisdiction, such order is revisable by the Court at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it.² The Patna High Court has held that although this section empowers the Government of India and the Local Government to stay proceedings taken under Chapter III of the Act and to direct any warrant to be cancelled and the accused person to be arrested, this does not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in a case where action under the Act has not been taken under a valid warrant.³

There is no provision in this Act making an inquiry by a competent British Court in British India, into the truth of the accusation, whether in the presence of the accused or otherwise, a condition precedent to the issue and execution of the warrant of the Political Agent under this section.⁴

¹ Huseinally Niazally, (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 463.

² Gulli Sahu, (1913) 41 Cal. 400.

³ Jaipal Bhagat, (1921) 1 Pat. 57.

⁴ Huseinally Niazally, supra.

Application of Chapter to offences committed before its commencement.

16. The provisions of this Chapter shall apply to an offence or to an extradition offence, as the case may be, committed before the passing of this Act, and to an offence in respect of which a Court of British India has concurrent jurisdiction.

Receipt in evidence of exhibits, depositions and other documents.

17. (1) In any proceedings under this Chapter, exhibits and depositions, (whether received or taken in the presence of the person against whom they are used or not) and copies thereof, and official certificates of facts and judicial documents stating facts, may, if duly authenticated, be received as evidence.

Authentication of the same.

(2) Warrants, depositions or statements on oath which purport to have been issued, received or taken by any Court of Justice outside British India, or copies thereof, and certificates of or judicial documents stating the fact of, conviction before any such Court, shall be deemed duly authenticated,—

(a) if the warrant purports to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate or officer of the State where the same was issued or acting in or for such State :

(b) if the depositions or statements or copies thereof purport to be certified under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate or officer of the State where the same were taken, or acting in or for such State, to be the original depositions or statements or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require :

(c) if the certificate of, or judicial document stating the fact of, a conviction purports to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate or officer of the State where the conviction took place or acting in or for such State :

(d) if the warrants, depositions, statements, copies, certificates and judicial documents, as the case may be, are authenticated, by the oath of some witness or by the official seal of a minister of the State where the same were respectively issued, taken or given.

(3) For the purposes of this section "warrant" includes any judicial document authorizing the arrest of any person accused or convicted of an offence.

Definition of "warrant."

NOTE

In all cases where enquiries are held by a Magistrate with a view to extraditing an accused person, it would be desirable that they should, if possible, be present thereat.¹

18 Nothing in this Chapter shall derogate from the provisions of any treaty for the extradition of offenders, and the procedure provided by any such treaty shall be followed in any case to which it applies, and the provisions of this Act shall be modified accordingly.

Chapter not to derogate from treaties.

¹ Harindally Nizami, (1905) 7 Bom. L. R. 463.

NOTE.

The offence of cheating is an extradition offence so far as British India is concerned in view of this section, notwithstanding its omission from Article 4 of the Treaty between the British Indian Government and the Hyderabad State.

CHAPTER IV.

Rendition of Fugitive Offenders in His Majesty's Dominions.

Application of 19. For the purpose of applying and carrying into effect in British India the provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881.

Act, 1881, the following provisions are hereby made:—

(a) the powers conferred on "Governors" of British possessions may be exercised by any Local Government:

(b) the powers conferred on a "Superior Court" may be exercised by any Judge of a High Court:

(c) the powers conferred on a "Magistrate" may be exercised by any Magistrate of the first class or by any Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in that behalf: and

(d) the offences committed in British India to which the Act applies, are piracy, treason, and any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code with rigorous imprisonment for a term of twelve months or more or with any greater punishment.

CHAPTER V.

Offence committed at Sea.

20. Where the Government of any State outside India makes a requisition for the surrender of a person accused of an offence committed on board any vessel on the high seas at sea, which comes into any port of British India, the Local Government and any Magistrate having jurisdiction in such port and authorized by the Local Government in this behalf may exercise the powers conferred by this Act.

CHAPTER VI.

Execution of commissions issued by Criminal Courts outside British India.

21. The testimony of any witness may be obtained in relation to any criminal matter pending in any Court or tribunal in any country or place outside British India in like manner as it may be obtained in any civil matter under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for the time being in force with respect to commissions, and the provisions of that Code relating thereto shall be construed as if the term "suit" included a criminal proceeding:

Execution of commissions issued by Criminal Courts outside British India.

Provided that this section shall not apply when the evidence is required for a Court or tribunal in any State outside India other than a British Court and the offence is of a political character.

CHAPTER VII.

Supplemental.

Power to make rules. 22. (1) The Governor-General in Council may make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the removal of prisoners accused or in custody under this Act, and their control and maintenance until such time as they are handed over to the persons named in the warrant as are entitled to receive them ;

(b) the seizure and disposition of any property which is the subject of, or required for proof of, any alleged offence to which this Act applies ;

(c) the pursuit and arrest in British India, by officers of the Government or other persons authorized in this behalf, of persons accused of offence committed elsewhere ; and

(d) the procedure and practice to be observed in extradition proceedings.

(3) Rules made under this section shall be published in the Gazette of India and shall thereupon have effect as if enacted by this Act.

23. Notwithstanding anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, any person arrested without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant, in pursuance of the provisions of section 54, clause seventhly, of the said Code, may, under the orders of a Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such arrest was made, be detained in the same manner and subject to the same restrictions as a person arrested on a warrant issued by such Magistrate under section 10.

Detention of persons arrested under section 54, clause seventhly, Act V of 1898.

24. The Acts mentioned in the second schedule are repealed to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof.

Repeals

THE FIRST SCHEDULE.

EXTRADITION OFFENCES.

[See Section 2, clause (b), and Chapter III (Surrender of Fugitive Criminals in case of States other than Foreign States).]

[The sections referred to are the sections of the Indian Penal Code.]

Frauds upon creditors (section 206).

Resistance to arrest (section 224.)

Offences relating to coin and stamps (sections 230 to 263-A).

Culpable homicide (sections 299 to 304).

Attempt to murder (section 307).

Thagi (sections 310, 311).

- Causing miscarriage, and abandonment of child (sections 312 to 317).
 Causing hurt (sections 323 to 333).
 Wrongful confinement (sections 347, 348).
 Kidnapping and slavery (sections 360 to 373).
 Rape and unnatural offences (sections 375 to 377).
 Theft, extortion, robbery, etc., (sections 378 to 414).
 Cheating (sections 415 to 420).
 Fraudulent deeds, etc., (sections 421 to 424).
 Mischief (sections 425 to 430).
 Lurking house-trespass (sections 443, 440).
 Forgery, using forged documents, etc., (sections 463 to 477-A).
 Desertion from any unit of Indian State Forces declared by the Governor-General in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, to be a unit desertion from which is an extradition offence.¹
 Piracy by law of nations.
 Sinking or destroying a vessel at sea, or attempting or conspiring to do so.
 Assault on board a ship on the high seas with intent to destroy life or to do grievous bodily harm.

Revolt or conspiracy to revolt by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas against the authority of the master.

Any offence against any section of the Indian Penal Code or against any other law which may, from time to time, be specified by the Governor-General in Council by notification in the Gazette of India, either generally for all States or specially for any one or more States.

THE SECOND SCHEDULE.

ENACTMENTS REPEALED.

(See Section 24.)

Year.	No.	Short title.	Extent of repeal.
1879	XXI	The Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879.	So much as is unrepealed.
1883	IX	The Extradition (India) Act, 1883.	The whole Act.
1896	V	The Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, (1879) Amendment Act, 1896.	The whole Act.

¹ Substituted by Act XVI of 1922, s. 2.

THE INDIAN MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT, 1889.

(Act No. IV of 1889.)

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to fraudulent marks on merchandise ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Title, extent and commencement : 1. (1) This Act may be called " The Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889."

(2) It extends to the whole of British India ;

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of April, 1889.

Definitions. 2. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) " trade mark " has the meaning assigned to that expression in s. 478 of the Indian Penal Code as amended by this Act :

(2) " trade description " means any description, statement or other indication, direct or indirect,—

(a) as to the number, quantity, measure, gauge, or weight or any goods, or

(b) as to the place or country in which, or the time at which, any goods were made or produced, or

(c) as to the mode of manufacturing or producing any goods, or

(d) as to the material of which any goods are composed, or

(e) as to any goods being the subject of an existing patent, privilege, or copyright ;

and the use of any numeral, word or mark which according to the custom of the trade is commonly taken to be an indication of any of the above matters, shall be deemed to be a trade description within the meaning of this Act :—

(3) " false trade description " means a trade description which is untrue in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, and includes every alteration of a trade description, whether by way of addition, effacement or otherwise, where that alteration makes the description untrue in a material respect, and the fact that a trade description is a trade mark or part of a trade mark, shall not prevent such trade description being a false trade description within the meaning of this Act.

(4) " goods " means anything which is the subject of trade or manufacture ; and

(5) " name " includes any abbreviation of a name.

Trade Descriptions.

4. (1) The provisions of this Act respecting the application of a false trade description to goods or respecting goods to which a false trade description is applied, shall extend to the application to goods of any such numerals, words, or marks, or arrangement or combination thereof, whether including a trade-mark or not, as are or is reasonably calculated to lead persons to believe that the goods are the manufacture or merchandise of some person other than the person whose manufacture or merchandise they really are, and to goods having such numerals, words or marks or arrangement or combination, applied thereto.

Provisions supplemental to the definition of false trade description.

(2) The provisions of this Act respecting the application of a false trade description to goods, or respecting goods to which a false trade description is applied, shall extend to the application to goods of any false name or initials of a person, and to goods with the false name or initials of a person applied, in like manner as if such name or initials were a trade description, and for the purpose of this enactment the expression "false name or initials" means as applied to any goods any name or initials,—

(a) not being a trade-mark, or part of a trade-mark, and

(b) being identical with, or a colourable imitation of the name or initials of a person carrying on business in connection with goods of the same description, and not having authorised the use of such name or initials.

(3) A trade description which denotes or implies that there are contained in any goods to which it is applied more yards, feet or inches than there are contained therein standard yards, standard feet or standard inches is a false trade description.

Application of 5. (1) A person shall be deemed to apply a trade description to goods who—

(a) applies it to the goods themselves, or

(b) applies it to any covering, label, reel or other thing with which the goods are sold or are exposed or had in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, or

(c) places, encloses or annexes any goods which are sold, or are exposed or had in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, in, with or to any covering, label, reel or other thing to which a trade description has been applied, or

(d) uses a trade description in any manner reasonably calculated to lead to the belief that the goods in connection with which it is used are designated or described by that trade description.

(2) A trade description shall be deemed to be applied whether it is woven, impressed or otherwise worked into or annexed or affixed to the goods or any covering, label, reel or other thing.

(3) The expression "covering" includes any stopper, cask, bottle, vessel, box, cover, capsule, case, frame or wrapper, and the expression "label" includes any band or ticket.

NOTE.

The improper use of a trade-name may fall under this section and be punishable under s. 6 or s. 7 as a false trade description.¹

¹ Anath Nath Dey, [1912] 40 Cal. 281.

6. If a person applies a false trade description to goods, he shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, and unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, and in case of a second or subsequent conviction with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Penalty for applying a false trade description.

7. If a person sells, or exposes or has in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things to which a false trade description is applied, he shall, unless he proves—

Penalty for selling goods to which a false trade description is applied.

(a) that, having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against this section, he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade description, and

(b) that, on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods or things, or

(c) that otherwise he had acted innocently, be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, and in case of a second or subsequent conviction with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Unintentional Contravention of the Law relating to Marks and Descriptions

8. Where a person is accused under section 482 of the Indian Penal Code of using a false trade-mark or property-mark by reason of his having applied a mark to any goods, property or receptacle in the manner mentioned in section 480 or section 481 of that Code, as the case may be, or under section 6 of this Act of applying to goods any false trade description, or under section 485 of the Indian Penal Code of making any die, plate or other instrument for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade-mark or property-mark, and proves—

Unintentional contravention of the law relating to marks and descriptions.

(a) that in the ordinary course of business he is employed, on behalf of other person, to apply trade-marks or property-marks, or trade descriptions, or, as the case may be, to make dies, plates or other instruments for making, or being used in making, trade-marks or property-marks, and that in the case which is the subject of the charge he was so employed and was not interested in the goods or other thing by way of profit or commission dependent on the sale thereof, and

(b) that he took reasonable precautions against committing the offence charged, and

(c) that he had, at the time of the commission of the alleged offence, no reason to suspect the genuineness of the mark or description, and

(d) that, on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons on whose behalf the mark or description was applied, he shall be acquitted.

Forfeiture of Goods.

9. (1) When a person is convicted under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code of using a false trade-mark, or under section 486 of that Code of selling, or exposing or having in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things with a counterfeit trade-mark applied thereto, or under section 487 or section 488 of that Code of making, or making use of, a false mark, or under section 6 or section 7 of this Act of applying a false trade description to goods or of selling, or exposing or having in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things to which a false trade description is applied, or is acquitted on proof of the matter or matters specified in section 486 of the Indian Penal Code or section 7 or section 8 of this Act, the Court convicting or acquitting him may direct the forfeiture to Her Majesty of all goods and things, by means of or in relation to, which the offence has been committed or, but for such proof as aforesaid, would have been committed.

(2) When a forfeiture is directed on a conviction, and an appeal lies against the conviction, an appeal shall lie against the forfeiture also.

(3) When a forfeiture is directed on an acquittal and the goods or things to which the direction relates are of value exceeding fifty rupees, an appeal against the forfeiture may be preferred, within thirty days from the date of the direction, to the Court to which in appealable cases appeals lie from sentences of the Court which directed the forfeiture.

Amendment of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

10. (1) For clause (d) of section 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the following shall be substituted, namely :—

“ (d) goods having applied thereto a counterfeit trade-mark within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, or a false trade description within the meaning of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889 :—

Amendment of section 18, Act VIII of 1878.

“ (e) goods made or produced beyond the limits of the United Kingdom and British India and having applied thereto any name or trade-mark being, or purporting to be, ... of, the name or trade-mark of any person who is a manufacturer, dealer or trader in the United Kingdom or in British India, unless—

(i) the name or trade-mark is, as to every application thereof, accompanied by a definite indication of the goods having been made or produced in a place beyond the limits of the United Kingdom and British India, and

(ii) the country in which that place is situated is in that indication indicated in letters as large and conspicuous as any letter in the name or trade-mark, and the same language and character as the name or trade-mark.”

(2) To section 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as amended by sub-section (1), the following shall be added, namely:—

"(f) piece-goods, such as are ordinarily sold by length or by the piece, which—

(i) have not conspicuously stamped in English numerals on each piece the length thereof in standard yards, or in standard yards and a fraction of such a yard, according to the real length of the piece, and

(ii) have been manufactured beyond the limits of India, or

(iii) having been manufactured within those limits have been manufactured beyond the limits of British India in premises which, if they were in British India, would be a factory as defined in the Indian Factories Act, 1881."

Addition of a section after section 10, Act VIII of 1878. 11. The following shall be added after s. 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, namely:—

"19-A. (1) Before detaining any such goods as are or may be specified in or under s. 18 or s. 19, as the case may be, or taking any further proceedings with a view to the confiscation thereof under this Act, the Chief Customs-officer or other officer appointed by the local Government in this behalf may require the regulations under the section, whether as to information, security, conditions or other matters, to be complied with and may satisfy himself in accordance with those regulations that the goods are such as are prohibited to be imported.

(2) The Governor-General in Council may make regulations, either general or special, respecting the detention and confiscation of goods the importation of which is prohibited, and the conditions, if any, to be fulfilled before such detention and confiscation, and may by such regulations determine the information, notices and security to be given, and the evidence requisite for any of the purposes of this section and the mode of verification of such evidence.

(3) Where there is on any goods a name which is identical with, or a colourable imitation of, the name of a place in the United Kingdom or British India, that name, unless accompanied in equally large and conspicuous letters, and in the same language and character, by the name of the country in which such place is situate, shall be treated for the purposes of ss. 18 and 19 as if it were the name of a place in the United Kingdom or British India.

(4) Such regulations may apply to all goods the importation of which is prohibited by s. 18 or under s. 19, or different regulations may be made respecting different classes of such goods or of offences in relation to such goods.

(5) The regulations may provide for the informant reimbursing any public officer and the Secretary of State for India in Council all expenses and damages incurred in respect of any detention made on his information, and of any proceedings consequent on such detention.

(6) All regulations under this section shall be published in the Gazette of India and in the Calcutta, Fort St. George, Bombay and Burma Gazettes."

Stamping of Length of Piece goods manufactured in British India.

12. (1) Piece-goods, such as are ordinarily sold by length or by the piece which have been manufactured in premises which are a factory as defined in the Indian Factories Act, 1881, shall not be removed from those premises without having conspicuously stamped in English numerals on each piece the length thereof in standard yards, or in standard yards and a fraction of such a yard, according to the real length of the piece.

(2) If any person removes or attempts to remove any such piece-goods from any such premises without the length of each piece being stamped in the manner mentioned in sub-section (1), every such piece, and everything used for the packing or removal thereof, shall be forfeited to Her Majesty, and such person shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

Supplemental Provisions.

13. In the case of goods brought into British India by sea, evidence of the port of shipment shall, in a prosecution for an offence against this Act or s. 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as amended by this Act, be prima facie evidence of the place or country in which the goods were made or produced.

14. (1) On any such prosecution as is mentioned in the last foregoing section or on any prosecution for an offence against any of the sections of the Indian Penal Code, as amended by this Act, which relate to trade, property and other marks, the Court may order costs to be paid to the defendant by the prosecutor or to the prosecutor by the defendant, having regard to the information given by and the conduct of the defendant and prosecutor respectively.

(2) Such costs shall, on application to the Court, be recoverable as if they were a fine.

NOTE.

The appellate Court can award the costs of appeal under this section.¹

15. No such prosecution as is mentioned in the last foregoing section shall be commenced after the expiration of three years next after the commission of the offence, or one year after the first discovery thereof by the prosecutor, whichever expiration first happens.

16. (1) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India and in local official Gazettes, issue instructions for observance by Criminal Courts in giving effect to any of the provisions of this Act.

(2) Instructions under sub-section (1) may provide among other matters, for the limits of variation, as regards number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight, which are to be recognized by Criminal Courts as permissible in the case of any goods.

¹ Ganpat Sitaram Mukadam, (1914) 16 Bom. L. R. 78.

17. On the sale or in the contract for the sale of any goods to which a trade mark or mark or trade description has been applied, the seller

Implied warranty on sale of marked goods.

shall be deemed to warrant that the mark is a genuine mark and not counterfeit or falsely used, or that the trade description is not a false trade description within the meaning of this Act, unless the contrary is expressed in some writing signed by or on behalf of the seller and delivered at the time of the sale or contract to and accepted by the buyer.

18. (1) Nothing in this Act shall exempt any person from any suit or other proceeding which might, but for anything in this Act, be brought against him.

Savings.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall entitle any person to refuse to make a complete discovery or to answer any question or interrogatory in any suit or other proceeding, but such discovery or answer shall not be admissible in evidence against such person in any such prosecution as is mentioned in s. 14.

(3) Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to render liable to any prosecution or punishment any servant of a master resident in British India who in good faith acts in obedience to the instructions of such master, and on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, has given full information as to his master and as to the instructions which he has received from his master.

19. For the purpose of s. 12 of this Act and clause (f) of s. 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as amended by this Act, the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare what classes of goods are included in the expression "piece-goods, such as are ordinarily sold by length or by the piece."

Definition of piece-goods.

o f

20. (1) The Governor-General in Council may make rules, for the purposes of this Act to provide, with respect to any goods which purport or are alleged to be of uniform number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight, for the number of samples to be selected and tested and for the selection of the samples.

Determination of character of goods
by sampling

(2) With respect to any goods for the selection and testing of samples of which provision is not made in any rules for the time being in force under sub-section (1) the Court or Officer of Customs, as the case may be, having occasion to ascertain the number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight of the goods, shall, by order in writing, determine the number of samples to be selected and tested and the manner in which the samples are to be selected.

(3) The average of the results of the testing in pursuance of rules under sub-section (1) or of an order under sub-section (2) shall be prima facie evidence of the number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight, as the case may be, of the goods.

(4) If a person having any claim to or in relation to, any goods of which samples have been selected and tested in pursuance of rules under sub-section (1) or of an order under sub-section (2), desires that any further samples of the goods be selected and tested, they shall, on his written application and on the payment in advance by him to the Court or Officer of Customs, as the case may be, of such sums for defraying the cost of the further selection and testing as the Court or officer may from time to time require, be selected and tested to such extent as may be permitted by rules to be made by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf or as, in the case of goods with respect to which provision is not made in such rules, the Court or Officer of Customs may determine in the circumstances to be reasonable, the samples being selected in manner prescribed under sub-section (1), or in sub-section (2), as the case may be.

(5) The average of the results of the testing referred to in sub-section (3) and of the further testing under sub-section (4) shall be conclusive proof of the number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight, as the case may be, of the goods.

(6) Rules under this section shall be made after previous publication.

21. An officer of the Government whose duty it is to take part in the enforcement of this Act shall not be compelled in any Court to Information as to commission of offence. say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence against this Act.

22. If any person, being within British India, abets the commission, without British India, of any act which, if committed in Punishment of abetment in India of acts done out of India. British India, would, under this Act, or under any section of that part of Chapter XVIII, of the Indian Penal Code which relates to trade, property and other marks, be an offence he may be tried for such abetment in any place in British India in which he may be found, and be punished therefor with the punishment to which he would be liable if he had himself committed in that place the act which he abetted.

THE INDIAN STATES (PROTECTION AGAINST DISAFFECTION) ACT.

THE following Act which was made by the Governor-General under the provisions of section 67-B of the Government of India Act and has received the assent of His Majesty signified by an order of His Majesty in Council is hereby published for general information :—

An Act to prevent the dissemination by means of books, newspapers and other documents of matter calculated to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, Princes or Chiefs of States in India or the Governments or Administrations established in such States.

WHEREAS it is expedient to prevent the dissemination by means of books, newspapers and other documents of matter calculated to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, Princes or Chiefs of States in India or the Governments or Administrations established in such States; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent.	1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922.
-------------------------	--

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas.

Definitions.	2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—
--------------	--

(a) "book" and "newspaper" have the meanings respectively assigned to them by the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867;

(b) "disaffection" includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity; and

(c) "document" includes any painting, drawing, photograph, or other visible representation.

3. (1) Whoever edits, prints or publishes, or is the author of, any book, newspaper or other document which brings or is intended to Penalty.	bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards, any Prince or Chief of a State in India or the Government or Administration established in any such State, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

(2) No person shall be deemed to commit an offence under this section in respect of any book, newspaper or other document which, without exciting or being intended to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, contains comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of any such Prince, Chief, Government or Administration as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or disapprobation of the administrative or other action of any such Prince, Chief, Government or Administration.

(4) If a person having any claim to or in relation to, any goods of which samples have been selected and tested in pursuance of rules under sub-section (1) or of an order under sub-section (2), desires that any further samples of the goods be selected and tested, they shall, on his written application and on the payment in advance by him to the Court or Officer of Customs, as the case may be, of such sums for defraying the cost of the further selection and testing as the Court or officer may from time to time require, be selected and tested to such extent as may be permitted by rules to be made by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf or as, in the case of goods with respect to which provision is not made in such rules, the Court or Officer of Customs may determine in the circumstances to be reasonable, the samples being selected in manner prescribed under sub-section (1), or in sub-section (2), as the case may be.

(5) The average of the results of the testing referred to in sub-section (3) and of the further testing under sub-section (4) shall be conclusive proof of the number, quantity, measure, gage or weight, as the case may be, of the goods.

(6) Rules under this section shall be made after previous publication.

21. An officer of the Government whose duty it is to take part in the enforcement of this Act shall not be compelled in any Court to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence.

22. If any person, being within British India, abets the commission, without British India, of any act which, if committed in British India, would, under this Act, or under any section of that part of Chapter XVIII of the Indian Penal Code which relates to trade, property and other marks, be an offence he may be tried for such abetment in any place in British India in which he may be found, and be punished therefor with the punishment to which he would be liable if he had himself committed in that place the act which he abetted.

THE INDIAN STATES (PROTECTION AGAINST DISAFFECTION) ACT.

THE following Act which was made by the Governor-General under the provisions of section 67-B of the Government of India Act and has received the assent of His Majesty signified by an order of His Majesty in Council is hereby published for general information :—

An Act to prevent the dissemination by means of books, newspapers and other documents of matter calculated to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, Princes or Chiefs of States in India or the Governments or Administrations established in such States.

WHEREAS it is expedient to prevent the dissemination by means of books, newspapers and other documents of matter calculated to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against, Princes or Chiefs of States in India or the Governments or Administrations established in such States; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas.

Definitions. 2 In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) “book” and “newspaper” have the meanings respectively assigned to them by the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867;

(b) “disaffection” includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity; and

(c) “document” includes any painting, drawing, photograph, or other visible representation.

3. (1) Whoever edits, prints or publishes, or is the author of, any book, newspaper or other document which brings or is intended to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards, any Prince or Chief of a State in India or the Government or Administration established in any such State, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Penalty.

(2) No person shall be deemed to commit an offence under this section in respect of any book, newspaper or other document which, without exciting or being intended to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, contains comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of any such Prince, Chief, Government or Administration as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or disapprobation of the administrative or other action of any such Prince, Chief, Government or Administration.

4. The provisions of sections 99-A to 99-G of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and of sections 27-B to 27-D of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall apply in the case of any book, newspaper or other document containing matter in respect of which any person is punishable under section 3 in like manner as they apply in the case of a book, newspaper or document containing seditious matter within the meaning of those sections.
5. No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class shall proceed to the trial of any offence under section 3, and no Court shall proceed to the trial of any such offence except on complaint made by, or under authority from, the Governor-General in Council.
- Power to forfeit certain publications or to detain them in course of transmission through post.
- Courts by which and conditions subject to which offence may be tried.

THE PENAL SERVITUDE ACT.

(ACT No. XXIV OF 1855).

WHEREAS, by reason of the difficulty of providing a place to which Europeans or Americans can, with safety to their health, be sent for the purpose of undergoing sentences of transportation or of imprisonment for long terms it has become expedient to substitute other punishments for that of transportation * * * ; It is enacted as follows :—

No European or American to be sentenced to transportation.

1. * * * * No European or American shall be liable to be sentenced, or ordered, by any Court within the territories * * under the Government of * * India *, to be transported.

Terms of penal servitude instead of the present terms of transportation.

2. Any person who, but for the passing of this Act, would, by any law now in force, or which may hereafter be in force, in any part of the said territories, be liable to be sentenced or ordered, by any such Court, to be transported, shall, if a European or American, be liable to be sentenced or ordered to be kept in penal servitude for such term as hereinafter mentioned.

The terms of penal servitude to be awarded by any sentence or order instead of the term of transportation to which any such offender would, but for the passing of this Act, be liable, shall be as follows : (that is to say)—

Instead of transportation for seven years, or for a term not exceeding seven years, penal servitude for the term of four years.

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding seven years and not exceeding ten years, penal servitude for any term not less than four and not exceeding six years.

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding ten years and not exceeding fifteen years, penal servitude for any term not less than six and not exceeding eight years.

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding fifteen years, penal servitude for any term not less than six and not exceeding ten years.

Instead of transportation for the term of life, penal servitude for the term of life.

And in every case where, at the discretion of the Court, one of any two or more of the terms of transportation hereinbefore mentioned might have been awarded, the Court shall have the like discretion to award one of the two or more terms of penal servitude hereinbefore mentioned, in relation to such terms of transportation.

3. Provided always that nothing herein contained shall interfere with or affect the authority or discretion of any Court in respect of any punishment which such Court may now award or pass on any offender other than transportation; but, where such other punishment may be awarded at the discretion of the Court instead of transportation or in addition thereto, the same may be awarded instead of, or (as the case may be) in addition to, the punishment substituted for transportation by this Act.

4. If any offender sentenced by any Court within the said territories to the punishment of death shall have mercy extended to him, upon condition of his being kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term of years, all the provisions of this Act shall be applicable to such offender in the same manner as if he had been lawfully sentenced under this Act to the term of penal servitude specified in the condition.

5. [Power to substitute penal servitude for transportation.] Rep. by the Prisoners Act, 1871 (V of 1871).

6. [Mode of dealing with person under sentence of penal servitude.] Rep. by the Prisoners Act, 1871 (V of 1871).

7. [Application of enactments respecting transportation and imprisonment with hard labour.] Rep. by the Prisoners Act, 1871 (V of 1871).

8. [Removal of convicts under sentence of imprisonment from one prison to another.] Rep. by the Presidency Jails Act, 1871 (V of 1867).

9, 10, 11 and 12. [Licenses to convicts under sentence of penal servitude to be at large.] Rep. by the Prisoners Act, 1871 (V of 1871).

13. Nothing in this Act is intended to alter or affect the provisions of the 12 and 13 Victoria, Chapter 43, or any Act of Parliament passed in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland since the 28th of August, 1833, or which may hereafter be passed.

14. Any sentence or order upon any person describing him as a European or American shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to be conclusive of the fact that such person is a European or American within the meaning of this Act.

15. The word "European," as used in this Act, shall be understood to include any person usually designated a European British subject. Words in the singular number or the masculine gender shall be understood to include several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, unless there be something in the context repugnant to such construction.

16. [Commencement of Act.] Rep. by the Repealing Act, 1870 (XIV of 1870).

THE POLICE (INCITEMENT TO DISAFFECTION) ACT.

(Act No. XXII of 1922.)

WHEREAS it is expedient to penalize the spreading of disaffection among the police and other kindred offences ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title, extent and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called the Police (Incitement to Disaffection) Act, 1922.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas

(3) It shall come into force in any province or part of a province on such date as the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct.

2. In this Act, the expression " member of a police-force " means any person appointed or enrolled for the performance of police duties under any enactment specified in the Schedule

Definition.

3. Whoever intentionally causes or attempts to cause, or does any act which he knows is likely to cause, disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India amongst the members of a police-force, or induces or attempts to induce, or does any act which he knows is likely to induce, any member of a police-force to withhold his services or to commit a breach of discipline shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both Penalty for causing disaffection, etc.

Explanation—Expressions of disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of disapprobation of the administrative or other action of the Government, do not constitute an offence under this section unless they cause or are made for the purpose of causing or are likely to cause disaffection

Saving of acts done by police as associations and other persons for certain purposes

4 Nothing shall be deemed to be an offence under this Act which is done in good faith—

(a) for the purpose of promoting the welfare or interests of any member of a police-force by inducing him to withhold his services in any manner authorised by law ; or

(b) by or on behalf of any association formed for the purpose of furthering the interests of members of a police-force as such, where the association has been authorised or recognised by the Government and the act done is done under any rules or articles of the association which have been approved by the Government

Sanction to trial of offences by subordinate Courts. 5. No Court shall proceed to the trial of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of the District Magistrate or, in the case of a Presidency town or the town of Rangoon, of the Commissioner of Police.

Trial of cases. 6. (1) No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class shall try any offence under this Act.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, no offence under this Act shall be triable summarily.

THE SCHEDULE.

(See Section 2.)

Year.	No.	Short title.
Acts of the Governor-General in Council.
1859	XXIV	The Madras District Police Act, 1859
1861	V	The Police Act, 1861.
1887	XV	The Burma Military Police Act, 1887.
1888	III	The Police Act, 1888.
1892	V	The Bengal Military Police Act, 1892.
Madras Act.
1888	III	The Madras City Police Act, 1888.
Bombay Acts.
1890	IV	The Bombay District Police Act, 1890.
1902	IV	The City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.
Bengal Acts.
1866	II	The Calcutta Suburban Police Act, 1866.
"	IV	The Calcutta Police Act, 1866.
1890	III	The Calcutta Port Act, 1890
1920	II	The Eastern Frontier Rifles (Bengal Battalion) Act, 1920
Burma Act.
1899	IV	The Rangoon Police Act, 1899.
Assam Act.
1920	I	The Assam Rifles Act, 1920.
Regulation by the Governor-General in Council.
1888	II	The Andaman and Nicobar Islands Military Police Regulation, 1888.

THE PREVENTION OF SEDITION MEETINGS ACT.

(Act No. X of 1911).

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the prevention of public meetings likely to promote sedition or to cause a disturbance of public tranquillity.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to the prevention of public meetings likely to promote sedition or to cause a disturbance of public tranquillity, It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called the Prevention of Seditious Meetings Act, 1911.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, but shall have operation only in such Provinces or part of Provinces as the Governor-General in Council may from time to time notify in the Gazette of India.

2. (1) The Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare the whole or any part of a Province, in which this Act is for the time being in operation, to be a proclaimed area.

Power of Local Government to notify proclaimed areas. (2) A notification made under sub-section (1) shall not remain in force for more than six months, but nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to prevent the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, from making any further notifications in respect of the same area from time to time as it may think fit.

3. (1) In this Act, the expression "public meeting" means a meeting which is open to the public or any class or portion of the public.

Definition. (2) A meeting may be a public meeting notwithstanding that it is held in a private place and notwithstanding that admission thereto may have been restricted by ticket or otherwise.

4. (1) No public meeting for the furtherance or discussion of any subject likely to cause disturbance or public excitement, or for the exhibition or distribution of any writing or printed matter relating to any such subject, shall be held in any proclaimed area—

Notice to be given of public meetings. (a) unless written notice of the intention to hold such meeting and of the time and place of such meeting has been given to the District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be, at least three days previously; or

5. No Court shall proceed to the trial of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of the District Magistrate or, in the case of a Presidency town or the town of Rangoon, of the Commissioner of Police.

6. (1) No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class shall try any offence under this Act.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in Chapter XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, no offence under this Act shall be triable summarily.

THE SCHEDULE.
(See Section 2.)

Year.	No.	Short title.
Acts of the Governor-General in Council.
1859	XXIV	The Madras District Police Act, 1859.
1861	V	The Police Act, 1861.
1887	XV	The Burma Military Police Act, 1887.
1888	III	The Police Act, 1888.
1892	V	The Bengal Military Police Act, 1892.
Madras Act.
1888	III	The Madras City Police Act, 1888.
Bombay Acts.
1890	IV	The Bombay District Police Act, 1890.
1902	IV	The City of Bombay Police Act, 1902.
Bengal Acts.
1866	II	The Calcutta Suburban Police Act, 1866.
"	IV	The Calcutta Police Act, 1866.
1890	III	The Calcutta Port Act, 1890.
1920	II	The Eastern Frontier Rifles (Bengal Battalion) Act, 1920.
Burma Act.
1899	IV	The Rangoon Police Act, 1899.
Assam Act.
1920	I	The Assam Rifles Act, 1920.
Regulation by the Governor-General in Council.
1888	II	The Andaman and Nicobar Islands Military Police Regulation, 1888.

THE PREVENTION OF SEDITIOUS MEETINGS ACT.

(ACT No. X OF 1911).

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the prevention of public meetings likely to promote sedition or to cause a disturbance of public tranquillity.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to the prevention of public meetings likely to promote sedition or to cause a disturbance of public tranquillity ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called the Prevention of Seditious Meetings Act, 1911.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, but shall have operation only in such Provinces or part of Provinces as the Governor-General in Council may from time to time notify in the Gazette of India.

2. (1) The Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare the whole or any part of a Province, in which this Act is for the time being in operation, to be a proclaimed area.

(2) A notification made under sub-section (1) shall not remain in force for more than six months, but nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to prevent the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, from making any further notifications in respect of the same area from time to time as it may think fit.

3. (1) In this Act, the expression " public meeting " means a meeting which Definition is open to the public or any class or portion of the public.

(2) A meeting may be a public meeting notwithstanding that it is held in a private place and notwithstanding that admission thereto may have been restricted by ticket or otherwise

4. (1) No public meeting for the furtherance or discussion of any subject likely to cause disturbance or public excitement, or for the exhibition or distribution of any writing or printed matter relating to any such subject, shall be held in any proclaimed area—

(a) unless written notice of the intention to hold such meeting and of the time and place of such meeting has been given to the District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be, at least three days previously ; or

(b) unless permission to hold such meeting has been obtained in writing from the District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be.

(2) The District Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class authorized by the District Magistrate in this behalf may, by order in writing, depute one or more Police officers, not being below the rank of a Head Constable, or other persons, to attend any such meeting for the purpose of causing a report to be taken of the proceedings.

(3) Nothing in this section shall apply to any public meeting held under any statutory or other express legal authority, or to public meetings or to public meetings convened by a Sheriff or class of public meetings exempted for that purpose by the Local Government by general or special order.

5. The District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be, may at any time, by order in writing, of which public notice shall forthwith be given, prohibit any public meeting in a proclaimed area if, in his opinion, such meeting is likely to promote sedition or disaffection or to cause a disturbance of the public tranquillity.

6. (1) Any person concerned in the promotion or conduct of a public meeting held in a proclaimed area contrary to the provisions of section 4 shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

(2) Any public meeting which has been prohibited under section 5 shall be deemed to be an unlawful assembly within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Indian Penal Code and of Chapter IX of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

7. Whoever, in a proclaimed area, in a public place or a place of public resort, otherwise than at a public meeting held in accordance with, or exempted from, the provisions of section 4, without the permission in writing of the Magistrate of the District or of the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be, previously obtained, delivers any lecture, address or speech on any subject likely to cause disturbance or public excitement to persons then present, may be arrested without warrant, and shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

8. No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or of a Magistrate of the first class or Sub-divisional Magistrate shall try any offence against this Act.

9. The Prevention of Seditious Meetings Act, 1907, and the Continuing Act, 1910, are hereby repealed.

THE REFORMATORY SCHOOLS ACT.

(ACT No. VIII OF 1897.)

An Act to amend the law relating to Reformatory Schools and to make further provision for dealing with youthful offenders.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to Reformatory Schools and to make further provision for dealing with youthful offenders ; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

1. Preliminary.

Title, commencement and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 ; and

(2) It shall come into force at once.

(3) This section and s. 2 shall extend to the whole of British India. The other sections shall extend in the first instance to the whole of British India except the territories for the time being administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Chief Commissioner of Coorg, but either of the said Local Governments may at any time, by notification in the local official Gazette, extend those sections to their territories from such day as may be fixed in any such notification.

Repeal of Act.

2. (1) The Reformatory Schools Act, 1876, is hereby repealed.

(2) But all proceedings taken, orders passed, officers appointed or authorized and rules made under the said Act shall, as far as may be, be deemed to have been respectively passed, appointed or authorized and made under this Act.

(3) Any enactment or document referring to the said Act shall, as far as may be, be construed to refer to his Act, or to the corresponding portions thereof.

Section 399 of Act X of 1882 repealed on date fixed by a notification under s. 1, sub-sec. (3).

3. From the date fixed by any notification issued under s. 1, sub-sec (3), s 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, shall be repealed in the province to which the notification relates

4. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) “ Youthful offender ” means any boy who has been convicted of any offence punishable with transportation or imprisonment and who, at the time of such conviction, was under the age of fifteen years :

(b) “ Inspector-General ” includes any officer appointed by the Local Government to perform all or any of the duties imposed by this Act on the Inspector-General : and

(c) “ District Magistrate ” shall include a Chief Presidency Magistrate,

II.—Reformatory Schools.

5. With the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government may—(a) establish and maintain Reformatory Schools at such places as it may think fit ;

(b) use as Reformatory Schools kept by persons willing to act in conformity with such rules, consistent with this Act, as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf ;

(c) direct that any school so established or used shall cease to exist as a Reformatory School or to be used as such.

6. Every school so established or used must provide—

(a) sufficient means of separating the inmates at night ;

(b) proper sanitary arrangements, water-supply, food, clothing and bedding for the youthful offenders detained therein ;

(c) the means of giving such youthful offenders industrial training ;

(d) an infirmary or proper place for reception of such youthful offenders when sick.

7. (1) Every school intended to be established or used as a Reformatory School shall, before being used as such, be inspected by the Inspector-General, and if he finds that the requirements of s 6 have been complied with, and that, in his opinion, such school is fitted for the reception of such youthful offenders as may be sent there under this Act, he shall certify to that effect and such certificate shall be published in the local official Gazette, together with an order of the Local Government establishing the school as a Reformatory School or directing that it shall be used as such, and the school shall thereupon be deemed to be a Reformatory School.

(2) Every such school shall, from time to time, and at least once in every year, be visited by the said Inspector-General, who shall send to the Local Government a report on the condition of the school in such form as the Local Government may prescribe.

8. (1) Whenever any youthful offender is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment, and is, in the judgment of the Court by which he is sentenced, a proper person to be an inmate of a Reformatory School, the Court may, subject to any rules made by the Local Government, direct that, instead of undergoing his sentence, he shall be sent to such a school, and be there detained for a period which shall be not less than three or more than seven years.

(2) The powers so conferred on the Court by this section shall be exercised only by (a) the High Court, (b) a Court of Session, (c) a District Magistrate, and (d) any Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, and may be exercised by such Courts whether the case comes before them originally or on appeal

(3) The Local Government may make rules for—

(a) defining what youthful offenders should be sent to Reformatory Schools, having regard to the nature of their offences or other considerations, and

(b) regulating the periods for which youthful offenders may be sent to such schools according to their ages or other considerations.

9. (1) When any Magistrate not empowered to pass an order under the last foregoing section is of opinion that a youthful offender

Proceedings where Magistrate is not empowered to pass an order under section 8 convicted by him is a proper person to be an inmate of a Reformatory School, he may, without passing sentence, record such opinion and submit his proceedings and forward the youthful offender to the District Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are so submitted may make such further inquiry (if any) as he may think fit and pass such sentence and order for the detention in a Reformatory School of the youthful offender, or otherwise, as he might have passed if such youthful offender had been originally tried by him.

10. The officer in charge of a prison in which a youthful offender is confined,

Power of Magistrate to direct boys under fifteen sentenced to imprisonment to be sent to Reformatory Schools.

in execution of a sentence of imprisonment, may bring him, if he has not then attained the age of fifteen years, before the District Magistrate within whose jurisdiction such prison is situate, and such Magistrate may, if such youthful offender appears to be a proper person to be an inmate of a

Reformatory School, direct that, instead of undergoing the residue of his sentence, he shall be sent to a Reformatory School, and there detained for a period which shall be subject to the same limitations as are prescribed by or under s. 8, with reference to the period of detention thereby authorized

11. (1) Before directing any youthful offender to be sent to a Reformatory

Preliminary enquiry and finding as to age of youthful offender.

School under section 8, section 9, or section 10, the Court or Magistrate shall inquire into the question of his age and, after taking such evidence (if any) as may be deemed necessary, shall record a finding thereon, stating his age as nearly as may be.

(2) A similar inquiry shall be made and finding recorded by every Magistrate not empowered to pass an order under section 8 before submitting his proceedings and forwarding the youthful offender to the District Magistrate as required by section 9, sub-section (1).

12. Every youthful offender directed by a Court or Magistrate to be sent Government to determine Reformatory School to which such offenders shall be sent.

to a Reformatory School shall be sent to such Reformatory School as the Local Government may, by general or special order, appoint for the reception of youthful offenders so dealt with by such Court or Magistrate :

Provided that, if accommodation in a Reformatory School is not immediately available for such youthful offender, he may be detained in the juvenile ward or such other suitable part of a prison as the Local Government may direct—

(a) until he can be sent to a Reformatory School, or

(b) until the term of his original sentence expires, whichever event may first happen. Should the term of his original sentence first expire, he shall thereupon be released, but should he be sent to a Reformatory School, then the period of detention previously undergone shall be treated as detention in a Reformatory School.

13 (1) If at any time after a youthful offender has been sent to a Reformatory School it appears to the Committee of Visitors or Persons found to be over eighteen years not to be detained in Reformatory Schools.

Board of Management, as the case may be, that the age of such youthful offender has been understated in the order for detention, and that he will attain the age of eighteen years before the expiration of the period for which he has been ordered to be detained, they shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government.

(2) No person shall be detained in a Reformatory School after he has been found by the Local Government to have attained the age of eighteen years.

Discharge or removal by order of Government.

14. The Local Government may at any time order any youthful offender—

(a) to be discharged from a Reformatory School ;

(b) to be removed from one Reformatory School to another such school situate within the territories subject to such Government : Provided that the whole period of his detention in a Reformatory School shall not be increased by such removal.

Power to Governor-General in Council to direct use of Reformatories in one province for reception of youthful offenders from another.

15. (1) The Governor-General in Council may by general or special order direct that any Reformatory School situated in one province shall be available for the reception of youthful offenders directed to be sent to any Reformatory School by any Court or Magistrate in any other province.

(2) Any such order may also provide for the removal of the youthful offender, and the cost of his maintenance, and may give any such further directions as may be necessary.

16. Nothing contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, shall be Certain orders not subject to appeal or revision.

construed to authorize any Court or Magistrate to alter or reverse in appeal or revision any order passed with respect to the age of an youthful offender or the substitution of an order for detention in a Reformatory School for transportation or imprisonment.

III.—Management of Reformatory Schools.

Appointment of Superintendent and Committee of Visitors or Board of Management.

17. (1) For the control and management of every Reformatory School, the Local Government shall appoint either (a) a Superintendent and a Committee of Visitors, or (b) a Board of Management.

(2) Every Committee and every Board so appointed must consist of not less than five persons, of whom two at least shall be natives of India.

(3) The Local Government may suspend or remove any Superintendent or any Member of a Committee or Board so appointed.

18. (1) Every Superintendent so appointed may, with the sanction of the Committee, by license under his hand, permit any youthful offender sent to a Reformatory School, who has attained the age of fourteen years, to live under the charge of any trustworthy and respectable person named in the license, or any officer of Government or of a Municipality, being an employer of labour and willing to receive and take charge of him, on the condition that the employer shall keep such youthful offender employed at some trade, occupation or calling.

(2) The license shall be in force for three months and no longer, but may, at any time and from time to time until the expiration of the period for which the youthful offender has been directed to be detained, be renewed for three months at a time.

Cancellation of license.

19. The license shall be cancelled at the desire of the employer named in the license

20. If during the term of the license the employer named therein dies, or ceases from business or to employ labour, or the period for which the youthful offender has been directed to be detained in the Reformatory School expires, the license shall thereupon cease and determine.

Determination of license.

21. If it appears to the Superintendent that the employer has ill-treated the youthful offender, or has not adequately provided for his lodging and maintenance, the Superintendent may cancel the license.

Cancellation of license in case of ill-treatment.

Superintendent to be deemed guardian of youthful offenders.

22. (1) The Superintendent of a Reformatory School shall be deemed to be the guardian of every youthful offender detained in such school, within the meaning of Act No. XIX of 1850 (concerning the binding of apprentices).

(2) If it appears to the Superintendent that any youthful offender licensed under s. 18 has behaved well during one or more periods of his license, the Superintendent may, with the sanction of the Committee, apprentice him under the provisions of the said Act and on such apprenticeship the right to detain such youthful offender in a Reformatory School shall cease, and the unexpired term (if any) of his sentence shall be cancelled.

Power to apprentice youthful offender.

Duties of Committee of Visitors.

23. (1) Every Committee of Visitors appointed under s. 17 for a Reformatory School shall, at least once in every month,

(a) visit the school to hear complaints, and see that the requirements of s. 6 have been complied with, and that the management of the school is proper in all respects ;

(b) examine the punishment-book ;

(c) bring any special cases to the notice of the Inspector-General ; and

(d) see that no person is illegally detained in the school.

(2) If any member of a Committee of Visitors so appointed fails or neglects, during a period of six consecutive months, to visit the school and assist in the discharge of the duties aforesaid, he shall cease to be a member of such Committee.

24. If, in exercise of the power conferred by s. 17, the Local Government appoints a Board of Management for any Reformatory School, such Board shall have the powers and perform the functions of the Superintendent under ss. 18 to 22, both inclusive ; and the license mentioned in s. 18 may be under the hand of their Chairman ; and they shall be deemed to be the guardians of the youthful offenders detained in such school.

Power to appoint Trustees or other Managers of a School to be a Board of Management.

25. The Local Government may declare any body or Trustees or Managers of a school, who are willing to act in conformity with the rules referred to in s. 5, clause (b), to be a Board of Management under this Act, and thereupon such body or managers shall have all the powers and perform all the functions of such Board of Management.

26. (1) With the previous sanction of the Local Government, every Board of Management of a Reformatory School may from time to time make rules consistent with this Act—

(i) to prescribe the articles which are to be deemed to be " prohibited articles " ; and

(ii) to regulate—

(a) the conduct of business of the Board ;

(b) the management of the school ;

(c) the education and industrial training of youthful offenders ;

(d) visits to, and communication with, youthful offender ;

(e) the terms and conditions under which any articles declared by the Board to be " prohibited articles " may be introduced into or removed out of the school ;

(f) the manner in which such articles are to be removed when introduced without due authority ;

- (g) the conditions and limitations under which such articles may be supplied outside the school to any youthful offender under order of detention therein ;
- (h) the conditions on which the possession by any such youthful offender of such articles may be sanctioned ;
- (i) the penalties to be imposed for the supply or possession of such articles when supplied or possessed without due authority ;
- (j) the punishment of offences committed by youthful offenders ; and
- (k) the granting of licenses for the employment of youthful offenders.

(2) In the absence of a Board of Management the Local Government may make rules consistent with this Act to regulate for any Reformatory School the matters mentioned in any clause of sub-section (1), other than clause (ii) (a), and also the mode in which the Committee of Visitors shall conduct their business.

IV.—Offences in relation to Reformatory Schools.

27. Whoever, contrary to any rule made under s. 26, introduces or removes or attempts by any means whatever to introduce or remove into or from any Reformatory School, or supplies or attempts to supply outside the limits of any Reformatory School, to any youthful offender under order of detention therein, any prohibited article, and every officer or person in charge of a Reformatory School who, contrary to any such rule, knowingly suffers any such article to be introduced into or removed from any Reformatory School, to be possessed by any youthful offender detained therein, or to be supplied to any such youthful offender outside its limits, and whoever, contrary to any such rule, communicates or attempts to communicate with any such youthful offender, and whoever abets any offence made punishable under this section, shall, on conviction before a Magistrate, be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

28. Whoever abets an escape, or an attempt to escape, on the part of a youthful offender from a Reformatory School, or from the employer of such youthful offender, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or with both.

29. A Police-officer may, without orders from a Magistrate and without a warrant, arrest any youthful offender sent to a Reformatory School under this Act, who has escaped from such school or from his employer, and take him back to such school or to his employer.

V.—Miscellaneous.

30. Repealed by Act III of 1925, Schedule III.

31. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in any other enactment for the time being in force, any Court may, if it shall think fit, instead of sentencing any youthful offender to transportation or imprisonment or directing him to be detained in a Reformatory School, order him to be—

Power to deal in other ways with youthful offenders including girls.

(a) discharged after due admonition, or

(b) delivered to his parent, or to his guardian or nearest adult relative, or such parent, guardian or relative executing a bond, with or without sureties, as the Court may require, to be responsible for the good behaviour of the youthful offender for any period not exceeding twelve months.

(2) For the purposes of this section the term "youthful offender" shall include a girl.

(3) The powers conferred on the Court by this section shall be exercised only by Courts empowered by or under s. 8.

(4) When any youthful offender is convicted by a Court not empowered to act under this section and the Court is of opinion that the powers conferred by this section should be exercised in respect of such youthful offender, it may record such opinion and submit the proceedings and forward the youthful offender to the District Magistrate to whom such Court is subordinate.

(5) The District Magistrate to whom the proceedings are so submitted may thereupon make such order or pass such sentence as he might have made or passed if the case had originally been tried by him.

32. When a youthful offender during his period of detention in a Reformatory Procedure when youthful offender under detention in a Reformatory School is again convicted and sentenced.

School is again convicted by a Criminal Court the sentence of such Court shall commence at once, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in s. 397 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, but the Court shall forthwith report the matter to the Local Government, which shall have power to deal with the matter in any way in which it thinks fit.

THE SLAVE TRADE ACT.

(39 & 40 Vic., c. 46.)

1. If any person, being a subject of Her Majesty or of any Prince or State in India in alliance with Her Majesty, shall, upon the High Seas or in any part of Asia or Africa which Her Majesty may from time to time think fit to specify by any Order in Council in this behalf, commit any of the offences defined in ss. 367, 370 and 371, (in the schedule to this Act respectively recited) of Act XLV of 1860, passed by the Governor-General of India in Council and called "The Indian Penal Code," or abet within the meaning of the fifth chapter of the said Penal Code the commission of any such offence, such person shall be dealt with, in respect of such offence or abetment, as if the same had been committed in any place within British India in which he may be or may be found.
Certain offenders on High Seas punished as though offence committed in India.
2. If the Governor-General of India in Council shall, at a meeting for making laws and regulations, amend the provisions of the said sections 367, 370, and 371 of the said Penal Code, or any of them or the said fifth chapter thereof so far as relates to the abetment of any of the offences forbidden by such sections, or make any further provisions for preventing or suppressing the making, buying or selling of slaves or any of the offences comprised in the said three sections, the Secretary of State for India shall, unless Her Majesty has disallowed such amendment or further provision, lay a copy of the amending Act before each House of Parliament, and after the same shall have lain on the table of both Houses of Parliament for the space of forty days, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, unless either House of Parliament shall present an address to Her Majesty to the contrary, to direct by Order in Council that the provisions of the first section of this Act shall apply to the law so amended or enlarged, and the same shall be applicable accordingly.
Sec. 1 may be made to apply to future amendments of this Act.
3. For the purpose of obtaining evidence of the commission of the offences made punishable by this Act or any Act of Parliament relating to slavery or the slave trade, every High Court in India shall have, as respects the persons in the first section of this Act referred to, and as respects any British colony, settlement, plantation, or territory, wherein any witness may be, the same powers as are conferred on the Court of Queen's Bench by the fourth section of an Act made and passed in the Session of Parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter ninety-eight, with respect to such British Colonies, settlements, plantations, and territories as are therein referred to.
Powers of High Court for purpose of obtaining evidence

And every High Court may, if it thinks fit, issue such commission as is mentioned in section 330 of Act X of 1872, passed by the Governor-General of India in Council, and called, "The Code of Criminal Procedure," to any Consular Officer of Her Majesty in the parts of Asia or Africa specified in any order of Her Majesty in Council under s. 1 of this Act, or to any Political officer or agent of the Governor-General of India in Council or of any Indian Government in the said parts or in the dominions of any Prince or State in India in alliance with Her Majesty, or to any Magistrate in Her Majesty's Indian dominions.

And the depositions taken by virtue of the said powers or under such commission shall be deemed by every Court of original or appellate jurisdiction in India in any trial or proceeding under this Act or any Act of Parliament relating to slavery or the slave trade to be as good and competent evidence as if the witnesses deposing had been present and examined visu voce and had made oath or affirmation as required by law.

4. And whereas by certain Orders of Her Majesty in Council made by virtue of an Act made and passed in the Session of Parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter ninety-four, which Orders are dated respectively the ninth August one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six and the fourth November one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, it is ordered that the provisions of such Orders relating to British subjects shall extend and apply to all subjects of Her Majesty, whether by birth or by naturalisation, and also to all persons enjoying Her Majesty's protection in the several dominions mentioned in such Orders respectively :

It is hereby declared and enacted that for the purposes of the said Orders in Council, and of any Orders in Council which Her Majesty may hereafter think fit to make by virtue of the said Act of the sixth and seventh years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter ninety-four, all subjects of the several Princes and States in India in alliance with Her Majesty, residing and being in the several dominions comprised in such orders respectively, are and shall be deemed to be persons enjoying Her Majesty's protection therein.

NOTE.

By an Order in Council, dated the 30th April 1877,¹ this statute is extended to the following parts of Asia and Africa :—

(a) The territories of the Khan of Kelat and of the Sultan of Muscat in Melran and Arabia.

(b) The coasts of Baluchistan and of the Bunder Abbas Districts and the shores of the Persian Gulf.

(c) The coasts of Arabia from Ras Mussendom to Cape Bal-el-Mandeb.

(d) The territories of the following tribes near Adeo, viz :—

The Abdali	The Howahabi	The Subahi
The Foodli	The Alawi	The Gafai
The Akrahi	The Amir	The Oulaki

¹ Published in the London Gazette, No. 24466, p. 3447, on the 1st June, 1877.

- (e) The Coast of Africa from Ras S-jarmo to Delagoa Bay.
- (f) The territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar.
- (g) The sea and islands within ten degrees of latitude and longitude from such coast and shores respectively.

By the Slave Trade Offences (India) Order in Council, dated 14th October 1913, this Act is made applicable to the territories of the Kaifi, Wahidi, Behan, Andali and Beda tribes near Aden, and to the territories of the Mahri tribe of Kishin and Scotra.¹

¹ Gazette of India, Part I, p. 1113, for 1913.

THE TERRITORIAL WATERS JURISDICTION ACT, 1878.

(41 & 42 Vic., c. 73).

An Act to regulate the Law relating to the trial of offences committed on the sea within a certain distance of the coasts of Her Majesty's Dominions.

WHEREAS the rightful jurisdiction of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, extends and has always extended over the open seas adjacent to the coasts of the United Kingdom and of all other parts of Her Majesty's dominions to such a distance as is necessary for the defence and security of such dominions :

And whereas it is expedient that all offences committed on the open sea within a certain distance of the coasts of the United Kingdom and of all other parts of Her Majesty's dominions, by whomsoever committed, should be dealt with according to law :

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

Short title 1. This Act may be cited as the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878.

Amendment of the law as to the jurisdiction of the Admiral. 2. An offence committed by a person, whether he is or is not a subject of Her Majesty, on the open sea within the territorial waters of Her Majesty's dominions, is an offence within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, although it may have been committed on board or by means of a foreign ship, and the person who committed such offence may be arrested, tried, and punished accordingly.

Restriction on institution of proceedings for punishment of offence. 3. Proceedings for the trial and punishment of a person who is not a subject of Her Majesty, and who is charged with any such offence as is declared by this Act to be within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, shall not be instituted in any court of the United Kingdom, except with the consent of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and on his certificate that the institution of such proceedings is in his opinion expedient, and shall not be instituted in any of the dominions of Her Majesty out of the United Kingdom, except with the leave of the Governor of the part of the dominions in which such proceedings are proposed to be instituted, and on his certificate that it is expedient that such proceedings should be instituted.

Provisions as to procedure. 4. On the trial of any person who is not a subject of Her Majesty for an offence declared by this Act to be within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, it shall not be necessary to aver in any indictment or information on such trial that such consent or certificate of the Secretary of State or Governor as is required by this Act has been given, and the fact of the same having been given shall be presumed unless disputed by the defendant at the trial; and the production of a document purporting to be signed by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State as respects the United Kingdom, and by the Governor as respects any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, and containing such consent and certificate, shall be sufficient evidence for all the purposes of this Act of the consent and certificate required by this Act.

Proceedings before a justice of the peace or other magistrate, previous to the committal of an offender for trial or to the determination of the justice or magistrate that the offender is to be put upon his trial shall not be deemed proceedings for the trial of the offence committed by such offender for the purposes of the said consent and certificate under this Act.

5. Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to be in derogation of any rightful jurisdiction of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, under the law of nations, or to affect or prejudice any jurisdiction conferred by Act of Parliament or now by law existing in relation to foreign ships or in relation to persons on board such ships Saving as to jurisdiction.

6. This Act shall not prejudice or affect the trial in manner heretofore in use of any act of piracy as defined by the law of nations, or affect or prejudice any law relating thereto; and where any act of piracy as defined by the law of nations is also any such offence as is declared by this Act to be within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, such offence may be tried in pursuance of this Act, or in pursuance of any other Act of Parliament, law, or custom relating thereto.

Saving as to piracy.

7. In this Act, unless there is something inconsistent in the context, the following expressions shall respectively have the meanings hereinafter assigned to them; that is to say,

Definitions.

"The jurisdiction of the Admiral," as used in this Act, includes the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England and Ireland, or either of such jurisdictions as used in any Act of Parliament; and for the purpose of arresting any person charged with an offence declared by this Act to be within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, the territorial waters adjacent to the United Kingdom, or any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, shall be deemed to be within the jurisdiction of any judge, magistrate, or officer having power within such United Kingdom, or other part of Her Majesty's dominions, to issue warrants for arresting or to arrest persons charged with offences committed within the jurisdiction of such judge, magistrate, or officer:

"Jurisdiction of the Admiral."

"United Kingdom" includes the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands, and other adjacent islands:

"United Kingdom."

"The territorial waters of Her Majesty's dominions," in reference to the sea, means such part of the sea adjacent to the coast of the United Kingdom, or the coast of some other part of Her Majesty's dominions, as is deemed by international law to be within the territorial Sovereignty of Her Majesty; and for the purpose of any offence declared by this Act to be within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, any part of the open sea within one marine league of the coast measured from low-water mark shall be deemed to be open sea within the territorial waters of Her Majesty's dominions :

"Governor," as respects India, means the Governor-General or the Governor of any presidency; and where a British possession consists of several constituent colonies, means the Governor-General of the whole possession or the Governor of any of the constituent colonies; and as respects any other British possession, means the officer for the time being administering the government of such possession; also any person acting for or in the capacity of Governor shall be included under the term "Governor."

"Offence" as used in this Act means an act, neglect, or default of such a description as would, if committed within the body of a county in England, be punishable on indictment according to the law of England for the time being in force :

"Ship." "Ship" includes every description of ship, boat, or other floating craft :

"Foreign ship." "Foreign ship" means any ship which is not a British ship.

THE WHIPPING ACT.

(Act No. IV of 1909.)

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to the punishment of whipping ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called the Whipping Act, 1909 ; and

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, inclusive of British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas.

Whipping added to punishments described in Act XLV 1860. 2. In addition to the punishments described in s. 53 of the Indian Penal Code, offenders are also liable to the punishment of whipping.

NOTE.

The Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure must be read as if the Whipping Act formed a part of the Penal Code from the date of its enactment ¹

Offences punishable with whipping in lieu of other punishment. 3. Whoever commits any of the following offences, namely :—

(a) theft, as defined in s. 378 of the Indian Penal Code, other than theft by a clerk or servant of property in possession of his master ;

(b) theft in a building, tent or vessel, as defined in s. 380 of the said Code ;

(c) theft after preparation for causing death or hurt, as defined in s. 382 of the said Code ;

(d) lurking house-trespass, or house-breaking, as defined in ss. 443 and 445 of the said Code, in order to the committing of any offence punishable with whipping under this section ;

(e) lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, as defined in ss. 444 and 446 of the said Code, in order to the committing of any offence punishable with whipping under this section .

may be punished with whipping in lieu of any punishment to which he may for such offence be liable under the said Code

NOTE.

When punishment is inflicted under this Act, the charge must state the liability, and the judgment must set out the grounds thereof ²

Under this section the offender in lieu of punishment provided by the Penal Code may be punished with whipping. The punishment under the Penal Code cannot be inflicted in addition to whipping.¹ Under the next section the offender may be punished with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable.

¹ Maniruddin v. Gaur Chandra Shamadar, R. App. 18.
(1871) 7 Beng. L. R. 165, F. R., (1870) 5 M. H. C.

² Badiya, (1862) 5 M. L. J. 155.

Offences punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to other punishment.

4. Whoever—

(a) abets, commits or attempts to commit, rape as defined in s. 375 of the Indian Penal Code ;

(b) compels, or induces any person by fear of bodily injury, to submit to an unnatural offence as defined in s. 377 of the said Code ;

(c) voluntarily causes hurt in committing or attempting to commit robbery, as defined in s. 390 of the said Code ;

(d) commits dacoity as defined in s. 391 of the said Code ;

may be punished with a whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment to which he may, for such offence, abetment or attempt be liable under the said Code.

NOTE.

This section must be read subject to ss. 391 and 393 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under the former section no accused person shall be sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment when the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced is less than three months. Under the latter section certain exemptions are specified.

Juvenile offenders when punishable with whipping.

5. Any juvenile offender who abets, commits or attempts to commit—

(a) any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code, except offences specified in Chapter VI and in ss. 153-A and 505 of that Code and offence punishable with death, or

(b) any offence punishable under any other law with imprisonment which the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, specify in this behalf, may be punished with whipping in lieu of any other punishment to which he may for such offence, abetment or attempt be liable.

Explanation.—In this section the expression “juvenile offender” means an offender whom the Court, after making such enquiry (if any) as may be deemed necessary, shall find to be under sixteen years of age, the finding of the Court in all cases being final and conclusive.

NOTE.

This section is not intended to override the provisions of ss. 3 and 4 which apply to juvenile offenders, but these sections specify certain offences only for which whipping may be inflicted ; but under this section a juvenile offender may be punished with whipping for an offence mentioned in clauses (a) and (b).

The sentence of whipping under this section may be passed in lieu of and not in addition to any other punishment to which the accused may be liable.

¹ Dagadu, (1891) 16 Bom. 357.

The following notice¹ has been issued by the Governor-General in Council in pursuance of clause (b)—

No. 1008.—In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 5, clause (b), of the Whipping Act, 1909 (IV of 1909), and in supersession of the Home Department notification No. 1650, dated the 27th September 1920, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to specify the offences under the enactments and rules mentioned in the schedule hereto annexed, being offences punishable under the said enactments and rules with imprisonment, as offences for the abetment or commission of, or attempt to commit which, juvenile offenders may be punished with whipping in accordance with the provisions of the said section.

SCHEDULE. General Acts.

1. The Police Act, 1861 (V of 1861), section 34
2. The Public Gambling Act, 1867 (III of 1867), sections 4, 13 and 15.
3. The Cattle Trespass Act, 1871 (I of 1871), section 24.
4. The Northern India Canal and Drainage Act, 1873 (VIII of 1873), section 70, clauses (1) and (2)
5. The Opium Act, 1878 (I of 1878) section 9
6. The Indian Forest Act, 1878 (VII of 1878), sections 25, 32 and 62 and rules made under the said Act
7. The Indian Forest Act, 1906 (XII of 1906), sections 25, 32 and 62 and rules made under the said Act
8. The Indian Salt Act, 1882 (XII of 1882), sections 55 (XIII of 1890) (IX of 1890), sections 3, 4 and 5
9. The Indian Forest Act, 1906 (XII of 1906), sections 25, 32 and 62 and rules made under the said Act
10. The Indian Forest Act, 1906 (XII of 1906), sections 25, 32 and 62 and rules made under the said Act
11. The Indian Forest Act, 1906 (XII of 1906), sections 25, 32 and 62 and rules made under the said Act
12. The Prisons Act, 1894 (IX of 1894), section 42
13. The Excise Act, 1896 (XII of 1896), sections 45, 46, 49 and 51
14. The Indian Fisheries Act, 1897 (IV of 1897), sections 4 and 5
15. The Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 (VIII of 1897), sections 27 and 28
16. The Indian Post Office Act, 1898, (VI of 1898), sections 61, 62 and 68.
17. The Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904 (VII of 1904), section 16
18. The Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), section 40
19. The Criminal Tribes Act, 1911 (III of 1911), sections 21, 22 and 24
20. The Cantonment Code, 1912, s. 67 (a)
21. The Towns Nuisances Act, 1889 (Madras Act III of 1889), sections 3, 5 and 7.
22. The Madras Salt Act, 1889 (Madras Act IV 1889), section 74
23. The Bombay Abkari Act, 1878 (Bombay Act V of 1878), sections 47 and 48.
24. The Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, 1887 (Bombay Act IV of 1887), sections 5 and 12.
25. The Bombay District Police Act, 1890 (Bombay Act IV of 1890), sections 62, 70 and 71
26. The City of Bombay Police Act, 1902 (Bombay Act IV of 1902), section 122
27. The Howrah Offences Act, 1857 (XXI of 1857), section 20
28. The Calcutta Suburban Police Act, 1866 (Bengal Act II of 1866), section 41
29. The Calcutta Police Act, 1866 (Bengal Act IV of 1866), section 68.
30. The Bengal Public Gambling Act, 1867 (Bengal Act II of 1867), sections 4, 11 and 13
31. The Bengal Immigration Act, 1876 (Bengal Act III of 1876), section 93.
32. The Bengal Embarkment Act, 1882 (Bengal Act II of 1882), section 77.
33. The Bengal Excise Act, 1890 (Bengal Act V of 1890), sections 46 and 52
34. The United Provinces Excise Act, 1910 (United Provinces Act IV of 1910), sections 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000

LOCAL ACTS

Madras

1. The Madras District Police Act, 1880 (XXIV of 1880), section 47
2. The Madras Forest Act, 1882 (Madras Act V of 1882), sections 21, 22 and 23 and rule made under sections 21 and 23, for the

Punjab

1. The Punjab Land Preservation (Chow) Act, 1900 (Punjab Act II of 1900), section 19
2. The Punjab Excise Act, 1911 (Punjab Act I of 1911), section 41, sub-sections (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), (15), (16), (17), (18), (19), (20), (21), (22), (23), (24), (25), (26), (27), (28), (29), (30), (31), (32), (33), (34), (35), (36), (37), (38), (39), (40), (41), (42), (43), (44), (45), (46), (47), (48), (49), (50), (51), (52), (53), (54), (55), (56), (57), (58), (59), (60), (61), (62), (63), (64), (65), (66), (67), (68), (69), (70), (71), (72), (73), (74), (75), (76), (77), (78), (79), (80), (81), (82), (83), (84), (85), (86), (87), (88), (89), (90), (91), (92), (93), (94), (95), (96), (97), (98), (99), (100)

¹ Notification No. 1008, Home Department, July 1921, dated 21st June 1921, Gazette of India, 18th June 1921, Part I, p. 872

Burma.

3. The Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915 (Bihar and Orissa Act II of 1915), sections 47 and 55.

Central Provinces.

1. The Central Provinces Excise Act, 1915 (Central Provinces Act II of 1915), sections 31, cl. 1, and 30.

Delhi.

1. Section 61, sub-section (1) clauses (a) and (c) and sub-section (2), clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 (Punjab Act I of 1914), as applied to the Delhi Province by Government of India notifications No. 321639, dated the 22nd May 1914, and No. 16272, dated the 30th October 1915.

Behar and Orissa.

1. The Bengal Embankment Act, 1855 (XXXII of 1855), sections 10 and 17.
2. The Bengal Embankment Act, 1882 (Bengal Act II of 1882), section 77.

6. Whenever any Local Government has, by notification in the Official Gazette, declared the provisions of this section to be in force in any frontier district or any wild tract of country within the jurisdiction of such Local Government, any person who in such district or tract of country after such notification as aforesaid commits any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for three years or upwards, may be punished with whipping in lieu of any other punishment to which he may be liable under the said Code.

Special provision as to punishment with whipping in frontier districts.

Amendment of section 392, Act V, 1898.

7. To section 392, sub-section (2), of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the words "and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall not exceed fifteen stripes" shall be added.

Repeals.

8. The enactments mentioned in the Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof.

THE SCHEDULE.

1	2	3	4
Year.	No.	Subject or short title.	Extent of repeal.
Acts of the Governor-General in Council.
1864	VI	The Whipping Act, 1864.	So much as is unrepealed.
1895	III	The Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1895.	Section 5.
1898	V	The Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.	The words "whipping (if specially empowered)" in sub-section (1) and sub-section (3) of section 32. The words and figures "(1) Power to pass sentences of whipping section 32" under the heading "Powers with which a Magistrate of the second class may be invested" in Schedule IV.
"	XIII	The Burma Laws Act, 1898.	Section 4, sub-section (3), clause (b), and the second Schedule.
1900	V	The Whipping Act, 1900.	The whole Act.

INDEX.

 The figures refer to sections and pages or to pages only.*

Abandonment—of child by its mother, p. 686. or exposure of child under 12 years of age, s. 317, p. 684

Abduction—

definition of, s. 362, p. 752.
to murder the person abducted, s. 364, p. 754.
wrongfully confine, s. 365, p. 755.

762.

married woman, s. 498, p. 1048.
distinguished from 'kidnapping', p. 752.

See KIDNAPPING.

Abetment—

definition of, s. 107, p. 197.
is itself an offence under s. 40, p. 65.
in foreign territory, of forgery committed in British India, p. 31.
to be an offence, not necessary that the act abetted should be committed, s. 108, expln. 2,
p. 205.

5, pp. 205, 206.

- (1) abetment by instigation, p. 198.
by suppressing evidence, p. 199.
consent to hold a stake is no instigation, p. 199.
deliberate absence is no instigation, p. 199.
instigation by letter, p. 199.

- (2) abetment by conspiracy, p. 200.
abortion, p. 201.
a substantive offence, p. 200.
forgery, p. 201.
suicide, p. 201.
to commit acts amounting to distinct offences, p. 200.

- (3) abetment by aid, p. 201.
by an act, p. 201.

English law of—accessory after the fact, p. 204.

before the fact, p. 204.

Abetment—concl'd.

attempt to abet is an offence, p. 207.

principal in the first degree, p. 203.

second degree, p. 203.

of an abetment is an offence, p. 207.

mere subsequent knowledge cannot constitute an, p. 207.

principal cannot be an abettor, p. 208.

is a substantive offence, p. 207.

test of guilt, p. 207.

in British India of offences outside it, s. 108-A, p. 208.

general provisions regarding punishment for, ss. 109-117, pp. 209-221

s. 109, p. 209.

murders, p. 210.

homicide, p. 210.

214.

when abettor present when offence committed, s. 114, p. 215.

person watching outside a house, p. 217.

mere presence not sufficient, p. 216.

if offence abetted is punishable with death or transportation for life and that offence is not committed, s. 115, p. 218.

hurt is caused, s. 115, p. 218.

offence abetted is punishable with, imprisonment, and that offence is not committed, s. 116, p. 219.

abettor or person abetted is a public servant, s. 116, p. 220.

offence by the public generally or by persons more than ten in number, s. 117, p. 221.

concealing design to commit offence punishable with death or transportation for life, s. 118, p. 222.

if offence be committed, s. 118, p. 222.

public servant concealing design to commit offence which it is his duty to prevent, s. 119, p. 223.

if offence be committed, s. 119, p. 224.

punishable with death, s. 119, p. 224.

p. 223.

of attempt to murder, p. 215.

bigamy, p. 1037.

cheating, p. 910.

forgery, p. 984.

giving bribes, p. 310.

giving false evidence, p. 395.

mutiny, assault,

offences of wagair

e King.

ss. 125, 127, pp. 260-262.

512.

Abettor—

definition of, s. 108, p. 205.

See ABETMENT.

Abortion—

80.

681.

Absconding—

meaning of the term 'abscond,' p. 342.
to avoid service of summons or other proceedings, s. 172, p. 34

Abusive words—

giving rise to grave and sudden provocation, p. 635.

Accessory—

after the fact, who is, p. 204.
before the fact, who is, p. 204.

Accident—

act done by etc., is no offence, s. 80, p. 133 defined, p. 133.

Accomplice—

in cases of bribery, p. 319.

Accounts—

unsigned settlement of—in writing is a valuable security, p. 54.
falsification of, s. 477-A, p. 1005.

Accusation—

threat of—of an offence in order to commit extortion, ss. 388, 389, pp. 815, 816. preferred in good faith to person in authority, not defamation, s. 499, eighth exception, pp. 1056, 1079.

Accused—

bears the onus of proving exception, p. 119.

Act—

done in British as well as foreign territory, p. 23.
definition of, s. 33, p. 55.
done by several persons with common intent, s. 34, p. 55.
when criminal and done by several persons, each being liable, ss. 35, 37, 38, pp. 60, 61, 62.
effect caused partly by—and partly by omission, s. 36, p. 61.

See RASH AND NEGLIGENT ACT.

Acts—

words referring to include illegal omissions, s. 32, p. 55

Act of State—

Courts can decide whether an act was such or not, p. 130.
to support the plea of—it is not necessary that defendant must have authority from the Crown, and the act must be as a matter of policy outside the law, pp. 130, 131.
what amounts to an, p. 130

Admiralty Jurisdiction—

in respect of offences committed on the high seas, p. 23.
jurisdiction of the High Courts, p. 25.
Mofussil Courts, p. 27.
Presidency Magistrate's Court, p. 27.

Adoption—

forgery or fraudulent cancellation or destruction of a will or authority to adopt, how punishable, ss. 467, 477, pp. 988, 1003, 1004.

Adulteration—selling adulterated article as unadulterated, p. 552.

See FOOD OR DRINK.

Adultery—

confession by a woman of, is grave provocation in murder, p. 634.
death caused in provocation given by, p. 634.
house-trespass for committing adultery, p. 954.

Adultery—concl'd.

958.

wife not punishable for abetment of, s. 497, p. 1044.
 reasons why wife not punishable as abettor, p. 1044.
 death of husband does not end prosecution, p. 1046.
 complaint by person aggrieved is necessary, p. 1046.
 withdrawal of charge, p. 1047.
 offender liable to conviction for every fresh act, p. 1047.
 order for re-trial and examination of wife, p. 1047.
 enticing or taking away, etc., a married woman with criminal intent, s. 498, p. 1048.

See MARRIAGE.

Affidavit—

by a convict, false statements in, p. 395.

Affirmation—

solemn—included in the word "oath," s. 51, p. 68.

See OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS.

Affray—

assaulting a public officer suppressing an, s. 152, p. 302.
 definition of, s. 159, p. 312.
 punishment for committing, s. 160, p. 312.
 distinguished from "assault," p. 313.
 "riot," p. 313.
 must be in a public place, pp. 313, 314.
 what is a public place, p. 313.
 not a public place, p. 313.

Age—

limits of—with respect to capability of committing offence, ss. 82, 83, pp. 141, 142.

Agent—

liabilities of—or owner or occupier of land not giving notice to police of riot, etc., ss. 154, 155, pp. 307, 309.

310.

Aid—

definition of the term, s. 107, expln. 2, p. 197.
 abetment by, p. 201.
 by an act, p. 201.

giving weapon to hurt another, p. 202.
 order to assault, p. 202.
 presence at a bigamous marriage, p. 201.

by illegal omission, p. 203.
 non-interference where duty to interfere, p. 203.
 omission must be of legal obligation, p. 203

See ABETMENT.

Alien—

liability for an offence, p. 30.

Alien enemies—

liability under the Code, p. 7.

Allegiance—

seducing officer, soldier, or sailor in the Army or Navy from, s. 131, p. 203.

Allied State—offence committed by a British subject in, s. 4, p. 17.

Alteration—

made in document, when forgery, s. 464, p. 967.

Altered coin—

passing of altered coin, s. 250, p. 523.

Queen's coin, s. 251, p. 523.

possession of altered coin, s. 252, p. 524.

Queen's coin, s. 253, p. 525.

delivery of altered coin, s. 254, p. 525.

Altering appearance of coin—

when it is ordinary coin, s. 248, p. 522.

Queen's coin, s. 249, p. 522.

Altering weight of coin—

scooping out and refilling an, s. 246, expln., p. 521.

alteration of an ordinary coin, s. 248, p. 522.

Queen's coin, s. 257, p. 527.

Alternative—

conviction in—limit of punishment on, s. 72, p. 105.

Ambassadors—

exemption of—from the jurisdiction of criminal Courts, p. 6.

liability under the Code, p. 6.

American—

sentence to be for penal servitude instead of transportation, s. 56, p. 78.

Animal—

definition of, s. 47, p. 67.

" " " " " "

Annexation—

subsequent, of territory where the offence is committed, p. 21.

Annoyance—

in criminal trespass, s. 441, p. 936.

Anonymous communication—

criminal intimidation caused by any, s. 507, p. 1102.

Appeal memo—

false representation in a, p. 363.

statement in a, p. 368.

Apprehension—

of offender neglecting to aid in, s. 187, p. 379.

penalty for resisting of obstructing—of oneself, s. 224, p. 485.

another, s. 225, p. 488.

preventing—by harbouring or concealing person, s. 216, p. 467.

public servant voluntarily omitting, s. 221, p. 479.

of offender under sentence of Court, s. 222, p. 480.

omission of—by public servant, s. 225-A, p. 490.

resistance to lawful, s. 225-B, p. 491.

See RESISTING.

Arbitrator—

inclusion of—in the term "judge," p. 40.

"public servant," s. 21, cl. (6) p. 42.

false evidence before an, s. 192, p. 396.

Army—

exemption of foreign, p. 7.

offences relating to—and committed by persons belonging to, Ch. VII, p. 266.

Army Act (54 & 55 Vic., c. 58.)— not affected by Penal Code, s. 5, p. 31.

Arrest—

485, 488.

Articles of War—

See INDIAN ARTICLES OF WAR.

Artificer—

breach of contract by, s. 492, p. 1030.

meaning of the term, p. 1030.

Asiatic Power—

waging war against, s. 125, p. 260.

Assault—

on Governor-General, etc., with intent to compel or restrain exercise of any lawful power, s. 124, p. 242.

abetting—by soldier or sailor on superior officer, ss. 133, 134, pp. 270, 271.

on public servant while suppressing riot, etc., s. 152, p. 302.

definition of, s. 351, p. 731.

distinguished from affray, p. 313.

mere words alone do not amount to, s. 351, expln., p. 731.

English law of, p. 732.

punishment for, ss. 352—358, pp. 733—741.

on public officer generally, s. 353, p. 735.

indecent—on a woman, p. 738.

with intent to outrage modesty of woman, s. 354, p. 738.

dishonour person, s. 355, p. 740.

in attempt to commit theft from person, s. 356, p. 740.

wrongful confinement, s. 357, p. 741.

on grave provocation, s. 358, p. 741.

See CRIMINAL FORCE.

Assembly—

when it is "unlawful," s. 141, p. 278.

joining or continuing in—after notice to disperse, s. 151, p. 301.

religious—disturbing of, s. 296, p. 590.

Assessor—

when "public servant," s. 21, Fifth, p. 41.

false personation of—; punishment for, s. 229, p. 500.

Assignment—

by creditor, no offence under s. 206, p. 435.

of perjury, proof by two witnesses, p. 392.

Assistance—

liability of private persons to render, p. 121.

omission to give—to public servant, how punishable, s. 187, p. 379.

Association—

when included in "person," s. 11, p. 37.

in cases of dacoity, s. 400, p. 832.

theft, s. 401, p. 835.

imputation against an, s. 409, expln. 2, p. 1054.

Atmosphere—

pollution of —, punishment for, s. 278, p. 555.

Attachment—

carrying away crops under, p. 436.
removal of property during, p. 914.
theft of property under, p. 796.

Attempt—

an act towards commission when, p. 1117.
by life-convicts, s. 307, p. 668.
distinguished from preparation and intention, p. 1109.
 intention, p. 1109.
 preparation, p. 1109.
 attempt, p. 1114.
doctrine of previous conviction does not apply to, p. 111.
does not include "substantial steps," p. 1121.

use of lawful power,

s. 1-4, p. 242.
rescue prisoner of State or war, s. 130, p. 265.
commit murder, s. 307, p. 668.
 act committed in—must be capable of causing death, p. 670.
commit robbery, s. 393, p. 823.
 robbery of dacoity when armed with deadly weapon, s. 398, p. 831.
 an offence not otherwise expressly provided for, s. 511, p. 1108.
to cheat, p. 910.
 commit abetment of an offence, p. 203 house-trespass, p. 946.
 adultery, p. 1045.
take bribe is constituted by asking for it, p. 320.
 gratification, p. 320.

Attorney—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 409, p. 863 power of—is a document, s. 29, p. 52.

Auction—

mock-bidding at on auction, p. 373.

Authority—

contempt of the lawful—of public servants, Ch. X, p. 344.

Balance sheet—

for cheating, p. 903 preparation of a false, p. 396.

Balloon—

letting off fire—no offence, p. 567.

Banker—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 409, p. 864

Bank-notes—

counterfeiting, s. 489-A, p. 1024.
using as genuine forged or counterfeit, s. 489-B, p. 1025.
possessing forged or counterfeit, s. 489-C, p. 1025.
making or possessing instruments or materials for forging or counterfeiting, s. 489-D, p. 1026

Baptism—

forging register of, s. 466, p. 986.

Believe—

"reason to believe": meaning of the term, s. 26, p. 51.

Benefit—

as to meaning of, s. 92, expln., p. 168.

Bid—See ILLEGAL PURCHASE OR BID.*Bidding for certain property— public servant unlawfully buying or, s. 169, p. 339.

Bigamy—

marriage of person for seven years, s. 494, except in 1032, 1036.

marriage during iddat, p. 1033.

divorce, effect of, p. 1034.

custom of, how far valid, p. 1034.

conversion of Hindu wife or husband, p. 1035.

Native Christians, p. 1035.

persons present at a bigamous marriage, p. 1037.

priest officiating at a bigamous marriage, p. 1037.

proof of marriage among the English, p. 1039.

Hindus, p. 1039.

Jews, p. 1039.

Mahomedans, p. 1039.

Native Christians, p. 1039.

Parsis, p. 1039.

publication of banns of marriage amounts to preparation only, p. 1034.

Bill of exchange—endorsement on—is a document, s. 29, ill., p. 52.

is a valuable security, s. 30, ill., p. 54.

Birth—

concealment of—punishment for, s. 318, p. 687.

forging register of, s. 466, p. 986.

Boat—

conveying passengers in an unsafe, s. 282, p. 561.

upsetting of—for want of ballast, p. 561.

Bodily pain—

whoever causes—is said to cause hurt, s. 319, p. 690.

Body—

private defence of the, s. 100, p. 187.

See PRIVATE DEFENCE.*Bone—fracture or dislocation of—is "grievous hurt," s. 320, severely, p. 692.Books— punishment for the sale, etc., of obscene, s. 292, p. 576.

are included in 'goods' in s. 480, p. 1012.

Boundaries—

mischief by destroying or removing marks of, s. 434, p. 931.

Boxing—

game of, is protected by, s. 87, p. 158.

Boys—

enticing—under 14 years is kidnapping, s. 361, p. 743.

Breach of the peace—

insult intended to provoke—; punishment for, s. 504, p. 1097.

circulating false report to cause, s. 505, p. 1099.

Breach of contract of service—See SERVICE.Breach of trust—See* CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST.Breaking open— a closed receptacle, s. 161, p. 965.

by person entrusted with custody, s. 462, p. 966.

Bribe—

definition of, s. 165, p. 324.

document of, p. 310.

See GRATIFICATION.Bribery—

at an election, meaning of, s. 171-B, p. 335.

punishment for, s. 171-E, p. 339.

Bridge—

mischief by injuring, s. 431, p. 929.

British India—

514

definition of, s. 15, p. 38.

extent of, p. 2.

kidnapping a person from, ss. 359, 363, pp. 742, 753.

liability of foreigners in—for offences committed outside its limits, p. 30.

British territory—punishment of offences committed within, s. 2, p. 4

beyond, s. 3, p. 15

Broker—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 409, p. 864

Buffalo—

killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless any, s. 429, p. 925.

See MISCHIEF.Building—

mischief by fire to a, s. 436, p. 936.

negligence in pulling down or repairing, s. 428, p. 924.

theft in a, s. 380, p. 805

what constitutes a, pp. 805, 915 is a—for purposes of theft, s. 380, p. 805 mischief, s. 436, p. 936.

house-trespass, s. 442, p. 945.

See HOUSE.Bull—

killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless, any, s. 429, p. 925 set at large according to religious usage, p. 926.

See MISCHIEF.

asking for bribe is attempt, p. 320.

Bullocks—

driving—without nose-strings is not rash driving, p. 657

Buoy—exhibition of false—, s. 281, p. 501.

mischief by destroying, moving—, s. 433, p. 931.

Burial—

secret—of dead body of child, s. 318, p. 697.

forging register of, s. 466, p. 980.

Burial-places—

trespassing on—punishment for, s. 297, p. 592.

Buying minor—

for purposes of prostitution, s. 373, p. 772.

Buying slaves—

punishment for, s. 371, p. 767.

Calendar—

British—; "year" or "month," s. 49, p. 67.

counterfeiting trade mark in a, p. 1013.

Calf—

does not come under "bull" "cow" or "ox" s. 429, p. 923.

Camel—

killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless any, s. 429, p. 923.

See MISCHIEF.

Cancelling—

documents with fraudulent intent, s. 477, pp. 1003, 1004.

Candidate—

meaning of, at an election, s. 171-A, p. 333.

Capacity—

false measure of—; fraudulent use or possession of, ss. 265, 266, pp. 535, 536.

making or selling, s. 267, p. 538.

Carnal intercourse—against order of nature; penalty for, s. 377, p. 783.

See UNNATURAL OFFENCES.

Carriage—

death caused by unattended, p. 716.

running over by, p. 716.

Carrier—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 407, p. 859.

Castration—

causing—is grievous hurt, p. 693.

Caste—

dinner, wilful pollution of food served at a, p. 597.

false representation as to,—in marriage, is cheating, p. 902.

guru sentencing excommunication, privileged, p. 1072.

headman of, requiring a member to clear her character, p. 1072.

threat of excommunication from, p. 1196.

Cattle—

allowing to stray—is no wrongful loss, p. 47.

illegal impounding of—is no wrongful loss, p. 47.

mischief done by, p. 921.

Censure—

by person in authority is no defamation, s. 499, except 7, pp. 1056, 1072

Ceremonies—

disturbing religious—; punishment for, ss. 296, 297, pp. 530, 592.

Certificate—

issuing or signing a false, s. 197, p. 420.

using as true—known to be false, s. 198, p. 422.

alteration in, pp. 989, 995.

forgery of a—attached to a petition for a vacant post, p. 995.

See FALSE CERTIFICATE.

Channel—

mischief by injury to, s. 431, p. 929.

Character—

of the accused, evidence of, p. 837.

Charge—

See FALSE CHARGE.

Cheating—

definition of, s. 415, p. 884.

distinguished from extortion, p. 886 intention to defraud—of intention to defraud or not, p. 888.

misstatement as to nature of goods, p. 899.

by uttering false coin, p. 899.

false entries, p. 900

by railway passengers, p. 900

by personation, definition of, s. 416, p. 901.

punishment for, s. 417, p. 903.

for—by personation, s. 419, p. 906.

with knowledge that wrongful loss may ensue to person whose interest to be protected, s. 418, p. 905.

and dishonestly inducing delivery of property, s. 420, pp. 906, 907.

forgery for the purpose of, s. 468, p. 990.

Cheque—

upon a banker is a "document," s. 29, ill, p. 52.

cancelled—is property under s. 405, p. 848.

Child—

act committed by—under 7 years, is no offence, s. 82, p. 141 above 7, but under 12 and of immature understanding, s. 83, p. 142.

bigamy by, p. 142.

murder by, p. 142.

rape by, 143.

theft by, p. 142.

act done to—for benefit of—with or without consent of guardian, ss. 89, 92, pp. 161, 168.

under twelve cannot "consent," s. 90, p. 165.

abetment of offences committed by, s. 108, expln. 3, p. 205.

unborn—; offences relating to, ss. 315, 316, pp. 682, 683 exposure and abandonment of—under twelve years, s. 317, p. 684 concealment of birth of,—s. 318, p. 687 from guardianship s. 361, n. 743 person, s. 369, p. 764.

etc., ss. 372, 373, pp. 767, 772.

p. 1029.

See ABDUCTION; CONCEALMENT.

Choice of evils—

when act done to avoid harm, is no offence, s. 81, p. 134.

Cholera—

negligently spreading of, p. 540.

Circulating false report—

See FALSE REPORT.

Circumstantial evidence—

in cases of murder, p. 649.

Civil judgment—

cannot be admitted in criminal trials in cases of forgery, p. 985.

Civil Surgeon—

not a public servant under s. 110, p. 220.

Claim—making a fraudulent—to property to prevent its seizure, s. 207, p. 437.

false—in Court of Justice, s. 209, p. 239.

meaning of—in s. 463, p. 968.

Classes—

promoting enmity between, s. 153-A, p. 305.

include races, p. 306.

offending sentiments of, no nuisance, p. 542.

Clerk—

possession of property by, s. 27, p. 51.

theft by, s. 381, p. 806.

who is a—for purposes of theft, s. 381, p. 806.

criminal breach of trust by, s. 408, p. 860.

falsification of accounts by, s. 477-A, p. 1003.

See THEFT.

Closed receptacle—

dishonestly breaking open, s. 401, p. 965.

with intent to commit mischief, s. 463, p. 968.

Cohabitation—

by a man deceitfully making woman to believe she is married to him, s. 493, p. 1031.

Coin—

definition of, s. 230, p. 503.

Queen's, s. 230, p. 503.

F

s. 502.

(d), p. 502.

502.

passing a medal, p. 506.

circulation of spurious coin not necessary, p. 507.

quick-silvering, p. 507.

s. 230, 231, s. 508.

514, 516.

delivery of counterfeit, p. 517.

delivery of counterfeit—not known to be counterfeit when first possessed, s. 241, p. 517.

possessing counterfeit—knowing it to be so when first possessed, ss. 242, 243, pp. 518, 519.

Coin—concl'd.

causing—to be of wrong weight or composition, s. 244, p. 519 diminishing weight and altering composition of, ss. 246, 247, p. 521.
 altering appearance of, ss. 248, 249, p. 522 delivery to another of—possessed with knowledge that it is altered, ss. 250, 251, pp. 523, 524. possession of altered—possessed with knowledge of alteration, ss. 252, 253, pp. 524, 525.
 delivery of—as genuine, which when first possessed was not known to be altered, s. 254, p. 525.

Coining instrument—taking—from mint, s. 245, p. 520.

Coining tools—

making, mending, etc., of—for counterfeiting coin, s. 237, p. 508
 Queen's coin, s. 231, p. 508

Collecting—

arms to wage war against the Queen, s. 122, p. 240.

Collector—

when a—is a Judge, s. 19, ill. (a), p. 40

Combustibles—

negligence with, s. 285, p. 560.

Comment—

on the acts of public man, s. 499, except 2, p. 1055 must be fair one, p. 1074.

Commission—

servant obtaining—when offence, p. 861.

Commissioned Officer—

"public servant," s. 21, p. 40

Commissioner—

Municipal—a public servant, s. 21, p. 41

Commitment—

wrongful, s. 220, p. 478

Common intention—acts done in furtherance of, s. 34, p. 53.

 mere presence is not complicity, p. 60 necessary to constitute murder, p. 630

Common law—

how far rights under—affected by the Code, p. 35.

Common object—of unlawful assembly, p. 278.

 acts done in prosecution of the, p. 287

Communication—

in good faith, s. 93, p. 169 for the benefit of addressee, s. 499, except 9, pp. 1074, 1056.

Community—

included in "public," s. 12, p. 38.

Commutation—

of sentence by Government, s. 54, p. 77.

Company—

included in "person," s. 11, p. 37 imputation against a, s. 499, expln. 2, p. 1055.

Company's rupee—

is Queen's coin, s. 230, ill. (d), p. 502.

Compounding of offences—

taking gift for, s. 213, p. 454 making gift to induce, s. 214, p. 460 in what cases legal, s. 211, except, p. 461.

Compulsion—

acts done under, s. 91, p. 170.
 or necessity, doctrine, of p. 171.

Compulsory labour—

unlawful, s. 374, p. 776.

Concealing—

material facts, when an abetment, s. 107, p. 197.
 a kidnapped person, s. 368, p. 763.

Concealment—

of design to commit offence, ss. 118-120, pp. 222-227.
 by public servant of an offence which it is his duty to prevent, s. 119, p. 221.
 of design of waging war, s. 127, p. 241.
 escaped prisoner of State or war, s. 130, p. 265.
 deserter on board merchant vessel, s. 137, p. 273.
 property to avoid seizure, s. 206, p. 435.
 an offender, s. 212, p. 456.
 no offence if done by husband or wife, s. 212, except, p. 456.
 of offence by accepting gratification, s. 213, p. 454.
 offence by offering gift or restoring property, s. 214, p. 460.
 offender who has escaped or whose apprehension has been ordered, s. 216, p. 467.
 the birth of child, s. 318, p. 687. wrongful—of abducted or kidnapped person, s. 368, p. 763.
 of stolen property, s. 414, p. 882.
 property, s. 424, p. 914.
 previous fraud, document forged for, p. 982.
 married women, for illicit intercourse, s. 498, p. 1048.

Concealment of birth—

punishment for, s. 318, p. 687.

Conditional remission of punishment—violation of—; punishment for, s. 227, p. 466.

Conduct—of public servant, criticism of, s. 499, except 2, p. 1055. person in public matter, s. 499, except 3, pp. 1055, 1068.

Confession—

does not fall within the purview of, s. 180, p. 361.
 by a wife of her immoral conduct is a grave provocation, p. 631. causing hurt or grievous hurt to extort, ss. 330, 331, pp. 706, 708.
 wrongful confinement to extort, s. 348, p. 727.

Confinement—

by person acting contrary to law, s. 220, p. 478.
 by a person acting in pursuance of law, s. 221, p. 479.

482.

See SOLITARY CONFINEMENT; WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT.

Confiscation—

order of, by Magistrate, in cases of sedition, p. 259.

Conflagration—

arrest of, what acts are justified in, s. 81, ill. (b), p. 134.

Connivance—

of the husband, in cases of adultery, p. 1045.

acts done by—not offences, ss 87, 88, 89, 91, pp 158, 161, 164, 167.
when not valid, s. 90, p 165.
given under misconception of fact, p 166.
meaning of, p. 166.
mere submission does not amount to, p 166.
misrepresentation, p 166.
in rape, must be intelligent consent, p. 167.
obtained by fraud, p. 778.

public servant obtaining valuable thing without—from person having official dealings with him, s. 165, p. 324.

abatement by, p. 200.

15 to wage war against the Queen or to overawe Government, s. 121-A, p. 237 of penal statutes, p. 11.

headings, p. 13.
illustrations, p. 13.
marginal notes, p. 13.
provisos, p. 13
punctuation, p. 13.

Legislative Council, p. 13

Council, p. 13

of the authority of public servants, Chap X, p 344 of public servant, Chap. X, p. 344

Sec PUBLIC SERVANT.

by insult and interruption during judicial proceedings, s. 228, p. 497 common law rights not affected by Code, p. 35

See SERVICE.

perjury arising out of, p. 408 to be reconciled as far as possible, pp. 408, 409 not a defence in criminal law, pp. 359, 661 fraudulent—of property, ss. 403, 404, 405, pp. 829, 847, 848, by a servant p. 863 effect of on marriage, p. 1023.

marriage after becoming a. p. 1033.

Conveyance—

of person in unsafe vessel, s. 282, p. 561.

Convict—

murder or attempted murder by life, ss. 303, 307, pp. 655, 658.
 affidavit by a—; false statements in, p. 393.
 not liable for fabricating false evidence, p. 463.
 escape of—from custody, s. 223, p. 482.

See ACCUSED.

Conviction—

previous—, its effect on punishment, s. 75, p. 100.

Co-operation—

by doing one of several acts constituting an offence, s. 37, p. 61.

See ACT : OFFENCE.

Co-parcener—

theft of the separate property of a co-parcener by a, p. 706.
 criminal misappropriation by a, p. 842.

Copy—

liability for making an incorrect, p. 421. making a—of forged document, p. 987.
 of a lease not a valuable security, p. 51.
 production of a forged copy, p. 994.

Corporation—

liability of—under the Code, p. 7.
 included in the term "person" s. 11, p. 37.

Corporeal property—

what it means and includes, p. 46.

Corpse—

offering indignity to human—; s. 297, p. 591.
 is not subject of theft, p. 792.

Corpus delicti—

discovery of the body of the person murdered not necessary, p. 650.

Corrosive substance—causing hurt or grievous hurt, by, ss. 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.

Corrupting water—

punishment for, s. 277, p. 534.

Corruptly—

occurring in, s. 196, p. 418.
 s. 219, p. 477.

Council—member of, assault upon a, s. 124, p. 242.

Counsel—

not liable for utterances as advocates, p. 1663.

Counterfeit

definition of, s. 25, p. 52.
 imitation need not be exact, s. 25, expln. (1), p. 52.

Counterfeiting coin—

See COIN.

Counterfeiting currency-notes or bank-notes

See BANK-NOTE ; CURRENCY-NOTE.

Counterfeiting stamp—See STAMPS.Counterfeiting trade mark—See* TRADE MARK.Court of Justice—

definition of, s. 20, p. 40.

what officers of a—"public servant," s. 21, fourth, p. 41.

acts under orders of—not offences, s. 78, p. 124.

" s. 487, p. 1022.

forging record of proceedings of a, s. 466, p. 986.

report of proceedings in—privileged, p. 1070.

Court-martial—

trial before—is a judicial proceedings, s. 193, expln. (1), p. 404.

Covenanted servant—

is a "public servant," s. 21, first, p. 40.

Cow—

killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless any, s. 429, p. 925.

exhibiting cow's flesh for wounding religious feelings, p. 597.

prevention of cow killing, unlawful assembly for, pp. 296, 297.

See MISCHIEF.Cowries—

are not coin, s. 230, ill (a), p. 502.

Creditors—

obtaining discharge of debt by anticipating other creditors, p. 437.

See FRAUDULENT DEEDS AND DISPOSITIONS OF PROPERTY.Cremation— lawful, is no nuisance, p. 542.

Crime—

committed outside British India, p. 17.

Criminal act—

by several persons in furtherance of a common intention, s. 21, p. 41.

persons concerned in—may be guilty of different offences, s. 25, p. 42.

See ACT.Criminal breach of contract

during voyage or journey, s. 490, p. 1028.

to attend on and supply wants of hol, Cow preser, s. 433, p. 1029.

to serve at a place to which a servant is consigned at his master's request, s. 433, p. 1029.

Criminal breach of trust

by borrower, p. 851.

partner, p. 851.

wife, p. 851.

auctioneer, p. 852.

pledgee, p. 852.

hire purchase agreement, p. 852.

estate holder, p. 854.

carrier, etc., p. 854.

clerk or servant, p. 850.

company issuing debentures by servant, p. 851.

Criminal breach of trust—concl.

- by conversion by a servant under a special trust, p. 862.
- using the property of another, p. 862.
- appropriation of property by servant, p. 863.
- public servant, banker, etc., p. 864.
- director, p. 866.
- trustees, p. 866.
- definition of, p. 448.
- distinguished from criminal misappropriation, p. 849.
- punishment for simple, p. 849.
- dominion over property, p. 851.
- in respect of disputed claim, p. 853.
- debt, p. 853.
- wilful omission to account, p. 855.
- false accounting, p. 855.

See CARRIER, CLERK, PUBLIC SERVANT, WHARFINGER.

Criminal conspiracy—

See CONSPIRACY.

Criminal force—

- in taking possession or enforcing a right, s. 141, p. 277.
- definition of, s. 350, p. 729.
- in case of diseased spleen, p. 731.
- threat of—amounts to an assault, s. 351, p. 731.
- in self-defence, s. 352, p. 733.
- p. 735.
- towards woman to outrage her modesty, s. 354, p. 739.
- to dishonour a person, s. 355, p. 740.
- in attempt to steal property carried by a person, s. 356, p. 740.
- in attempt wrongfully to confine a person, s. 357, p. 741.
- on grave provocation, s. 358, p. 741.

See ASSAULT.

Criminal intention—

- where acts done by several persons, s. 35, p. 60.
- what is, p. 134.
- act done without—to prevent other harm, p. 137.

Criminal intimidation—

- definition of, s. 503, p. 1094.
- distinguished from 'extortion', p. 1094.
- defamation, p. 1097.
- threat of vengeance, p. 1096.
- excommunication, p. 1096.
- to kill a person, p. 1096.
- draw up a false document, p. 1096.
- get a person dismissed, p. 1096.
- imprisoned, p. 1096.
- ruin a man by cases is, p. 1096.
- person threatened must be interested in the person intended to injure, p. 1096.
- if threat be to cause death or grievous hurt, etc., or to impute unchastity to a woman, s. 506, p. 1101.
- punishment for simple, s. 506, p. 1101.
- by anonymous communication, s. 507, p. 1102.

Criminal knowledge—

- where acts done by several persons, s. 35, p. 60

Criminal misappropriation—

- for a time only, s. 403, expln. 1, p. 839.
- punishment, s. 403, p. 839.
- when a finder of property commits, s. 403, expln. 2, p. 839.
- differs from theft, p. 841.

Criminal misappropriation—concl'd.

in respect of retention of money paid by mistake, p. 842.
 of joint property, p. 842.
 temple property, p. 842.
 in the case of lost property, p. 843.
 when property found drifting in river, p. 843.
 is treasure trove, p. 843 claim of right, p. 844

of property of a deceased person, s. 404, p. 847.
 distinguished from criminal breach of trust, p. 849.

See MISAPPROPRIATION.

Criminal trespass—

definition and punishment—, ss. 441, 447, pp. 936, 959.
 entry to commit an offence, p. 938.
when joint possession, p. 938.
 entry must be to cause annoyance, etc., p. 941.
 when bona fide claim, p. 944.
 "house-trespass," s. 442, p. 945.
 "lurking house-trespass," s. 443, p. 947.
 by night," s. 444, p. 948.
 "house-breaking," s. 445, p. 948.
 by night," s. 446, p. 950.
 how punishable—
 if simple, s. 448, p. 951.
 in order to commit offence punishable—with death, s. 449, p. 952.
 transportation for life, s. 450, p. 952.
 imprisonment, s. 451, p. 953.
 if after preparation for causing hurt, etc., s. 452, p. 954
 "lurking house-trespass" or "house-breaking"—
 how punishable—
 if in order to commit offence punishable with imprisonment, s. 454, p. 956.
 after preparation to cause hurt, etc., s. 455, p. 957 simple, s. 456, p. 958.
 grievous hurt is caused, s. 459, p. 962
 "lurking house-trespass by night" or "house-breaking by night"—
 how punishable—
 if in order to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment, s. 452, p. 954 simple, s. 456, p. 958.
 after preparation to cause hurt or restraint, etc., s. 458, p. 962.
 grievous hurt or death caused by one of several persons while committing, s. 460, p. 963.

Criticism—

fair, on books, pictures, etc., is justified, p. 1078

Crops—

removal of, by tenants, p. 915

Culpable homicide—

definition of, s. 300, p. 615
 when—is murder, s. 300, p. 615.
 is not murder, when committed under provocation, s. 300, excep. 1, p. 615.
 in exceeding the right or private defence, s. 300, excep. 2, p. 616 by public servant exceeding his powers, s. 300, excep. 3, pp. 616, 634.
 in sudden fight, s. 300, excep. 4, pp. 616, 634
 punishment for—, s. 302, p. 617.
 attempt to commit—, s. 308, p. 675 causing death of quick unborn child, s. 316, p. 683 by exposure of child, s. 317, p. 684.

Defamation—

in what it consists, s. 409, p. 1051.

imputation on deceased person, s. 499, expln. 1, p. 1051.

on association or class, ibid, expln. 2, p. 1051.

alternative or ironical, ibid, expln. 3, p. 1051.

lowering the reputation, ibid, expln. 1, p. 1051.

imputations not defamatory, excepts. 1-10, pp. 1054-1057, 1068-1069.

punishment for, s. 500, p. 1057.

printing or engraving defamatory matter, s. 501, p. 1061.

selling defamatory matter, s. 502, p. 1062.

publication is an essential ingredient, p. 1058.

in a newspaper, p. 1060.

repetition of, p. 1061.

imputation—

imputation concerning any person, p. 1061.

against a dead person, p. 1061.

combination of persons, p. 1062.

ironical expressions, p. 1062.

concerning a caste, p. 1063.

no difference between spoken and written, p. 1063.

true imputation for public good, s. 499, except. 1, pp. 1055, 1066.

what is public good, p. 1066.

imputation of truth in public interests, p. 1067.

public conduct of public servants, except. 2, pp. 1055, 1069.

conduct of a person touching public question, except. 3, pp. 1055, 1069.

publication of proceedings in Court, p. 1070.

merits of a case decided in Court or conduct of witnesses, except. 5, p.

of public performance, except. 6, p. 1071.

censure passed in good faith by superiors, except. 7, p. 1072.

imputation made by a person in authority, p. 1072.

accusation preferred in good faith to authorized person, except. 8, p. 1073.

made to authorized person, p. 1073.

unauthorized person, p. 1074.

statement to protect the interest of maker, except. 9, p. 1074.

privileges of—counsel, pleader, etc., p. 1076.

judge, p. 1076.

witness, p. 1078.

parties, p. 1081.

statements made in—pleadings, p. 1082.

reports, p. 1083.

statements made to protect—another's interest, p. 1083.

maker's interest, p. 1084.

statements made without good faith, p. 1085.

imputation made by pleaders, p. 1085.

caution for the good of a person, except. 10, p. 1085.

truth as a defence, p. 1088.

good faith, p. 1088.

relevant facts, what are, p. 1088.

complaint by aggrieved person necessary, p. 1089.

brother, p. 1090.

brother-in-law, p. 1090.

husband, p. 1090.

official superior 1090.

president of a municipality, p. 1090.

to prosecute a judge, sanction necessary, p. 1090.

petition containing defamatory statements to be refused, 1091.

Desling—

a place of worship, s. 295, p. 587.

Definitions—

of offences, to be subject to exceptions, s. 6, p. 36.

Defraud—

meaning of, p. 49.

Deleterious substance—

causing hurt or grievous hurt by, ss 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.

Delivery of altered coin—liability for, s. 254, p. 525.

Delusion—

effect of insane, p. 146

Demon—

See EVIL SPIRIT.

Deposition—

witness refusing to sign a—in revenue inquiry, no offence, p. 361.

false evidence given in, p. 407.

Depredation—

committing—on territories in alliance or at peace with the Queen, s. 126, p. 261.

receiving property obtained in, s. 127, p. 262.

Deserters—

harboursing as deserter naval or military officer, s. 136, p. 273.

concealment of deserter on board ship, s. 137, p. 273.

Desertion—

meaning of, s. 135, p. 272.

by military man, abetment of, s. 135, p. 273

Design—

to commit offence, concealment of, s. 118, p. 222.

wage war, concealment of, s. 123, p. 241.

Destruction—

of document to prevent its production as evidence, s. 204, p. 431.

evidence, s. 201, p. 425.

will, s. 477, p. 1003.

Detaining—

a married woman, s. 498, p. 1048.

Devdasi—

dedication of a minor as a—is an offence, p. 771.

Device—

counterfeiting of, ss. 475, 476, pp. 1001, 1003.

Dhatara—administering of—

for causing death, p. 623.

attempting to cause death, p. 673.

causing hurt, p. 704.

Dhurna—

sitting—at another's door, s. 508, p. 1103.

Diary—

alteration of police, p. 996.

false statements in a police—is forgery, p. 996.

Die—

for making fictitious postal stamps, s. 263-A, pp. 532, 532.

counterfeiting trade mark, s. 485, p. 1019.

Direction of law—

a public servant disobeying a, s. 217, p. 471.

what is meant by, p. 472.

Director—

publishing false balance-sheets, p. 396.
paying dividends out of deposits, p. 866.

Disaffection—

exciting—against Government. See SEDITION. meaning of, s. 124-A, expln. 1, p. 243.
interpretations of, p. 252.

Disappearance—

causing—of evidence to screen offender, s. 201, p. 425.

Disease—

causing—is said to cause "hurt," s. 319, p. 630.

Disfiguration—

permanent—of head or face is grievous hurt, s. 320, sixthly, p. 692. meaning of the term 'disfigure,' p. 693.
branding of cheeks with red-hot iron is, p. 693.

Dishonest misappropriation—

of property, ss. 403, 404, pp. 839, 847.

Dishonest removal—of property, s. 424, p. 914.

by a partner, p. 914.
p. 915.

Dishonestly—

definition of, s. 24, p. 48.
distinguished from 'fraudulently,' p. 50.

Dishonour—

to outrage modesty of woman, s. 354, p. 738.
assault, or using criminal force, s. 353, p. 740.

Dislocation—

of a bone or tooth, s. 320, seventhly, p. 692.

Disobedience—

to lawful order of public servant, s. 188, p. 380.

Disposal—

of dead body of a child in secret, s. 318, p. 687.

Distinct offences—

how sentence to be admeasured on conviction of, p. 97.

Distraint—

resistance to, p. 289.

Distribution—

of obscene books, etc., prohibited, ss. 292, 293, pp. 574, 578.

Divine displeasure—threat or rendering a person an object of, s. 508, p. 1103.

Divorce—

dissolving marriage, p. 1034.
ground of, how far a defence, p. 1034.

Document—

unstamped document is a, p. 54.

390.

464, p. 909.

994 certificate, p. 995.

attakshi, p. 996.

diary, p. 996.

decree, p. 996.

plaint, p. 995.

receipts, p. 995.

sanad, p. 996.

uttering, p. 996.

See FALSE DOCUMENT; FORGED DOCUMENT

Divorce—

deed of, is a valuable security, p. 54.

Doubt—

where offence committed is left in, s. 72, p. 105.

must be as to matter of law and not as to facts, p. 105 punishment in cases of, as to murder, p. 648

Drainage—

mischiefs by causing obstruction to, s. 472, p. 930.

Dramatic performance—

inciting to sedition, can be prevented, p. 256

Driving—

See RASH DRIVING.

Drink—

See FOOD OR DRINK.

Drugs—

adulteration and sale of adulterated, ss. 264, 275, pp. 534, 552 punishment for knowingly selling one drug for another, s. 276, p. 553 administration of stupefying, intoxicating, or emulsiac—with intent to cause hurt, s. 328, p. 703.

See POISON

Drunken person—

misconduct in a public place by a, s. 510, p. 1102.

Drunkenness—

insanity brought about by, p. 146

See ANNOYANCE; INTOXICATION.

Duelling—

does not fall under s. 301, except 3, pp. 616, 625.

Dwelling house, etc.—

theft in—; s. 380, p. 807.
 mischief with intent to destroy, s. 436, p. 633.

See BUILDING.Dying declaration— admissible in the case of rape, p. 761.

Ear—

privation of hearing of an—; s. 320, thirdly, p. 692.

Earth—

lands and things attached to the earth are moveable property, p. 47.
 'earth' and 'the earth' distinguished, p. 47.

East India Company—

Acts of Parliament passed after 1858 in anywise affecting the—not affected by Penal Code,
 s. 5, p. 33.

Effacing—

writing, etc., from Government stamps, s. 261, p. 530.

Effect—

caused partly by act and partly by omission, s. 36, p. 61.

Election—

'candidate,' meaning of, s. 171-A, p. 331.
 'electoral right,' meaning of, s. 171-A, p. 331.
 offences relating to, ss. 171-A—171-I, pp. 331—342.
 bribery in, s. 171-B, p. 335.
 undue influence at, s. 171-C, p. 337.
 personation at, s. 171-D, p. 338.
 punishment for bribery, s. 171-E, p. 339.
 undue influence, s. 171-F, p. 340.
 false statement in connection with, s. 171-G, p. 341.
 illegal payment in connection with, s. 171-H, p. 341.
 failure to keep account of, s. 171-I, p. 342.

Electoral right—meaning of, s. 171-A, p. 331.

Elephant—

killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless any, s. 420, p. 925.

See MISCHIEF.Emasculation—

is 'grievous hurt,' s. 320, firstly, p. 692.
 by a man on himself no offence, p. 693.

Endorsement on bill of exchange—See BILL OF EXCHANGE.*Enemies— exemption of alien, p. 7.

English law—

1. The distinction between 'possession' and 'custody' does not exist in the Penal Code, p. 52.
2. Infancy.
 incapacity to commit crime from 7 to 14 years, p. 142.
 ... 143.
3. resistance to an arrest under a defective warrant is allowed; not so under the Code
 p. 187.
4. Abetment.
 principal in the first degree, p. 203.
 second degree, p. 203.

English law—concl.

accessory after the fact, p. 203.
before the fact, p. 203.

5. Perjury.
provisions of, pp. 394, 395.
difference between English and Indian law, p. 391.
6. False personation.
of imaginary person no offence under English law, under the Code it is, p. 434.
7. Manslaughter.
1. voluntary manslaughter, p. 600.
2. involuntary manslaughter, p. 600.
8. Murder.
is killing with malice aforethought, p. 617.
9. Suicide.
liability for, p. 677.
10. Assault.
what is assault and battery, p. 732.
11. Rape.
presumption of incapacity in a child under 12 years, pp. 143, 778.
physical consent alone is required; under the Code intelligent consent is required,
p. 167.
12. Larceny.
difference between theft and, p. 787.
what amounts to, p. 787.
13. Stolen property.
provisions of law as to, pp. 868, 874.
husband and wife, p. 873.
14. False pretence.
distinguished from cheating, p. 885.
15. House-breaking.
actual breaking necessary, p. 949 elements in, p. 955.
16. Burglary. commission of, p. 941.
17. Adultery.
is no crime, p. 1044 18. Label.
essence of the crime consists in its tendency to provoke breach of the peace, p. 1058.

Enhanced punishment—

See PREVIOUS CONVICTION.

Enmity—

promoting—between classes, s. 153-A, p. 305
'promotes' meaning of, p. 306
'classes' meaning of, p. 307.

Enticing—

minors, s. 361, p. 749.
married woman, s. 493, p. 1048.
meaning of the term, p. 1048.
wife not punished as abettor, p. 1051.

Entry—

accompanied by force may amount to riot, p. 288.

Erasure—

of mark on a Government stamp denoting that it has been used, s. 207, p. 532.

See GOVERNMENT STAMP.

Escape—

public servant allowing, suffering, or aiding—of prisoner of State or war, ss. 128, 129, 130,
pp. 263, 264, 265.
of offender from custody, s. 216, p. 467.
public servant intentionally suffering—of person accused or under sentence, ss. 221, 222,
pp. 479, 480.

Escape—concl'd.

negligently suffering—of person charged or convicted, s. 223, p. 492.
making or attempting to make—from lawful custody, s. 224, p. 495.
from custody under a civil warrant, s. 174, p. 347.

Escheat—

what is the English doctrine of, p. 82.
is included under the term 'forfeiture' in Indian law, p. 82.

European or American—to be sentenced to penal servitude instead of to transportation, s. 53, p. 73.

See PENAL SERVITUDE.Evidence— refusal by party in suit to give—; punishment for, s. 172, p. 353.

using—knowing to be false or fabricated, s. 106, p. 419.
causing disappearance of or production of—in screen offender, s. 201, p. 425.
destroying document to prevent its use, s. 204, p. 421.

See FALSE EVIDENCE.Examination—

false personation at an, p. 601.

Exceptions—

onus of proving—on accused, p. 110 general, Chap. IV, p. 110.
definitions to be subject to general, s. 6, p. 36.

Exciting disaffection—against Government, s. 121-A, p. 243.

Excommunication—

from caste, pronounced by a guru, p. 1072.
headman, p. 1072.
threat of—is no criminal intimidation, p. 1094.
clergyman passing sentence of, p. 389.

Execution—application for, containing false averments, p. 425.

Exhibition—

of false lights, etc., s. 281, p. 561.
of obscene books, etc., prohibited, ss. 292, 293, pp. 574, 578.

Expecting to be a public servant—meaning of the expression, s. 161, expln., p. 315.

Expert—

in handwriting, in forgery, p. 685.

Explanations—

general, Chap. II, p. 36.

Explosive substance—negligence with respect to, s. 286, p. 568.

meaning of, p. 568.
revolver is not an, p. 568.
causing hurt or grievous hurt by, ss. 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.
mischief by means of, ss. 435, 436, 438, pp. 932, 933, 935.

Exporting slaves—

punishment for, s. 371, p. 767.

Exposure—

of child under 12 years of age, s. 317, p. 684.
meaning of the term "expose," p. 685.
"leave," p. 685.

See CHILD.

Face—

permanent disfiguration of, s. 320, sixthly, p. 692.

Facilitating commission of offence—by concealing or making false representation as to design of, ss. 118, 120, pp. 222, 225.

where offender is public servant whose duty it is to prevent, s. 119, pp. 223, 224.
offence is waging war against Queen, s. 123, p. 241.

Factor—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 402, p. 838.

False balance—

use of, is an offence, s. 409, p. 861.

False balance sheet—

preparation of—not an offence under s. 191, p. 390.
an offence under s. 418, p. 905.

False certificate—

issuing, signing or using as true, ss. 107, 108, pp. 420, 422.

False charge—

preferring of, before police officers, amounts to an injury, p. 66.
with intent to injure, s. 211, p. 442.
distinguished from giving false information, s. 182, p. 364.
bare statement is not a, p. 447.
whether complaint to police is a, p. 447.
should be made to a Court having jurisdiction, p. 447.
abetment of, p. 451.
civil remedy for, p. 451.
compounding of, p. 451.
contained in a petition, p. 451.
false report by police officer, p. 451.
includes a partly true and partly false complaint, p. 451.
vexatious charge is not a, p. 451.
accusee should be allowed to prove truth of his complaint, p. 453.
false charge to the police and to the magistrate, p. 455.
findings should state the nature of, p. 455.
misdirection to jury in cases of, p. 455.
original proceedings should not be pending, p. 455.
punishment in respect of, p. 455.
summary proceedings regarding, p. 455.

False claim—

dishonestly making—in Court, s. 209, p. 439.
is not receiving stolen property if made bona fide, p. 873.

False declaration—making, subscribing or using as true—, ss. 189, 200, pp. 423, 425.

False document—

definition of, s. 461, p. 956

See DOCUMENT; FORGED DOCUMENT.

False evidence—

giving and fabrication—, ss. 191, 192, pp. 390, 391.
criminalising statement no justification, p. 391.
in written statements, p. 397.
Oath of trial does not purge perjury, p. 397.
non liability of accused for giving false evidence, p. 397.
Jury must have authority to administer an oath, p. 397.
false statement in the application of an accused, p. 397.
a balance sheet p. 397.
darkness, p. 397.
in evidence on the trial p. 397.
in irregular trial, p. 397.

False evidence—concl'd.

should be used in judicial proceedings, pp 397, 399.
 admissible, p. 400
 before a public servant authorized to investigate, p. 400.
 touch a point material to the result of a proceeding, p. 401.
 accused person not liable for fabricating, p. 403.
 punishment, s. 193, p. 404.
 nature of proof, p. 403.
 deposition, p. 407.
 proceedings in a trial, p. 407.
 contradictory statements, p. 408.
 powers of appellate Court, p. 408.
 irregular deposition, p. 410
 witness criminating himself, p. 410.
 complaint, p. 411.
 separate trial for each accused, p. 411.

415.

False imprisonment—

distinguished from 'malicious prosecution,' p. 721.

False information—fraudulent to public servant, s. 127, 128 pp. 356, 362.

representation in memorandum of appeal, p. 358.
 statement on oath, p. 363.
 with intent to cause injury to another person, s. 182, p. 364.
 mere belief is not, p. 366.
 causing a public servant by—to do what he ought not, p. 367 personation, p. 367.

False lights, marks, or buoys—exhibition of, s. 281, p. 561.

False personation—

of soldier, by wearing garb, etc., s. 140, p. 276.
 for purposes of suit or prosecution, s. 205, p. 433.
 fraudulent gain is not an essential element, p. 434.
 liability for, under other Act, p. 434.
 where an imaginary person is personated, p. 431 of juror or assessor, s. 229, p. 500.

See PERSONATION.

False pretence—

distinguished from cheating, p. 88C.

False register—

making of a, p. 991

False report—

circulating—to cause mutiny or disturbance, s. 505, p. 1099.
 submitting, p. 328.

False statement—

in connection with an election, s. 171-G, p. 341.
 on oath or affirmation, s. 181, p. 362.
 in application not requiring verification, p. 362.
 in affidavit of a convict, s. 191, p. 390.

False weights and measures—See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.Falsification— of accounts by clerk, officer, or servant, s. 477-A, p. 1005.

 trade and property mark, ss. 478, 480, 481, 487, pp. 1009, 1011, 1014, 1022.
 punishment for, ss. 482, 483, pp. 1015, 1023.

Farukhabad rupee—

is Queen's coin, s. 230, ill. (c), p. 502.

Fear of injury—

renders consent invalid, s. 90, p. 165.

Feelings—

wounding religious, ss. 297, 298, pp. 592, 595.

Fencing—

game of, protected by, s. 87, ill., p. 158.

Fictitious person—making of false document in the name of—is forgery, s. 464, expln. 2, pp. 969, 981.

Fictitious stamps—

using or making, etc., ss. 262, 263-A, pp. 531, 532.
 definition of, s. 263-A, p. 532.

Fighting—

when an affray, s. 159, p. 312.
 culpable homicide committed in sudden fight, not murder, s. 300, excep. 4, p. 633.

See AFFRAY.Filth—See* NUISANCE.Finding— of property when criminal misappropriation, s. 403, expln. 2, p. 530.

Fine—

under the Penal Code, s. 53, sixthly, pp. 70, 74.
 the only punishment, p. 74.
 limited, p. 74.
 unlimited, p. 74.
 rule as to amount of, s. 63, p. 82.
 Magisterial fines, p. 83.
 in case of joint offenders, p. 84.
 daily fine, p. 84.
 amount of, how to be fixed, p. 84.
 sentence of imprisonment for non-payment of, s. 64, p. 84.
 imprisonment should be in proportion to the fine, p. 86.
 limit to imprisonment for non-payment of—when both imprisonment and fine awardable, s. 65, p. 86.
 description of imprisonment for non-payment of, s. 66, p. 89.
 imprisonment for non-payment of—when offence punishable with fine only, s. 67, p. 89.
 terminates on payment of, or proportional part of, ss. 66, 69, pp. 89, 91.
 refund of fine paid not allowed, p. 91.
 may be recovered from property subsequently acquired, p. 93.
 period allowed for levy of, s. 70, p. 92.
 death of offender does not discharge liability for, s. 70, p. 92.

See IMPRISONMENT.Fire—

omission to take proper precaution with, s. 285, p. 566.
 causing hurt or grievous hurt by, or heated substance, ss. 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.
 mischief by means of, ss. 435, 436, 438, pp. 932, 933, 935.

See MISCHIEF.

Fire-arm—

attempt to discharge a loaded, p. 674.

Food or drink—adulterating, intended for sale, s. 272, p. 548.

selling, etc., noxious and unfit, s. 273, p. 549.

Foot-ball—game of, protected by, s. 57, p. 158.

Force—

acts done under compulsion, s. 94, p. 170.

definition of, s. 349, p. 728.

See CRIMINAL FORCE.

Forced labour—

punishment for unlawful compulsory, s. 374, p. 776.

Foreign army—

exemption of from the provisions of the Penal Code, p. 7.

Foreign law—doctrine of previous conviction does not apply to convictions under, s. 75, p. 109.

Foreign Princes or States—

exemption of, from the provisions of the Penal Code, p. 7.

offences against—, punishment of, ss. 125, 127, pp. 260, 262.

Foreign territory—offences committed in, but triable in British India, ss. 3, 4, pp. 15, 16.

abetment in—of forgery committed in British India, p. 31.

dacoity in, p. 31.

kidnapping in, p. 31.

committing depredations in, s. 126, p. 261.

abetting in British India the counterfeiting of coin in, s. 236, p. 512.

Foreigners—

liability of, in respect of offences committed outside British India, p. 30.

not guilty of waging war against the Queen, p. 235.

Forfeiture—

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

of property, ss. 401, 402, pp. 71, 72.

126, p. 261.

in alliance with receiving or claiming property to avoid, s. 207, p. 437.

public servant disobeying law, to screen property from, s. 217, p. 471.

framing incorrect record, etc., to screen property from, s. 218, p. 473.

Forged document—

definition of, s. 470, p. 992.

using or possessing a, ss. 471, 474, pp. 992, 1000.

counterfeiting device or mark to give appearance of authenticity to, ss. 475, 476, pp. 1001, 1003.

made to conceal a previous dishonest, or fraudulent or negligent act, p. 992.

alteration in a document without a fraudulent intent is not, p. 995.

See DOCUMENT ; FALSE DOCUMENT.

Forgery—

abatement—in foreign territory of committed in British India, p. 31.

definition of, s. 463, p. 968.

punishment for, s. 465, p. 969.

intent to defraud any particular person not necessary, p. 972.

of a copy, p. 973.

false document should have been actually made, p. 976.

entries to commit fraud, p. 977.

unauthorised signature, p. 977.

fabricating certificate of fitness for a post, p. 978.

personation at an examination, p. 978.

petition in the name of another, p. 978.

signing vakalatnamah in the name of another, p. 978.

an order from a superior to a subordinate, p. 979.

certificate of purchase, p. 979.

conviction will be for abatement if it is not proved that the accused himself made the document, p. 979.

document made in the name of a fictitious person, p. 982.

to conceal a previous dishonest, or fraudulent, or negligent act, p. 982.

abatement of, p. 984.

joint act, p. 984.

169, pp. 990, 991.

forger cannot be punished separately for using forged document, p. 998.

making or possessing counterfeit seal, etc., to commit, ss. 472, 473, pp. 999, 1000.

Fouling atmosphere—

the offence of, s. 278, p. 535.

Fouling spring—

the offence of, s. 277, p. 554.

Fracture—of bone, etc., s. 330, seventhly, p. 692.

Framing incorrect document—

See DOCUMENT.

Fraudulent—

intent to defraud, p. 49.

meaning of the word, s. 25, p. 49.

distinguished from dishonest, p. 50.

removal of property to prevent seizure, s. 206, p. 435.

claim to property to prevent seizure, s. 207, p. 437.

suffering a decree for a sum not due, s. 208, p. 438.

claim in a Court of Justice, s. 209, p. 439.

obtaining decree for a sum not due, s. 210, p. 440.

cancellation of a will, authority to adopt, or valuable security, s. 477, p. 1003.

See FRAUDULENT DEED AND DISPOSITIONS OF PROPERTY.

Fraudulent claim—accepting or making—to prevent seizure of property, s. 207, p. 437.

suffering decree or execution without just cause, s. 208, p. 438.

making of, in Court, s. 209, p. 439.

obtaining decree or execution for, s. 210, p. 440.

Fraudulent deeds and dispositions of property—to defraud creditors, or deceive purchasers, ss. 421, 424, pp. 911, 914.

Fraudulent preference—

See FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS.

Fraudulent transfers—

- to prevent seizure, s. 206, p. 435
 - distribution of property among creditors, s. 421, p. 911.
 - demand by creditor being enforced, s. 422, p. 912.
- containing false statement as to consideration or person taking benefit, s. 423, p. 913.
- dishonest removal or concealment of property, s. 424, p. 914
 - by partner, p. 914.
 - during attachment, p. 914.
 - under illegal order, p. 914
 - of crops by tenant, p. 915

Fraudulently—

- definition of, s. 25, p. 49.
- distinguished from dishonestly, p. 50.

Funeral ceremonies—

- disturbance to performance of obsequies is offence, s. 297, p. 592.
- disturbing assembly for the performance of, s. 297, p. 592.

Gain—

See WRONGFUL GAIN.

Gaining wrongfully—

- expression defined, s. 23, p. 47.

Gambling—

- in a public place is a nuisance, p. 542
- private house is no nuisance, p. 542.

Gang of dacoits—

- punishment for belonging to, s. 400, pp. 832, 833.

Gang of thieves—

- punishment for belonging to, s. 401, p. 835.

Garb of a sailor or soldier—

- wearing of, s. 140, p. 276.

Gender—

- meaning of the term, s. 8, p. 37.

Gesture—

- making a—to wound religious feelings of another, s. 299, p. 595.
- when amounts to an assault, s. 351, p. 731

Girl—

- selling or letting to hire for prostitution, s. 372, p. 767.
- buying of—for prostitution, s. 373, p. 772.
- adoption of—by dancing woman, p. 770.

Gift—

- or offering, etc., to screen offender, ss. 213, 214, pp. 455, 460.
- to recover stolen property, etc., s. 315, 682.

Glanders—

- negligent spreading of, p. 546.

Good faith—

- definition of, s. 52, p. 63
- acts done in—under orders of Court, s. 78, p. 124.
- harm done in—without criminal intent, s. 79, p. 125
- act done in—for the benefit of person without consent, s. 92, p. 168.
- communication made in, s. 103, p. 169.
- defence in theft, p. 788.

Good faith—concl'd.

mischief, p. 915.

criminal trespass, p. 944.

defamation, pp. 1071, 1088.

Goods—

in s. 480, includes books, p. 1011.

Government—

definition of, ss. 17, 263-A (4), pp. 39, 533.

to overawe, s. 124, p. 242.

Government of India—

definition of, s. 16, p. 39.

Government stamp—counterfeiting s. 255, p. 526.

p. 527.
p. 527.
. 529.

effacing writing on—with intent to cause loss to Government, s. 261, p. 530.

532.

Governor-General—assault on, with intent to compel or restrain exercise of any lawful power. s. 124, p. 245

Governor of a Presidency—

assault on—with intent to compel or restrain exercise of lawful power, s. 124, p. 245.

Gratification—

definition of, s. 161, p. 315.

meaning of, p. 316.

public servant improperly taking s. 161, p. 315.

s. 323.

i, p. 324.

. 458.

0.

taking—, etc., to help in the recovery of stolen property, s. 21b, p. 465.

attempt to take a gratification, p. 466.

Grievous hurt—

s. 87, p. 158.

by a dangerous weapon, s. 320, p. 701.

to extort property or to constrain to an illegal act, s. 329, p. 706.

confession or to compel restoration of property, s. 331, p. 705.

deter public servant from duty, s. 333, p. 711.

716

. 453, p. 962.

See HURT.

Gun—

negligence with reference to, p. 715.

Guardian—

act done to child or lunatic with consent of, ss. 89, 92, pp. 164, 165.

Habitual—

dealers in slaves; s. 371, p. 767.

stolen property, s. 413, p. 881.

Handwriting—

opinion of expert as to in forgery, p. 985

Harbour—

definition of, s. 216-B, p. 471.

Harbouring—

prisoner of State or war, s. 150, p. 205.

person hired for an unlawful assembly, s. 157, p. 311.

deporters, See DEPORTERS.

offender, s. 212, p. 456.

husband or wife not punishable for, s. 212, except, p. 456.

penalty for—who has escaped from custody or whose apprehension has been ordered, s. 216, p. 467.

no offence if offender is husband or wife of harbourer, s. 216, except, p. 468.

robbers or dacoits, s. 216-A, p. 470.

husband or wife not punishable for, s. 216-A, except, p. 470.

Harm—

act likely to cause, s. 81, p. 134.

causing slight, s. 95, p. 172.

Head—

permanent disfigurement of, s. 320, exactly, p. 692.

Headings—

construction of, in a statute, p. 13.

Hatred—

in sedition, p. 252.

Health—

See ATMOSPHERE; INFECTIOUS DISEASE; PUBLIC HEALTH.

Heated substance—

See FIRE.

Helpless persons—

breach of contract to attend, on, s. 491, p. 1029.

High Court—

Admiralty jurisdiction of, p. 23.

appellate criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, 21

High seas—

offences committed on, Admiralty jurisdiction, p. 23.

piracy, p. 29.

jurisdiction of High Court, p. 23.

mutual Courts, p. 27.

Presidency Magistrate's Court, p. 27.

Highway—

punishment for robbery committed on—between sunset and sunrise, s. 392, p. 822.

See PUBLIC PLACE, PUBLIC ROAD, PUBLIC WAY.

Hiring—

or being hired to join an unlawful assembly, ss. 150, 158, pp. 300, 312.

of a girl for purposes of prostitution, s. 372, p. 762.

Good faith—concl'd.

mischievous, p. 915.

• criminal trespass, p. 844.

defamation, pp. 1071, 1088

Goods—

in s. 480, includes books, p. 1011.

Government—

definition of, ss. 17, 263-A (4), pp. 39, 533.

conspiracy to overawe, s. 121-A, p. 237.

overawing or abetment thereof, or attempt to overawe, s. 124, p. 242.

exciting disaffection against, s. 124-A, p. 243.

Government of India—

definition of, s. 16, p. 39.

Government stamp—

counterfeiting a, s. 255, p. 526.

Governor-General—assault on, with intent to compel or restrain exercise of any lawful power, s. 124, p. 245

Governor of a Presidency—

assault on—with intent to compel or restrain exercise of lawful power, s. 124, p. 245.

Gratification—

definition of, s. 161, p. 315.

meaning of, p. 316.

accepting giving—taking—attempt to take a gratification, p. 466.

Grievous hurt—

act done by consent not intended or known to be likely to cause death, or—, s. 37, p. 158.

definition of—, s. 320, p. 692.

s. 695, 700.

bodily pain for the space of twenty days, p. 693.

blow aimed at one person falling upon another, p. 694.

death caused by rupture of diseased spleen, p. 694.

by a dangerous weapon, s. 326, p. 701.

to extort property or to constrain to an illegal act, s. 329, p. 706.

confession or to compel restoration of property, s. 331, p. 708.

death resulting from—, s. 304, p. 711.

- Gun—
negligence with reference to, p. 715.
- Guardian—
act done to child or lunatic with consent of, ss. 89, 92, pp. 164, 168.
- Habitual—
dealing in slaves; s. 371, p. 767.
stolen property, s. 413, p. 881.
- Handwriting—
opinion of expert as to in forgery, p. 985
- Harbour—
definition of, s. 216-B, p. 471.
- Harbouring—
prisoner of State or war, s. 130, p. 265.
person hired for an unlawful assembly, s. 157, p. 311.
deserters, See DESERTERS.
offender, s. 212, p. 456.
husband or wife not punishable for, s. 212, except, p. 456. penalty for—who has escaped from custody or whose apprehension has been ordered, s. 216, p. 467.
no offence if offender is husband or wife of harbourer, s. 216, except, p. 468.
robbers or dacoits, s. 216-A, p. 470.
husband or wife not punishable for, s. 216-A, except, p. 470.
- Harm—
act likely to cause, s. 81, p. 134.
causing slight, s. 95, p. 172.
- Head—
permanent disfigurement of, s. 320, sixthly, p. 692.
- Headings—
construction of, in a statute, p. 13.
- Hatred—
in sedition, p. 252
- Health—
See ATMOSPHERE; INFECTIOUS DISEASE; PUBLIC HEALTH.
- Heated substance—
See FIRE.
- Helpless persons— breach of contract to attend, on, s. 491, p. 1029
- High Court—
Admiralty jurisdiction of, p. 23.
appellate criminal jurisdiction over Europeans, 21
- High seas—
offences committed on, Admiralty jurisdiction, p. 23.
piracy, p. 29.
jurisdiction of High Court, p. 25
mofussil Courts, p. 27
Presidency Magistrate's Court, p. 27.
- Highway—
punishment for robbery committed on—between sunset and sunrise, s. 392, p. 822.
See PUBLIC PLACE, PUBLIC ROAD, PUBLIC WAY.
- Hiring—
or being hired to join an unlawful assembly, ss. 150, 158, pp. 300, 312.
of a girl for purposes of prostitution, s. 372, p. 762.

Homicide—

is either (a) lawful or (b) unlawful.

(a) lawful homicide.

1. death by caused justifiably, ss. 76, 81, pp. 110, 131.
2. by accident or misfortune, s. 80, p. 132,
3. child, etc., ss. 82, 85, pp. 141, 156.
4. in good faith, ss. 87, 88, 92, pp. 158, 161, 168.

(b) unlawful homicide.

1. culpable homicide not amounting to murder, s. 299, p. 598.
2. murder s. 300, p. 615.
3. rash or negligent homicide, s. 301-A, p. 658.
4. suicide, ss. 305, 306, pp. 666, 667.

culpable—distinguished from murder, p. 618.

mania of, p. 148.

by a person suffering from fever, p. 150.

fanatic, p. 150.

ganja-smoker, p. 150.

monomaniac, p. 151.

morbid feeling, p. 151.

See CULPABLE HOMICIDE.

Horse—

killing, poisoning, etc., any, s. 429, p. 925.

See MISCHIEF.

House—

mischief with intent to destroy—by fire, s. 436, p. 933.

House-breaking—

definition of, s. 445, p. 948.

punishment for, ss. 453, 455, pp. 955, 957.

by night, s. 446, p. 950.

—; punishment for, ss. 456—458, pp. 958—962.

hability of all persons engaged in—where death or grievous hurt caused, s. 160, p. 964.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS.

House-breaking by night—

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS; HOUSE-BREAKING.

House-trespass—

definition of, s. 442, p. 945.

lawful entry followed by assault is house-trespass, p. 949.

entry not to commit an offence is not, p. 946.

officer exceeding his powers, p. 947 for committing adultery, p. 954.

punishment for, s. 448, p. 951.

to commit offence punishable with death, s. 449, p. 952.

transportation for life, s. 450, p. 952.

imprisonment, s. 451, p. 953.

after preparation to cause hurt, assault or wrongful restraint, s. 452, p. 954.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS.

Human body—

See BODY.

Hundi—

is a valuable security, p. 54.

Hurt—

definition of, s. 319, p. 693.

when it is "grievous," s. 320, eightly, p. 692.

voluntarily causing,—s. 321, p. 695.

act neither intended nor likely to cause death is—even though death is caused, p. 694 death caused by rupture of a diseased spleen, p. 694.

Hurt—concl'd.

- punishment for, s. 323, p. 696.
- by dangerous weapon, s. 324, p. 698.
- to extort property or to constrain to an illegal act, s. 327, p. 702.
- by means of poison, etc., s. 328, p. 703.
- to extort confession or to compel restoration of property, s. 330, p. 706.
- deter public servant from duty, s. 332, p. 709.
- blow with an umbrella amounts to, p. 710
- on provocation, s. 334, p. 711.
- causing—by rash or negligent act, s. 337, p. 715.
- voluntarily causing—when committing robbery, s. 391, p. 821.
- mischief after preparation for causing, s. 440, p. 936.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS; GRIEVOUS HURT; HOUSE TRESPASS; MISCHIEF.

Husband and wife—

- harbouring by one consort, ss. 212, 216, 216-A, pp. 456, 467, 470.
- husband may be guilty of rape, s. 375, except, p. 777.
- death of husband not an injury to wife, p. 66.
- wife cannot commit criminal breach of trust regarding husband's property, p. 851.

See ADULTERY; BIGAMY; MARRIAGE.

Iddat—

- performing second marriage within, p. 1033.
- enticing married woman during, p. 1049.

Idol—

- defiling an, by abhishekan, p. 589.
- criminal misappropriation of property of, p. 842.

Ignorance of law—

See MISTAKE OF LAW.

Illegal—

- definition of, s. 43, p. 65.
- order by a public servant, s. 219, p. 477.
- thing giving occasion to riot, s. 153, p. 303.

Illegal commitments—

- for trial for confinement, s. 220, p. 478.

Illegal gratification—

- by or to influence public servant, ss. 161, 164, pp. 315, 321.
- to screen offender or to receive stolen property, ss. 213, 215, pp. 459, 465.

Illegal omissions—

- words referring to acts include, s. 32, p. 55.

Illegal purchase or bid—

- for property; punishment for, s. 185, p. 373.

Illicit intercourse—

- abduction of woman to force her to, s. 366, p. 758.
- enticing married woman for the purposes of, s. 489, p. 1055.

Illustrations—

- construction of, in a statute, p. 12.

Imaginary person—

- personation of, p. 434.

Immoral conduct—

- confession by wife, p. 634.

Importation—

- of girl from foreign country, s. 366-B, p. 761.

Impossible offence—

attempt to commit an, p. 1117.

Imprisonment—

under Penal Code, s. 53, fourthly, pp. 70, 72.

is rigorous or simple, s. 53, p. 70.

rigorous—applied to prisoner under sentence of transportation, s. 53, p. 79.
may be commuted into transportation, s. 59, p. 79.

wholly or partly rigorous or simple, s. 60, p. 82.

power to impose for non-payment of fine, s. 64, p. 84.

imprisonment to be in proportion of the fine, p. 86.

rules regulating amount and nature of—in default of fine, ss. 65, 66, 67, pp. 86, 87.

termination of—on payment of fine, ss. 68, 69, pp. 90, 91.

abetment of mutiny punishable with, s. 132, p. 270.

giving false evidence to procure conviction of offence punishable with, s. 195, p. 417.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS ; FINE.

Imputation—

concerning any person, p. 1061.

against a dead person, p. 1061.

combination of persons, p. 1062.

concerning a caste, p. 1063.

Incantation—

threat of, gives no right of private defence, p. 637.

Incendiarism—

to any property worth Rs. 100, s. 435, p. 932.

destroy a house, s. 436, p. 933.

Income-tax return—

false statements in, p. 369.

Indian Articles of War (Act V of 1869)— persons subject to—not liable under Code, s. 139, p. 275.

Indian Marine Service—provisions of the Code applicable to, s. 139-A, p. 275.

Indorsement—

on a bill of exchange is a "document" s. 29, expln. 2, ill., p. 53.

valuable security, s. 30, ill., p. 54.

Infants—

See CHILD.

Infectious disease—

negligent or malignant act likely to spread, ss. 265, 270, pp. 545, 547.

syphilis, p. 545.

cholera, p. 546.

glanders, p. 546.

inoculation, p. 546.

plague, p. 546.

small-pox, p. 546.

disobeying quarantine rules, s. 271, p. 547.

Infirmity—

causing—is 'hurt' s. 319, p. 690.

Information—

Information—concl'd.

429.

*See FALSE INFORMATION.Injunction—

by a civil Court is not an order under s. 188, p. 280.
 continuing nuisance after an—to discontinue, p. 574.
 injunction must be before the Court, p. 574.

Injury—

definition of, s. 44, p. 66.
 death of husband not an injury to wife, p. 66.
 false charge is an, p. 67.
 threat of—to public servant, ss. 189, 190, pp. 387, 388.
 of an offence in order to commit extortion, s. 387, p. 814 See THREATS.

Innocence—

onus of proving—on accused, s. 486, p. 1020.

Inoculation—

not in itself illegal or negligent act, p. 546.

Insane—*See LUNATIC.Instigate— meaning of the words, s. 107, expln. 1, p. 197

Instigation—

abetment by, p. 198.
 through a third party, p. 199.
 master's liability for, p. 199.
 whether suppression of evidence is, p. 199.
 deliberate absence from an unlawful assembly is not, p. 199.
 by letter, p. 199.
 telephone, p. 199.
 consent to hold stake is not, p. 199.
 to secure 'awara', p. 254.

Instrument of coining—making, selling or possessing for counterfeiting coin, ss. 232, 233, pp. 526, 527.

Queen's coin, ss. 234, 235, pp. 526, 527.

Insubordination

abetment of act of by soldier or sailor, s. 153, p. 274.
 meaning of, p. 274.

Insult—

to public servant in a stage of a judicial proceeding, s. 228, p. 497.
 refusal to answer a question, pp. 500, 498.
 public servant must be sitting in a stage of judicial proceeding, p. 498.
 to the religion of any person, ss. 295, 296, pp. 503, 502.
 intended to provoke breach of the peace, s. 294, p. 1097.
 what constitutes ab., p. 1097.
 to the modesty of a woman, s. 292, p. 1104.

*See INTENTIONAL INSULT OR INTERFERENCE.Intention— to defraud, what is, p. 44.

 as to done in furtherance of conspiracy, p. 57.
 more precise test, as to liability to conspiracy, p. 57.

Intention—concl'd.

where act is done by several persons, s. 35, p. 60.

act done bona fide without criminal, s. 81, p. 134.

criminal intention, meaning of, p. 135.

differs from motive, p. 135.

in cases of statutory crimes, p. 137.

is essential in cases of sedition, pp. 244, 245.

p. 554.

in cases of murder, p. 620.

distinguished from attempt, p. 1108.

Intentional insult or interruption—to public servant sitting in judicial proceeding, s. 228, p. 497.

Intentional omission—to apprehend accused or a convict, ss. 221, 222, pp. 479, 480.

Interest—

imputation for the protection of one's, s. 499, exceptn. 9, pp. 1056, 1074.

Interest in land—

where riot is committed, s. 154, p. 307.

Interruption—

to public servant in a judicial proceeding, s. 228, p. 497.

See INTENTIONAL INSULT OR INTERRUPTION.

Intimidation—

See CRIMINAL INTIMIDATION.

Intoxicating drug—

See DRUGS.

Intoxication—

act done in a state of, s. 85, p. 156.

voluntary, is not a valid plea, p. 156.

presumption of knowledge or intent against a man in a state of—produced against his will, etc., s. 86, p. 157.

person in a state of—cannot “consent,” s. 90, p. 165.

right of defence against a person in a state of, s. 98, p. 180.

no excuse in cases of murder, p. 626.

causing a person to execute or alter a document while in a state of—is forgery, s. 464, p. 963.

in a public place, s. 510, p. 1106.

Intrusion—

on privacy of female, s. 509, p. 1105.

Inundation—

causing—by mischief or obstruction to drainage, etc., s. 432, p. 930.

See PUBLIC DRAINAGE.

Investigation—

directed by law or Court of Justice in a stage of judicial proceeding, s. 193, explns 2, 3, p. 404.

See PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION.

Ironical remark—

may amount to defamation, s. 499, except 3, pp. 1055, 1068.

Irrigation—

mischief by injury to works of—or by wrongfully diverting water, s. 430, p. 926.

Joinder of offences—

see commentary on, s. 71, p. 95.

Joint acts—

- union of several persons to effect a criminal purpose, s. 34, p. 53.
- liability of person who does one of several acts, s. 37, p. 61.
- each person may commit a different offence, s. 38, p. 62.
- liability for acts of any member of an unlawful assembly, pp. 286, 293, 300.
 - persons engaged in robbery, s. 394, p. 824.
 - dacoity, s. 396, p. 826.
 - combining in forgery, p. 984.

Joint offenders—

- when sentenced to fine, each should be directed to pay, p. 84.

Joint property—

- theft of, 801.
- criminal misappropriation of, p. 842.
- no criminal trespass can lie in respect of, p. 938.

Journey—

- breach of contract of service during, p. 1028.

Judge—

- definition of, s. 19, p. 39.
- includes arbitrators empowered by law to give definite judgment, p. 40.
- is a "public servant," s. 21, p. 40.
- act of—when no offence, s. 77, p. 122.
- acting under a misapprehension of jurisdiction, p. 123.
- not liable for defamation for utterances as a Judge, p. 1076.

Judgment—

- when doubtful of which of several offences a person is guilty, s. 72, p. 103
- act pursuant to, s. 78, p. 124
- publication of, s. 499, exceptn. 4, pp. 1055, 1069

Judicial officers—

- liability and immunity of, p. 124

Judicial proceeding—

- explained, ss. 192, 193, expln. 1, pp. 396, 404
- 497.

See COURT-MARTIAL, PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION.

Judicially—

- meaning of, p. 123

Jurisdiction—

- territorial—of a State, extent of, p. 14
- where doubtful, p. 15.
 - be—
 - 18.
 - (c) some foreign state, p. 10
- 2. Extra territorial—over offence committed on
 - (i) land, p. 19
 - cases under s. 188, Criminal Procedure Code, p. 20.
 - Act XIII of 1859, p. 21.
 - Christian British subjects in Native States, p. 21.
 - subsequent annexation of territory where offence is committed, p. 21.
 - acts done in British as well as foreign territory, p. 23
 - (ii) high seas, p. 23.
 - Admiralty jurisdiction, p. 23.
 - High Court, p. 25.
 - mosasil Courts, p. 27.
 - Presidency Magistrate's Court, p. 27.

Jurisdiction—concl'd.

law and procedure to be followed, p. 28.

piracy, p. 29.

liability of foreigners in British India for crimes committed outside its limits, p. 30.

murder on the high seas, p. 31.

murder on the land, p. 31.

abetment in foreign territory of forgery committed in British India, p. 31.

of civil Courts over soldiers, p. 35.

when an act is an offence under two statutes, p. 35.

false evidence on oath before Court having no, p. 392.

charge should be before a Magistrate having, p. 447.

Juror—

is a public servant, s. 21, fifth, p. 41.

personation of, s. 229, p. 500

Juryman—

when "public servant," s. 21, fifth, p. 41.

Justice—

offences against public, ss. 191, 229, pp. 390, 501.

Justice, Court of—definition of the term, s. 20, p. 41.

Kabulayat—

is at valuable security, p. 54.

Kidnapping—

committed in foreign territory, p. 31.

from British India, s. 360, p. 742.

lawful guardianship, s. 361, p. 743.

when taking is complete, p. 744.

enticing, p. 745.

minor, p. 745.

lawful guardian—

Hindu, p. 747.

Mahomedan, p. 748.

without guardian's consent, p. 748.

should be, s. 360, pp. 743-744.

offence, p. 751.

751.

removal of a child-wife from the custody of mother, p. 752.

mother-in-law, p. 752.

abetment, p. 753.

sample, s. 363, p. 753

or abducting in order to murder, s. 364, p. 754.

wrongfully confine, s. 363, p. 755.

a woman to compel her to marriage, s. 366, p. 756.

in order to subject a person to grievous hurt, etc., s. 367, p. 762.

with a view to wrongfully conceal or keep in confinement, s. 368, p. 763.

a child to steal from its person, s. 369, p. 764.

See ABDUCTION.

Knowledge—

how far an essential element in crimes, p. 500

607.

Labour—

unlawful compulsory, s. 374, p. 776.
means mental or bodily labour, p. 776.

Labourer—

breach of contract by, s. 492, p. 1030.

Land—

extra-territorial jurisdiction, p. 19.
is not moveable property, p. 46.
interest in, meaning of the term, p. 303.

Land-holder—liability of—, or his agent or manager, for riot, ss. 154, 155, 156, pp. 308, 309, 310.

Land-mark—mischief by destroying or moving—, etc., s. 434, p. 931.

innocent removal, p. 932.

Larceny—

what constitutes a, p. 787.
difference between theft and, p. 787.

Lathi—

may or may not be a deadly weapon, pp. 293, 830.

Lavni—

is not necessarily an obscene song, p. 579.

Law—

applicable to offences committed beyond the limits of British India, ss. 3, 4, pp. 15, 16.
mistake of—no defence, ss. 76, 79, pp. 119, 125.

See LOCAL OR SPECIAL LAW.

Lawful authority—

contempt of public servant See PUBLIC SERVANT. resistance to the taking of property by, s. 183, p. 370 without a warrant, p. 371.
refusal is not resistance, p. 371

Lawful guardian—

definition of, s. 361, Expln. pp. 743, 747.
Hindu Law, p. 747.
Mahomedan Law, p. 748.
temporary guardianship does not oust right of, p. 751

See ABDUCTION ; KIDNAPPING.

Legal remuneration—

definition of, s. 161, p. 315

Legal Practitioners' Act—

offer to give gratification contrary to, s. 116, p. 219.

Legally bound—public servant who is, omitting to apprehend, ss. 221, 222, 223, pp. 479, 480, 492.

Legally bound to do—

definition of, s. 43, p. 65.

Legislative power—of the Government of India, p. 16.

Letter—

instigation by a, to commit offence, p. 199.

Liability—

of every person under the Code, p. 6.

exceptions—

ambassadors, p. 6.

foreign sovereign, p. 6.

Sovereign, p. 6.

alien enemies, p. 7.

foreign army, p. 7.

warship, p. 7.

of a corporation, p. 7.

master for servant's act, p. 7.

statutory liability, p. 8.

neglect of duty, p. 9.

public nuisance, p. 9.

of one for act done by another, ss. 34, 146, 149, pp. 55, 212, 215, 286, 293.

License cases—

liability of master for the acts of servant, p. 7.

Libel—

English law requires tendency to provoke breach of the peace, p. 1057.

differs from slander under English law, p. 1063.

is included in defamation under the Code, p. 1063

See DEFAMATION.

Lieutenant-Governor—

assault on—with intent to compel or restrain exercise of any lawful power, s. 124, p. 242.

Life—

definition of, s. 45, p. 67.

rash or negligent act endangering—or personal safety of others, s. 336, p. 713.

causing hurt or grievous hurt by act endangering—or personal safety of others, ss. 337, 338, pp. 715, 716.

Light—

exhibiting a false, s. 281, p. 561.

Light-house—

mischiefs by destroying, moving or rendering less useful any, s. 433, p. 931.

Limit of punishment—

when offence is made up of several offences, s. 71, p. 94.

Limitation—

lapse of six years in paying fine protects accused's property, but not his personal arrest, s. 70, p. 92.

prosecution under, s. 154, et. seq., must commence at once, p. 309.

prosecution for false trade mark, etc., must commence in a year, p. 1012.

Line of navigation—obstructing—; s. 283, p. 562.

Local or special law—provisions of—not affected by Code, s. 5, p. 35.

definition of, ss. 41, 42, p. 65.

40, p. 64.

solitary confinement cannot be awarded in convictions under, p. 107.

doctrine of previous conviction does not apply to offences under, p. 112.

See SPECIAL LAW.

Losing wrongfully—

definition of, s. 23, p. 47.

Loss—

See WRONGFUL LOSS.

Marriage—concl'd.

conversion from Christianity, p. 1035.

Hinduism, p. 1035.

Mahomedanism, p. 1036.

1037.

1038.

ceremony fraudulently gone through, s. 496, p. 1042.

cohabitation under Alyasanatan law is no, p. 1051

See ADULTERY; BIGAMY.

Married woman—Martial Law—

what is, p. 132.

Masculine—

includes feminine, s. 8, p. 37.

Master—

liability for servant's acts, p. 7.

statutory liability, p. 8.

licence cases, p. 8.

public nuisance, p. 9

neglect of duty, p. 9.

rash driving by the servant, p. 559.

theft by servant of property in possession of, s. 381, p. 806.

breach of contract by servant engaged for voyage or journey, s. 490, p. 1028.

to attend and supply the wants of helpless persons,
s. 491, p. 1033.

by workman, etc., bound by contracts in writing to serve at distant place in British India to which he is conveyed at master's expense, s. 492, p. 1034

Maxims—

maius non suppet utrumque, pp. 110, 111.

necessitas inducit privilegium quo ad iura privata, p. 800.

noscuntur a sociis, p. 763.

presumptio iuris et de jure, pp. 143, 777.

qui peccat ebrius, luat ebrius, p. 156.

res ipsa loquitur, p. 671

32.

Measures—

See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Medals—

are not coins, s. 230, ill (c), p. 502.

passing of, as money, p. 505.

Medical practitioners—unqualified—causing injury, pp. 163, 164.

Medicine—

adulteration of—and sale of adulterated—ss. 274, 275, pp. 551, 552.

sale of—as different medicine, s. 276, p. 563.

Member of Council—

assault on—with intent to compel or restrain exercise of lawful power of, s. 124, p. 212.

Member or joint—destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of any—is “grievous hurt,” s. 320, fifthly, p. 692.

privation of—is “grievous hurt,” s. 320, fourthly, p. 692.

Men-of-war exemption of foreign men-of-war from provisions of the Penal Code, p. 7.

Mens rea—

when an essential ingredient, p. 135.

Merchant—

criminal breach of trust by, s. 409, p. 864.

Merchant-vessel—liability of master of—for deserter, s. 137, p. 278.

Merger—

has no place in the criminal law of defamation, p. 1060.

Merits—

of public performance, discussion of, s. 499, except. 6, pp. 1055, 1071.

Military Court martial—trial before—is a “judicial proceeding,” s. 193, expln. 1, p. 404.

Minor—

procuration of, s. 366-A, p. 760.

selling or buying—for prostitution, ss. 372, 373, pp. 767, 772.

Mint—

causing coin issued from—to be of different weight or composition from that fixed by law,
s. 244, p. 519.

conveying coining tools out of, s. 245, p. 520.

evidence of an officer of, how to be taken, p. 506.

Misappropriation—of moveable property, s. 403, explns. 1 and 2, p. 839.

property found accidentally, s. 403, expln. 2, p. 839.

of a deceased person, s. 404, p. 847.

Miscarriage—

causing—in ordinary cases, s. 312, p. 678.

woman committing—on herself, s. 312, expln., p. 678.

causing without woman's consent, s. 313, p. 680.

death in attempt to procure, s. 314, p. 681.

“abortion,” s. 314, p. 681.

Mischief—

in regard to will, authority to adopt, or other valuable security, s. 417, p. 903.

definition of, s. 425, p. 915.

punishment for, s. 426, p. 916.

destruction of trespasser's property, p. 917.

wrongful loss or damage necessary, p. 917.

accident is not, p. 918.

how far bona fides good defence, p. 920.

by cattle, p. 921.

negligence is not, p. 921.

causing damage to property, s. 427, p. 923.

killing, maiming, etc., animal, ss. 428, 429, pp. 924, 925.

Mischief—concl'd.

- diminishing water-supply, s. 430, p. 926.
- injuring public road, etc., s. 431, p. 929.
- causing inundation, etc., s. 432, p. 930.
- destroying, removing or rendering useless light-house, etc., s. 433, p. 931.
- etc., land mark, 434, p. 931.
- using fire, or explosive substance, ss. 435, 438, pp. 932, 935.
- etc., with intent to destroy house, s. 436, p. 933.
- or explosive substance with intent to destroy or make unsafe a vessel of 20 tons burden, s. 437, p. 934.
- committed after preparation for causing death or grievous hurt or wrongful restraint, s. 440, p. 936.
- breaking open a closed receptacle to commit, ss. 461, 462, pp. 965, 966.
- by defacing property mark, s. 489, p. 1023.
- publication or circulation of statement, rumour, or report, conducing to, s. 505, p. 1099.

Misconception—

- renders consent invalid, s. 90, p. 165.

Misconduct—

- in a public place by a drunken person, s. 510, p. 1106.

Misfortune—

- act done by—when no offence, s. 80, p. 132.

Mistake of fact—

- effect of—on act done by person believed to be justified by law to do so, s. 47, p. 129.
- as to age of person, s. 48, p. 130.
- as to identity of person, s. 49, p. 131.
- as to nature of act, s. 50, p. 132.
- as to time, s. 51, p. 133.
- as to place, s. 52, p. 134.
- as to state of mind, s. 53, p. 135.
- as to state of things, s. 54, p. 136.
- as to state of law, s. 55, p. 137.

Mistake of law—

- does not prevent an act from being an offence, ss. 76, 79, pp. 119, 125.
- ignorance of a new statute prohibiting an act, p. 129.
- as well as of fact, p. 130.
- may be considered in mitigation of punishment, p. 128.

Mistress—

- permanent, is included in wife, p. 51.

Mock-bidding—

- at an auction sale is an offence under s. 165, p. 373.

Mock-marriage—

- for the purpose of inducing the woman to prostitute herself, p. 1012.

Moharram procession—

- disturbance of, p. 594.

Month—

- definition of, s. 49, p. 67.

Morals—

- offences against public, ss. 292-294, pp. 574-578.

Motive or reward for doing—

- definition of, s. 161, p. 315.

Moveable property—

- what the term means and includes, s. 22, p. 40.
- may be reached by distress and sale for non-payment of fine, p. 92.
- what falls under the description of, p. 791.
- boat, p. 792.
- earth and stone, p. 792.
- car, p. 792.
- human body, p. 792.
- oil, p. 792.
- valuable securities, p. 792.

Mutiny—

abetment of—in Army and Navy ss. 131, 132, pp. 268, 270.
 circulating false report with intent to excite—in Army or Navy, s. 505, p. 1099.
 meaning of the term, s. 131, p. 269.

Mutiny Act—

not affected by the Indian Penal Code, s. 5, p. 33. persons subject to—are not punishable under Chap. VII of the Indian Penal Code, s. 139, p. 273.

Native Indian subject—

what it means and includes, p. 17.

Native States—

jurisdiction of British Courts over Christian subjects residing in, p. 21.

Navigable—river or channel, destroying or injuring, s. 431, p. 929.

See CHANNEL; RIVER.

Navigation—

of a vessel, rash or negligent, etc., s. 280, p. 559.
 exhibiting false lights, buoys, etc., s. 281, p. 561.

931.

Navy—

offences relating to and committed by persons belonging to, Chap. VII, includes the Indian Marine Service, p. 266.

See INDIAN ARTICLES OF WAR.

Necessity—

doctrine of, as a defence, p. 171.

Negligence—

machinery, s. 287, p. 569.

with reference to poisonous drugs, s. 337, p. 715.

Negligent act—

See RASH OR NEGLIGENCE ACT.

Newspaper—

publication of seditious matters in, p. 257. liability for correspondence, p. 257.
 publication of defamatory matter in a, p. 1060.
 is published, wherever its copy is sent, p. 1060.

Newspaper proprietor—liable for obscene matter published by his servant, p. 582.

Non-attendance—appearance through lawyer, p. 350.

 escape from custody, p. 350.
 personal service necessary, p. 360.
 public servant before whom attendance is to be put in, absent, p. 350.
 wilful departure, p. 350.

Noxious—

means injurious to health, p. 518.

Nude pictures—

if work of art, selling no offence, p. 578.

Nuisance—

nuisance is public or private, p. 539.
 public, definition of, s. 268, p. 539.
 , what amounts to, p. 539.
 where no annoyance to public there is no, p. 541.
 gambling in a public place is, p. 542.
 lawful cremation is not, p. 542.
 offending the sentiments of a class is no, p. 542.
 convenience does not afford defence, p. 543.

ition precedent, p. 544.

situation of the place of, p. 544.
 statutory authority to commit, p. 544.
 spreading infectious and dangerous disease, s. 269, p. 545.
 syphilis, p. 545.
 cholera, p. 546.
 glanders, p. 546.
 inoculation, p. 546.
 plague, p. 546.
 small-pox, p. 546.

572.

See INFECTIOUS DISEASE; PUBLIC NUISANCE.Number—

definition of, s. 9, p. 37.

Oath—

what the word means and includes, s. 51, p. 68.
 refusing to take an, s. 178, p. 359.
 making false statements on, to public servant, s. 181, p. 362.

Oaths or affirmations—refusal to take—, s. 178, p. 359.

 false statement on—, s. 181, p. 362.
 what are, s. 181, p. 360.

Obliteration—

of documents, an offence, s. 204, p. 431.

Obscene acts and songs—

doing, singing, reciting or uttering, s. 291, p. 578.

See OBSCENITY.

Obscene books, etc.—

sale, distribution, importation, printing, public exhibition, or possession of, ss. 292, 293, pp. 574, 578.

See OBSCENITY.

Obscenity—

importing, printing, etc., obscene matter, s. 292, p. 574.

what it means and includes, p. 375.

advocating checks to conception is no, p. 576.

nude pictures, p. 576.

purchase of obscene prints to entrap the seller, p. 576.

liability of a newspaper proprietor for his servant's acts, p. 576.

exposing such matter for sale, s. 293, p. 578.

Obstructing—

the taking of property by authority of public servant, s. 183, p. 370.

sale of property by public servant, s. 184, p. 372.

rescuing from custody, p. 376.

search without search-warrant, p. 376.

no obstruction if no overt act done, p. 376.

if order or warrant not legal, p. 377.

penalty for—apprehension of oneself, s. 224, p. 485.

another, s. 225, p. 488.

a public way or line of navigation, s. 283, p. 562.

Obstruction—

connotes physical obstruction, p. 374.

in a public way or line of navigation, s. 283, p. 562.

Occupier—

154, p. 307.

155, p. 309.

Offence—

different offences, s. 38, p. 62.

1, p. 94.

72, p. 105.

125 intoxicated persons, ss. 85, 86, pp. 156, 157.

done by consent, not intended or known to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt, s. 87, p. 158.

not intended to cause death done by consent for benefit of a person, s. 88, p. 161.

done for benefit of child or insane person, by or by consent of guardian, s. 89, p. 164.

a person without consent, s. 92, p. 168.

communications made in good faith, s. 93, p. 169.

Offence—concl.

de

430, 456, 467.

*See UNNATURAL OFFENCES.Offender—

causing disappearance of evidence or giving false information to screen—, s. 201, p. 422 harbouring or taking or offering gift to screen, ss. 212, 216, pp. 456, 467.

Officer—

43.

definition of, s. 131, expln., p. 269.

falsification of accounts by, s. 177-A, p. 1005.

Offices of nature—

make atmosphere noxious, s. 278, p. 535.

Omission—

351, 3

Operation—

extent of—of the Code, p. 1.

date of, p. 2.

Order—Outrage—

upon a woman to insult her modesty, s. 354, p. 738.

Owner—tenant for rent held on his land or for his benefit, ss. 124, 15 killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless an, s. 429, p. 925.

Ox—

See MISCHIEF.

Panchayat—member of—when he is a Judge, s. 19, ill. (c), p. 40.

 may be a Court of Justice, s. 20, ill., p. 40 member of—assisting Court of Justice, etc., is a public servant, s. 21, cl. fifth p. 41.

Parties—

liability for defamatory statements made by, p. 1081.

Partner—

can commit breach of trust as to partnership property, p. 851.
 dishonest removal of property by a, p. 914.

Passenger—

conveyed in an unsafe boat, p. 562.
 travelling by railway in a higher class without paying for it, p. 900. handing luggage to co-passenger to evade payment, p. 900.

Peace—

provoking a breach of the, s. 504, p. 1007.

Penal servitude—

one of the punishments under the Penal Code, s. 53, thirdly, pp. 70, 72.
commutation of sentence of—without consent of convict, s. 55, p. 77.
 awarded in the case of Europeans and Americans in substitution for transportation, s. 56,
 p. 78.

See EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN.

Penal Servitude Act—

see the Appendix where it is set out in full, pp. 1173, 1174.

Penal statutes—

construction of, p. 11

Penetration—

sufficient to constitute rape, s. 375, Expln., pp. 777, 784 unnatural offence, p. 783.

Perjury—

what amounts to, s. 191, p. 390
 English law of, p. 391.
 differentiated from the Indian law, p. 391 where Court has no authority to administer oath or affirmation or acts beyond its jurisdiction, p. 391 criminating statement is no Justification, p. 394
 in written statements, p. 394
 abetment, p. 395.
 illegality of trial does not purge, p. 395.
 and for other false evidence, p. 395.

Person—

every—liable to punishment under Penal Code for offences committed within British India
 s. 2, p. 4.
 includes a foreigner, p. 5.

definition of, s. 11, p. 51.

does not include Government as representative of the whole community, p. 38.
 liability of every—for act done by several persons, s. 34, p. 55.

Personal safety—

rash or negligent act endangering life or—, s. 336, p. 713.

letting off steam near a crossing, p. 714.

throwing stones on a person's house, p. 714.

715.

715.

death caused by allowing a cat to go unattended, p. 716.

running over by a carriage, p. 716.

Personating—

a soldier, s. 140, p. 276.

433

a juror or assessor, s. 229, p. 500.

Personation—

at an election, s. 171-D, p. 338.

punishment for, s. 171-F, p. 340.

of imaginary person, s. 205, p. 431.

cheating by, ss. 416, 419, pp. 901, 906.

at an examination, p. 901.

before a public servant, p. 901.

by witness, p. 902.

false representation as to caste, p. 902.

misrepresentation as to position in life, p. 902.

false statements as to name and performances, p. 903.

Piles—

operation on, by an unskilful person, p. 69.

Piracy—

what is, p. 29.

evidence in cases of, p. 31.

Place of worship—

injuring or defiling, s. 295, p. 587.

trespass should be in a place of worship, s. 297, p. 592.

Plague—negligence regarding spread of, p. 546.

Plaint—

false statement in a, how far a forgery, p. 995.

Plan—

See MAP OR PLAN.

Pleader—

not liable to defamation for utterances in Court, p. 1076.

Pleadings—

defamatory statements made in, p. 1085.

Pledgee—

pledging the pledged property commits a breach of trust, p. 852.

Poison—

701, 703.

per order with, s. 284, p. 665.

art, ss. 321, 326, 328, pp. 694,

Poisonous drugs—

negligence with reference to, s. 337, p. 715.
administering, to cause miscarriage, p. 681.

Police torture—

death from, punishable under, s. 330, p. 706.

Possession—

meaning of, s. 27, p. 51.

of property by a person through wife, clerk or servant, s. 27, p. 51.

under Penal Code, abrogates the distinction made by English law between possession and custody, p. 51.

instruments of coining, s. 235, p. 509.

false weights, by itself is no offence, p. 536.

obscene books, etc., prohibited, ss. 292, 293, pp. 574, 578.

cases of theft, p. 794.

theft by servant of property in—of master, s. 381, p. 806.

of property by the wife is not per se the possession of the husband, s. 411, p. 873.

in cases of trespass must be actual, p. 943.

Power of attorney—is "document," s. 29, III., p. 62.

Preamble—

of the Indian Penal Code, p. 2.

Pregnancy—

meaning of "quick with child," p. 679.

"with child," p. 679.

Preliminary investigation—is a "stage of a judicial proceeding," s. 103, expln. 2, p. 404.

Premeditated fight—

not protected by s. 300, except 5, p. 642.

Preparation—

is a "stage of a judicial proceeding," s. 103, expln. 2, p. 404.

Presence—

not equivalent to complicity in a crime, p. 61.

sufficient for conviction of murder, p. 621.

at extortion is not sufficient for conviction, p. 813.

Presidency—

definition of, s. 18, p. 39.

Previous conviction—enhancement of punishment in proof of, s. 73, p. 109.

doctrine of, does not apply to abetment, p. 111.

attempt, p. 111.

convictions under foreign law, p. 112.

special or local law, p. 112.

evidence must be clear and precise, p. 112.

jurisdiction of Magistrates, p. 113.

punishment to be awarded, p. 116.

record of previous conviction, p. 117.

Principal—

under the Penal Code, see ss. 34-36, pp. 55-62.

in the first degree, who is, p. 263.

second degree, who is, p. 263.

cannot be punished as abettor, p. 265.

Printing—

or engraving defamatory matter, s. 501, p. 1091.

See DEFAMATION.

Prison—

harbouring person who has escaped from, s. 216, p. 467.

escape from—; intentional or negligent suffering of—by public servants, ss. 223, 224, pp. 482, 485.

attempt to escape from—, ss. 224, 225-A, pp. 485, 490.

Prisoner—

voluntarily allowing or suffering or aiding escape of State, ss. 128, 129, 130, pp. 263, 264, 265.

Prisoner of war—

escape of, from lawful custody, s. 128, p. 263.

Privacy—

intruding upon the—of a woman, s. 509, p. 1104.

entering into the room of a lady in the middle of night, p. 1105.

Private defence—

when right of—exists, ss. 97, 98, 99, pp. 180, 180, 181.

cause the apprehension of death or grievous hurt, p. 181.

cannot be pleaded when there is time to have recourse to public authorities, s. 99, p. 181.

permits the infliction of justifiable harm, p. 181.

not allowed where more harm is caused than necessary, p. 181.

of the body, when right of—extends to causing death, s. 100, p. 187.

harm other than death, s. 101, p. 190.

how long the right of—continues, s. 102, p. 190.

of property, when right of—extends to causing death, s. 103, p. 192.

less harm, s. 104, p. 193.

how long the right of—continues, s. 105, p. 194.

extends to injuries of innocent person, in the exercise of the right of, s. 106, p. 196.

how far a justification to commit a riot, p. 288.

when death caused in the exercise of the right of—does not amount to murder, s. 300, except. 2, pp. 616, 636.

in case of murder, p. 636.

exceeding the right of, p. 637.

threat of incantations gives no right of, p. 637.

where it is no defence, p. 637.

Privilege—

of judges in defamation, p. 1076.

counsel, pleader, etc., p. 1076.

witness, p. 1078.

parties, p. 1081.

of statements made in—

pleadings, p. 1082.

reports, p. 1082.

protection of another's interest, p. 1083.

one's own interest, p. 1084.

Prize-fight—

persons sanctioning—guilty of manslaughter, p. 160.

Process—

absconding to avoid, or preventing service or publication of—, or non-attendance in obedience to, ss. 172, 174, pp. 344, 347.

Promoting—

enmity between classes, s. 153-A, p. 305.

Property—

private defence of—See PRIVATE DEFENCE.

contempt of lawful or in execution of

rd in order to save compel its restoration, ss. 347, 348, 350, 351, pp. 100, 100, 101.

wrongful confinement to extort—or compel its restoration, ss. 347, 348, pp. 726, 727.

includes cancelled cheque in s. 405, p. 838.

promissory note is s. 14, 301.

See CRIMINAL MISAPPROPRIATION; DEATH; FORFEITURE; FRAUD

ULENT DEEDS AND DISPOSITIONS OF PROPERTY; STOLEN PROPERTY.

Property in possession of wife, clerk or servant—

explained, s. 27, p. 51.

Property-mark—

115.

or possessing instruments for counterfeiting,

1020.

487, 488, pp. 1022, 1023

489, p. 1023.

Prostitution—

selling or buying minor for purpose of—, ss. 372, 373, pp. 767, 772 adoption of a girl by a dancing woman, p. 770.

dev dasi, p. 771.

marrying a girl for purposes of, p. 758.

sheltering girls for purposes of, p. 758.

disposal of a girl for the purpose of, p. 768.

Proviso—

construction of, in a statute, p. 13.

Provocation—

grave and sudden, p. 631

not sought nor voluntarily provoked, p. 633 caused by adulterous intercourse, p. 634 adultery, but death not caused in a fit of passion, p. 634 confession by a woman of immoral conduct, p. 634 abusive words, p. 635

fear, p. 635

causing hurt or grievous hurt on grave and sudden, ss. 334, 335, pp. 711, 712.

assaulting or using criminal force otherwise than on grave, s. 335, p. 733.

with intent to dishonour a person, s. 335, p. 740 assault or criminal force on grave, s. 338, p. 741

See ASSAULT; CRIMINAL FORCE.

Public—

definition of, s. 12, p. 38.

punishment for obscene acts and songs done in, s. 284, p. 675.

Public convenience—offences affecting, Ch. XIV, p. 539.

Public decency—

offences affecting, Ch. XIV, p. 539.

Public drainage—

mischiefs by causing inundation or obstruction, s. 432, p. 930.

Public functions—

what are, p. 374.

Public good—

how far defence in defamation, pp. 1061, 1073.

Public health—offence relating to—by polluting atmosphere, s. 278, p. 555.

water, s. 430, p. 926.

by negligent or malignant act likely to cause spread of infectious disease, ss. 269, 270, pp. 545, 547.

Public justice—offences against, Ch. XI, p. 390.

Public line of navigation—danger or obstruction to, s. 283, p. 562.

See PUBLIC WAY.

Public mischief—statements conducing to, s. 505, p. 1099.

Public morals—

offences affecting, Ch. XIV, p. 539.

Public nuisance—

definition of, s. 268, p. 539.

difference between public and private nuisance, p. 539.

annoyance to public necessary, p. 541.

gambling, p. 542.

lawful cremation is not, p. 542.

offending the sentiments of a class is not, p. 542.

no prescriptive right can be acquired to maintain, p. 543.

difference between civil and criminal liability, p. 544.

liability of owner for acts of servant, p. 544.

prosecution under Criminal Procedure Code not a condition precedent, p. 544.

statutory authority to commit, p. 544.

Public peace—

assembly likely to disturb—; being a member of—after order to disperse, s. 151, p. 301.

Public performance—criticism of the merits of s, s. 499, excep. 6, pp. 1055, 1071.

Public place—

what constitutes a, p. 313.

what is and is not, p. 313.

misconduct by a drunken person in a, s. 510, p. 1106.

Public question—expression of opinion respecting, s. 499, excep. 3, pp. 1055, 1068.

Public river—

not included in public spring, p. 534.

Public road—

mischievous by injuring, s. 471, p. 929.

Public safety—

offences affecting, Ch. XIV, p. 539.

Public servant—

who are included in the term, s. 21, p. 46.

who are pro confesso, p. 43.

statutory, pp. 44, 45.

private defence against acts of, s. 99, p. 181.

abetting an offence, s. 116, p. 219.

concealing design to commit offences, which it is his duty to prevent, s. 119, p. 223.

voluntarily and negligently allowing prisoner of State or war to escape, ss. 128, 129, pp. 263, 264.

assault, etc., on—while suppressing riot, etc., s. 152, p. 302.

, 323, 324.

non-attendance in obedience to order from—or departure without leave of s. 174, p. 347.

omission to produce or deliver up documents to, s. 175, p. 351.

give notice or information to, s. 176, p. 353.

to—of an offence committed, ss. 176, 202, pp. 353, 429.

furnishing false information s. 177, p. 356.

respecting an offence committed, ss. 177, 203, pp. 356, 430.

refusing to be sworn by, s. 178, p. 359.

answer question of, s. 179, p. 359.

statement before s. 180, p. 361.

another, s. 182, p. 364.

s. 370.

disposal of property by lawful authority of, s. 184, p. 372.

to induce any person to refrain or desist from applying to—for protection, s. 190, p. 388.

disobeying directions of law in order to screen offender, s. 217, p. 471.

acting exceeding the powers given by law and committing murder, p. 638.

doing an unlawful act, p. 638.

causing hurt or grievous hurt to—to deter him from doing his duty, ss. 332, 338, pp. 709, 711.

prosecution for—s. 359, p. 509.

Public spring or reservoir—does not include public river, p. 554.

punishment for fouling water of, s. 277, p. 554.

Public tranquillity—offences against—; Chap. VIII, p. 277.

Public way—Publication— of obscene books, etc., prohibited, s. 292, p. 574.

is an essential ingredient in the offence of defamation, p. 115 communication to the person defamed is no, p. 1058.

of defamatory matter in a newspaper, p. 1060.

sale of each printed copy is a separate, p. 1060.

Puffing—

not cheating, p. 896.

Punchayat—

when a Judge, s. 19, p. 39.

Court of Justice, s. 20, p. 40.

member of a, when a public servant, s. 21, p. 43.

Punctuation—

construction of, in a statute, p. 13.

Punishable—

meaning of the term, discussed, p. 64.

Punishment—

when to be under the Penal Code, ss. 2, 3, 4, pp. 4, 15, 16.

different kinds of, for :—

death, pp. 70, 71.

transportation, pp. 70, 71.

penal servitude, pp. 70, 72.

imprisonment, pp. 70, 72.

forfeiture, pp. 70, 74.

fine, pp. 70, 74.

whipping, p. 75.

reformatories, p. 75.

power to commute or remit, ss. 54, 55, p. 77.

constitute offence of the same character,

p. 97.

different offences, n. 97.

nces, p. 102.

offences under special or local law, p. 112.

See REMISSION OF PUNISHMENT.

Quarantine—

disobedient to rules of—, s. 271, p. 547.

Queen—

definition of, s. 13, p. 38.

servant of, s. 14, p. 38.

Offences against—See STATE OFFENCES.

Religious object—

of ... 587.

Removal—

dishonest or fraudulent, s. 424, p. 914.
 by partner, p. 914.
 during attachment, p. 914.
 under an illegal order, p. 914. of crops by tenants, p. 915.

Remission—

of punishment, ss. 54, 55, p. 77. violation of conditions of, s. 227, p. 496.

Repetition—

of nuisance after injunction to discontinue, s. 291, p. 573.
 defamation is an offence not less heinous, p. 1060.

Report—Reputation—

forging petition for harming, s. 469, p. 991.
 harming the, by defamatory statements, p. 1064.
 criminal intimidation, s. 503, p. 1094.

Res nullius—cannot be the subject of receiving, p. 873.

Rescue—

of prisoner of State or war, s. 130, p. 265.
 any person from lawful custody, s. 225, p. 486.
 meaning of the term, p. 489.
 in cases not otherwise provided for, s. 225-B, p. 491.

491.

Reservoir—

fouling water of a public, s. 277, p. 354.

Resistance—

public officer, p. 370.
 he taking of property by a public servant, s. 163, p. 370.
 mere refusal is not resistance, p. 371.
 legal if no lawful authority, p. 371.
 to order of distraint, p. 371.
 to the taking of property by a public servant without a warrant, p. 372 to a process of civil Court, p. 375.
 searching without a search warrant, p. 376.
 apprehension of himself for an offence, s. 224, p. 485.
 lawful custody necessary for the offence of escape, p. 486.
 escape with consent no mitigation, p. 487.
 police-officer should show the authority under which he acts, p. 487.
 apprehension of another, s. 225, p. 488.

Robbery—

definition of, s. 390, p. 817.

is an aggravated form of theft or extortion, p. 818.

hurt independent of theft does not constitute, p. 819.

punishment for simple, s. 392, p. 822.

attempts to commit, s. 393, p. 823.

causing hurt while committing or attempting to commit, s. 394, p. 824.

with attempt to cause death or grievous hurt, s. 397, p. 828.

attempt to commit—when armed with deadly weapons, s. 398, p. 831.

belonging to or being associated with a gang for the purpose of committing, s. 461, p. 835.

when it becomes dacoity, s. 391, p. 820.

See DACOITY.

Rule of the road—

non-observance of, is negligence, p. 556.

Rupees—

See COMPANY'S RUPEES; FARUKHABAD RUPEE.

Safety—

public, Chap. XIV, p. 539.

Sale—

578.

a person as a slave, s. 310, p. 100.

minor for the purpose of prostitution, s. 372, p. 767.

See DRUGS; FOOD OR DRINK.

Sailor—

abetment of mutiny by, s. 131, p. 268.

—if committed, s. 132, p. 270.

—on superior officer, ss. 133, 134, pp. 270, 271.

desertion of, and insubordination by, ss. 135, 136, 138, pp. 272, 273, 274.

concealment on a vessel, s. 137, p. 273.

Sanad—

is not a valuable security, p. 54.

fabrication of a, p. 996.

Screening an offender—Sea-mark—

exhibiting a false, s. 281, p. 561.

mischievous by destroying, moving or rendering less useful a, s. 433, p. 971.

Seal—

making or counterfeiting a— or possessing counterfeit—with intent to commit forgery, ss. 472, 473, pp. 999, 1000.

punishable otherwise, s. 473, p. 1000.

Secret—

burying or disposal of a dead child, s. 318, p. 657.

Secreting—

document with fraudulent intent, s. 477, pp. 1003, 1004.

Section—

definition of, s. 50, p. 66.

Service—

- breach of contract of, during voyage or journey, s. 490, p. 1028.
- immaterial with whom contract was made, s. 490, expln., p. 1028.
- to attend, on, etc., helpless persons, s. 491, p. 1029.
- contract in writing to serve at a distant place to which servant is or is to be conveyed at master's expense, s. 492, p. 1030
- liability of artificer, workman or labourer, s. 492, p. 1030.

Service of process—

See PROCESS.

Service of summons—

See SUMMONS.

Servitude—

- penal, ss. 53, 56, pp. 70, 78.

Several offences—

- limit of punishment of, s. 71, p. 94.

Ship—

- rash navigation of—conveying passengers for hire in overloaded or dangerous, ss. 280, 282, pp. 559, 561.

See VESSEL.

Shooting—

- accidental, p. 133.
- with intent to kill, s. 307, ill. (a), p. 668
- causing hurt by, ss. 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.

Sign—

- refusing to—confession, p. 361.
- deposition, p. 361.
- receipt for a summons, p. 361.

Signature—

- of one's own name may be forgery, s. 464, expln. 1, pp. 968, 981.

Singular number—

- includes plural, s. 9, p. 37.

Slander—

- is actionable only if it tends to public injury, p. 1063
- under the Penal Code is included in defamation, p. 1063
- differs from libel under English law, p. 1063.

See DEFAMATION.

Slavery—

- kidnapping or abducting in order to subject to, s. 367, p. 762.
- dealing with persons as slaves, s. 370, p. 765
- meaning of the term slave, 765
- habitually dealing in slaves, s. 371, p. 767

Slight harm—

- act causing not an offence, s. 85, p. 172

Small-pox—

- carrying such a child through street, p. 546.
- refusing to remove a child having it to hospital, p. 546.

Sodomy—

See UNNATURAL OFFENCE.

Soldier—definition of, s. 131, expla., p. 269.

abettment of assault by—on superior officer, ss 133, 134, pp. 270, 271.

desertion of, and insubordination by, ss 135, 136, 138, pp. 272, 273, 275 false personation of—, s. 140, p. 276.

Solemn affirmation—included in the term 'oath,' s. 51, p. 68.

Solitary confinement—rules regarding sentence of—, and execution of such sentence, ss 73, 74, pp. 106, 107 can be awarded in a summary trial, p. 107.

cannot be inflicted for offences under special or local law, p. 107.

when the sentence is of fine only, p. 107.

limit of, s. 74, p. 112.

Sovereign—of the United Kingdom denoted in the Code by the word "Queen," s. 13, p. 38.

exemption of, from the provisions of the Penal Code, p. 6.

between, and his subject there can be no act of State, p. 130.

Special constable—refusal to serve as, no offence under s. 173, p. 346

Special law—is not affected by the Penal Code, s. 5, p. 33.

meaning of term, s. 41, p. 65.

offence extended to breach of, in certain cases, s. 40, p. 64.

conviction under, good, although the act is an offence under the Code, p. 35

Spleen—rupture of diseased, death caused by—is hurt, pp. 611, 691.

grievous hurt, p. 694.

criminal force, p. 731.

Sports and exercises—

hurt caused in, p. 160.

Spring—

See RESERVOIR.

Stabbing—

in a vital part causing death is murder, p. 625 causing hurt or grievous hurt by instrument for, ss. 324, 326, pp. 698, 701.

Stamp—

See GOVERNMENT STAMP.

State offences—

what acts constitute—, Chap. VI, p. 230.

circulating false report with intent to cause, s. 605, p. 1107.

State prisoner—allowing or aiding escape of—, or harbouring—, ss. 128, 130, pp. 263, 265.

definition of, p. 263.

Statement—

punishment for refusing to sign, s. 180, p. 361. *

Statute—

construction of penal statutes, p. 11.

reports of the Indian law commissioners, p. 12.

headings, p. 13.

illustrations, p. 13.

marginal notes, p. 13.

proceedings of the legislative council, p. 13.

Statute—(concl'd).

- provisos, p. 13.
- punctuation, p. 13.
- reports of select committees of the legislative council, p. 13.
- statements of objects and reasons, p. 13.

*See FALSE STATEMENT.Statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., chap. 85 (Act for the better Government of India)—

- provisions of—not affected by the Penal Code, s. 5, p. 35.

Steam—

- letting off near a crossing, p. 714.

Stolen property—

- offering or taking gift to help in the restoration of—without using means to bring offender to justice, ss. 214, 215, pp. 460, 461, 465.
- definition of, s. 410, p. 468.
- dishonestly receiving, punishment for, s. 411, p. 869.
- coming into the possession of the owner before its receipt by the person accused of receiving it, p. 870.
- any profit to the receiver not necessary, p. 872.
- manual possession not necessary, p. 872.
- false claim is not receipt, p. 873.
- husband and wife, p. 873.
- joint Hindu family, p. 873.

- receiving when obtained in a dacoity—punishment, s. 412, p. 880.
- habitually dealing in—punishment for, s. 413, p. 881.
- assisting in the concealment of, s. 414, p. 882.

*See CONCEALMENTStones—

- throwing of, on a person's house, p. 714.

Stridhan—

- a Hindu wife removing her—is not guilty of theft, p. 800.

Stupefying drug—

- administration of stupefying, intoxicating or unwholesome—with intent to cause hurt s. 328, p. 703.

*See DRUGSudden fight—

- as a defence in cases of murder, s. 300, except 4, pp. 610, 613.
- where undue advantage is taken, p. 640.

Sudden quarrel

- does not amount to riot, p. 288.
- remainder not liable for, on his land, p. 310.
- death caused in a, p. 640.

Suffering an escape—

- negligently, s. 223, p. 482.

Suffocation—

- attempt to cause death by, p. 673.

Suicide—

- taking part in of adult, s. 302, except 5, pp. 617, 641.
- of person under age or incapable of giving consent, is murder, s. 302, except 1, p. 617.
- abetting of, by child or person incapable of consent, s. 303, p. 640.
- by any person, s. 304, p. 647.

Suicide—concl'd.

attempting to commit, s. 309, p. 676.

feigning of an attempt to commit, is an offence under s. 387, p. 815.

Summons—

absconding to avoid service of, s. 172, p. 344.

preventing service of, s. 173, p. 346.

refusal to receive, a, p. 346.

sign a, p. 346.

throwing down of, after service, p. 346.

disobedience to, s. 174, p. 347.

a verbal order to attend is sufficient, p. 348.

place of attendance must be specified, p. 348.

wilful departure before time, p. 349.

by incompetent officer, p. 349.

order to attend necessary, p. 349.

summons should be clear and specific in its terms, p. 349.

appearance through a lawyer, p. 350.

escape from custody under a civil warrant, no offence, p. 350.

personal service of, necessary, p. 350.

public servant before whom appearance to be put in absent, p. 350.

refusal to sign a receipt for, no offence, p. 361.

Superior officer—meaning of the expression, p. 271.

order of, how far binding on inferiors, p. 120.

Superstition—

rash act committed through, p. 69.

Surgical operation—

by a person who is not qualified, p. 163.

in good faith for a child's benefit, s. 89, ill., p. 164.

Sutti—

abetment of the offence of, p. 261.

of, when the offence is one of culpable homicide, p. 240.

is death caused by consent, p. 642.

a species of suicide, p. 667.

Syphilis—communication of, p. 545.

Taking away—

when taking is complete, in kidnapping, p. 744.

in theft, need not be permanent, p. 788.

a married woman, s. 408, p. 1048.

Tank—

polluting the water of a, p. 554.

Telephone—

incitation by a, to commit an offence, p. 192.

Temple property—

criminal misappropriation of, p. 842.

trustee appropriating a temple jewel, p. 866.

Territorial operation—of the Penal Code, pp. 2, 14.

Code does not extend to—

Governor-General, Governors, Members of Council, High Court Judges, p. 8.

Ambassadors, p. 6.

Foreign Sovereign, p. 6.

Sovereign, p. 6.

Alien enemies, p. 7.

Foreign army, p. 7.

Warships, p. 7.

Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act—extent and application of, p. 14.

 institution of proceedings against a foreigner, p. 14.
 territorial waters, definition of, p. 14.

Testamentary documents—

See WILL.

Theft—

assault or criminal force in attempt to commit—from person, s. 356, p. 740.
 definition of, s. 378, p. 785.

punishment for, s. 379, p. 786.

contrasted with larceny under English law, p. 786.

1. taking, p. 787.

cases of bona fide dispute, p. 788.

no wrongful gain is necessary, p. 788.

taking need not be permanent, p. 788.

property taken by mistake, p. 789.

stealing one's own property, p. 789.

2.

boat, p. 792.

earth and stones, p. 792.

gas, p. 792.

human body, p. 792.

salt, p. 792.

valuable security, p. 792.

water, p. 793.

animals, p. 793.

bull, p. 793.

cattle, p. 793.

fish, p. 793.

peacock, p. 793.

carcass, p. 794.

partridges, p. 794.

pigeons, p. 794.

3. possession, p. 794.

in joint possession, p. 796.

of property while under attachment, p. 796.

regarding which possessory order is made, p. 796.

4. consent, p. 797.

unauthorized consent, p. 798.

5. moving of property, p. 798.

as between husband and wife, see

English law, p. 800.

Hindu law, p. 800.

Mahomedan law, p. 801.

necessitas inducit privilegium quod ad jura privata, p. 804.

presumption, p. 801.

joint trial, p. 802.

joinder of charges, p. 802.

theft and receipt of stolen property, p. 802.

house breaking, p. 802.

receipt of stolen property, p. 802.

repetition of, is a grave offence, p. 802.

single or several thefts, p. 802.

restoration of stolen property obtained in, p. 803.

in a dwelling house, etc., s. 340, p. 803.

by clerk or servant of property in possession of master, s. 341, p. 804.

distinguished from extortion, p. 810.

after preparation for causing death or hurt, s. 342, p. 804.

when amounts to robbery, s. 340, p. 817.

distinguished from criminal misappropriation, p. 811.

See CLERK SERVANT.

Thieves—punishment for belonging to a gang of, s. 401, p. 835.

See GANG OF THIEVES.

Thing—

in counterfeiting, s. 28, p. 52.

Threats—

acts done under—when no offence, s. 91, p. 170.

of injury to public servants or to induce persons to refrain from applying to public servants ss. 189, 190, pp. 387, 388.

incantation, afford no excuse for murder, p. 637.

grievous hurt, or death or of accusation of an offence made to commit extortion, ss. 385, 387, 389, pp. 814, 815, 816.

criminal accusation, p. 811.

incendiarism, p. 812.

appointment, p. 812.

s. 503, p. 1094.

of excommunication,

to kill a person, p. 1096.

get a person dismissed, p. 1096.

imprisoned, p. 1096.

run a man by false cases, p. 1096.

person threatened must be interested, p. 1096.

of divine displeasure; inducing a person to do or omit anything, s. 608, p. 1112.

See INJURY.

Thug—

definition of, s. 310, p. 677.

punishment for being a, s. 311, p. 678.

Tooth—

fracture or dislocation of—is "grievous hurt" s. 320, seventhly, p. 692.

Torture—

in order to extort property, etc., ss. 327-329, pp. 702, 706.

to extort confession, ss. 330, 331, pp. 706, 708.

Trade—

public servant unlawfully engaging in, s. 168, p. 329.

lending money on interest is not, p. 329.

enactments prohibiting public officers from, p. 329.

Trade-mark—

what is a, s. 476, p. 1009.

what is using a false, s. 480, p. 1011.

importer of goods can have his, p. 1012.

trade-mark in—calendars, p. 1013.

labels, p. 1013.

gold bars, p. 1014.

general name cannot be subject of, p. 1014.

use of receptacle having a, p. 1014.

distinguished from 'property mark,' p. 1015.

penalty for counterfeiting a, s. 483, p. 1017.

counterfeiting—used by a public servant, s. 485, p. 1019.

selling, etc., goods bearing false, s. 486, p. 1020.

making or using false mark to deceive a public servant, s. 487, p. 1022.

punishment for using false, s. 482, p. 1015.

Trafficking in slaves—

punishment for, s. 371, p. 761.

Transfer—

fraudulent, of property, s. 206, p. 435.

meaning of, p. 436.

Translation—

- a public servant framing an incorrect, s. 167, p. 328.
- making a mere copy, p. 328.
- submitting a false report, p. 328.

Transportation—

- one of the punishments under the Code, s. 53, secondly, pp. 70, 71.
- for life, may be commuted, s. 55, p. 77.
- European or American to be sentenced to penal servitude instead of, s. 56, p. 78.
- not under special or local law, p. 81.
- cannot be substituted for imprisonment in default of fine, p. 81.
- not to exceed the term of imprisonment, p. 81.
- mode of sentencing, p. 82.
- for life, for abetment of mutiny by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the Army or Navy, s. 132, p. 270.
- giving, etc., false evidence with intent to procure conviction of offence punishable with, s. 195, p. 417.
- unlawful return from—; s. 226, p. 495.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS.

Trespass—

- meaning of the term, as used in, s. 297, p. 592.
- person committing—in a state of intoxication, s. 510, p. 1106.

See CRIMINAL TRESPASS.

Trust—

See CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST.

Trustee—

- criminal breach of trust by a, p. 866.

Turbulent Assembly—

- member of, who refuses to disperse after a lawful command, s. 151, p. 301.
- if assembly already unlawful, s. 151, expln., p. 301.

Truth—

- how far a defence to a charge of defamation, p. 1066.
- onus lies on the person making imputation, p. 1067.

Unborn child—

See CHILD.

Undue influence—

- at an election, s. 171-C, p. 337.
- punishment, s. 171 F, p. 340.

Unlawful Assembly—

- definition of, s. 141, p. 277.
- member of—; who is a, s. 142, p. 278.
- punishment for being a member of an, s. 143, p. 278.
- joining unlawful assembly armed with a deadly weapon, s. 144, p. 284.
- knowing it has been commanded to disperse, s. 145, p. 285.
- punishment for rioting, s. 148, p. 293.

Wearing garb or carrying token—used by soldier, s. 140, p. 276.

used by a public servant, s. 171, p. 332.

Weights and measures—Wharflinger— criminal breach of trust by—in respect of property, s. 407, p. 859.

Whipping—

is a form or punishment added by the Whipping Act, p. 75.

Whipping Act—

See THE APPENDIX.

Wife—

6, pp. 273, 456, 467.

14, is rape, s. 375, fifthly, p. 771.

English law, p. 800.

Hindu law, p. 800.

Mahomedan law, p. 800.

cannot commit breach of trust as to husband's property, p. 852.

Will—

denotes any testamentary document, s. 31, p. 55.

forgery, of s. 467, p. 988.

fraudulent cancellation or destruction of, s. 477, pp. 1003, 1004.

Witch—

punishing a woman as a witch, p. 872.

Witchcraft—

belief in, does not justify causing death, p. 608.

With child—

meaning of, p. 679.

Witnesses—

refusal of—to bind themselves by oath or affirmation, s. 178, p. 359.

), p. 361.

prevarication by, may amount to interruption of judicial proceedings, p. 498.

personation by, p. 902.

liability for defamation for statements while in witness-box, p. 1078.

Woman—

definition of, s. 10, p. 37.

causing miscarriage of—with or without consent, ss. 312, 313, pp. 678, 680.

death of—by act intended to cause miscarriage, s. 314, p. 681.

word or gesture or act intended to insult the modesty of a, s. 509, p. 1104.

indecent assault upon a, is not an attempt to commit rape, p. 780.

Words—

referring to acts include illegal omission, s. 32, p. 55.

death caused by the effect of, on imagination, p. 603.

causing provocation in cases of murder, p. 630.

do not amount to an assault, s. 351, expn., p. 731.

Workman—

breach of contract by, s. 492, p. 1030.

Worship—

injuring or defiling a place of, s. 293, p. 547.

disturbing an assembly performing religious, s. 290, p. 590.

mischief by destroying a place of—by fire, s. 436, p. 933.

See MISCHIEF.

Writing—containing directions or instructions is a "document," s. 29, p. 52.

expressing the terms of a contract is a "document," s. 29, III, p. 52.

Written statement—

false statements made in, p. 394.

Wrongful confinement—

definition of, s. 340, p. 720.

arrest by third person at the direction of police officer, p. 721.

detention through moral force is sufficient, p. 721.

difference between false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, p. 721.

malice not necessary, p. 721.

period of confinement not material, p. 721.

mistaken exercise of power by a police-officer is not, p. 722.

legal arrest is not, p. 723.

punishment for, s. 342, p. 723.

when, for 3 or more days, s. 343, p. 724.

10 or more days, s. 344, p. 724.

a liberation writ has issued, s. 345, p. 725.

confinement is secret, s. 346, p. 726.

it is for purpose of extortion of property, s. 347, p. 726.

for purpose of extortion of confession, s. 238, p. 727.

assault or criminal force in attempt to commit, s. 357, p. 741.

of person kidnapped or abducted, s. 368, p. 763.

See ABDUCTION ; ASSAULT ; CRIMINAL FORCE ; KIDNAPPING ; WRONGFUL RESTRAINT.

Wrongful gain—

definition of, s. 23, p. 47.

See DISHONESTLY.

Wrongful loss—

definition of, s. 23, p. 47.

breach of a condition is not, p. 48.

secretory a document is not, p. 48.

See DISHONESTLY.

Wrongful restraint—

definition of, s. 339, p. 717.

when—amounts to wrongful confinement, s. 340, p. 720.

punishment for, s. 341, p. 723.

mischief committed after preparation made for causing, s. 440, p. 934.

See WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT.

Year—

definition of, s. 49, p. 67.

